Next, after quoting a couple of lickspittle 'German' professors to the effect that the Germans have no right to a unified and sovereign state because of their incomparably sadistic record of thuggishness, he opines that "the developing national consciousness of the East Germans" will prevent any union of the Germanies in the future! To add insult to injury (or mud to mayhem), the back cover of my edition of this work is adorned with a fulsome blurb by another 'expert' (parlance of faith and not of evidence), Professor Michael S. Kater of York University in Toronto, to the effect that Evans has given us the 'definitive interpretation' of something or other, blah, blah, blah. Of course, neither man has ceased publishing in the wake of such spectacular howlers, in this resembling some of Yahweh's most fervent fans, who seem never to be incommoded by the failure of the Most High to return in flame and fury at the precise moment predicted by his clergy.

It is a melancholy fact, however, that some of those who speak in the movement's name have been quite eager to take the same liberties with the 'gift.' Many of those who write for movement periodicals seemed to have convinced themselves (and here, of course, the wish is father to the thought) that accurate prophecy is as rare as sweat and as easy to manufacture. There are some people on the right-wing (all the way from Tory to Fascist) who are able to get on the hot-line to the World Spirit on what seems a daily basis; their communications, though, however fresh and thrilling they might seem at the moment of their accouchement, give off a somewhat musty odor when examined with the benefit of hindsight.

We have all been treated to confident predictions of a successful Soviet occupation of our continent by 1984 (and, lest I be accused of ignoring the metaphorical slant in these prognostications, I recall that the words Red Army were used!). We've all read smug little visions from the immediate post-WWII world in which 'white' Britain continues to occupy her invincible position in colonial affairs—and this at a time when the nation that refused to parlay with the foul fiend Hitler decided to roll out the red carpet for Jamaican trash and travesty (much nicer to be invaded by reggae-howlers rather than by those nasty Nazi Wagnerians, what?). Tories never, ever learn. We have all shuddered at those malefic phantasmagoria which indicated that a catastrophic breakdown of the financial and economic networks of the West would occur by the summer of 1980, or 1981, or 1982, and so on. We're now being instructed by our pundits that Hillary and her gigolo, with flush carpetbags in hand, will be high-tailing it out of the dismal swamp at any minute, in response to all of the scandals that have nibbled at their posteriors. Some of our worthies, perhaps (one can only hope) gill-deep in liquor, are satisfied to believe that this or that grubby 'conservative' politico is really 'one of us,' and is just waiting for the expedient moment in which to yank his snout loose from the System's fundament. I blush—when will we realize that a vote for someone like Perot or Buchanan is more damaging to our cause than a vote for an out-of-the-closet Bolshie like Clinton? A vote for Buchanan delays the onset of the revolution, and diverts us into wasting our time and our labor in tracking down unicorns and lost chords. A vote for Clinton sets the match to the powder.

For my sins, I'll issue a prophetic word: if we don't wake up, we'll stay asleep.

THE HIDDEN EMPEROR

Nothing stops us but the one thing, that which Martin Heidegger would have called an "absence." That absence concerns our inability to deliver a genuine, competent, and charismatic Leader, he or she who will smash the System into a billion pieces; who will gather together those loyal agents to whom will be entrusted the task of renewing the race-soul of the Aryan peoples; who will unmask the Aryan self-hatred which, due to that hypersympathetic spirit which has been emplanted in us by Levantine superstitions, has left us battered and disarmed before the eternal World-Enemy: we must find that person—indeed, wouldn't it be a marvel if our Savior were already among us?

Cast your mind back for a moment, and recall, if you will, an olden time. We see a tattered bit of film footage: Vienna, at the turn of the 20th Century. There goes the arrogant and dictatorial quack-meister Freud, lifting his hat stiffly in our honor; over there, in his cumbersome and ornate carriage of state, looms old Franz Josef of the magisterial and efflorescent mustache.

Before our eyes parade the journalists and bankers, the businessmen and statesmen, most of them exuding that confidence in "progressive" thought and unthreatened prosperity which we always seem to find on the faces of the doomed. There are writers too, and artists, and some of them are disclosing in their works the premonitory tremblings of the cataclycms to come.

And somewhere in this mysterious and shadow-laden world is the young Leader, devouring piles of racialist and philosophical literature in some back-street doss-house; or, shivering with cold and damp, painting a glorious vision of a Gothic cathedral spire glistening in the gloaming; or, perhaps, drinking in, abandoned to a most-high ecstasy, Gustav Mahler's profound interpretations of the German and Austrian musical classics.

Now Vienna, ceases to be a mere catafalque, a mouldy mausoleum housing only dust and the foetid gases of decay, and becomes the womb, as it were, of nascent greatness, a blessed and enchanted homeland of our souls. Yet who, among Adolf Hitler's Viennnese contemporaries, could ever have guessed that this young loner would turn out to be the Aryan Hero? But that is precisely what He was: as Pushkin phrased it, "From the spark will spring the flame."

Somewhere, on this desolate, dying earth, at this very moment, in some remote and desolate farming community; or in some vast, cobweb-strewn library; or, perhaps, knitting clothing for her bright-eyed child—the One might be already there, waiting patiently, potently in the darkness of an expectant hour, to storm forth at the appointed time, with the torch in one hand and the banner in the other:

Keep the lookouts posted:

We must find the hidden Monarch. As Kurt Hildebrandt once wrote, Only the creative one, the Hero, can be the incarnate Ideal.

ROOSEVELT THE FIRST

From time to time one comes across racial-nationalists who have imbibed the notion that Theodore Roosevelt was of our ilk, and that he was just itching to lower the knout on the sheenies and blackamoors. I confess that I'm completely in the dark as to the origin of this superstition. Maybe the firearm enthusiasts among us enjoy the posing of a rank poseur in front of his 'kills.'

Does it matter that we see clearly on this issue? I should think so, as it seems that every time that old blusterer put his foot down on matters of substance, he put it wrong; and I refuse to believe that we want to proselytize with the aid of a gimcrack politician whose words and deeds might return to bedevil us. I'd like to draw attention to just a few of the less-savory items in this fat-mouth's dossier, in the hopes that I might help our people avoid the notion that this vulgarian was anything but a huckster with delusions of grandeur.

How about considering the fact that Balfour (of the infamous 'Declaration') considered T.R. to be "the greatest moral force of the age"? How about considering the fact that the Jews were always whooping up Ted's efforts to stop the 'persecutions' of their fellow-bandits in Russia and Romania—and anywhere else his gaseous verbiage might penetrate? Does it bother our patriots that Teddy appointed Oscar Strauss to be the Secretary of Labor and Commerce, the first Jew ever appointed to the Cabinet? How can we keep a straight face when Teddy bellows the ballyhoo about Kaiser Wilhelm's 'militarism'? Didn't Teddy howl for war against the German Empire in even more harsh and cacaphonous tones than those employed by parson Wilson and his astute handler, 'Colonel' House? Sure did.

I would think that our anti-totalitarians and states' rights enthusiasts (whose superstitions, I can assure you, I do not share) might be less than amused by an examination of this creature's view of the expansion of the powers of 'our' Federal government:

> All of the arguments against the extension of Federal power which we hear in political addresses and read in political journals, and all the fears of Federal centralization which are used to excite popular apprehension of the latest phase of the growing and therefore ever new Nationalism, are repetitions of the arguments employed and the fears expressed in every previous stage of national development from the days of George Washington to the present day..... It is clear to us as A B C that the successive extensions of Federal powers have made us one of the most happy, wealthy, respectable, and powerful nations that ever inhabited the terrestrial globe; and without them we should have been everything that is directly the reverse.
> The New Nationalism

(The Outlook Co., N.Y., 1910)

Do you still think that the tyranny with which we've been afflicted began with his successor, that heldentenor of the airwaves, Roosevelt the Second?

And can you guess who's coming to dinner?

To hell with him!

I SENT MY NEWSLETTER THROUGH THE INVISIBLE.

In a cantankerous piece in the September Liberty Bell, the author of the oddly-titled ARYAN DIP SQUATS hurls insults and objurgations at just about every type of 'Aryan' one might imagine. Some of his ballistae were aimed well; some not. That's the way of all ballistae, I suppose.

One area not shelled by our artillery officer is the field of literary scholarship— and with good reason, for here he stumbles badly. He misquotes stanza LXVI of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam in the Fitzgerald translation, and then proceeds to attribute the verse to Kahlil Gibran.

In both the 1879 and 1889 editions of Fitzgerald's work this stanza appears as follows:

I sent my Soul through the Invisible,
Some letter of that After-life to spell:
And by and by my Soul return'd to me,
And answer'd "I Myself am Heav'n and Hell."

Cinema buffs might recall that this same stanza was employed to magnificent effect in 1945's The Picture of Dorian Gray (MGM), directed by Albert Lewin, and starring Hurd Hatfield, George Sanders, and the young—and incredibly lovely—Angela Lansbury. Highly recommended, as they say in the catalogs.

OUR ROMPER ROOM RULERS.

Several years ago, I began jotting down some of the more pithy utterances of our star politicians and media personalities as they cavorted about in front of the cameras and the microphones. Now I can't swear to perfect accuracy in what I will call my renditions of their words (I was often forced to swallow Dramamine before I was able to transcribe the sacred texts), but I'm fairly sure that in most cases I did 'get the drift.' I present some of the juicier items here for your delectation.

That staunch and highly-principled Zionist agitator, Senator Henry 'Scoop' Jackson, was always ponderable, as they say. Perhaps these gems will 'do you right':

"These are things that I think are do-able."

"We do have to have these programs moving in which we can buy time."

"....it's an up-and-down proposition."

"....where imports of automobiles is increasing."

This one I especially enjoyed:

"I'm not very optimistic in the face of the events that face us in the economy."

Well, who would be, 'Scoop'?

Let's eavesdrop on the good Senator Howard Baker as he clears his throat:

"No place is more important than your deliberations here today."

Who could possibly be so bold as to disagree?

Here we have an example of our rulers' mania for otiose verbiage (does anyone know just when those contentless prepositional phrases like 'in place' and 'in force' entered public discourse?); this time our amateur Cicero is one Lloyd Bentsen:

"Iran believes that we had to bow to any blackmail that they put in force."

We're all adults, I take it, and are well aware that blackmail which has been put in force is much more distress-making than plain-old blackmail.

Or just visualize this, if you will (one might almost imagine this as an advert for one of those kitsch sculptures hawked by the Franklin Mint); this time it's our old friend, the perennially-amusing 'Jimmy' Carter, UFO-spotter and heir to the throne once occupied by Thomas Jefferson:

"Nothing can bend our stance on basic issues of principle" (What about not-so-basic issues—do we introduce a little silly-putty into the spinal column when these come up?).

And only the gods can imagine just what warlord William Westmoreland's skeleton is made out of:

"We can see an unraveling of our foreign posture."

Enjoy the reflective Philip Crane, as he launches himself into a discussion of something that sounds like statistical analysis, or, perhaps, even geology (sorry, 'Earth Science'):

"This is one of those trend-lines very alarming to anyone who has followed the course of this piece of paper" (I've got it now: he's discussing navigation, map in fist, with the first mate of his cardboard trireme).

Crane also contributed this delightful little aphorism:

"It's not a Johnny-come-lately to the particular view I hold today" (Phil, Phil! I never said it was!—officer, fetch the Prozac!).

Does anyone remember the regal, the lovely, the soft-spoken Bella Abzug? Treat yourself to her considered views on Jimmy Carter's attitude to the ladies:

"I have always been very supportive of the President's support for women" (can't say fairer than that, now, can you? For some reason I kept waiting for Jane Russell to emerge from the wings, torpedoes at the ready).

You will never clap eyes to a more cultured vulture than the sophisticated Hugh Downs:

"Well, there have been some change on that front, isn't it?" (silver-locked Hugh has certainly mastered one language that's Greek to me; perhaps, like the suave James Bond, he took a First in Oriental languages at Cambridge—whatever the reason, I can't make any sense out of his vaporings).

My favorite quotation from that time (mid-seventies) was a masterpiece of rococo and innovative grammar from the famous Charlayne Hunter-Gault, who asked plaintively:

"If social criteria could be used as a criteria, would that be a problem if?" (most certainly not, my dear! Perish the thought. Do any of you know anything about Ms. H.-G., and why her career might be especially of interest to racial-nationalists? Those who do, will notice how gallant I am in not turning the scalpel on the good woman).

Of course, I can't leave Fat Face out of my account. Senator Ted's winsome ways with the mother tongue are well-known in bar-rooms and brothels from Massachusetts to Malaysia:

"....the areas in which I feel strongly about" (I refuse to sully these pages with cheap and smutty innuendo. So there! At any rate, I detect in that expression a hint of John Barleycorn, and a slight listing to starboard).

If the strategic thought of our enemies is as sound as their syntax, perhaps we needn't worry so much...(Joe Pryce, 1994).

In a more contemporary vein, I'd like to quote Ross Perot's campaign advisor's response to a question about what specific proposals his hero would suggest for the purpose of balancing the Federal budget—please, fasten your seatbelts:

"Just the other day Mr. Perot and I had a lengthy meeting during the course of which he stated that he hoped shortly to institute policies and programs whereby we could begin to establish a forum within which Mr. Perot could call on various administrators and experts for the ultimate purpose of evaluating and putting in place programs and agenda whereby this exceedingly complex problem could be delved into'(this mellow breeze sighed forth, as you may have guessed, after our gasbag had criticized George Bush for not giving his concrete proposals for balancing the budget! As I hail from Brooklyn, N.Y., I can tell you what I would like to do with a little concrete).

As I say, some of these quotations may not be verbatim, but I certainly couldn't have invented them; not, that is, without the intervention of a little LSD-25.

Let me end this brief anthology of public utterances on a slightly different note. This is from an address entitled The State by Hans Freyer, delivered to the Leuchtenburgkreis during the Easter weekend of 1927 (I think that our anti-totalitarian friends might learn a little from this):

> The power of the Greek polis over its people is founded upon the fact that it has absorbed into itself the Greek spirit in its entirety. Outside the polis there is no life worthy of the name. Only within it is there spiritual existence. Only within it is there freedom (which for the Greeks is never freedom from the state, but rather always freedom to the state: never bourgeois freedom, but rather always political freedom). The polis is the most unbourgeois type of state conceivable, for it is the state in its purest sense. The omnipotence with which it envelops its inhabitants is boundless. That it may demand any sacrifice in war is taken for granted, since with his death the citizen of the polis merely repays the cost of his nurture. But the polis demands and receives this same degree of sacrifice in every hour of peace. It is not only a state but also a church. There is no escape from it, including escape into religion. All spiritual activity, all art and science, all ability and all virtue is realized in and for the polis. Works of poetry, of historiography, of art, of music belong not to the realm of individual satisfaction or free inquiry—they are a service to the polis, carried out on its behalf, oriented to its norms. And the boldness with which Athenian democracy is able to elevate the Volk to a sovereign position within the state is warranted by this belief: that man is a thoroughly political being, possessed by the state, and that the law of the state powerfully permeates all of its citizens.

Quite a contrast, huh? Like that chiaroscuro of which the art historians speak! And, believe you me, it was quite enjoyable being as unfair to our opponents, for a moment or two, as they are, habitually and consistently, to us! (Freyer quotation is from The Other God That Failed—Hans Freyer and the Deradicalization of German Conservatism by Jerry Z. Muller (Princeton University Press, 1987)]

DOCTOR MOREAU'S NEW WORLD ORDER

I recently reread H. G. Wells's The Island of Dr. Moreau, that classic fable of a hubristic scientist whose plans for the transformation of subhuman specimens into ersatz humans goes awry, resulting in the good man's downfall, death and dismemberment. I remember that when I was a boy in Catholic grammar school, I used to spend my spare time after exams (between the anxious moment at which one handed in a written test and the close of the school day) storming through the collection of Scholastic Book Services paperbacks that was available on the shelves at the back of the classroom. I read Wells over and over again, and perhaps my fondness for The Island was a tell-tale sign of an incipient Mengelean megalomania, or maybe it was just a relish for a rollicking good 'read.' But whatever it was, I find that the affection has endured.

Perhaps we've been unjust to the fine doctor in our literary histories (he's ordinarily referred to as a 'villain'). It crosses my mind that Dr. Moreau might well have been an unabashedly advanced social scientist, a forward-looking tinkerer in the vanguard of the progressive movement—wasn't our friend, after all, attempting to establish the first 'Head Start' program on his little island hideaway? Aren't we being treated by the author to a fictional exposition of that 'piecemeal social engineering' which we are assured, even now, will transform headhunters and metics into enlightened and productive citizens of an endearing, and enduring, Utopia, that New World Order for which our airheaded brethren yearn?

If only we could be sure that Z.O.G.'s social scientists and their political soul-mates might have as sticky an end as did Dr. Moreau:

He lay face downwards in a trampled space in a cane brake. One hand was almost severed at the wrist, and his silvery hair was dabbled in blood. His head had been battered in.....
The broken canes beneath him were smeared with blood.

Interestingly enough, the feckless Moreau was done in by the mutants whom he had tried to elevate from their lowly zoological station. Although my most fervent belief is that we Aryans must save ourselves or we are really not worth saving, one finds that one does experience the occasional daydream in which black nationalists lend us a little assistance in our efforts to ensure that our story might have as happy—and as sweet!—an ending.

THE DARKER SIDE OF COON.

One of the few American anthropologists to communicate anything remotely resembling the truth on racial matters was Carleton S. Coon, whose many books on physical anthropology and geographical exploration have long occupied a cherished shelf on the bookshelves of racial-nationalists the world over. Quite rightly so.

And yet, the man who was eventually to praise Wilmot Robertson's The Dispossessed Majority as a classic seems to have been a loyal and enthusiastic tool of our enemies during WW II; he was a member of the O.S.S., and he seems to have regarded 'Wild Bill' Donovan as some sort of American folk-hero! Coon even went so far as to compose a mawkish threnody for that worthy in 1959, which culminates in the following flatulent peroration:

As American as chowder, Crockett, and Putnam
A free fighter's hero, may God give him peace.

For Coon to bungle his punctuation indicates, perhaps, an emotion that must have been genuine—his writing is ordinarily quite fastidious in this regard (the entire text of Coon's doggerel appears in A North Africa Story—The Anthropologist as OSS Agent 1941-1943 by C. S. Coon published by Gambit, Ipswich, Massachusetts, 1980).

Many years ago I came across, in Coon's Adventures and Discoveries: The Autobiography of Carleton S. Coon (Prentice-Hall, Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1981), a garbled and confusing reference to the assassination of Admiral Darlan. I didn't really think anything of it at that time, and I suppose I was guilty of shutting a blind eye to what should have been a crimson warning signal. So imagine my surprise to read in "C" The Secret Life of Sir Stewart Menzies, Spymaster to Winston Churchill, by Anthony Cave Brown (Macmillan, New York, 1987), an account of Darlan's murder which pretty clearly indicates Coon's complicity in the affair (Coon admitted that he was in the vicinity of the Palais d'Ete at the time of the murder, and lamely claims that the weapon which was used in the commission of the crime—a Colt Woodsman definitely owned by Coon—had been stolen from his locker at Ain Taya shortly before the murder took place).

Is this all a little circumstantial, a trifle tenuous? Isn't it our native impulse to give our friends the benefit of the doubt when such unwelcome phenomena are brought to our attention?

I wish that I could convince myself that Coon was not involved. Unfortunately, however, shortly before the attentat Coon had written a memorandum (which has, damningly, survived), which urges the Allies to adopt a policy of murdering any politicians who were in their way, so that they would be able to nip "the causes of political disturbance in the bud." Coon urged the Allies to train and equip a group of Anglo-American terrorists for the job so that they would be able to strike "as soon as the first spots of decay appear."

So it seems that the drum-head court-martial, which was established by Giroud, and which tried, sentenced, and executed the hapless Bonnier for the murder, was as much of a sham as the lynching-bee of Nuremberg three years later.

And our hero did nothing to stop it.

BURGESS REMEMBERS

The late novelist, musician, and critic Anthony Burgess, author of the notorious A Clockwork Orange, once wrote a sort of addendum to Orwell entitled 1985 (Little, Brown, and Company, Boston 1978). In the course of an interview which serves as a sort of overture to the text proper, he reminisces about his wartime (WW II) experiences as follows:

> Now we all know about organized hate. When I was in the army I was sent on a course at a Hate School [!]. It was run by a suspiciously young lieutenant-colonel—boy-friend of which influential sadist, eh? We were taught hatred of the enemy. "Come on, you chaps, hate, for God's sake. Look at those pictures of Hun atrocities. Surely you want to slit the throats of the bastards. Spit on the swine, put the boot in." A lot of damned nonsense. (p. 13)

A mirific and elegant beatitude seems constantly to emanate from the pages of Anthony Burgess—his language is scintillant, flexible, earthy. Such authors grant us access to the most mysterious and magical realm of all—Reality. Burgess, who was a master-magician with the English language, was not one of us politically, but he did call things by their proper names; and that, as philosophers are wont to remark, is the beginning of wisdom. His books were beautifully crafted, and, as you can see from the above excerpt, he had a truth or two to share with all of us.

Once upon a time, back in the roaring twenties (not so roaring in Europe, though), a famous musical fellow named Arnold Schoenberg was in Vienna to rehearse a small chamber group from the Vienna Philharmonic for an upcoming performance of his Kammersymphonie (Arnie was, I might interject, the musical analog of Einstein in physics—both were talents puffed up into an outsized and unwieldy Olympian stature by sheeny flugelmen). Anyway, during the rehearsal a clarinetist named Polatschek, later brought over by Serge Koussevitsky to grace the Boston Symphony Orchestra's woodwind section, remarked to a colleague that he had, by mistake, been employing a clarinet in B flat instead of the clarinet in A which was indicated in the score—and that Schoenberg hadn't noticed it! Musicians will instantly realize the implications of this faux pas—the rest of us can compare this situation to reading a letter which has been typed by a secretary with her fingers on the wrong home-keys: everything, but everything, comes out wrong.

Well! One of Polatschek's colleagues, a wag by the name of Burghauser, suggested to his fellow woodwind players that they try the experiment of intentionally playing wrong notes to see if the Emperor had any clothes on—sorry, I mean to see if Schoenberg would hear them.

As a matter of fact, Schoenberg did not.....

BOOK REVIEW

Roche, George. The Fall of the Ivory Tower / Government Funding, Corruption, and the Bankrupting of American Higher Education, Washington: Regnery, 1994. 10+310 pages. Foreword by Malcolm S. Forbes Jr.

by
Charles E. Weber, Ph.D.

Aryan high school graduates about to enter college and their parents should read this book as a warning and as a source of information about what is presently going on in American colleges and universities. It is not a pretty picture which the author presents. He is well positioned to inform the reader about the destructive rôle of the federal government in higher education because he is the president of Hillsdale College, a small Michigan liberal arts school with a little over a thousand students. The school accepts no direct aid from government in order to remain independent.

In his Introduction Roche points out that the political and intellectual radicals of the 1960s have now become the Establishment on the campus, with its "liberal-left agenda on race, class and gender." Roche states the thesis of his book as follows (page 4): "Whereas once the dominant form of education in this country was private, the state now holds sway from kindergarten to graduate school. The effect of federal subsidy and control has been more profound, more direct, and more damaging than anyone has yet realized. It has led to a situation in which the entire system of American higher education is academically, morally, and, quite literally, going bankrupt."

In his first chapter Roche presents facts and statistics which reveal the difficult financial plight of higher education in the United States (in spite of federal subsidies) and the actual deterioration of the quality of education offered to students as a result of mismanagement and influences of the federal government. Even Harvard, with its very high tuition costs, ran a $42 million deficit in 1991-1992.

Roche continues with an historical outline of the rôle of the federal government in higher education in various stages, such as the New Deal, World War II and the G.I. Bill, the National Defense Education Act and even the present Clinton administration. With ever increasing government subsidies have come such evils as "affirmative action" and racial quotas, which are aimed against Caucasian students and which Roche describes in shocking, disgusting detail (pages 103 ff). Private colleges, such as Hillsdale and Grove City have been particular victims of the hostility of the federal government to colleges which strive to maintain their integrity and independence.

Tuitions have risen much more rapidly than price increases in general ("inflation"). Roche contends that senior professors are not sufficiently involved in the teaching of undergraduates, a duty often turned over to assistants.

An especially important chapter (8, pages 187-209) is devoted to the college curriculum and political correctness. A rather long list of papers presented at conventions of the Modern Language Association reveals some of the absurd trends of the research of members of that Association. Roche points out: "Gay and lesbian studies in particular.... have moved from the sidelines to the center of academic publishing."

Roche's book is a depressing exposition of what is going on in American Academe. It is depressing because the decay and perversion of higher education is bringing about a decline of the United States. If higher education decays, so will the country at large.

Most people who attend colleges and universities do so for the primary purpose of improving their earning capacities. Their tuitions and other expenses should therefore be counted as a business expense and hence a deduction for tax purposes. That would not only be fair but it would also help to circumvent federal control over higher education with all of the evil, unjust dictates by the federal government, such as affirmative action (i.e., putting Caucasian students at a disadvantage on the basis of de facto quotas), influencing curriculum content, enforcing what is cynically known as "political correctness" and the like. Instead, students and their parents must defray the expenses of higher education with painfully taxed money. The taxes they pay are then used to control the nature of their education.

Heavy government intervention can lead to a type of economic dislocation ("overproduction") which can be to the disadvantage, in the long run, of the very students who receive government aid in the form of low-cost loans and scholarships. I recall a conversation I had with one of the graduate students in the linguistics program at Louisiana State University around 1965, when I was teaching there. This graduate student was receiving benefits from the National Defense Education Act passed in 1958 after the Soviet Sputnik launched into the sky in 1957 caused panic from the realization that the USSR was educating scientists at a great rate and that these scientists (with the help of German rocket experts) were able to perform a feat which the United States was either unable to do or had not found important to do. The Act was designed to increase the number of graduate students in such fields as mathematics, foreign languages and the quantitative sciences. I admonished the graduate student that heavy government subsidies in his field could result in its overcrowding and hence to a later depression of salaries in it. I recall that I told him that for every dollar in benefits he was then receiving he might lose five or ten later on as a result of the overcrowding. Roche describes the National Defense Education Act and similar programs but I fail to find mention of the type of economic dislocation (described above) in Roche's book. ❑

Revilo P. Oliver, RIP

by

Maj. Donald V. Clerkin

Professor Revilo P. Oliver, 1908-1994, classical scholar, linguist and Aryan loyalist, will be sorely missed. His books, researches and essays into the causes of America's decline came to the inevitable conclusion that this civilization falters in direct proportion to the unwillingness of whites to stand up for the Aryan race and its moral values. Professor Oliver did not spare the Jewish complicity in America's decline. They and only they are ultimately responsible for the decline in moral values, their media constantly promoting subjectivism in all areas of conduct, philosophical nihilism and outright trashing of the traditions of those Aryan values that built America up from nothing.

In his own way, Revilo Oliver was more of a "patriot" than all of the bottom dwellers who wave flags and sing paeans to the government, its bullying and intimidations. Early on he saw through the money-making schemes of the kosher conservatives, whose loyalty was to their own bank statements and not to race and nation. How easily they fell down to worship the pearls the Jews threw before them, the swine. Professor Oliver was around before the Second World War, when the German-American Bund, the Silver Shirts, and others on the Aryan Front in America stood for race and country in the face of Roosevelt and Francis Biddle, Roosevelt's Attorney General, who went after the critics of the anti-German policies in the Federal courts after Pearl Harbor and got convictions on charges of sedition, convictions which were subsequently thrown out by the Supreme Court of the United States on First Amendment grounds. One would have thought that the kosher conservatives might have realized that the Roosevelt gang was protecting Marxist-Jewish interests in prosecuting Fritz Kuhn, William Dudley Pelley, Col. E.N. Sanctuary, Rev. Gerald B. Winrod, and so many others.

Professor Oliver obviously understood it, for when he addressed Franklin Roosevelt in his essays he did so as "that loathsome creature in the White House." When in the late 1950s Robert Welch, candy tycoon, founded the John Birch Society, Revilo P. Oliver was asked to sit on the board of directors. Soon, however, Professor Oliver discovered that Welch was protecting the Jewish originators of Communism from any mention of their complicity in the overthrow of the Romanovs, their control over the Soviet Secret Police apparatus, and their scheme to control the U.S. money supply through the private Jewish corporation known as the "Federal Reserve." He left the Birch Society realizing that its purpose was to organize Aryans into herds of musk oxen, cattle and sheep to be shorn by America's Jewish masters.

We are going to miss Professor Oliver. His loyalty to the Aryan race and its high civilization gives the lie to those who claim that Aryan racialism is mere blind hatred and senseless violence. If there is hatred and violence, it is because, as Revilo Oliver said, the established order refused to listen to those who had something positive to say about the White Man's way. Professor Oliver should have been able to live to see the Aryan Republic. He would approve, I am sure.

White Isn't Enough

America has no future. A white man has no future in America. Don't believe it? Think everything will work out in the end? The non-whites coming to majority status in America will be nice to an aging white population? WRONG! A white who lives long enough into the next century will experience the worst discrimination ever seen in this continent. As the non-whites become the majority, their representatives will dictate policy, especially hiring and tax policy. White who manage to be productive in the work forces of the future will carry a tax burden so crushing that their own families will diminsh in size to the point at which there is hardly a white birth rate at all.

Social Security will go under in the second decade of the 21st century. There won't be enough white taxes to collect sufficient to carry the soaring increases in minority slouches on S.S.I. grants to keep up their booze and drug habits. The federal budget already cuts into Social Security for interest payments on the Debt. White had better think again about having any government benefit well into the next century.

The new "health care" scheme Hillary and Billary propose will make life for the white aged and their grandchildren even more miserable. Anti-white discrimination in health matters will become government policy. How much will an old white life be worth, or the life of a white male infant? In combat medicine there is a policy known as Triage. Choices must be quickly made concerning whose wounds are treatable, who has the best chance of recovering. Those who it is deemed cannot survive are given a heavy injection of morphine to kill the pain and are set aside to quietly die. There will be racial Triage in the health care System of the future. I have written that whites are now considered to be tax farm and cannon fodder, but especially tax farm. What is the worth in minority terms of an old white who cannot work because of age or illness? Triage in civilian "health care" based on the race of an individual will be the standard of the future. See who are the doctors of tomorrow: Jews, Asians, East Indians, et al.

One day the old white man will wonder why his Social Security or military pension check no longer comes. A trip to the government office will see an ocean of color, non-white employees with a Jew overlord dictating the policy. The old white man will be sternly told that he has imposed on non-whites long enough; that he should go home and take his life, his old white wife too. Is this too stark a prediction? You don't want to find out. Consider how much you have already lost in a country you once thought was yours.

Obviously being white isn't enough. You must renounce loyalty to this Washington regime, this regime that has pulled the rug out from under you and yours. The only citizenship you now hold as whites is state citizenship. Washington is not a country, not a nation; it has no citizens, merely servants, officers and non-white wards. The "United States" is an international corporation. It exists only on paper and in its military bases, its possessions and territories. It cannot make a non-white a citizen of any state, no matter what the Fourteenth Amendment proposes or the Civil Rights statutes say. Washington's dictates carry the force of law only among its servants, officers and wards. It is no more a nation than General Motors or IBM.

As a white you are an organic citizen of the state in which you were born or now reside. But the states have been corrupted by federal money. The same anti-white policies employed by Washington are generally in effect in your state. At least in the states you have a government that pays attention to what you say, if you say if loud and often. On the city or county level you can be heard even more. I am of the opinion that whites are much too silent on issues affecting their lives and future.

Aryanize your minds. Don't think of yourselves as "U.S. citizens." Washington knows you are not. Oh, they will wrench taxes out of you at the point of a gun. We are their victims, their farm. Look toward a future that includes only your race in a new governance. The Aryan Republic concept cannot thrive in an atmosphere that sees whites loyal to alien regimes, their false propaganda.

I walked recently along the shores of one of Wisconsin's most fashionable resort lakes. I saw the mansion-like summer residences of the white wealthy, their huge, private swimming piers and their expensive power boats tied up at them. It was a bright Sunday and the whites were at play with their children and their dogs. And I thought of the French nobility in 1789 and how they must have viewed their own decaying society. The French Aristos never dreamed that in a few short years they would be loaded into tumbrels and taken to the Guillotine. Our white wealthy hope that their own dream, the "American Dream," does not turn into a nightmare as it did for the French. Though it probably would do no good to remind them of what happened to people just like them in 1789. They think that being white and wealthy is protection against just about anything. They have no racial conscience, which is why I call them the "Blankos." White skins and no souls. They might as well be black for all the care for their race they display.

No, being white isn't enough. Wealth won't save the "Blankos," Aryanism will. How to teach the "Blankos" a racial conscience, how to get them involved in the preservation of our people and the making of a future for white children? That is the question of our age. We Aryans don't like the prospect of leaving the recalcitrant "Blankos" to their racial fate at the hands of the operators of multicultural America. It is like throwing a lifeline to a drowning man who refuses to take it. It is very difficult for those of us who have sworn to protect our race and culture to grasp the reason(s) why the "Blankos" will not speak up for their own kind, why they actively assist in the empowerment of other races; why they cooperate with the Jews and the ZOG. Be certain that they are coming to a critical point in their refusal to speak up.

BULLOCH'S DEXTERITY

by

Stephen Contrado

In 1861 the Confederate Navy Secretary Stephen R. Mullory declared war on United States commerce. Under Commander Raphael Semmes of the CSS Sumter, the slop of war captured eighteen prizes in six months.

Mallory sent James D. Bullock to England to purchase vessels to be fitted for war. The task was very difficult because it violated the Queen's proclamation of neutrality. And, Thomas H.Dudley, the United States consul at Liverpool, had spies everywhere.

Bullock had the "290" built in England. "290" derives from 290th vessel constructed by the Laird Brothers Shipyard, Liverpool. Dudley had evidence of Bullock's activity and was arranging to have the ship seized. Bullock had already created an uproar when his first, ship the Oreto, escaped the British authorities. Bullock's chances seemed slim indeed. But Bullock knew how to gain intelligence too and acted promptly.

Bullock brought the "290" out on an innocent trial run. Food and champagne were served to the dignitaries on board. Then he arranged that he and his guests return to Liverpool aboard a tugboat. The "290" was at sea. The officials failed to see the ruse.

Bullock remained master of the situation in England. The British Foreign Enlistment Act prohibited the Confederates from recruiting sailors. Bullock avoided violating the law. He recruited only after the ships left English waters.

On August 24, 1882 the cross and stars was flown, musicians struck up the Dixie anthem, and cheers broke out. The ship was built of only the best materials. The hull of the "290" was copper-plated. It could raise it's propeller and sail. Its speed was 13 knots, and it was well armed with six 32-pound guns and a 110-pound Blakely gun. Semmes' lieutenant John McIntosh Kell said of the cruiser that it was "the most beautiful ship that ever touched the sea." Semmes likened to a new bride.

A gun was fired and the "290" was christened the Confederate States Alabama. Semmes was given the commission of the ship. "Any of you that thinks he cannot stand to his gun, I don't want", Semmes told the crew.

Bullock, who was present, said farewell to return to England. The South now had two unsurpassed cruisers, thanks to Southern daring.

The "triangular" trade—the South to Europe to New York—was the basis of maritime prosperity. The South could not afford to allow the North to have uncontested control of the sea. Breasting its way along the rough and often stormy Atlantic coast in the American Civil War was overcast with cold, blind, deadly terror for shipping. War and the Northern blockade of Southern ports retarded subsequent construction of cargo ships. The American merchant marine fleet did not attain first place over England until after the Second World War, urged by world economic recovery.

Every nation must maintain its waters if it is to prosper. The Soviet Union with its Eastern European satellites never competed in cargo ships. Instead it invested in its navy. This contributed to the fall of communism.

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment' on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 — except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. REVISIONISM IS JEWISH

Robert Frens

One of the more noticeable things about the blight-wing is their propensity for imitating those whom they criticize. In addition, the blight-wing has its own version of a politically correct vocabulary. Part of this is the rule which forbids one blight-winger from criticizing another. Any such criticism is supposed to cause disunity in the battle against the embodiment of all evil, the Jew. Disunity? How can you disunite something which was never united in the first place? Essentially, the blight-wing is a collection of mail-order operators whose life-blood is a mailing list. Mailing lists are survival lists which are guarded closer than a pimp polices his whores. If the blight-wing was truly interested in the overall welfare of the Aryan, then there would be a sharing of resources and a "let the best man emerge" atmosphere. This is not the case and never will be since the "leaders" are, to the last man, only mediocre personalities who earn their living from the non-existent "movement". I have met a good share of them and I have yet to be impressed by a single one. Basically, I have little use, or regard, for anyone who privately espouses opinions which are diametrically opposed to the views they vomit into their "newsletters" or from a podium. If we believe that Adolf Hitler was the epitome of Aryan leaders, then we must ask ourselves what assumed name he wrote under. Did Adolf ever use party (supporter's) money to finance vacations with his girlfriend? When did he use supporter's money to buy himself a new automobile? When did he ever mouth personal opinions about the German people which he voiced publicly, in the opposite, in order to increase the donations? The blight-wing is an absolute impediment to any resurrection of Aryan attributes and the quicker anyone, or any group, even the Jews, hastens its disappearance, the better.

I always have, and always will, value simple honesty and will not, in spite of the "advice" I get from people, cater to anyone as a means of enhancing donations or gathering support. "You must use honey to catch flies" I am advised. Hell, what would anyone who is not a revisionist want with a mess of messy flies? Over and over, I listen to blight-wingers who complain that the Jews are us-

Revilo Oliver Is No Longer With Us

For many years Revilo Pendleton Oliver was a tall tree in the Groves of Academe. Born in Corpus Christi (TX) in 1910, he obtained his B.A. at the University of Illinois and his doctorate from the same university in 1940. From there on the curve was all up. He became one of the world's foremost scholars in classical languages, even translating a play from the Sanskrit.* His knowledge of Ancient Greek and Latin was so comprehensive that during WWII, the War Dept., as it was then called, put him to work deciphering German secret codes.

Sometime during the war Oliver saw a light, one that shattered forever his chances of living a life of ease and respectability with a long entry in Who's Who. Unlike the light that converted St. Paul to Christianity, the light encountered by Oliver led him into the perilous and unrewarding path of racial dissidence—the dissidence engendered in the mind of one who looks closely at the fabric of Western civilization and finds it woefully shredded.

After WWII, Oliver joined forces with William F. Buckley Jr. for whose National Review he wrote extensively. Delving into the political arena, he was present at the founding of the John Birch Society. American Opinion, the Society's journal, published page after page of his rare amalgam of Swiftian and Ciceronian prose.

Oliver, however, was much more than a clairvoyant anti-Communist, a political stance that endeared him to the Birch Society's Robert Welch and Buckley. He was a firm believer that race, not economics or environment, was the principal determinant of man's fate. This Weltblick did not endear him to so-called conservatives who out of fear and mental cowardice shied away from the more important issues. In the end Oliver quit or was forced to quit his part-time, part-way ideology allies and go it on his own. He wrote books and articles that no mainstream publication would publish, only managing to get his words in print in quasi-unknown magazines and xeroxed fliers. He probably felt, as most of us do, that even if only a handful of people reads what he writes, it is better to get into print somewhere than bury the manuscripts in a desk drawer. Ironically the closer his writings approached the truth, the more he was denounced by the kept press, which shrugged him off as a deranged Nazi.

Oliver's bristling intellect, his Old World courtesy, his encyclopedic knowledge and his standing as a top-ranking professor at a top-ranking university raised the morale of young Majority activists who worried that no American with a brain in his head supported "their side." A personal visit to their mentor, whose door was always open, gave them the face-to-face assurance that they were not alone.

The fall of Soviet communism revealed the madness of Marxism and proved what Oliver had always foretold, though by depriving him of one of his principal bêtes noires it removed a chief prop of his conspiracy theories, too many of which permeated his writing. Otherwise everything he wrote and thought was based on a solid understanding of the racial tragedy unfolding before his eyes. If there ever was a prophet without honor in his own country, it was Revilo Oliver.

Oliver gave his people little chance for survival. But he never stopped trying to save them from the ash heap of history towards which they are rapidly heading. If the United States should turn around, if the Northern European race is saved either in North America or Europe, if black and Jewish racism is finally defeated, he may go down in history as one of the great men of the 20th century. If all is lost, somehow the memory of this unique man will remain. Bodies do not last, but the products of a supernova mind keep glimmering in some remote corner of the universe until the time arrives for a far-off Promethean descendant to restore the processes and juices of civilization.

Revilo Oliver died, at age 84, on August 10 at his home in Urbana, Illinois. He is survived by his life-long companion and amanuensis, his wife Grace, an artist. The Olivers had no children.

*Oliver's finest writing is found in his book, America's Decline, the Education of a Conservative (paperback, 375 pages), which can be obtained from Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy, WV 25270. Price is $10, plus $1.50 shipping and handling.

On November 19 a symposium honoring Dr. Oliver will be held at the University of Illinois. Reservations can be made through Sam Dickson, 247 Washington Ave., Marietta, GA 30060. Telephone: (404) 872-3019.

Attendance will be limited to 50.

ing pretense, and outright lying, as bridge-heads for their assault upon Aryan values. Out of these very same mouths comes the recommendation that Aryans engage in identical subterfuge so that, when the time comes, they can assert whatever it is they think they should assert. If the Jews do this, then it is dirty. If Aryans do it, then it is justified. What hypocrisy! It all reminds me of the criminal group, who after obtaining illegal wealth, suddenly decides to go "legit" with a dry cleaning business and a cigar shop. A crook is a crook is a crook. He can change his socks but the stench is still there. One correspondent even apologized for the "wiggers" who engaged in hooliganism. Wiggers are usually degenerate white misfits (who no self-respecting black-face would ever associate with) and decidedly are not nice Aryan fellows "feeling their oats." We may excuse a Black for acting like a nigger, but an Aryan? Never! I will not agree with the person who views vandalism as merely an expression of youthful Aryan "energy" and that "sporting" slaughter has something to do with the Aryan psyche.

Revisionists, of course, firmly believe in the "talking cure". This has been the hallmark of every Jewish psychiatrist from cocaine-snorting Freud to the quack Spock who both managed to sire additional misfits. If you engage in the right kind of talk, for the right length of time without belching, then any sociopath can be "cured" of whatever it is that turns him on. The talking cure nonsense has permeated every level of American thinking. Just say "no" to drugs. Just say "no" to crime. Education, which is the code word for the ultimate talking cure, is supposed to be the answer to everything from jock-itch to typhoons. We can supposedly educate people out of poverty. We can supposedly educate people out of their stupidity. The fact is that the more people are "educated", the worse everything becomes. According to Earl Bauby, "I cut off a piece three times now, but it is still too damned short."

We are near the end of fifty years of the holocaust talking cure and the revisionists are still talking. Nevertheless, the talking is still inviting and with that in mind, I fired up my rusty 1977 Ford and drove to Niagara Falls where David Irving was going to do some more talking.

I arrived at Days Inn where I stumbled upon Ernst Zündel who was generous enough to pay my admission. Prior to having Mr. Irving talk down to us, we sat and sipped some coffee. A tall and slender fellow came in and sat beside Ernst. The conversation indicated that this person was Michael Hoffman who, I believe, writes a paper called the Revisionist Researcher. I remained somewhat perplexed because a few years ago a "Michael Hoffman" was pointed out to me, at Ernst's home, but that person was short, swarthy, and accompanied by a woman who looked like an escapee from the Tonawanda Indian Reservation. Oh well. Time moves on. I introduced myself and I moved on. Ernst and Michael appeared to be collaborating on the writing of another book. Another book? The Great Holocaust Trial Revisited? How Jewish!

Prior to taking my seat, I introduced myself to Jack Wikoff, a mild mannered person who looked like he just arrived fresh from a Kansas farm. Jack publishes a paper called Remarks which I read whenever I can secure a free copy, which is hardly ever. Revisionists are as terrified of "free" as the Jews are of shower rooms.

Among the other wholesome looking people in that collection of about 70 was what I assumed to be the immediate family of Mr. Hoffman. From the smallest tot on up, they were a fine looking set of white people although a little too sober for my liking. Corpses don't smile either.

I sat down next to some old acquaintances from Buffalo NY who were engaged in eating some kind of cattle feed called "granola". I nodded and they munched. I flexed my beef-fed muscles while they sighed feebly and tried to adjust their bony posteriors to fit the curve of the chairs.

Mr. Zündel introduced Mr. Hoffman who, in turn, introduced Mr. Irving who then began to talk about Mr. Irving. This followed Mr. Hoffman's talking about Mr. Irving. My opinion that if you heard Mr. Irving once then you've heard Mr. Irving twice, was still valid. David Irving talked and talked and reinforced my opinion that Revisionism is Jewish. Revisionist gatherings are like the Jewish academy awards. Everyone is busy patting each other on the back. "What a fine job we are doing." Smile. This propitious moment is being captured on video tape.

Jewish science always starts with a conclusion and then selects whatever facts seem to fit. Mr. Irving, although keen to discredit Jewish "eye witnesses" to the Auschwitz line dancing affair, was very keen to credit a German who was an "eye witness" to some mass execution on the Eastern Front. How Jewish! Wars are hell; politicians tell lies; and no one knows for sure the details of much of anything in times of chaos. Prolific David churns out tons of written material demonstrating what we all guessed before he ever sharpened his first pencil.

Revisionists, it seems, are also very fond of reinventing the wheel. One revisionist, to Mr. Irving's exuberant acceptance, is writing a paper on the durability of ferric-ferro cyanide (Prussian Blue). This is in reference to the stuff called Leuchter's Blue which was not found in the non-existent Auschwitz non-gas chambers. Where has this researcher-revisionist fellow been? Prussian Blue, and its bed companion Turnbull's Blue, have been used as paint pigments for centuries. Old tombs are plastered with it. The history of the past will never be settled to anyone's satisfaction so Revisionism will continue to be a treadmill exercise—lots of motion but going nowhere. Revisionism is a verbal Nordic-Track. We're on the right track, track, track, track....

Revisionists, in typical Jewish fashion, also find hidden meanings in what people say. An example was given by Mr. Irving. According to an "eye witness" (gad!, not another?) Adolf Hitler voiced that he felt as clean as a babe after taking a bath. How unusual! Since Adolf took this bath, or shower, after the "night of the elongated machetes" then his remark had to be decoded according to Freud. This, of course, meant that Adolf didn't feel "clean" following the execution of all of those Brown Shirts who plotted and moved against him. Adolf, according to corpse mind-reader Irving, "knew he did something dirty." The lesson we can all learn here is that whenever you take a personal hand in rounding up your enemies for execution, you should refrain from using soap and water until the whole episode becomes a dim memory. Otherwise, any astute lad will immediately know that you are using the soap on your body in order to cleanse your mind. Do religious people take showers after they watch porno movies? Should I brush my teeth after I see a Burger King commercial?

Revisionism, following another Jewish fashion, becomes more believable according to the number of Jews involved. Mr. Irving acknowledged the efforts of the Jew David Cole when Cole visited the Auschwitz theme park. Cole saw nothing more than any goy ever saw, but if you wear a yarmulke while seeing it, you can apparently "see" more (Jewish voodoo!). David Irving announced that more and more Jews are now getting on the revisionist bandwagon, which, and this is Jewish also, enhances the whole shebang. You see, if it comes from a Jew then it must be true.

Revisionists are also very Jewish in their examinations of what it is they examine. "Revisionism is nit-picking," says Robert Faurisson, who is a well-known revisionist. Rabbis are also nit-pickers which leads me to believe that Revisionism should be immediately turned over to the rabbis who have centuries of experience in nit-picking to draw upon. Whenever a batch of revisionists ponder the symbols on a document, you almost can hear the rabbinical questions concerning the meaning of an "i" where the dot is placed to the left. Was it an ink dot or merely fly shit?

Mr. Irving, as well as Jewish-looking, Jewish-acting Freddie, spends an inordinate amount of time showing how the Germans "might have" and "probably did" snuff out thousands of innocent Jew choir boys. It is all part of the "revisionist shuffle". When one pokes about the imaginary ash-piles of Auschwitz, a raft of noise is heard. To quiet the noise, one does the shuffle, that is, stick to your position that the Nazis didn't gas the entire world synagogue in an Auschwitz clothes drier, but did manage to get rid of them in other ways. I suggest a college course called "2001 Ways to Kill Jews Without Using Cyanide." I would like to see a collection of American G.I. tales covering the different ways our troops settled the "German question". Dick Wilkes, a childhood friend of mine who fought in WW II, even had photos of what two German civilians looked like with only their feet sticking out from under a tank tread. Chuck Prospero enjoyed the game of "watch the Kraut crawl" which preceded "target practice." Gene Elmore finally settled the question of whether a starving German will eat piss-soaked bread.

The "revisionist waltz" goes like this: They pick up on some Jew sob story and busy themselves by trying to convince the uninterested that the story could not be factual. The Jews respond with another story and the revisionists get dancing to another tune. Back and forth it goes, and goes, and goes, only serving to keep the goyim detracted while, behind their backs, their country is being dismantled and plundered.

Holocaust talking, pro or con, and whether in print, on some dumb computer network, or on short-wave radio, is not going to be a cure for anything. In fact, the more the revisionists yap about the holocaust, the more the Jews yap about the holocaust. One yap deserves another. Since most Americans are "up to here" with the holocaust nonsense, is it little wonder that they are also getting fed up with the revisionist arguments as well. It is over, my friends, and Jewish money and influence have established yet another bit of nonsense as "fact". It is to the credit of the Jew that this was accomplished with little bloodshed. Contrast this to the establishment of Christianity among otherwise content savages by means of torture, terror, and bribes.

The Holocaust fable has no future. Time will bury it as it did the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre, and the Inquisition, which remain only as scribbles upon the pages of books no one ever bothers to read. Revisionism is only a reactionary exercise in history which remains parasitical in its relation to the "survivor" moaning business. David Irving thinks the Holocaust, as it is currently presented, will have gone bye-bye by 1996. If that becomes true (and it won't) then will the revisionists finally go out and get a decent job? Will the Blacks stop pushing drugs and the Mestizos return with their stolen cars to Mejico? Do chickens have lips?

The notion, as I see it, is that the country is in a "fine mess" because the naughty Jews have so much power. Do you remember the posters which told you to always remove the keys from your auto so as to prevent "a good boy from going bad?" If some s.o.b. steals your car then it was because you turned him into a criminal by forgetting your keys. If some bastard burglarizes your home, then you are at fault for not installing an expensive alarm system. This same odd attitude dumps the blame for the actions of our Aryan garbage upon the Jew. Get rid of the Holocaust, since it is the mainstay of Jewish power (it ain't—the Jews were powerful long before the Holocaust), and the Jews will no longer be "corrupting" the minds of our brain-dead, hedonist, young wiggers. Crap!

Revisionists also employ another Jew tactic. Create a problem and then offer a solution. The revisionists created the minuscule "debate" in the first place. They now offer a solution which always involves sending them money. A few more court fracases, a few more books, a few more short-wave broadcasts, a few more blah-blahs, and then the vapors of cyanide will have all blown away. Kosher sausage! Lies have short legs but the revisionists keep them alive, and promote the manufacture of more, by giving this nonsense a reason for being. Spielberg's latest delusion is viewed by David Irving as a revisionist success since it indicates that Revisionism is "winning." The only thing that Swanzler's List demonstrates is that the Jews can lie faster than the revisionists can refute them. It's all a game of "can you top this?" where the Jews can afford the larger pile of betting chips.

Holocaust revisionism is on its last legs and most of the revisionists are as goofy as the Jews they debate with. As the ranks of revisionism fill with Jews, it will die all that much faster. Willis Carto, who worried more about a dollar than he did about the quality of the people he hired, is now engaged in a battle with his former underlings at the Institute of Historical Review. Down is the future direction. It is interesting, also, that once a Jew becomes a revisionist, he moves from holocaust lying to revisionist truth-telling. It's a "born again" episode without all of that magic water.

Schindler's List is the latest whopper that gets the revisionists all flustered. I have often wondered why the revisionists never got excited about Hollywood's "The Ten Commandments", or "The Robe", which contain far more meat for "making history fit the facts" than does any "I've been gassed a dozen times" type of fiction. After all, every one of Hollywood's religious film spectacles were Jew-produced, Jew-financed, and involved stories about Jews as told by Jews. What a strange discrimination these revisionists practice!

Revisionists are doing something valuable and needed. This is the opinion of many. In a way, I agree. I suppose that while the country is dying of a cancer, it is better to do it with the accompaniment of revisionist music so that we can go to the Happy Hunting Ground with smiles upon our faces. As for myself, I'd rather shoot the distracting music players and get on with the business of fighting the cancer. It is time to get off the pot. ❑

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear George,

The death of Revilo P. Oliver will take a strong wind out of the racialists' sails. There was so much to learn from each of his remarkable articles and the shame is that the majority of our people never heard of him. What an impact it would have been if his writings would have been dropped in every mail slot in the nation. Is it possible to print a compilation of his articles? [We are now in the process of preparing Dr. Oliver's "Postscripts" for reprinting in book format; just as soon as the financial situation improves, the first volume will be published; we hope to have it ready within the next two to three months.—Ed.] I have been putting off making a collection of his works. Perhaps you could make such an offering in the future.

In the October 1994 issue of the Liberty Bell you printed an article by Friedrich Berg entitled " The Furnace Tender Should Wear a Gas Mask when Tending the Fire." I contributed a letter which you printed in the April 1993 Liberty Bell, which dealt with the explosive characteristics of HCN and my engineering experience with natural gas and explosion proof equipment.

The existence of an explosive air-gas ratio is not a pre-requirement for the installation of explosion proof electrical devices. What is a concern is the malfunction of equipment or operator error in handling flammable gases near open flames. Particularly in equipment leaks of heavier than air gas (which does not include HCN) in enclosed areas. In industry propane is the chief villain. In most cases the explosive danger is far fetched but is installed anyway in accordance with the National Electric Code. That does not mean it was a requirement in National Socialist Germany. I am certain that all contemporary designs of any installation that would normally have any level of HCN in the atmosphere would require explosion proof equipment, Dupont notwithstanding.

It is true that HCN's flammability limit ranges from 5.6 to 40% by volume in air, but that range is at standard conditions and will expand on an increase of temperature and I believe also with pressure. So if a pocket of air-gas mixture is ignited the sudden temperature increase would also incinerate the more diluted adjacent air-gas volumes, thereby contributing to the flame body or explosion.

Recently, while reviewing my old collection of Life magazines, I came upon an article (Life, December 22, 1947, page 31) with "before" and "after" photos of a house in Los Angeles being fumigated with Cyanide gas. The "after" picture showed the house completely flattened from a devastating explosion. Also, sometime during this years' news, it was reported that a lady had released all at once 25 cans (bug bombs) of fumigants in her house resulting in an explosion.

In real life HCN does explode. I also agree that the danger is generally ignored by most people handling the stuff.

Yours truly, R.T., California

It appears from the comment by I. S. in the November readers' section that some subscribers may think that my own pieces (e. g., July and August) were written by the late Professor Oliver. In fact, I am not Oliver, though I am honored to be a part of the forum that he shared.

While at it, I might add, my occasional use of the "Prof" moniker is not meant to boast any special aptitude or scholarship, but merely to note my familiarity (about three decades' worth) with the "higher" academic industry and the irreducibly Jew-leftist race-leveling disease that has for years afflicted it. (My wife, incidentally, is now pursuing a degree, and judging from her experience, it is apparent—to no surprise—that the horrors are all the greater at the present time.)

Like other LB readers, I lament the passing of Dr. Oliver, whose rare combination of courage, erudition and racial insight made him an example for all ages of true Aryan character.

Dear George,

I am very sorry to hear of the passing of Professor Oliver, he will be very sorely missed. I was privileged to receive important correspondence from him, which I will always treasure.

As I write this [23 September 1994], the "peaceful" invasion of Haiti has been accomplished. I have not, at this stage, received sufficient reliable information to make any in-depth comment. However, I do believe that I heard Bill Clinton say that one of the main reasons for the invasion was that the people of Haiti were being denied human rights and were being badly mistreated. Was this something like the story of those terrible Germans (Huns) cutting off the hands of Belgian babies during the first World War? Be that as it may, but the question did cross my mind: Who is going to invade the United States of America, to indict Bill Clinton, and Janet Reno for the burning and denial of human rights of the Branch Davidians and the children at Waco, Texas last year?

I am enclosing a draft for $90 for renewal of my subscription.

We have cattle, sheep and crops, and at present we have one of the worst droughts we have ever had. There may be a few, but I can't think of anyone in N.S.W. or Queensland who will harvest any wheat this year. for over six months our highest fall of rain has been less than 10 points, and we have only had one or two of those. (I don't like the metric measures that have been forced onto us without asking our permission. I understand that the "Imperial" measurements have a long history in the Aryan people. They are also trying to take the Union Jack out of our flag like they have with the Canadians. These three crosses are supposed to be "Christian;" The Cross of St. George, St. Andrew and St. Patrick, but I understand that they were symbols of Aryan peoples 3,000 years B.C. That is, they go back 5,000 years. No wonder the Jews want to root them out. I understand that you people are under pressure to go "metric" in the U.S.A. If at all possible, DON'T LET THEM DO IT!)

Yours sincerely,
J.D.S. Barton, Australia

Dear Mrs. Oliver:

With the passing of Dr. Oliver, we have lost a True Friend, and so we share this grief with you.

We conservatives do not have enough good classical scholars in this world, hence the passing of Revilo Oliver is a very considerable loss to us. We shall miss our good Professor Oliver with all his irascible wit yet so well graced with classic root. Even the symmetrical spelling of his name, Revilo Oliver, reflected some balance of Greco-Roman architecture—another expression of his wit?

Dr. Oliver was a kind of champagne to our intellectual experience, hence we must query: Whence comes such another?

Best wishes,
R.S. Hoehler, Colorado

Dear Mr. Dietz,

I was surprised to hear from one of your subscribers that you published my letter to Chuck Harder in your publications. Obviously, you agree with my candor with Mr. Harder.

Since my association with you fell apart some ten years ago, please accept the following up-date.

I have abandoned Christianity in its entirety; the church, the bible, including the law, and the Jewish god of the bible. The entire bible scheme is a Jewish concoction to neuter and/or destroy the Aryan race. In retrospect, it is difficult to believe I got taken in By this force, so destructive to the beautiful Aryan mind.

Anyone who questions my position must learn what I have learned. and remember, I am the one with a bible college degree in bible and theology. One must view the two-hour color video, "The Naked Truth," then try to tell me I'm wrong. We all must learn the three C's:

Jewish Communism
Jewish Christianity
Jewish Capitalism.

A person accused me of "losing my faith." My reply was, "I did not lose my faith. I tore it out by the roots and smashed it to bits on the anvil of Truth."

The passing of Revilo P. Oliver is a great loss. Perhaps I can soften this loss by supplying you with some timely information. The Paul D. Wilcher document is being sent to you under separate cover. Use it as you see fit. It will include the up-dated Clinton body count.

I would like to receive the copy of the Liberty Bell containing my letter. Thank you!

Sincerely, a restored colleague,
J.B. Crawford, Tennessee

P.S. The use of "Rev" in my letter to Harder was to get his attention. Otherwise, I abhor it!!!

Dear Mr. Elliott:

You asked a guest today what Martin Luther King had actually done to advance the cause of Communism in America. The young man could only say that King was killed before he could do anything damaging.

In 1967 I lived in Chicago. During that summer there was a big anti-Vietnam War demonstration. One of the highlights was a massive march of some 7,000 demonstrators down Wabash Avenue to the Chicago Coliseum, where a rally was held. In the front rank of the marchers was the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., marching arm-in-arm with Gus Hall(berg), General Secretary of the Communist Party of the United States. This event is on record with the three Chicago newspapers, the Tribune, the Sun-Times and the Daily News, published at that time. Now I did not merely read about this march in the papers. I was there on Wabash Avenue in a small, pro-troops counter-demonstration. I personally witnessed King marching with Gus Hall(berg).

King associated with known Reds, including Hunter Pitts ("Jack") O'Dell, Carl and Ann Braden, of the Southern Conference Education Fund, a Communist Party front; and King did accept funds from Communist sources through the various front groups. One of the reasons the King file is closed by the FBI, kept from publication by Executive Order, is the fact that Martin Luther King's associations were documented by J. Edgar Hoover. He had connections to stolen car rings, white slavery (which he used himself quite regularly), and his lifestyle indicated amoral turpitude that would have tarnished his phony sainthood had the facts got out. If anyone cares in the next century, the file will be reopened; that is if anything is left in it.

As an Australian, I see what liberalism has done to our own country. It is also killing America. They have made an icon of Martin Luther King. Had he lived, he probably would have been defrocked.

Sincerely,
Major Donald V. Clerkin

Hon. Robert Blanchard

District Attorney, Racine County
The Courthouse
730 Wisconsin Avenue
Racine, Wisconsin 53403

Dear Mr. District Attorney:

It is my opinion that the Wisconsin Hate Crimes statute should be added to any homicide charge you file in the Skinhead killing case. This particular statute has meaning only when it is employed, and the criterion for its employ should not be whether a conviction is assured.

The fact is a black man killed a white man with a gun, and the white man was unarmed. It cannot be said therefore that the black man was protecting himself. Why, then, did he kill him? The Skinhead probably said something to the black man, or vice-versa; there may have even been "fighting words" exchanged between the two. A defense will probably raise this supposed mitigation. The fact remains that a black killed a white over speech that has yet to be revealed.

If the Hate Crimes statute is not employed, then it will be seen as applying only to cases in which a white does something to a black or another protected "minority." The statute becomes laughable when the State uses it to punish only one segment of the population. Those who proposed this statute, I am certain, thought that it would suppress expressions of "bigotry" in whites. Here is a case that wants prosecution of a black who killed a white because he WAS WHITE.

Were I prosecuting this case, I would include the charge of a hate crime with the homicide information because all the circumstantial evidence—and probably parole evidence to be adduced at trial—indicates that this killing was racially motivated; that there was no other rational reason for it. It would not make a difference whether I could get a conviction on the hate crime count. I would already have a homicide charge and a concealed weapons charge. I would file the hate crimes count because I know it happened that

Editor / Letters
Racine Journal Times
212 Fourth Street
Racine, Wisconsin 53403

Dear Editor:

Poor Racine—poor politically—correct Racine. Joe Rowan was just a Skinhead. His murder by a black gang-banger isn't really a local matter. After all, Joe was from New Jersey, in Racine to attend a Skinhead rock band concert. Racine doesn't condone Skinheads holding their "hate" concerts. Isn't there a call to ban such "hateful" concerts in Racine?

Well, that gets Racine off the hook, doesn't it? A Skinhead killed in a brawl, shot in the back. It didn't happen to a "nice" young man, now did it? So Racine doesn't have to do much about it. If witnesses are too scared to come forward, scared of black gang retaliation, then why compel them? No need for grand juries or "John Doe" investigations; even a coroner's inquest would cost the taxpayers more than Joe Rowan's life was worth to Racine. Gosh, lucky for Racine the shooting wasn't the other way around—the Skinhead shooting a black in the back. Think of what that would cost. And the terrible national publicity. Racine would have to break a leg to prosecute the killer then. But Joe Rowan was just a Skinhead. No one cares that he was murdered. Maybe the killer is encouraged by the lack of reaction in Racine. His next white victim may not be a Skinhead.

If the District Attorney of Racine County does not want to do anything to bring Joe Rowan's killer to justice, maybe he can be compelled to act by court order, the proper extraordinary writ being "Mandamus." Failing that, maybe a complicity in wrongful death suit against the county. But I'll tell you something is going to be done about Joe Rowan's murder.

European Journal:

Michael Friedman a leading light of the Christian Democratic Party? This Jew is nothing but a stalking horse for the Zionist crowd and their Marxist theories. Helmut Kohl is in good company with Friedman. He regularly goes on his belly to the Jews.

European Journal is an obvious front for the radical left in Europe. Every week you showcase some dreary silly who is doing something to destroy the European culture and the white race. If it isn't Michael Friedman it is some darky from Africa who is making the scene beating tree logs and calling it "music." I watch European Journal just to see your reporters tell these sordid little stories with a straight face.

But you are noticing that the racialists are increasing their constituencies in every European country. Friedman can get up in front of a crowd and say, "Ich bin Deutscher," but everyone knows what he is and what he represents. He isn't fooling anyone.

And neither are you.

Editor and Publisher, Liberty Bell
PO Box 21
Reedy, WV 25270

Dear Mr . Dietz ,

I received the November issue of Liberty Bell yesterday. As always, I sat right down and read it through cover to cover. In my opinion, Liberty Bell is the finest of the many fine publications dedicated to the near hopeless task of awakening a never more lethargic Aryan remnant of this country to the horrible fate that awaits it. Your courage, George, rivals that of the late, great Revilo Oliver. I admire you for allowing Dr. Oliver to express his rational and scientific views regarding religion even though so allowing would decimate your subscribers. That is real devotion to truth and right!

I would like to comment on James F. Wilkins' letter to the editor in the November issue that took friend Frens to task so waspishly. I think Mr. Wilkins is suffering from the E. Hume syndrome: a tendency to go off half-cocked. I, too, wrote a scathing criticism of Mr. Frens which was a published in Liberty Bell early in 1993. I was new to the movement and mistook Mr. Frens's depth of reasoning for shallowness. His response to my criticism was very gentle. I thought I'd better read this man again and with more attention to what he was saying. I found he not only had important things to say; he said them in a fashion reminiscent of the great H. L. Mencken. He can be very amusing.

I happen to believe only in the Natural Laws and the product of those laws. Religions of all sorts, especially the Jewish ones, are so much irrational superstition to me. The long pages that Mr. Wilkins found so worthless I found otherwise. Of course, I don't agree with everything that Bob Frens writes, but much that he does write finds the target.

We can't afford to pick up our marbles and trot home every time someone writes something that scorches one of our secret little irrationalities. For example, I don't agree with Bob regarding revisionist historians. I think they are desperately needed.

CC: Bob Frens

Greetings!

I read with interest and enjoyment James F. Wilkins' letter to the ed. and the ed's reply in November LB. Yes, LB can be fun too! Too much seriousness is dull and foolish solemnity.

I agree wholeheartedly with Wilkins' assessment of Robert Frens' writing—he does write like a Jewish American Princess! His writing is "self-centered and concentrates on "I", "me," "my", in publicizing hard-nosed opinion of a mediocre mind..."

The First Amendment Exercise Machine (FAEM) I used to receive until in one issue, after the newsletter writer explained that most revisionists were money motivated, in a pejorative sense, he states that he himself must be compensated for his writing—to the tune of $60 for twelve issues; more expensive than LB. A Jewish whine—"why, if I'm not paid, I'll do something else and ye'all will not read me again!" or something to that effect.

Judging by Frens's writing (and that's all one should judge when discussing his writing) he, in type, is obnoxious, spoiled, and conceited and really brings no deep penetration to a topic. The essence is of a juvenile character. I lent a few copies of FAEM to my brother for his evaluation...he said there are many words with little insight.

So much for that. Although I agree with the Wilkens evaluation of Frens, I think Wilkens errs in his comdemnation of LB—and canceling a subscription to LB just to avoid a particular writer is idiotic. There surely must be something else bothering Mr. Wilkins, but no need to go into that!

Continue to publish all types of writers (as I'm sure you will)—even Frens. As I said, enjoyment is a special part of LB, and Frens is fun to read. His idea of himself, as he comes across in his writing is surely at odds with reality. Now that's fun!

Your Jersey Pal, T.

Dear George:

How are you? Things are going well here. It has been so long I can't even recall when last I wrote.

Very sorry to hear of Dr. Oliver's passing; he will be missed. No way to write a proper epitaph for so great a man. All I can say is, "Thank you, Dr. R.P. Oliver for all your effort on our behalf." At least he lived a long life and, hopefully, accomplished much of what he wanted to do.

Enclosed is a subscription renewal for the coming year. Keep up the good work.

Dear Mr. Dietz,

I would like to receive a sample of your Liberty Bell, and also, of course, a complete catalog of your publications. I will probably subscribe again when I am definitely settled down somewhere. I think very much of settling down in Germany, Denmark, or even...Russia.

Momentous things are happening In Europe. Our comrade Manfred Roeder is doing a magnificent job, trying to promote cooperation between Germany and Russia. It would be Europa's last hope for survival. New opportunities are opening each day. If I were you I would very seriously consider going back to Deutschland! You would be so much happier than vegetating in this hopeless Septic Tank called America! Since I have seen beautiful Germany, I have been dreaming about settling there, especially in the Hessen [my Home state — Ed.] area (it's magnificent!). If I couldn't stay in Europe I might just as well go back to South-East Asia, which is probably right now one of the best areas in which to live in the whole world.

If you ever have a chance, go and visit Indonesia. It's fantastic! Gorgeous landscapes, delightful climate, and the nicest, friendliest people in the world (and very open-minded in politics too, especially about Revisionism!)

Keep up the good work. But believe me, if I were you, I would forget about the pseudo-Aryan "White Americans;" rush back to Deutschland and do serious political work there. Forget about America. It's like Brazil now. Finished and dead. Good riddance! — Heil der Deutsch-Russischen Gemeinschaft!!

Yours truly,
M.d.L., France

Dear Mr. George Dietz,

IRS Tries to Ruin Company Over 1¢

Although the federal tyranny squanders untold billions of dollars every year, the Internal Revenue "Service" was certainly vigilant beyond the call of duty in trying to wring an extra penny out of Rainmaker, Inc. of Montrose, Colorado. So vigilant in fact that Rainmaker's accountant, Tom Jaskunas, received a hate letter from the IRS announcing that the "Service" was considering taking the company's "wages, property and other assets" if the company did not immediately send one cent the IRS said was underpaid in quarterly withholding taxes.

The huge one cent shortfall was the result of the rounding of figures to the nearest dollar that the IRS says is allowed. But that did not deter the "Service" from insisting on their penny.

The matter was dropped only when Rep. Scott McInnis (R-CO) wrote the IRS, taped a penny to his letter and told the bureaucracy to "back off Rainmaker."

I have just recently gotten your address. I am a 23-year-old white female, I am in a Texas prison for women. I have only recently been introduced to National Socialism. I have to say that I never heard of National Socialism before, much less understand its meaning.

I have a very good friend who is in the mens' prison in Gaterville, Texas. My friend has been teaching me little by little on the subject, i.e., newsletters and other pieces of literature. One of the pieces my friend sent to me was the GANPAC Brief that I consider very informative and an eye-opener on my part. Just from the few pieces of literature I have read, I feel like I have gone my whole life totally ignorant of the world around me. Everything I was taught in school about World War II and the "Holocaust" was false. I know I haven't even begun to know the truth about the "Jews" and their control of the media and important institutions such as banks, the government, etc. I read your article in the February 1994 GANPAC Brief concerning The Protocols.

My friend told me about a book authored by Adolf Hitler titled Mein Kampf. He suggested I obtain a copy of the book to learn what I need to know about National Socialism. I am very eager to learn all I can on this subject.

Mr. Dietz, is it at all possible for you to send me a copy of Mein Kampf... [We are getting requests for free copies of this and other titles, and subscriptions to Liberty Bell, *on a daily basis. We simply cannot honor these requests. KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations.

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

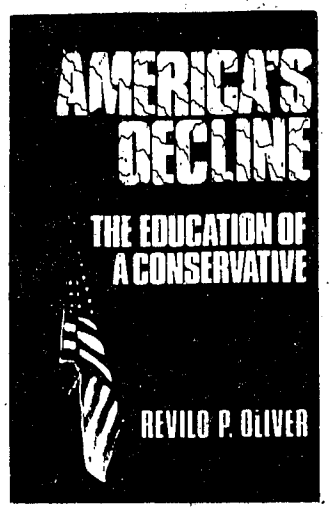
Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

DO YOUR PART TODAY—HELP FREE OUR WHITE RACE FROM ALIEN DOMINATION!



ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congolds unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

George P. Dietz, Editor & Publisher

You Quit? Surprise! So Do We

from the Prof

This morning I happened to catch an instructive item on the opinion page of that inadvertent purveyor of truth, the USA Today. It is a short piece by columnist Barbara Reynolds concerning the evil of racism.

The day's ugly subject, writes Reynolds, is a book by Charles Murray proclaiming that longstanding IQ differences between the races reflect (dare one think it) natural differences in the races themselves. Murray believes that whites are, on average, innately superior to blacks in various aptitudes that the exams purport to measure. According to Reynolds[1], Murray's book offers a rationale for tracking programs that would destine those on the bottom for "unproductive lives".

Reynolds states that noted studies by Murray and others "dissected blacks as if they were laboratory frogs" and depicted them as "overpopulating dumb bunnies" beyond the reach of programs designed to raise their inferior status. She describes the book as being "[a] plea for eugenics in disguise" and says that it would "fit easily in pre-Nazi Germany". In response, she offers a mind's-eye scenario of her own:

In reply to these obscene stories, a coalition of 100 black groups around the country propose a strike that would deprive the nation of thousands of nurses, physicians, police officers, mail carriers, and all the rest. This IQ ("I Quit") strike, she imagines, has implications as well for departments of Commerce and Energy, suddenly bereft of their black leadership, and for the 30% black military. Further plans call for those involved to "snatch up every single record, poem, product or process" (this involving a variety of equipment and appliances) and a gigantic boycott of advertisers who support the guilty

1. The book is The Bell Curve, co-authored by Murray and the late Richard Herrnstein. Though I have read a number of books alleging intellectual difference between the races (they are, after all, nothing new), I have not yet had time to read this one and so must rely on Reynolds' editorial for information.

news organizations hyping such stories about alleged black stupidity.

In her fantasy she quotes one involved party, a Reverend John Highmind, who explains, "We're tired of trying to prove that we're humans deserving an equal chance. So let's just say we're as stupid as we're accused of being. Too stupid to find our way to work, to find our wallets, to help society through our contributions. Next year we will be too stupid to pay our taxes." In a panic, imagines Reynolds, the White House calls out the National Guard to enforce business as usual. But IQ-ers will not come back to the post "until a study is done on why white pseudo-intellectuals find their self-worth only in the exploitation of others"

A Few Racial Thoughts

It is, in fact, a clever story. It is also a sad one. The thought of a Clinton-led administration trying to coerce and cajole disgusted black workers back to their jobs is a funny one. Yet beneath the tongue-in-cheek scenario one hears the pain of Miss Reynolds, and the anguish likewise of those decent black men and women who have labored for decades to upgrade themselves and their families against the odds—men and women who have struggled to live responsible and productive lives even while a good many of their racial brethren were perpetuating the stereotypes they fought against. I do not blame self-respecting black readers for feeling slighted by the stories and the racial claims to which the column alludes. I do not blame Miss Reynolds for disliking the book written by Charles Murray.

But for all of this, I must say, Reynolds' discussion is neither objective nor insightful. It is instead a perfect example of the daily failure of blacks everywhere to take serious stock of the problem that Murray's book (like many books before it, though lacking the publicity) addresses. It fails to see what must have motivated Murray, and others like him, to write such a book in the first place: If anyone has not yet noticed, blacks do lag consistently behind whites in intellectual performance. They continue to fail no matter what is done, by way of tutorial; performance tracking; reward; punishment; classroom integration; classroom segregation; the upscaling of classroom demand; the downscaling of classroom demand; the implementation of new teaching strategies; the re-implementation of old teaching strategies; and now, for several decades running, the presentation of positive mass-level images, as for example, the resident black genius or life-mentor who is dutifully inserted into every film that comes out of the racial sewer that is Hollywood.

The work has been stupendous. Yet in four decades of witnessing this charade, I have yet to hear one black mainstream activist honestly acknowledge this effort on the part of white educators. Instead I hear daily of how "the system" has deliberately failed black people through its apathy, its fear, its laziness, its lack of commitment and imagination. I hear without end that whites have not given enough, have not yet truly opened their hearts, have not mentally contorted themselves as yet into enough positions to fully understand what is the essence of The Black Experience. But when I turn from this orchestrated media message to the real world, I see instead that often as not, blacks perpetuate their own problems, despite efforts from without, by their own continuing behavioral modes of stubbornness, aggression, manipulation and promiscuity. And I see every effort at honest diagnosis of this problem stifled by ethnic and ideological aliens who (I am convinced) willfully conceal this truth from the public for their own racial and political ends. I am enraged.

Further Comment: A Personal Rejoinder

What, Miss Reynolds, is ugly about an honest analysis of racial differences? It strikes me as being a perfectly legitimate subject as it relates to the development of biology and the social sciences. Or do you suppose that some such subjects are somehow bad of themselves? Or that human beings are, or should be, for some reason, exempt from scientific investigation? (I hate to think where this would leave medical research.) This aside, do you seriously think for a moment that your own people (of whom I have known quite a few) doubt for a moment that such differences exist? Listen to your own kind when they watch a football game or a mixed prizefight. Are they racially neutral in their expectations? Do they lack convictions about who will prevail in a contest, say, of sprinting or the slam-dunk? They don't. And they shouldn't. Nor should we, when life experience—and our own repeated frustration—tells us that you are not, in all respects, our equals, either.

I am convinced furthermore that the claims of some researchers about differences between the races tend to be conservative. For the differences go well beyond what is measured on an IQ exam. They are physical (one instance just noted) and emotional as well as cognitive. And these differences multiply against each other in every situation where your race and mine are forced unnaturally into collision with each other. Those of cognition are compounded by those of temperament. The result is that black students, on average, are neither able nor inclined to do what is required to become physicists, mathematicians, philosophers, or classicists with the proportionate frequency that "equality" demands. For this reason the black / white disparity in academic performance is generally higher than the approximate 15-point IQ difference would anticipate. And so is perpetuated our mutual frustration. We who read and write such books as the one you discuss are not villains for wanting to know the truth of the matter. We are not wrong for telling you what our own best investigative efforts, both in the laboratory and on the streets, have shown us.

You say that this book would have found an environment in pre-Nazi Germany. Probably so. But does it ever occur to you (and in fairness, I confess, it will probably not occur to most of my own racial kin) that this fact may really imply something contrary to what you intend? Instead of serving to condemn this book, perhaps your observation givess us reason to take new stock of Nazi Germany! Perhaps their own racialism was not the berserk and randomly vicious thing that decades of (predominantly Jewish) propaganda have led my own people to think. And perhaps men like Adolf Hitler[2] had reason to be concerned about the effects of miscegenation upon his homeland at that time. Hitler believed that the races were, in certain respects, unequal. He also believed that a concerted effort was being made to ruin his own race. One look at black behavior in this country, and the lies told about it, is enough to give his claims plausibility.

You say also that the work of men like Murray is "pseudo-intellectual". How so? Do you object in some way to his methodology? Or have you examined the book at all, beyond hearing about it and then announcing to the world that you dislike his conclusions? I think that I know the answer. In brief, Miss Reynolds, committed white racialists are not vicious. They do not enjoy the pain of other races. They have no wish to exploit you, or take from you what you have earned. They do not find their self-worth in your disadvantage or discomfort. I myself am not pleased that this article, if you should chance to read it, may cause you pain or anger. But neither do I enjoy being made daily a witness to the destruction of my race. I do not like the epidemic of black-on-white brutality—of rape, murder, and even planned and executed torture[3]—that saturates our once-great cities, or the media lie that accompanies it. I do not like the deterioration of the educational system that comes about with every federally enforced effort to manufacture your intellectual "equality". In sum, when reflecting on personal experience, I do not like your noise, your mayhem, your puerile come-on, your sexual aggression, or your brazen immaturity. I don't like, either, the smug look on the face of that obnoxious young black male who goes out of his way to annoy or even threaten me, continually and without provocation, and without thought (not five seconds' thought in all his life, I shall wager) of how many times I may have tried to help men like him by my own efforts. It has happened too many times. Enough, I must say, of this atrocity. Enough of you.

2. Concerning his attitudes toward blacks and Jews, see, for example, Mein Kampf, chapter 11, "Nation and Race"—"It was and is Jews who bring the Negroes into the Rhineland, always with the same secret thought and clear aim of ruining the hated white race by the necessarily resulting bastardization, throwing it down from its cultural height, and himself rising to be its master" (page 325, Manheim edition). Those acquainted with recent Jewish activity in America will realize that the claim fits hand-in-glove.

3. Two publications exposing these atrocities on a monthly basis are American Renaissance (Box 1674, Louisville, KY 40201) and The Truth at Last (Box 1211, Marietta, GA 30061).

You suggest that Charles Murray has chosen an illegitimate means of self-worth. I submit that this man, like others before him, finds his self-worth not in offense, but in truth. I have seen such men lose their homes, their livelihood, and even their lives in carrying their message to an unsympathetic public that would prefer to give you a forum instead. This is an outrage. But again, Miss Reynolds, if you do not like what I am telling you, perhaps there is some consolation. For one day we ever-so-bad racialists will succeed in our aims, and our separatist agenda will be realized. You will then be rid of us.

Old Friends and Enemies

Thumbing last night through some old grade-school photographs, I was reminded of the joys of childhood, and of the simpler time then in which many of us lived. Here was one. Fourth grade. And there was Gene—front row, eyes crossed, with me behind him, each of us straining to look his most absurd. How we had caught hell afterward.

Since that time he and I had stayed in touch. I looked again at the photograph abd thought of the conversation we'd had a few years ago, one that taught me something about the extent to which we racialists differ from those of our people still in the mainstream. Perhaps the incident is worth a short recounting.

Gene and I had known each other since around the second grade, which was more than thirty years. Over that time we had gone in different directions. A few common interests brought us together every now and then. I had become for the most part a loner. He had stayed with the crowd. We got together on occasion to enjoy some light banter and an argument over some bit of sporting trivia from years past. He would lament the ineptitude of white prizefighters. I would tell him (though I knew better) that Gerry Cooney, or whoever, was going to change all of that. Three or four times that summer we had grabbed a movie on a Friday afternoon and downed a couple of drinks afterward. On this occasion we had caught a matinee and parked ourselves later in a splendid old bar on a downtown block near our home area.

Perhaps the stage was set. Not long before, on a similar occasion, I had shocked him. When he had started in about some great book extolling the genius and moral excellence of Jews, I had told him what total crap he was getting in this book and from the industry that had spawned it. I told him that blacks were idiots. I told him that there was a war going on.

On this occasion we sat amidst century-old booths and fixtures, each of us putting down a hot Spanish coffee and batting around a few odd remarks about race and kindred issues. He baited me with some comment about the hopelessness of white athletes. Ordinarily I laughed these things off. This time I took the occasion to tell him again, in more explicit terms, what I had told him the last time—that these children of the Exodus whom he admires are not the divinely chosen, forever-misunderstood innocents they proclaim themselves to be; that the races are not equal; that eating carrots instead of beef will not enlighten him or improve his next incarnation; that jerk-off car salesmen named Rosenberg who start calling themselves gurus and offer their flocks (Gene and his wife had shelled out big for this one) jazzily packaged new age "personal transformation" seminars—while they reportedly screw their own daughters behind closed doors—do not have the keys to cosmic wisdom.

Gene and I were used to arguing—we had always done it, and had always laughed about it. But the tone of the conversation was changing. Unable to know what to say to my claims about anti-white aggression and related media bias, unable to understand my seriousness about all of it, he at last lamented my "extremism". There was, he supposed, a variety of solutions to the various social and economic problems that plagued us. But my own solution, he observed, was not even "on the spectrum". What spectrum, I wanted to know. Was this imagined "range" of choices (roughly that between Michael Dukakis and George Bush, or whatever was its character casting at the moment) a range dictated by reason? If this range was called a spectrum, did that mean that it represented the whole possibility of rational choice-making? Where did he imagine that the men at Valley Forge stood on the political spectrum of Britain? The point, of course, was lost on him. Maybe I should have known better.

Readers who have had conversations with child-men like Gene (and most, I am sure, have) would not have been surprised at the way that this conversation went. I have not spent a lot of time with white liberals. I never will. But Gene is typical of them. All his life his instincts have told him to flee the situation before it becomes dangerous. His inherited money has enabled him to build a home on an acre of land out of town in the woodlands. As a result he has never been hit squarely enough in the face with racial truth to understand what a racialist is trying to tell him. His two or three experiences with black occupants have taught him (in his own phrase) "never to rent to niggers". But he refuses, at the same time, to think that race itself may have given rise to this state of affairs. He cannot believe, either, that there may be genuine anti-white malice behind the appearances of everyday American life. He trusts alien-controlled organizations like Time / Warner and FOX-Network television to supply him with fact and entertainment. He is not strong enough to distance himself psychically from these media long enough to see their essential perversion. He cannot imagine that he, and one day soon, his own Montessori-educated young son, might be the target of racial animosity more severe than any he has ever imagined. He knows vaguely that the system caters to "wealth", but he cannot see that it also moves daily with grim purpose toward the disintegration of his race.

The barkeep flamed a third round. We downed a bit more of these great and powerful concoctions and admired the surroundings. Gene then caught sight of a hefty mulatto next to a white female at a table perhaps twenty feet away. He sipped again. He looked down and muttered. "I'm gonna kill that nigger." I looked over at what appeared to be a rather innocuous after-work gathering of four or five office personnel. I asked him if he was serious. He gave some vague answer and changed the subject. The rest of his conversation bore no connection to the remark he had made. And he still thought that my racial ideas were "fantastic". On that note the conversation ended. Not long afterward we parted company for what will probably be the rest of our lives.

Perhaps there is a lesson in this somewhere. If Gene is mindless, he is far from unusual. For all his inanity, he is bright and hospitable, and he can be engaging. He can read fairly sophisticated material and enjoy it. But again, he is incapable of assessing the device itself through which he gathers his information. He is thus, like so many in his circle, bottle-fed, a passive consumer of the service that supplies his cognitive nourishment. He still imagines that he is part of a nation presided over by sane and responsible individuals who have an interest in the welfare of persons like himself who vote them into power. He supposes that the left and right "wings" of political activity provide him with all of the reasonable choices that he can make with respect to the condition of his society. He cannot understand my concern with Jews, since (thanks to the miracles of Hollywood imagery) he "wouldn't be able to tell them" from anyone else if some were accompanying us in the car on our way to the theatre. (They would, I replied, though again the point was missed.) Whether an aimless little screwball like this is worth caring about I will leave to the reader. Some racialists may count as their kin every last pale-skinned organism that meets the biological rule. I do not. I only mention him as an indication to interested readers of what they can expect to encounter among their own acquaintances as they move further in their thinking from those still in the mainstream.

How indeed can a white man be so perfectly truth-resistant? To understand the problem, one must realize that the majority of white citizens in this alleged nation are not only brainwashed, they are viscerally trained. They are conditioned not only to believe that blacks, for example, are their equals, but to find them morally appealing. Thus is developed an interracial sympathy that colors their perceptions of every event in the world. When the average white man reads, say, a recent Newsweek article reviewing a book proclaiming genuine intellectual differences between the races, he reads the allegations with antagonism, with an emotional pull against the dread message of racial inequality. And when he sees immediately following the editor's good-news rebuttal proclaiming the success of some new inner-city educational program (i.e., revealing the potential brilliance of these disadvantaged dark "youths"), he is restored. When blacks and whites are embroiled in a confrontation, he wants the black to prevail, for he believes, and wants to believe, that the black is the one with the cause. Thus emotionally spring-loaded, he sits in front of the television watching the enactment of alien scripts that make his own folk the butt of minority wit. He waits and listens, and when the white foil is knocked over yet again, he laughs with righteous satisfaction. In this self-punitive condition he is ripe for the slaying. The voice of racialism falls hard on his ears. He willfully resists it. It is for this reason that a talk-show host, for example, can manipulate his crowd against a racialist guest while violating all rules of propriety and fairness, why he can "refute" that guest without once touching upon the issues this villain may raise. It is for this reason that (as Tom Metzger once told me) a racially conscious white man lives his life behind enemy lines.

As for Gene, we have not spoken since that time, and probably never will again. Over the years I have parted ways, over racial issues, with several friends—old friends, good friends, men and women for the most part of some fine qualities. It isn't easy to break with people after sharing with them stages of life from childhood to middle age. But there comes a point where friendship is not only a compromise, it is a lie. Considering what is at stake, and bearing in mind the alternative, I do not regret the loss. ❑

JOHANN GOTTLIEB FICHTE:

NATIONALIST, PHILOSOPHER, ECONOMIST

by

Joseph D. Pryce

Philosophy consists not
In airy schemes, or idle speculations:
The rule and conduct of all social life
Is her great province.
James Thomson

The great German thinker Johann Gottlieb Fichte was born on May 19th, 1762, at Rammenau in upper Lusatia. His father was the descendant of a Swedish soldier who, serving under Gustavus Adolphus, was left wounded at Rammenau and decided to settle there. Fichte's mother is said to have been of a quarrelsome and jealous disposition, and biographers have occasionally hinted that these traits can account for the philosopher's legendary impetuousness and impatience. One might say that whatever were the faults of Fichte's mother, she managed to give birth to Fichte.

At a very early age, our hero showed such remarkable intellectual precocity that he was taken under the wing of one Freiherr von Miltitz, who provided the earnest young man with an education which would have been far beyond his father's circumstances. After a short stay at Meissen, Fichte was enrolled in the Schulpforta at Naumburg, that legendary breeding-ground of genius (Nietzsche was to be an alumnus). In 1780, he entered the university of Jena as a student of theology, supporting himself by private teaching. During the years 1784-1787, he became tutor to various families in Saxony. In 1788 Fichte obtained a tutorship in Zürich, where he eventually met Lavater and Hartmann Rahn, to whose daughter, Johanna, he became engaged. Unfortunately, their wedding plans were overthrown by a commercial catastrophe which shattered the fortunes of the Rahn family.

After settling at Leipzig, Fichte experienced the most important event of his life, his encounter with the Kantian philosophy. His letters of this period testify to the overwhelming impression which the critical philosophy made upon him. Feeling that Kant's manner of expression was impeding the successful propagation of his ideas, Fichte set about preparing an abridgment of Kant's Kritik der Urteilskraft, which, however, he soon abandoned. Shortly thereafter, he did complete an original work, the Versuch einer Kritik aller Offenbarung (Towards a Critique of all Revelation), which impressed Kant so much that he procured a publisher for the work. Due to an oversight on the part of the printer, Fichte's name did not appear on the title-page, and the readership jumped to the conclusion that the work was in fact written by the great Kant himself. When the truth as to the actual authorship was made known, Fichte's fame was secure.

The success of Fichte's book, coupled with an improvement in the fortunes of the Rahn family, enabled our hero to marry his sweetheart at Zürich in October 1793. At the end of 1793, Fichte was invited to succeed K. L. Reinhold as extraordinary professor of philosophy at Jena, where his fame was instantaneous and complete, due largely to his tremendous effectiveness as a lecturer. Later, under the bayonets of Napoleon, this skill would be instrumental in awakening the dormant forces of German nationalism.

The years at Jena were very productive ones, and from this period comes Fichte's masterwork, the Wissenschaftslehre ("The Science of Knowledge"), which he worked on for many years, and which appeared in several guises, accompanied by an astonishingly varied panoply of editorial, supplementary, and introductory materials over the succeeding years.

In the Wissenschaftslehre, Fichte, who teaches that the ultimate basis for the act of cognition is located in the Will, attempts to isolate and describe a principle which might unify the realms of pure and practical reason. To answer the question as to what this principle might be, we must bear in mind just what Fichte's intention was in designating all philosophy as Science of Knowledge. Philosophy is, for him, the radical rethinking of cognition, the theory of knowledge, the complete exposition of the principles which ground all rational cognition. Philosophy must trace the necessary acts whereby cognition comes to be what it is, in content and in form. This is not, according to our thinker, a phenomenological history of consciousness, or a natural history, but an attempt to deduce the entire organism of cognition from a series of fundamental axioms. There are three thinkable, necessary conditions for the emergence of cognition: one, which is perfectly unconditioned both with regard to matter and form; second, unconditioned in form but not in matter; and a third, unconditioned in matter but not in form. For Fichte, the first must be fundamental, since it conditions the other two. This discussion forms the meat of the introduction to the Wissenschaftslehre.

Fichte then asserts that the primitive condition of all intelligence is that the Ego shall posit and affirm itself. Consciousness can come to be only when the Ego brings about the process of its own self-emergence. The non-Ego is that which is opposed to the thinking consciousness; the two limit one another, or set determinations to each other, and, as limitation functions as the negation of part of a divisible quantum, the divisible Ego is opposed to a divisible non-Ego.

It would take a tremendous amount of time and space to indicate the steps by which the Ego develops into the all-embracing system of cognitive categories, or to trace the deduction of the processes (productive imagination, intuition, sensation, understanding, judgment, reason) whereby the indefinite non-Ego eventually assumes the appearance of definite objects in time and space. This is, obviously, a very difficult system of thought, and shortly after the initial appearance of the Wissenschaftslehre, wits were exultantly braying (philistines will be always with us, I fear!) that Fichte was claiming that the entire phenomenal world was a figment of his own imagination! This prompted the sage Goethe to the devastating query: "What does Fichte's wife say about that?" (Those readers who wish to delve further into the labyrinth of the Fichtean metaphysics might do well to obtain a copy of the Heath/Lachs translation of the Wissenschaftslehre—"The Science of Knowledge," with the First and Second Introductions, published by the Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 1982—reprinted in 1984).

Students of this philosophy will note how close is the thinking of our hero to the dialectical method of Hegel (brought to its glorious triumph in the magisterial "Phenomenology of Spirit"); one might note as well that the great Arthur Schopenhauer, favorite thinker of so many of the German National Socialist leaders (not, repeat not Nietzsche!), was indebted to Fichte for his conception of the role that the Will plays in Nature and in consciousness.

Fichte's career at Jena came to a catastrophic close when he was accused of atheism, on the basis of a short paper entitled On the Grounds of our Belief in a Divine Government of the Universe. The government of the grand duchy of Sachsen-Weimar secured Fichte's censure, assuming that Fichte would back down from the position which he took in the paper. They did not understand their man, of course, and Fichte was dismissed.

Berlin, which was the only town in Germany open to Fichte at this point, became his home from 1799 to 1806 (except for a short visit to Erlangen where he delivered a series of lectures in the summer of 1805). Here he published many of his most original works, of which the most remarkable are Bestimmung des Menschen (The Vocation of Man); Der geschlossene Handelsstaat (The Closed, or Isolated, Commercial State—about which more later in this essay); lectures on the Wissenschaftslehre; Wesen des Gelehrten (Nature of the Scholar); and the Anweisung zum seligen Leben oder Religionslehre (Way to a Blessed Life).

The disasters which befell Prussia in 1806 drove Fichte out of Berlin. He moved first to Stargard, then to Königsberg (where he delivered several lectures), then to Copenhagen, whence he returned to Berlin in August of 1807. He was, knowingly or not, on the verge of his greatest hour.....

On a Sunday evening, December the 13th, 1807 to be specific, a short but stocky man whose large, piercing eyes shot lightning from under a mass of thick, dark hair, strode to the podium of the great hall of the Academy of Sciences in Berlin, where he was scheduled, at least according to the Moniteur newspaper, to deliver the first of a projected series of lectures on proposals for reforms to the educational system. The authorities, one would assume, thought that our hero was about to deliver some safe and sleepy stuff. But Fichte, who by now had become acknowledged as one of the glories of the classical age of German Idealistic philosophy, had decided to deliver something very different to the students and scholars assembled before him. Though French troops were still occupying Berlin in the wake of Napoleon's victories against Prussia; though the hall of the Academy of Sciences was lousy with spies; and though close friends had warned the philosopher to take care for his physical safety, Fichte had prepared, and proceeded to deliver, the first of his fiercely nationalistic and epoch-making Reden an die deutsche Nation ("Addresses to the German Nation"). He would continue with this series of Sunday-night lectures until the twentieth of March, 1808. Fichte's courage must have completely disarmed the occupation authorities, for he doesn't seem to have been molested. Again we see, as we have seen throughout the course of Western history, that one man of iron determination can overwhelm his enemies with the sheer force of his Will, leaving them stupefied and defenseless before his onslaught.

The "Addresses" are extraordinary documents. Far from being the vaporous outpourings of a bookish and sheltered theoretician with his trotters firmly planted in Cloud Cuckoo Land, they comprise both a projection of the desiderated items in the German character from which a genuine state might be formed, coupled with a closely-argued exposition of the means whereby these items might best be utilized by a practical statecraft.

Fichte asserts that he speaks "for Germans and for Germans only" in the first address, and with this self-imposed limitation, we can sense just how far Fichte has traveled from the imbecile nostrums of the so-called Enlightenment, which make no provision for the particularities—whether ethnic, historical, religious, or psychological—which color life as it is lived on planet earth. When an 'Enlightenment' thinker comes across the phenomenon of Machiavelli, for instance, he will immediately drag out from his bookshelves a treatise on Morality, and beat the great Italian statesman over the head with its weighty pronouncements, which are thought to be binding in all times and in all places, from the Stone Age cave to the rococo salon. Fichte, however, asks whether Machiavelli shouldn't be judged by the standards of his time, and in the context of the real world in which the author of Il Principe attempted to achieve his reforms. Fichte is a philosopher, after all, and not an intellectual, and it strikes him that the Prussian monarchs who followed Frederick the Great would have been well-advised to incorporate a little of the great Italian's realism in their plans for a reborn kingdom—nothing else seemed to be able to protect them from the ravages of Bonaparte's militarism! One is still amused when reading eighteenth-century enthusiasts with their lucubrations on a certain creature called 'man'—this fellow has no predicates attached to him; he is of the void and formless, his skull housing nothing other than delight at the thought of being force-fed with the injection-moulded plastic of a universalizing 'education.' Fichte, on the other hand, ignores such airy hallucinations to describe the German spirit as he finds it. The Germans are, he feels, of a free disposition because of their unmixed racial stock, and because of the infinite plasticity of the German language, which enables it to express, in vivid and colorful fashion, the most probing thoughts. Fichte feels that the other Germanic languages, and the languages of the Latin races, are infinitely less capable instruments. With regard to the ethnic greatness of the Germans, he remarks that no other Volk has ever been favored by nature and history with such an ebullient nationalism, without which there could have been no successful fruition for the great idea of the Protestant Reformation. The Germans are also uniquely endowed, he feels, with the gift for the deepest-reaching philosophical speculation. With that last statement, few of us would disagree.

Modern commentators, most especially in the wake of the Second World War, have been assiduous in attempting to persuade us that Fichte's nationalism is really very little different from the fulminations of our 4th of July rhetors, and that his concern for Germany was that of an impassioned patriot whose country was occupied by foreign troops, whose conduct was, as might be expected, less than impeccable. Of course, we're supposed to regard Hitler's words a century later, at a time when Negro troops are occupying German soil, raping and slaughtering German women and children, as beyond the pale. But if you quote representative passages from Fichte's "Addresses" cheek-by-jowl with the most inflammatory pages from Mein Kampf you'll find that you'd be hard-pressed to tell the difference between the attitudes motivating these two thinkers. Certainly, the intellectuals on whom I tried this little trick became quite exasperated when their high-powered craniums gave them no assistance—they were completely at sea with regard to who was who!

Here are a few of our thinker's weighty words from the "Addresses to the German Nation":

> What is love of fatherland, or, to express it more correctly, what is love of the individual for his nation?....only the German—the original man, who has not become dead in an arbitrary organization—really has a Volk and is entitled to count on one, and that he alone is capable of real and rational love for his nation.
> He to whom a fatherland has been handed down, and in whose soul heaven and earth, visible and invisible, meet and mingle, and thus, and only thus, create a true and enduring heaven—such a man fights to the last drop of his blood to hand on the precious possession unimpaired to his posterity.
> What spirit has an undisputed right to summon and order everyone concerned, whether he himself be willing or not, and to > compel anyone who resists, to risk everything including his life? Not the spirit of the peaceful citizen's love for the constitution [!!!!!] and the laws, but the devouring flame of the higher patriotism, which embraces the nation as the vesture of the eternal, for which the nobly-minded man joyfully sacrifices himself, and the ignoble man, who only exists for the sake of the other, must likewise sacrifice himself.

> We must at once become what we ought to be in any case, namely, Germans. We are not to subject our spirit; therefore we must, above all, provide a spirit for ourselves, and a firm and certain spirit; we must become earnest in all things and not go on existing frivolously, as if life were a jest; we must form for ourselves enduring and unshakable principles which will serve as a sure guide for all the rest of our thoughts and actions. Life and thought with us must be of one piece and a solid and interpenetrating whole; in both we must live according to nature and truth, and throw away foreign artifices; in a word, we must provide character for ourselves; for to have character and to be German (Charakter haben und deutsch sein) undoubtedly mean the same.

Quite moderate and respectable in tone, no? I would like to see one of Fichte's tame exegetes in the Federal Republic fetch a bull-horn and recite any of the above on a streetcorner, say, in Frankfurt. I'm sure the Oberjuden will instruct the Polizei to release the offender after a kalpa or two in protective custody: "Oh, I see! That sermon was just a bit of harmless fun from old Fichte. Let the good professor go in peace."

Earlier, I mentioned Fichte's work on the closed, or isolated (exclusive) commercial state. We must now discuss one dimension of his thought which hasn't been explored in any depth in our time, namely Fichte's economics. Now anyone who has perused a significant amount of economic literature will sympathize with Thomas Carlyle, who referred to the entire discipline as 'the dismal science.' Fichte, however, who is scarcely mentioned in even the major contemporary textbooks on the development of socialist theory, did publish, in 1800, a volume entitled Der geschlossene Handelsstaat ("The Closed Commercial State"), which was considered by Fichte himself to be the most carefully wrought and profoundly considered of his entire career. Although this work has not received much attention of late (indeed, few theoreticians of the nineteenth century itself seemed to be aware of its findings), it might be in our interest to study this text because the problem with which Fichte is grappling here is one about which many racial-nationalists are talking at this very moment: namely, Autarky—the theory of absolute economic self-sufficiency. Naturally, the utopian and 'scientific' socialists of the nineteenth century, who were interested, almost to a man, in dragooning the entirety of a serf-like 'mankind' into their classless, fatherland-less legions, couldn't see the point of attaining total economic sovereignty in the German lands or anywhere else for that matter. But we, who are laboring in the shadows of the most perfected and lethal universalist tyranny which the globe has ever witnessed, might find that those of us who will be fortunate enough to survive the upheavals which loom ahead, might want to know just how to go about achieving, in the future Aryan 'Ethno State,' an hermetic closure—in the economic sphere and in the national sphere—which can preserve us for all time from the consequences of New World Order theory and practice.

Fichte was a very hard-headed man, and his designs for an autarkic state are based upon a granitic foundation: before he generates his theory, he observes the nature of man as he actually exists on the earth. In this, of course, Fichte runs counter to almost the whole socialist tradition of European thought in the nineteenth century, with its programs and platitudes, with its deceptions and deliriums, and with its resolute insistence upon legislating for a homo sapiens that was never seen on sea or land (other than in dreamland). When Fichte remarks that spirit cannot take flight until the man has had enough to eat, we realize that we can trust our tiller to his hand.

Now Fichte's theory, which forms a beautifully contrived amalgam of Gallic radical thought and German nationalistic Romanticism, raises as many questions as it answers; for instance, Fichte doesn't toss the concept of Freedom around as if it were a universal condiment, a ketchup for any type of fast-food. He realizes that the very concept of freedom is problematical, as when he insists that unlimited liberty is equivalent to no liberty at all, because no one can conceive of causing an effect in the phenomenal world whose duration will be guaranteed. In short, life in the state will entail an antagonism of forces which can only be resolved through the instruments of formal and informal agreements. These agreements, by their very nature, will restrict and, in some cases, curtail the liberty of one or the other of the parties involved. The agreement thus arrived at which assigns rights of free activity to the citizens is called property.

Fichte regards this manifestation of contractual agreement and unification of human activity as the Vernunfisstaat ('Rational State'). Fichte opposes the idea that it is the function of the State to assign property to its citizens and then to provide protection for the rights which correspond to that property. Fichte scorns the notion that property arrangements exist independently of the state, which is not permitted to inquire into the means whereby the property was acquired. Recall, if you will, Balzac's belief that all great fortunes were founded on great crimes!

In opposition to the prescriptions of utopian intellectuals, who preconize the sound and fury of their own raucous voices, which rage in the air without rhyme or reason or sound common sense, Fichte insists that without a scrupulous theoretical basis, all schemes for the reform of the economic sphere must be left to blind chance. He feels that utopian scribblers are not really interested in the real world, and that they are attempting to legislate for fantasy-land, never having incorporated a genuine perception of the nature of man in their theoretical constructions. Fichte is convinced—and although this is a hard word, we would ignore it to our peril—that "everyone who wishes to organize a Republic, or any State for that matter, must assume the maliciousness of man." This recognition of the less-than-angelic nature of our species prompts Fichte to design certain provisions which will bind the citizens of his Closed Commercial State (I will delve, a little bit further on, into the extra-economic benefits with which this scheme will endow that projected racial State for which we are all working).

Fichte insists that the constellation of contracts which will bind the citizens of his State must contain both a 'negative' provision (which entails that each group must stick to its profession), and a 'positive' provision (which requires that each group must render up to the others that which is required to engage in their trade to the satisfaction of the commonweal. It is the dirigiste State which imparts a legal status to the above-mentioned contracts, and which supervises their execution—and the State is not to be a passive observer: Fichte sees the State power as organizing and planning the activity of the main categories of economic life (agriculture, manufacturing, and commerce) under the following four aspects:

1. The numbers of citizens involved in the three main corporations are to be calculated on the basis of the aggregate of agricultural production. Fichte insists that full employment cannot be guaranteed unless the State fixes the exact number of those who are permitted to work in a particular branch and provides for the production of the necessary means of livelihood for all citizens.

2. All citizens are to be guaranteed a proportional share of all products so that all of the inhabitants of the country may enjoy an equally agreeable standard of living. Fichte regards it as one of the essential elements of State policy to ensure that superfluous commodities are to recede behind the commodities which are indispensable. The first obligations of the State, according to Fichte, are to ensure that all have enough to eat, and that all should have permanent housing accomodations (and that, before one decorates one's dwelling!). All should have clothing which is warm and comfortable before clothing which is merely sumptuous. It is unjust in the extreme for some citizens to parade around in unnecessary finery while their fellow-citizens lack even the essentials.

3. The State will guarantee not only jobs, but also markets to its citizens. Prices are to be fixed, and to have legal character.

4. Here we come to the most-important element of Fichte's Rational State:

> The State is obligated to guarantee for all of its citizens, both by law and by force, the conditions resulting from the equilibrium of their common intercourse. Yet the State will not be able to do so if any person outside its laws and dominion can exert any influence on this equilibrium. It is therefore imperative that the State cut off all possibility of such an influence. All intercourse with foreigners must be forbidden and made impossible for its citizens.
> The government, in order to assure continuously the fulfillment of the customary needs of its citizens, must rely on the certainty that a certain quantity of goods is being traded. How will the State be able to count on the foreigner's contribution to said quantity since he is outside the government's dominion? It is to fix and guarantee the price of a commodity. How can the State succeed with respect to foreign nationals if it is unable to fix those prices which prevail in the foreigner's country and at which he will buy the raw materials? If the government sets a price for him which he cannot afford, he will accordingly avoid its market and a lapse in the satisfaction of customary needs will ensue. It is to guarantee to each subject the sale of his products at the specified price. How can the State do so if the subject can sell his product on foreign markets where different economic relations prevail which the State can neither oversee nor control?
> A closed economic state is a closed imperium of laws and individuals....It can turn into money whatever it desires, provided that the State declares that it will accept this and no other money....The State would thus create a national currency without bothering to raise the question as to whether this currency would or would not be accepted abroad, because for a closed commercial state foreign countries are as if they did not even exist.
> A closed commercial state does not care whether there is, in customary terms, a large or small quantity of money in circulation. The total quantity of money in circulation represents the total quantity of goods in circulation.

How does Fichte assure that foreign trade is to be rendered impossible? Simple: he would deprive all citizens of international means of payment. Before the inauguration of the new currency, the State would purchase all foreign commodities in the country. This achieves, at one stroke, an assessment of the available stock and present needs for such commodities, and an opportunity to facilitate the centralizaton of the administration of price-fixing.

The government will now set up a monopoly for the administration of foreign trade—from this point on the government, and the government alone, will decide which commodities will be imported and exported.

Next, the government will set up a central clearing agency to control and liquidate all foreign claims to and from its citizens. Fichte now introduces his concept of natural frontiers:

> Certain areas of the earth, with their inhabitants, are destined by nature to form political units. They are isolated from the rest of the planet by rivers, oceans, mountains..... It is these indications of nature as to what must remain united and what must remain separated that one keeps in mind when speaking of the natural frontiers of empires; a consideration which must be taken more seriously than is commonly done. We mustn't place our sole emphasis on impregnably protected frontiers, but rather on productive independence and self-sufficiency.... Governments will speak of the necessity of rationalizing their borders and state that, in view of their other territorial possessions, they cannot exist without this or that fertile province or mine or salt-work, always thinking of the acquisition of their natural boundaries.

Of course, Fichte regards war as inevitable until that moment when the Rational State has arrived at its natural boundaries, at which time the closed commercial state > must give and be able to give its neighbors the guarantee that it will henceforth refrain from further expansion..... To the closed commercial state not the slightest benefit can accrue from an expansion beyond its natural frontiers, because its entire constitution has been designed only for its given extension.

The authorities now proceed to develop internal sources for import substitutes, distinguishing at all times between such needs as contribute to the well-being of its citizens and those which merely serve as prestige items. Though foreign trade is still taking place (so that the State can use up all of its foreign exchange reserves), as soon as autarky is achieved, the world will be partitioned among a number of these closed commercial states who have reached their natural frontiers, between which states > destined to a continuing barter [of those commodities which cannot be produced in a certain country because of, say, climatic conditions], a trade agreement could be achieved according to which one partner is pledged forever to grow for the other a certain quantity of wine in exchange for the delivery of a certain quantity of corn. Neither partner is to attempt to achieve a profit on the exchange, but only an absolute equality of value. Therefore, there would be no need for currency in such trades, only for clearing.

One is struck by the serendipity of it all: not merely has Fichte furnished us with an exposition of the nature of his Rational State and the means whereby such a state may be constructed, but he has solved two very worrisome problems of whose very nature he can only have been dimly aware. He wrought, as it were, better than he knew.

And what were the two problems that I just mentioned? First, it should be obvious that the implementation of Fichte's scheme breaks the powers of those mediative agents upon whose skill and chicanery all international trade, currency exchange, and price-fixing of precious metals depends. There can be, in short, no room for our dear national and international parasites, the Jews and their flunkies, who are not now, who never have been, nor will they ever be, real producers of wealth, genuine creators of values, but merely lucre-cadging agents of the One Mud World. With the implementation of the Fichtean scheme, international Jewry will be, for the first time in the history of the world, effectively marginalized. Without bowing down and racing our skulls towards the brick wall of Jewish power, with the Protocols in one hand and the International Jew in the other, we will find that that we will be able to shatter the fortress of the Money Power without even having to disclose our larger aims to the timid and superstitious fools who are wasting so much of Mother Earth's oxygen supply.

The second point—perhaps even more important than the first—we have discovered, under the great philosopher's tutelage, a means whereby the gene-pool of our Aryan Imperium can be preserved from racial contamination. When foreign travel and international trade, those great engines of miscegenation and chaos, have been reduced to the desired minimum, national borders will become national barricades instead of the permeable membranes that they so obviously are in the current situation. We will thus be enabled to encourage a free play of those essential mechanisms whereby evolutionary biology achieves its progressive aims (so well described by Sir Arthur Keith in his "A New Theory of Human Evolution"): namely, prejudice and nationalism. In an exclusive economic sphere, nationalism will function as the analogous phenomenon of inter-tribal hostility functioned during the period of our most rapid evolutionary advance—as a racialist prophylaxis. From isolation will come cohesion, and from cohesion will be fashioned the Lebensborn of the Aryan Lords.

and although Fichte could not take an active part in the war, he continued to deliver lectures for the cause. His addresses on the idea of a true war, Über den Begriff eines wahrhaften Kriegs, contain a pointed contrast between what he regarded as France's aggressive actions against Germany and Germany's just prosecution of her War of Liberation.

In the autumn of 1813, with the hospitals of Berlin overflowing with the sick and wounded victims of the campaign, Fichte's wife devoted herself to caring for her countrymen without the slightest regard for her own safety, and, in January 1814, she was smitten with a virulent hospital fever. Fichte was struck down the day after his wife was pronounced out of danger. He lingered on for some days in a semi-conscious state, and succumbed on January 27th, 1814.

Yet he lives.....

"DADDY, WHAT IS THE NEW WORLD ORDER?"
(A spokesperson replies on the day of the NWO's victory:)

Red banners float as shadows lean their lengths
Away; the sun glides up behind the muscled back
Of Hell's dawnshining god, whose iv'ry arms Stretch out in supplicating summons to
The massed hordes on the roadside.
He smiles, and fierce words bray forth from his throat:
"Come, my callow, cowed, knee-bending throng!"
Upon the monstrous shoulders glossed with gold
I stand with wonted invitations to You all. The tall lamps just below my feet
Are garlanded with mockers spilling forth
Their bloated tongues between half-gritted teeth;
Such mouths will lure with noxious sorcery
No more—yet these loud, roiling roisterers,
Through which my ship doth sail, swell in their brine
With frenzy frothing in chaotic eyes,

Awaiting decimation in the tide.

Now from the alleyways the foetid stench
Of heroes toppled from fouled pedestals
On dead-eyed heretics proceeds in haste,
With warming breeze propelling memory.
Yet still the swarm bursts forth from bourns of earth
To hop my hecatomb gone wheeling down
The Road of Death which I will soon sum up
In one wide sea of bubbling butchery.
The Beast would have it thus. For who am I?
Well might you ask, you dregs, disjecta membra,
Filthy orts spewn from the sewer's maw
On this the One World's coronation day;
But answer have I none, for he who'd hear
(And, hearing, would perpend) has dripped from out
Our clutches and become a blood-caked mess
Piled up with those pathetic choristers
Who played Cassandra to our wondrous Change.
As what was done was done in your full sight,
I'll be your ruler now; I'll feed the Beast
And ease you through his entrails morsel-wise.

The sun's enthroned at middle of the day,
And all the burgs begin to dash hot waves
Of steaming, fungoid filth from shore to shore,
From sex to sex; the feeble orgiasts,
Who titter and spew forth inventive oaths
Through strange mirages, moist with crime,
Now tear at one another, squirting spray
From sickened arteries upon their gowns,
Whose gaudy, sequined, iridescent folds
Are grimed with mud and excremental gouts,
The dark decoctions of experienced
Uranians, and madly-thirsting gulfs

Of drones now shorn of freedom's pale allure.
An ulcerated, pulsing protoplasm
Heaves its mass before the worshippers
Who sluice their fluids to its bursting loins
Like drunkards spewing into porcelain.
Now, swiftly, are the slaves shot forth from wombs
To bear the tortured rites to centuries
You'd not imagine in your darkest nights.
The day is dimming to its close, and still
The wheels find servitors to slime their rims
With fondly nurtured children's steaming gore.
But as the night drops down, and shadows grope Towards you in the twilit glamor, we Determine—O the Moon begins to climb!—
That some great, hirsute prowler in the Beast Must now erupt from alabaster, turned
To one great feral mass of storming death.
Now upward to his waist streams forth your blood,
And downward to his metamorphosed claws
Pours moonlight as new asphalt-folk burst forth
To immolate themselves upon the altar
Of his lycanthropic rage unmasked.
You craved the spoor of Thanatos by day, and now
You'll feel our dark Lord's vulpine tooth crack through your skull:
Let us be done with words, with words, with deepsleep words;
Let us now loft ourselves through vistas shimmering
In whirling deeps now gathered to the grasp of MIND.
It's time to spawn perfection on the several worlds,
Lest we who hurled the spears invite them to our necks. ❑

REVIEW

"Schindler's List": A Post-mortem

by Major Donald V. Clerkin

Steven Spielberg's "Schindler's List" is probably the final act of Jewish Hollywood's attempt to promote the Great Hoax. Whereas the films "Holocaust," and "War andRemembrance" made the vain attempt to portray the National Socialists as rationally machine-like in their studied brutality toward the Jews, "Schindler's List" reversed the psychological process and made one particular German, SS officer Amon Goeth, commandant of the Plaszow concentration camp, appear as a totally deranged man. Goeth killed Jews for no reason in "Schindler's List." He did not delight in his murderous ways; he seemed unconcerned with them. This is a sign of insanity in anyone.

Jewish psychoanalysis has proclaimed since Sigmund Freud that insanity absolves the criminal of his crimes. For this reason most exterminationists have argued that Adolf Hitler was not insane, which is true, though a popular notion has it that Hitler was insane. TheJews will allow no exoneration, no exculpations for Adolf Hitler. Hitler must be held responsible for the murder of the fabulous Six Million; therefore, the Holocaustians no longer question his sanity, his clinical state of mental health. To continue to do so would raise a dichotomy: how could an insane Adolf Hitler be held culpable for genocide?

But the case of Amon Goeth is just the opposite. His insanity is clearly stated in the film. Yet the Jews do not absolve him. (Note: Commandant Amon Goeth was indicted by an SS administrative court on charges of mistreating inmates at Plaszow and for money corruption. He was sentenced to prison by Judge Konrad Morgen. "Schindler's List" shows none of this.) The Jews further condemn Amon Goeth for desiring the Jewess Helena Hirsch, whom Goeth took into his house as a servant, beating her mercilessly for no apparent reason, another sign of insanity. Amon Goeth is portrayed as a tub of guts, almost effeminate in his manner; another example of the dichotomy of the Jewish response to implied homosexuality. Jews constantly defend the homosexual and the perverted lifestyle that goes with homosexuality, still they cast Amon Goeth as a near-queer, supposedly to further revolt the masses who view the film and who are not Jewish, thus having no love for the homosexual and his perversion. Why Goeth beats Helena Hirsch is never explained. At the end of the film, Goeth admits his lust for the woman to Schindler, telling him that war is over he would like to take her to live with him in Vienna.

The only German redeemed in "Schindler's List" is Oskar Schindler himself; and this because he is a shabbas goy. The real Oskar Schindler was a failure at business before the war, but who flourished on the black market once the war began. His own wife denounced him as a scoundrel who fed his Jewish workers spoiled meat he bought cheap. The film portrayed Schindler first as a cold profiteer, then slowly as a sympathetic protector of the Jews and actually a saboteur of the German war effort.

And what of the Jews themselves? They as usual are at once brilliant, kind, patiently long-suffering, and victorious against all adversity. "Schindler's List" spares no bathos in its description of the travails suffered by Jews at German hands. They are shot for their advice on building construction, for not making hinges fast enough—the semi-automatic pistols mysteriously misfire in one scene wherein a little rabbi who makes hinges is saved—and as target practice for Amon Goeth from a balcony of the commandant's house portrayed in the film as situated atop a hill, while in the plans of the Plaszow camp the commandant's house lies at the bottom of a hill, from which Goeth could not have targeted the Jewish camp inmates. Nothing is spared to tell this lurid tale of German insanity. We see an SS guard screaming with joy as bodies are burned. But only in "Schindler's List" has the insanity defense been set aside. Germans are never to be absolved.

I would not have missed this film for the world. It must be the final act of the Holocaust exterminationist play, the Jews' answer to the Christian Passion Play. Should the next holohoax film portray the Germans as being sane in their atrocities, how will the dichotomy raised in "Schindler's List" be answered?

Every Jew with a typewriter or a camera is liable to concoct a new version of the holohoax. Steven Spielberg, known to his admirers as the producer of the "Indiana Jones" and "Jurassic Park" films, no doubt thought that his portrayal of Germans in "Indiana Jones" made us laugh too much at the venality he alleged of the Germans. Something more "dramatic" was required to get the goyim into a state of guilt feelings. The Kehillah probably thought that no one should ever again laugh at Nazi antics. Thus, Spielberg mayhave been told to tighten up the portrayal, make the Germans really look like devils. So the little NOVEL "Schindler's List" was dredged up and Spielberg made it into a film in black-and-white so it would remind us of a documentary. The final package, incidentally, caused some California middle schoolers to laugh hysterically in the theatre they were dragged to as part of their coursework; they could not believe the gratuitous killing sprees depicted of Amon Goethe. Spielberg had not counted on the obvious: so outrageous was Goeth's portrayed behavior, that schoolchildren saw through the dismal attempt to present a comic opera character as a serious player on the stage of recent history. The middle schoolers were subsequently forced to endure "sensitivity training," the lesson taught—"Thou shalt not laugh at a Jewish tale of woe."

"Schindler's List" gets three stars for the scene wherein a little Polish girl cries out to the departing Jews of Warsaw: "Goodbye, Jews!"

Outrage

Racine, Wisconsin - When New Jersey Skinhead Joe Rowan was shot in the back by a black racist at 2:15 A.M., 1 October 1994, he became another casualty in the race war going on in America. We expect to take casualties as we expect to retaliate, but we do not expect to see the cowardly whites of Racine to act like Joe Rowan deserved to die at the hands of a nigger. Neither do we expect the Racine County District Attorney Robert Flancher, The Courthouse, 730 Wisconsin Avenue, Racine, Wisconsin 53403, Phone -(414) 636-3172 / FAX - (414) 636-3346, to piss the matter away, claiming that witnesses can't identify anyone. The D.A. says that Joe Rowan's friends won't cooperate. Maybe. But there was an employee on duty at the gasstation-quick mart where Joe Rowan was murdered. There was a female customer in the store; and a video tape recorded what happened. When I called the D.A.'s office to ask about witnesses, I was told by an assistant D.A. that those witnesses can't identify anyone. 'Won't identify anyone?'I asked. 1We don't know,' was the response.

The murderer is a black who was in that gas station in the early morning carrying a gun. Possibly a gang member, though the media and local press called the suspect a 'solid citizen.' He was held four days and then released without being charged. When this particular murdering nigger was released, there was a mob of niggers awaiting him with pats on the back and cheers! THIS IS THE REASON WHY NO LOCALS WILL IDENTIFY THE KILLER: RACIAL SOLIDARITY AMONG NIGGERS. The whites in Racine are either too scared or too unconcerned about the death of a white man to come forward with evidence against a murderous nigger. There are methods of compelling testimony in criminal cases such as murder—grand juries, 'John Doe' investigations—which have the power of subpoena, placing witnesses under oath. But Racine County D.A. Robert Flancher sees no compelling reason to subpoena anyone; no compelling reason to charge the nigger who killed Joe Rowan with murder. And why not? There might be a nigger riot. And the white trash who don't care that Joe Rowan was murdered in Racine are putting no pressure on the District Attorney to do anything.

Joe Rowan was one of us, a white racist, a Skinhead. He was from New Jersey, but what matter. He was shot in the back by a nigger! Joe Rowan was not personally known to me; nevertheless, he was my Aryan comrade. He was shot in the back by the nigger—Joe Rowan was unarmed.

My call to the D.A.'s office was to put the only pressure I knew would be applied by anyone—the media didn't care that a murder was done in Racine—a police spokesman could only utter infantile criticisms of the Skinheads for having chosen Racine for their rock concert—and the people, the white people seemed to condone the murder because Joe Rowan was a 'nasty white bigot.' The nigger supporters of the murderer were at least honest in saying that the shooter killed a 'dirty cracker.' They knew he did it, and they loved him for it.

What can I say to those Skinhead comrades of Joe Rowan? I can tell them to go armed when they must confront niggers. Niggers carry guns all the time—and you now know they will use them without blinking an eyelash. This race war we are in is no game—no mere stomping party: it is kill or be killed. The lesson to be learned from Joe Rowan's murder and its aftermath is that we Aryan racialists have no friends among the boob population of Blankos. They do not care that niggers murder us. Well, we don't care that they are the niggers' next likely victims. There will be no help for them when the blackhordes descend upon them. Blankos deserve the fate that awaits them. Joe Rowan was one of us. He was killed in what we consider race warfare. Blankos want to think that integration will appease the niggers. Joe Rowan had but to be white, proudly white, and the nigger shooter killed him. What can the Blankos expect but more of the same.

Something must be done to compel witnesses in Racine to give testimony. I call on all Skinhead witnesses to the killing of Joe Rowan to come forward and give their evidence. I also call on the District Attorney of Racine County Robert Flancher to convene a 'John Doe' investigation in this matter. If he will not do this, if he will not adequately obtain evidence against the murderer of Joe Rowan, then he must be ordered by Mandamus, by a court order, to convene an evidentiary hearing wherein the testimony of witnesses will be given under oath. There can be no question but that the murder of Joe Rowan will not go unanswered. You see the address and phone number of Robert Flancher on the first page. Don't allow him to pass this vile murder off. He has returned the case to the Racine Police Department for 'further investigation.' That means nothing will be done: Joe Rowan's murder is in the DEAD FILE. But I can't permit it to stay there. If no one will file for Mandamus, I will have to.

Mandamus is an extraordinary equity writ applied only when a remedy at law does not apply. If granted by a court, it orders a public officer to do his duty. Now we cannot compel the District Attorney Robert Flancher to charge someone. Even a court cannot order that. But the writ of Mandamus can order him to do his utmost to bring a murderer to justice. This can only be accomplished when an evidentiary hearing compels testimony under oath. Someone saw that nigger shoot and kill Joe Rowan. Someone can identify the killer. That someone and corroborative testimony must be obtained. If not, then Joe Rowan's killer will get off.

If the County of Racine, Wisconsin is frightened of a nigger riot, or bad national publicity over the vigorous search for evidence against a black murderer, then consider the reputation Racine will justly earn by sweeping the murder of Joe Rowan under a carpet. This act of unconcern for Joe Rowan will set a dangerous precedent. For when the black trash who hate all whites realize that murder is free in Racine for them when they kill whites, there will be such a rage of killings that even Robert Flancher will be unable to suppress. Racine may think that because Joe Rowan was a Skinhead, he has no standing anywhere, no human right to life. But the spirit of a dead Joe Rowan will serve to haunt Racine until his killer is before the bar of "justice." I could say here that were it the other way round, and a Skinhead murdered a black in that store, why then Robert Flancher would have to act to bring someone to trial. He would lose his job for taking as much time as he has already taken in the Joe Rowan murder case. The Racine Police would not be allowed to rest until the white killer was apprehended and charged . But Joe Rowan was just a Skinhead, and Racine officialdom think that no one really cares. What a surprise Racine officialdom are about to get.

Bridging the Gap...?

The following is a letter from a long-time supporter of Dr. Oliver and of Liberty Bell Publications. Mrs. M.v.S was, together with the late and beloved Dr. Foelsche, the first two contributors of $1,000 each when, in 1985, I started a fund appeal to supply Dr. Oliver with his first computer and thus ease his work tremendously.

October 26, 1994

Dear George;

I don't know if you are ready for this so soon after the loss of Dr. Oliver to Liberty Bell, but I have a few thoughts concerning the future direction of L.B. I would like to tell you about.

In your November issue, Joseph Pryce and R. Hoehler both have good points to make in their articles, but both of their works are so heavily obscured with unfamiliar terminology they are exhausting to read. Both authors, of course, lack the magnificent talent of Dr. Oliver to tell a story plainly while at the same time drawing the reader into higher levels of culture with consummate language skills.

[Ed. Note: Well, could you name just one person in the United States or elsewhere who could conceivably fill our late Professor's shoes? I know I couldn't! So give good ole José a chance, he'll get there. And, howsabout you doing a number for LB once in a while. You do have what it takes to get me hopping.

You are walking a tightrope right now, I know, trying to maintain the high standards set by Dr. Oliver and yet keep the Liberty Bell interesting and solvent. It's not going to be easy. [Ed. Notre: Believe you me, it hasn't been easy for the past 21 years. Friends like you, the late Dr. Foelsche, a friend of 21 years from Chicago who has to remain unnamed, German friends across the border from Buffalo, NY, a friend in Nevada, and several other smaller contributors, including several elderly folks who contributed, and contribute to this day, to Liberty Bell from their small Social Security pensions, kept us in food and the wolves away from the door! — No, it wasn't easy, and it will not be easier in the future, if for no other reason than what a certain lady, when I suggested years ago to pass on copies of Liberty Bell to increase circulation and spread the word even farther, told me over the phone, in as many words, that she could not afford to pass on Liberty Bell because of its rabid anti-Christian flavor.]

The article by Vic Olvir [see Liberty Bell, November 1994, page 41] was almost an attempt to bridge the gap between paganism and Christianity, an unnatural compromise that Dr. Oliver would never have countenanced. You might coax a few lightweight Christians back into the fold with such vacillations, but nothing is to be gained from sleeping with the enemy but more confusion and loss of direction and I hope L.B. doesn't lapse into that position. You made your stand for paganism and I hope you stand firm.

[Ed. Note: Dear M.v.S., I have seen your occasional literary contributions in Instauration, and I am wondering if you have already read the riot act to Vic Olvir for writing such "gap-bridging," "compromising" material which I (in your book, obviously) was foolish enough to copy and reprint in Liberty Bell. No, put your mind at rest, this reprint was not an attempt on my part to bridge any gap or make any unnatural compromise "Dr. Oliver would never have countenanced." What Dr. Oliver—my dearest friend, next to my former girlfriend of 46 years—would or would not have countenanced of the article in question is pure speculation without any basis in fact on your part. You may want to refresh your memory by re-reading Dr. Oliver's "Postscript" which appeared in the June 1993 issue of Liberty Bell entitled:

CLARIFICATION

Communications that I have recently received by mail and telephone oblige me to state precisely the extent of my responsibility for what appears in this periodical.

What I write appears in Liberty Bell without editorial intervention. I am therefore entirely responsible for the content and style of everything that appears under my name, except, of course, for any mechanical slip that may occur between the proof-sheets and the final printing. The editor is responsible only for the publication of what I have written.

Since I have not been blessed with the infallibility of evangelists, I am likely to be guilty of inadvertent errors and oversights. I shall be grateful for corrections, as I am grateful to the valued correspondents who send me useful information, whose names I do not disclose without specific permission.

I write for the tiny number of individuals who wish, not to be shocked by horrors, but to understand their antecedent and sometimes remote causes, so far as that may be possible. My concern is with facts and their causality, not with scribbling egotistic rodomontade. I have neither time nor inclination to disregard our desperate plight by indulging in the now fashionable distraction of lambasting fellow "racists" in billingsgate. And if you wish broadsides in simplified language that (you imagine) will startle a million Americans from their narcotized slumbers, you must apply to some other writer.

I do not finance Liberty Bell. I would not do so, had I the means. That would contravene my principles. I have never subsidized or otherwise contributed financially to the publication of anything that I have written. I do not enjoy composing these little articles. I do so only on the chance that they may help my readers identify strands of the spider's web that has been woven about them and in which they are now held captive and helpless. I write with the hope of fostering in some small way the putative survival of our race and culture. To that end I employ whatever talent I may possess. It seems to me that when I have done that, I have done my part in a normal relationship between author and publisher. If our people do not see fit to arrange for the publication of what I earnestly offer them, then I am mistaken, either about a society that is no longer viable or about the value of what I have written, and it would be an exercise of either futility or vanity to try to force it on the attention of the public. Such is my standard. Other writers feel otherwise. They may be right, but I cannot emulate their self-assurance.

I do not edit Liberty Bell. I do not see articles (other than my own) before they are published in it. I do not want to see them. Such energies as I have left are fully occupied by tasks that I hope I may live to complete. And if that were not so, I would not presume to admonish the editor about what he should include or exclude. If there are articles which offend or disgust you, communicate with him, not with me. I may agree with you, but do not expect me to endorse your opinion. Long ago, when I was young, there yet lingered in the Western world a tradition of courtesy toward one's hosts. An author is a guest at the publisher's table. According to the etiquette I was taught, it would be impolite to throw dishes or silverware at him.

[Ed. Note: So here we have it straight from Dr. Oliver's pen. — No, it was not an attempt at coaxing "a few lightweight Christians into the fold with such vacillations." If I ever attempted that, I am sure, Dr. Oliver would rest very uneasily in Valhalla. For fifteen or so years I was honored to have the Professor's trust and confidence; we talked on the phone at least once a week; we worked together very closely; I never USE or ABUSE my friends; never ever would I entertain the thought of betraying Dr. O's trust and confidence. With Dr. O's passing I lost someone, something, that I find very difficult to express my feelings on in these pages. — As far as "sleeping with the enemy" is concerned, well, I don't make it a habit to lie down with dogs, for the simple reason that I could conceivably get up with fleas (and who would want that?), nor have I ever made, nor will I ever make, a pact with the devil to further my own goals and interests, as some of our "Movement" people have done, and are doing to this day. I would rather starve to death before I would forsake my principles. — On another subject, our Dr. O, in all of these years of close cooperation, very much relied upon the help of one person: his faithful and graceful wife, Grace. Mrs. O, (as I would address her when telephoning, and she would reply, "Ah, Georgie Porgie,") is the one who, with her (as I would call them) eagle eyes, proof-read all of the professor's writings until about a year ago. — I'll always treasure the pleasant visits I had with Dr. and Mrs. O, by telephone or in person, over the years. Mrs. Oliver is now residing at The Carle Arbours Nursing Home (Room 122 B, 302 Burwash Avenue, Savoy, Illinois, 61874—Phone: 217-383-3090. Won't you, please, remember Mrs. O at this Yuletide season? And tell Mrs. O, "Georgie Porgie" sent you, and you will have made her day!

The passing of Dr. Oliver should be a unifying and forging force for the truly dedicated and worthwhile people of our beliefs to come together to lay the ground work for really intelligent directions for the future of the movement. There is no further need for philosophizing or preaching to the choir. Dr. Oliver has said it all. Mr. Pryce seems to have the better handle on things in that regard, if he can only bring it into clear focus and in terms that the ordinary reader will understand.

[Ed. Note: Speaking of "ordinary reader", anyone who could comprehend and understand what Dr. O was saying, even if he or she had to run to the bookshelf and dust off good old faithful, the Oxford Dictionary, should be able to comprehend what Joe Pryce is saying. Besides, Dr. O never wrote, and I never published, for every Tom, Dick and Harry on the street.]

My fondest determination is that my means will increase to the point that I can help you substantially in a project such as this [Thank you, Mrs. M.v.S.; I shall keep my binoculars aimed in your direction. Have a Happy New Year!].

As always,
Mrs. M.v.S., Washington

HAIL AND FAREWELL TO A SAGE

by

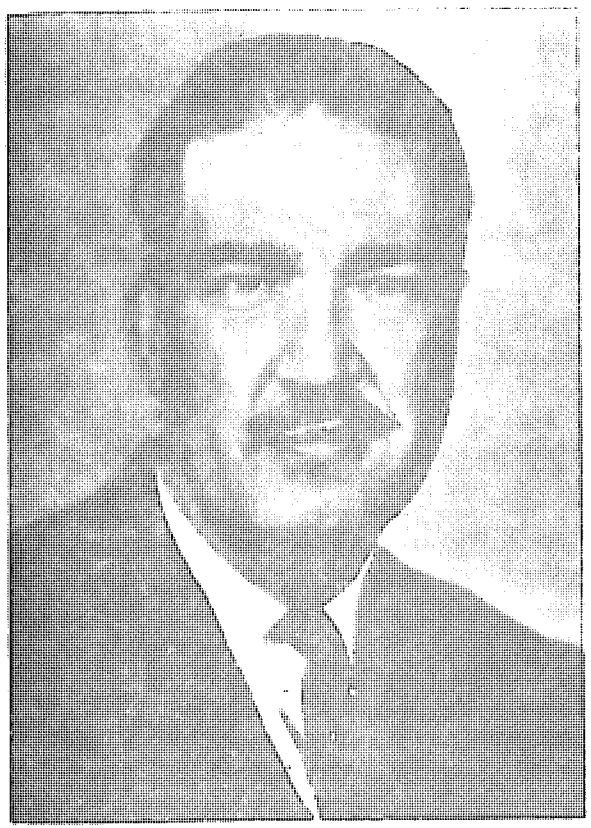
Dr. Charles E. Weber

On 19 November 1994 a memorial symposium was held in honor and celebration of the life of Dr. Revilo P. Oliver (1908-1994), who died last summer in failing health. The symposium was held at the Jumer Hotel east of the huge University of Illinois campus and near the home in which he had lived for many years and kept a great number of books which he treasured. Dr. Oliver had taught for many years at the University of Illinois in Urbana as a professor of Classical languages. He was present at the founding meeting of the John Birch Society but resigned from that organization in 1966. He wrote voluminously on a great variety of topics for American Opinion and later for the Liberty Bell. He was the author of a number of books, the most notable of which was America's Decline. He often reproached Aryan Americans for their insouciance about the growing power of their enemies.

The memorial symposium attracted speakers and publishers from such distant areas as Louisiana, Georgia, West Virginia, Oklahoma and Canada, for Dr. Oliver had not only enjoyed an international reputation in his immediate field, but was also one of the leading figures in a movement attempting an instauration of what has appropriately been called the dispossessed American majority.

Speakers read from his writings, analyzed his style, mentioned his lofty motivations for writing and pointed out some of the main characteristics of his thinking on the plight of the American racial majority. They expressed grateful praise of the power of his mind, his energy even in his last years and his courage.

A sense of painful loss prevailed at the symposium but there was also a spirit of comradeship which arose immediately, even though many of those present had never met in person. At the end of the formal part of the symposium Dr. Oliver's ashes were taken to a nearby site which had played a large rôle in his academic life. Libations of wine were poured upon the ground in keeping with ancient traditions and his ashes were scattered while those present expressed farewell sentiments in Latin, English and German. Many lively discussions were then carried on until late in the night and at breakfast the following morning.



Some of them were dominated by a man from political life whose successes caused the established parties to resort to vile actics against him.

I, for one, hope that future meetings will be arranged for those who were present at the symposium and many others whose thought has been enriched by this great teacher. Perhaps a society could be formed to honor him and to continue to derive stimulation from his life and writings.

[Editor's Note: Attorney Sam Dickson of Georgia and Charles Barenfanger of Illinois, who made the arrangements for this memorial symposium, deserve our gratitude for making this event indeed a memorable one.]

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Nur eines gibt es, das ewig währt—
Der Toten Tatenruhm.

For as long as there are white men, Dr. Oliver's name will be honored. He has done his part to ensure that this will be forever. He truly was the great champion of our race in our time. Our loss is inestimable.

You, Mr. Dietz, have earned our everlasting gratitude by publishing Professor Oliver's work to the very end.

Sieg Heil!

Dear Sir,
I enclose payment for a sub renewal and a little extra for you. I regret very much Dr. Oliver's death, it's a great loss for all of us.

All the best to you and your family. Keep up the good work.

Very truly yours,
D.M., New York

✠ ✠ ✠

Dear Mr. Dietz,

Enclosed is bank draft for my subscription renewal.

I have written to Mr. Dickson requesting that he acknowledges my respects for the passing of our great Aryan warrior, Prof. Oliver, and to convey my condolences to Grace Oliver.

Many thanks for your indefatigable efforts in defending the Aryan race over the past twenty years.

Yours fraternally,
Thomas D. Hume, Australia

Dear Mr. Dietz,

Many thanks indeed for recently sending me further issues of Liberty Bell. It Is always a pleasure to see your very interesting publications.

I was of course particularly gratified to see that you had chosen to reproduce in your October issue the first part of "The Way Ahead", taken from No. 27 of my Gothic Ripples. I anticipate that there will be at least two and possibly more further parts to this writing, appearing in successive issues of my bulletin.

It was indeed most sad news to hear of the death of Prof. Revilo Oliver whose learned articles, containing such a fund of information, appeared so long and so regularly in Liberty Bell. He was truly a giant of the pen.

With best wishes to you in your great work,

Yours sincerely,

Editor "....." Magazine,
Sir:

There is something terribly wrong with the racial / rightist movement in this country. There is no cohesion; no direction. There is nothing but a continual whine about what the Negroids are getting away with and how we aren't allowed any of those Negroidal privileges. Also, many verbal blasts are directed at the Jews, as if such is effective against those thick-skins.

I think the "....." is a cop-out. It is just one long moan from people who, while claiming to be aware of our problems, plan no sticking of their necks out in trying to solve them.

Britain, at least, has a going party: the British National Party. It now has chapters all over the UK. It publishes a monthly journal, The Spearhead, and runs people for office. The BNP has the same bitter, Zionist enemy to confront that we have here. Even more so. They haven't a First Amendment. Many of the Party's hierarchy have had to spend time in jail because of the things they have said about blacks and Jews. So much for the vaunted freedoms of these "New Order" democracies.

Why can't we organize? Why must we continue to flail away on an individual basis or as members to tiny little clubs? The result of this flailing? Hardly a pinprick of pain in the skin of our well-heeled, ruthless and cunning enemy?

Frankly, I'm disgusted with the lot of you. All this talk about how we are going to prevail in the future is just so much hot air. We'll never prevail without hard work, good ideas, money, dedication and neck-risking courage. We've got to protect each other's flanks and backs. We can't go-it-alone.

We've got to gather all like-minded thinkers of the Aryan race into one mass. This separation / segregation of our race is a must! We have got to lay out a core of beliefs that all our people will have to accept and abide by. Around the periphery of the core is a lesser important zone were different where different ideas are free to vie for attention. However, the core must be fixed. Those who cannot accept the core beliefs will have to go elsewhere. The present-day Republican Party is a perfect example of what happens when a party allows its core to melt away. I defy anyone to tell me what the GOP stands for today.

Even if we only number 100,000, we can have the effect of 100 times that number if we act with kamikaze courage. If we stick by our brothers and sisters to the death when they fall afoul of that great squid, JUG (Jewish Usurped Government), our impact will be shattering. Not only shattering, but exhilarating. After all, we are lex naturalis; we are right!

We must as 24-karat gold: pure. The virtues of honesty, honor, truth, bravery and devotion to our race must be the highly visible norm of our tribe. Equally visible will be our Aryan women. Our sisters are such an important and valuable asset. Without them, our race is doomed. We must give them the type of brave warrior mate they want and deserve. They shall share our councils as did our Teutonic women ancestors in that golden age before the Jewish religions enslaved our minds and bodies fourteen hundred years ago.

We, the 100,000, must be that core of decency, naturalness, and honor that, like a shining beacon, will attract the young to us as moths to the flame. Only through action can we achieve anything. The time for moaning and wringing hands is past. Let's begin moving toward each other into a critical mass of strength. A mass that will spark the social explosion so very much longed for. Before that drift to the center can take place, though, the arduous task of defining our core must be completed. Religion must not be a part of that core. Religion can be one of those ideas to be debated in the outer core periphery.

Who is the brilliant, selfless, honorable, fearless, charming, confident man of will around whom we shall swarm? He should, like Adolf Hitler, be trained as an architect and artist as well as a scientist. Like Hitler, he must be imbued with a great love for his race and with a driving obsession to rescue it from the decay that is and the ruin that waits. Around such a man others will be drawn as iron filings to a magnet. A lesser leader cannot inspire the devotion and spirit of sacrifice that will be required to overawe the almost unscalable obstacles set in our path by that brutal, sly and powerful enemy who leers so arrogantly in our faces.

Where are you, O' Roland, O' Arthur, O' Alfred, O' Friederich, O' George? Rise! The time is now! The sands of our glass slow to a trickle. Our peril is extreme.

Dear Sir:

This refers to Mr. Sal J. Foderaro's "Revealing dark secrets of national nuclear experiments. (1 September 1994). Mr Foderaro reports well the bestial experimentation by Americans on Americans. An agency of the U.S. Government performs ghastly experiments covertly on unsuspecting Americans, and conceals them from the American people.

The gang that ran horrifying nuclear radiation experiments secretly on human beings added hypocrisy to sadism. Files of the responsible agency purport to show that the nature of its experiments "point to (whatever that means) similarities between these tests and those performed in Nazi concentration camps, and noted 'a little of the Buchenwald touch' in the U. S. experiments."

To deflect criticism of its criminal behavior, the agency resorts to a cynical lie, and calumniates people who can't defend themselves. The Germans first produced nuclear fission. Since they did not intend to build an atomic bomb, they had no need to test nuclear radiation on humans. Even the Nuremberg lynch tribunals didn't accuse them of that. Earlier, the Germans discovered "X-rays", properly known as Roentgen Rays, and created the equipment to use them. There was no question of radiation experiments on human beings in connection with these, either.

To becloud the issue of their horrifying testing and, perhaps, to erase the memory, if not the guilt, of their actions, the American experimenters employed an old ruse. They pointed a finger at others, declaiming: "They did it first!"—which, of course, had nothing to do with their own behavior. In any case, by the time it became evident that the others didn't do it first, or at all, it was hoped, and expected, that the all Anglo-American crimes would be well out of sight under the rug, and forgotten.

When, in connection with "They did it first!", the devil-words "Nazi" and "Buchenwald" are employed, the obfuscation and deception are overwhelming.

"Nazi" has sinister antecedents. Among them: "Fuzzywuzzy," "Gook," and "Hun." They are expressions of the, originally English, then Anglo-American practice of dehumanizing the enemy.

It started with the fuzzywuzzies, and Rudyard Kiplings "lesser breeds beyond the pale" (i.e., non-English). To the English master race the original inhabitants of Australia and Tasmania were not human beings, but fuzzywuzzies. On Sunday afternoons, after Divine Worship, and at other times, English ladies and gentlemen hunted fuzzywuzzies as they did foxes in the Motherland. They exterminated the native population of Tasmania, history's first absolute genocide. In Australia, some of the native peoples escaped the English hunting parties, and the race, horribly degraded, survives as "aborigines."

"Gook" is the more picturesque American term for an enemy we deem subhuman, or non-human. It was used in the Spanish-American War, when we "liberated" Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and some smaller islands. In the Philippines there were warlike tribes that resisted the U.S. conquest and occupation. They rose up in what were called "insurrections." The "resistance" and the "freedom fighters" of that day were "gooks" to the U.S. Army, who slaughtered them by the tens of thousands.

"Hun" is more sophisticated than "fuzzywuzzy" or "gook," It serves the same purpose, and then some. "Hun" doesn't merely dehumanize the enemy, it demonizes him. It was used by the British in their anti-German atrocity-lie propaganda of World War I. The British drew on thousand-year-old tales of ravage by Attila buried in the European psyche, to conjure up fear and hatred of the Germans.

It is ironic that the British, whose Empire subjugated, enslaved, and starved half the peoples of the planet, should apply the epithet "Hun" to the Germans, who never subjected, nor exploited, any people.

In a mindless frenzy of anti-Germanism directed not only against Germany, but against Americans of German parentage, against the German language, against German literature, against German music, in a manic campaign that went on for years after the end of World War I, "Hun" was quickly and avidly embraced in the United States. "Johnny get your gun, get your gun, get your gun, Johnny kill the Hun, kill the Hun, kill the Hun!" became American foreign policy under Woodrow Wilson, and continues, substantially, to be so.

Calling them "Huns" eased the murdering of surrendered German soldiers, and the machine-gunning of sailors floundering helplessly in the sea. The British used "Hun" to their moral justification (which they proffer for each of their crimes) for the worst single atrocity against humanity up to that time in this century: The British hunger blockade. It was kept in force long after the war ended. It starved to death a million German children, their mothers, and their grandparents.

"Nazi" appeared in March 1933 at the time of World Jewry's declaration of war on Germany, which brought on World War II. "Nazi" was employed in the same manner as "Hun" (which is still in use).

However, due, principally, to a now dictatorially dominant, all-obliterating media, "Nazi" is an imprecation of vastly greater extent and effect.

A stupefied populace, morally dulled by the incessant hammering of pernicious alien doctrines, purposely kept ignorant of American and western history, has been brainwashed into accepting "Nazi" and "Nazism"—about which it knows less than nothing—as a uniquely fiendish embodiment of evil.

After the total destruction of Germany half a century ago, after Korea, Vietnam, Lebanon, the Persian Gulf, and an assortment of minor slaughters in between and since, including Libya, Panama, and Somalia, "Nazi" is still with us.

Nurtured and exploited by the media, by Hollywood, and by the majority of politicians on every level, who have found it to be the most effective attention-grabber, and attention-diverter, ever, "Nazi" is more alive than ever.

Moreover, it has come home to roost, as it were. Criminals of all stripes cry "Nazi", or interject "a Nazi angle" to distract awareness of their guilt, as in the case of the nuclear radiation experiments recounted by Mr Foderaro.

Those who noted "a little of the Buchenwald touch" in the all-American nuclear radiation tests on human beings, failed to note a larger and more prominent touch. This was the cage in the center of the camp compound. It figured extensively in the "Holocaust" literature. The cage held a bear and an eagle. Every day a live Jew would be tossed into the cage. The bear would tear him apart and the eagle would pick his bones. As sworn to by "survivors." Their testimony, which should still be in the files, also "points to" "Nazi crimes in Buchenwald."

Sal J. Foderaro's report is excellent. It is gentlemanly of him to stress the very great credit due Hazel O'Leary. It would be salutary to have more, many more, like her in the Administration. The Asbury Park Press does the public a service in publishing Mr Foderaro's report.

Sadly, Mr Foderaro's revelation, restricted to nuclear radiation experiments, is only partial. This sort of thing has been going on in other fields for many years. Beginning well before World War II, sponsored by their manufacturers, clandestine testing of drugs and pharmaceuticals, of biologicals and chemicals, was carried out on prison inmates and on government hospital patients in the United States, sometimes with gruesome outcome. This experimentation goes on to the present day.

Perhaps Mr Foderaro could investigate these practises as well. His reports are sure to be edifying, and socially valuable.

Yours very truly,
Carl Hottelet

Dear Sir:

The Legion declares it is for god and country. "Witnesses to the Holocaust" in the August 19944 Magazine moves me to ask, Whose God? What country?

The reasons for my questions are set forth in my letter of 19 October 1994 to Mr Wheeler and Mr Greenwald.

I would be grateful for your comment on the propriety of the American Legion's promoting the "Holocaust".

Dear Sirs:

The rehash of warmed over concentration camp horror stories in "Witnesses to the Holocaust" (August 1994 is so crude, so one- dimensional that it insults the intelligence of your readers.

It can be seen only as an attempt to re-inflame the hatred against Germany and Germans kindled by World Jewry's declaration of war on Germany in March 1933. That declaration of war brought on World War II, which, together with its sequels, caused a million American dead and maimed. A noteworthy holocaust, and a real one.

The Jewish declaration of war automatically made every Jew on German territory an enemy alien. As did every other country on earth, Germany put enemy aliens into concentration camps.

Germany was the last European country to establish such camps. The first country to set up a concentration camp was Great Britain, in its war against the Boers, at the beginning of this century. It was a real, purposeful death camp. In it the British deliberately starved to death—in an effort to make their fighting men surrender—twelve thousand children and women. That was a large proportion of the small Boer population.

Your writers start with Dachau. They recount once more what we have already heard 1,001 times. And they continue to suppress other parts of the story. For instance, when the Crusaders, now become Avenging Angels, entered the camp a certain Lieutenant Bushyhead ordered his men to round up all non-internees in the camp. These included soldier convalescents and amputees from the eastern front, who were guards, doctors, and medics, sanitary and administrative personnel. In the meanwhile, Lt Bushyhead and some accomplices had mounted a machine gun on the roof of a barracks building. The people he had ordered rounded up were then bunched together against the wall of a building across the way. Bushyhead opened fire, six hundred people were slaughtered. A mini-holocaust. Bushyhead and his fellow-murderers were not even charged, much less tried, for this War crime.

A contingent of US troops was left in the camp. The 7th Army had been told by our rear echelon Psycho-Warfare crowd that hundreds of thousands of Jews were being killed in the Dachau gas chambers. When, upon having entered and inspected the camp, the 7th Army reported that there were no gas chambers, it was ordered to build one. Hence the troops that stayed in the camp. They forced Germans from near-by towns to construct a "Dachau gas chamber." Since neither the Americans nor the Germans knew what a "gas chamber" looked like, the product was not convincing. Inasmuch as visitors, especially Germans, for whose indoctrination the "gas chamber" was intended, didn't either, it served its purpose. It is still there.

The gas having been let out of its "gas chambers", so to speak, your authors skip Auschwitz to go from Dachau to Buchenwald. For Dachau they suppress fact, for Buchenwald they suppress fiction that was asserted for so long to be fact.

There was Buchenwald's most spectacular feature: A cage which stood in the open in the center of the compound. It held a bear and an eagle. Each day a live Jew would be tossed into the cage. The bear would tear him apart, the eagle would pick his bones. "Eye witness survivors" swore to that. It figured for years in the "Holocaust" literature.

There were, of course, "gas chambers" and "crematory ovens", into which thousands of Jews marched docilely every day. "Eye Witness" survivors swore to that, too.

But Buchenwald was more resourceful in that Jews were killed, in batches of tens of thousands daily, by many highly original techniques: Jammed into huge sealed and roofed-over enclosures, they were steamed to death; or, in the same structure, the air would be withdrawn, and they were vacuumed to death; or, still in the same facility, it would be heated to such a degree that they would be baked to death. There was another imaginative structure. It contained a vast metal platform. Once the thousands of Jews were assembled on it, the platform would be lowered into a gigantic water tank, and the Jews would be drowned. Like the aforementioned structure, this one was multi-purpose. Instead of being lowered into the water, the platform would receive a high-amperage charge, and the Jews

Nor were the more mundane methods of murdering Jews en masse neglected. They were burned in huge open pits. They were shot, a bullet in the back of the neck, Katyn-style, or machine-gunned, Dachau style. By intravenous injection, clubbing, stabbing (babies were tossed into the air to be speared on SS bayonets), by fiendish medical experimentation. And so on, and on. All "eye-witnessed" by "survivors."

There is a true Buchenwald happening that belongs most certainly in every honest report of the liberation of the camp. It is suppressed by the "Holocaust" promoters and beneficiaries. I have a friend of more than thirty-five years who, as a young infantryman, was in the first unit to enter the camp. He told me that on the first weekend after the liberation, the GIs invited women who had been internees, all either Jewish or Polish, to a beer party. When the party was well under way, they were gang-raped. The day after the "beer party" several of the victims approached my friend. "You know," they said, "the Wehrmacht never did that."

There were manifold reasons for death in the camps: Allied air bombardments, murder by kapos, and by the Communist gangs that terrorized the camps, which the SS seldom entered; accidents, at work and at sports; common illnesses. The occasional execution for sabotage, or for killing another detainee. And there were deaths from natural causes.

The mass killers were typhus and, to a subordinate degree, hunger. It is these two that accounted for the piles of corpses and the walking skeletons, two horrors Made in U.S.A.

Wen the US Army entered Naples in March 1945 it walked into an incipient typhus epidemic. Some inhabitants already had died of it. The slums of Naples, and of the adjacent Pozzuoli, were not less crowded than were Dachau and Buchenwald.

To judge by the records of earlier plagues in Europe and in Italy, the dead from a typhus epidemic among the crowded millions of Naples-Pozzuoli, could have been 23,000, or 230,000, or, who knows? But this time there was a new element: DDT. The Americans had a monopoly of it. The Army had it in vast abundance, more than enough to kill every louse from the Abruzzi to the Urals many times over. The US Army applied DDT profusely. The epidemic was contained. Deaths were held to 23—lamentable, but in context, minuscule.

In Dachau, Buchenwald, and in the other camps, the situation was different. There was typhus, but there was no DDT. The U.S. Command was informed precisely about conditions in the camps, through its own intelligence, and by the International Red Cross, whose observers had been allowed to enter the camps, and to move freely about in them, since they were opened.

The Red Cross had been apprehensive about the incidence of typhus in the camps. With the eastern front moving westward toward Germany, through areas where typhus was endemic, it became alarmed at the threat of a plague that would ravage Europe. It saw the camps as foci of an epidemic that would spread to the German civil population, now especially susceptible, then extend into neighboring countries. US Army medical officers saw it the same way. The Red Cross pleaded with the Army for DDT for the internees, promising that not an ounce would get to the Germans.

The Army knew it could rely on that promise. The Red Cross never evinced even ordinary sympathy for Germany or for the German people. During World War I it had acted practically as fundraising and recruiting agent for England in the United States. It's attitude hadn't changed. Moreover, it was known that the Germans scrupulously passed into the camps humanitarian packages consigned to the internees. Nevertheless, the United States rejected all appeals for DDT for the camp inmates. The consequences were inexorable, and foreseeable. The number of dead rose far above the capacity of the crematories to dispose of the bodies. The piles of corpses mounted.

Cynics might remark that the United States wanted the piles of corpses. For one thing, they could be brandished as "justification" for the criminally insane crimes, hideously unique in history, that the United States, and its Allies—singing, "Onward, Christian Soldiers!"—committed against the German people during—and after—the war.

The circumstances around the second mass killer, hunger, that produced the walking skeletons, and contributing to the piles of corpses, were essentially the same as those relating to typhus. As Germany was bombed into chaos, the Red Cross observed the constant deterioration of rations for the civil population and for the camps, and detected the first signs of starvation. The US Army had more food than it could consume. The Red Cross pleaded for food for the internees. It assured the U.S. command that none would go to the Germans. Still, despite the predictable ghastly result, requests for food, as for DDT, were denied.

The International Red Cross, and others, were dumbfounded by the refusals. Weren't these people, whom the United States was condemning to death by plague and by hunger, the ones for whom the United States, since 1933, shed crocodile tears, and wrung its hands in sanctimonious anguish, over the fate it said would befall them at the hands of the brutal "Nazis!" They were.

But, you gotta be flexible. Think of the terrific propaganda value of piles of corpses and hordes of walking skeletons! It'll be good for centuries! And there is the "Holocaust" angle!

That the piles of corpses would have been smaller, and the walking skeletons fewer, is attested by the fact that even though deprived of the minimal help requested, by no means were all internees in all camps living skeletons when they were liberated. But those who weren't were seldom photographed, and then incidentally, or coincidentally, and their pictures rarely appeared. Leslie and Jeremy Milk conceal that information, too.

The Milks say nothing about Buchenwald II, either. This is the original Buchenwald that "Ike", after its "liberation" handed over to his "gallant Soviet ally". The kapos and other Communist goons of Buchenwald I became administrators, wardens, and guards of Buchenwald II. The Buchenwald I internees were replaced by anti-Communist German civilians, but in Greater numbers. The camp hardly missed e beat in the transfer. It was now run as a Soviet Gulag. A quarter of its detainees were dead within the first five years of its operation. Buchenwald II—and the other Soviet Zone concentration camps-functioned for more than forty years after the war. The total number of those who perished in Buchenwald II—and in the other Soviet camps in Germany—can only be estimated. Mass graves are still being found.

Authoritative Jewish scholars, from Professor Yehuda Bauer of Hebrew University in Israel to Professor Arno Maier of Princeton University in New Jersey, long ago jettisoned the "6,000,000" lie (if they believed it in the first place) and other fables that made up the Tales of the "Holocaust." Professor Raoul Hilberg, University of New Hampshire, America's "Mr Holocaust", as an "expert witness" for the prosecution in the first great show trial of the heroic Ernst Zündel in Toronto, was forced by defence counsel to admit he had no evidence to support the "6,000,000" fetish, and that data on which he based a monumental book are, at best, vague. "Mr Holocaust", after undertaking to appear for the prosecution in the second episode of the great "Holocaust" show trial in Toronto, was a no-show. All scholars who can be taken seriously have acknowledged, for a long time, that "survivor" testimony is "suspect" and "unreliable." As is known, the Israeli Supreme Court stated that as its judicial opinion. In other words, the delusions, fantasies, and hallucinations of demented unfortunates, and of career "survivors", that are the essence of "docu-dramas", "Schwindler's List", and print-media fiction, are just that: lies and fantasies. What, then, is left of the "Holocaust?" Pictures of living skeletons and piles of corpses.

In 1989 the Soviet Union returned the "Auschwitz Death Books" to Germany. These were the records, kept meticulously by the camp administration, of fatalities—German and non-German administrative, civil, and military personnel, and internees—from all causes for the entire period over which the camp existed. Total deaths were 74,000. The records of the International Red Cross, kept at its affiliated Arolsen Institute in Munich, lists 367,000 deaths from 1933 until 8 May 1945, of German and non-German administrative, civil, and military personnel, and internees, from all causes.

In the face of the foregoing, for Leslie and Jeremy Milk to include a special section, ELEVEN MILLION DEAD, with their Germanophobic "Holocaust" tract, is further evidence that they are a pair of lying "Holocaust" hacks, or of diseased mind which is about the same). Whoever publishes their venomous trash is in the same category.

Your magazine's masthead proclaims FOR GOD AND COUNTRY. When it prints something like "Witnesses to the Holocaust" it provokes questions. Whose God? Our Christian God? Or the hate-and-vengeance-crazed Yahweh? What country? America? Or the country that attacked wantonly an American surveillance ship, in an attempt to sink it, and thus blame the crime on the Egyptians, murdering thirty-four American sailors and wounding a hundred and seventy-one more, most of them seriously? The country that treacherously withheld from the American commander intelligence of an impending attack thereby delivering hundreds of U.S. Marines to their deaths when their Beirut barracks were blasted? The country that spies on us, constantly, on all levels? The country of which it is said "Murder, Inc."? moved to Palestine and set up a state: The State of Israel?

Yours very truly,
Carl Hottelet

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Just a thought on the events of 8 November: Amidst all of the contorted, improbable explanations for the resounding defeat of Clinton on 8 November written by leftist columnists, one looks in vain for any mention of the racial factor in the defeat, which might have been the decisive factor in quite a few Congressional contests, especially in the south. Thanks to the efforts of what might be called the "underground press," many voters we aware of Clinton's quite disproportionate appointments if Jews and Negroes, his disgusting escapades with Negresses and the apparently well-founded rumor that Clinton is the father of a Mulatto son.

G. Gordon Liddy Show

Washington, D.C. 20007

Dear Mr. Liddy:

The Germans considered the Jews to be enemy aliens. Jews, like Gypsies, were considered an infestation. There is no question that the Jews are part of an international front. They are today as they were in the Thirties. The attempt of the Germans to make Europe Judenfrei was justified on this basis. Jews made up the bulk of the leadership of all Marxist parties in Europe and North America—as they do today.

Are not Howard Metzenbaum, Diane Feinstein, Charles Schumer, and Arlen Specter 'enemy aliens'? Do they not work against the Constitutional rights of the American citizenry? Is not the ADL an enemy agency of a foreign power, namely, Israel? Everywhere you look there is a Jew agitating for race mongrelization (not their own!), increases in welfare, gun control, smut, and of course aid to Israel.

We Aryans today preach a separation of the races based on the inability of the races to create a national polity here. Rightaway the Jews step in and demand that we be silenced. We do not want to see our race destroyed by miscegenation. The Jews continue to force integration on the white race. Why should we consider them anything else but enemy aliens?

I don't promote the idea of exterminating Jews. I do stand by the concept of separating from them and all others who are not Aryans. White supremacy over white affairs is what we stand for. But say that, and some yapping bastard of a Jew starts screaming about a pogrom.

Sincerely,
Maj. Donald V. Clerkin, Chairman / Commander
Euro-American Alliance, Inc.

Note: This was faxed to G. Gordon Liddy (1-8OO-937-4329) while he interviewed Jew Yehuda Bauer. They both moaned and groaned about it after Liddy read it over the air. Liddy said he now knows why there must be a Holocaust Museum in Washington. Yehuda Bauer said that the Nazis are still around and must be stopped.

Update

On November 3, 1994, I filed a Mandamus petition in Racine County Court in the matter of the murder of Joe Rowan. The District Attorney has done nothing to bring the killer to justice. It will be remembered that in 1990 Brian Kozel, a Milwaukee Skinhead, was shot to death by a Mexican. Nothing was done about that either. Two dead Skinheads in Wisconsin in four years is quite a record. Two county D.A.s have refused to do their duty. Blacks and Mexicans are obviously encouraged to kill more whites. There is no telling what sort of welcome I will get when the petition hearing comes up. The Racine Police are already mumbling about "outsiders"meddling in Racine affairs. The Racine D.A., Robert Flancher, can't be too happy that an Aryan Movement man comes into his court to make him do his duty. I don't know what to expect from Judge Dennis Flynn. He is as Irish as I am, and he is just as likely to hate me as love me. At any rate, I am in court on this one.

THE ELECTION—Well, the white man has ostensibly thrown the Demicans out of office all over the country. He has elected the Republicrats. Will anything change? Old Bob Dole immediately fawned on Billary and vowed to compromise. Newt Gingrich spoke up and said his first move as Speaker of the House would be to rush the GATT through as fast as possible. GATT is a super NAFTA, with a World Trade Organization agreement that will hamstring whatever U.S. industry still exits. Expect the diminishing manufacturing jobs to be quickly exported to the Third World with WTO and GATT. But Newt Gingrich is going to help Billary get GATT passed in the Congress. Then good old Newt is going to argue for prayer in public schools. He isn't going to repeal Brady and Feinstein, the recent gun grabs. Old Dole isn't either. No, those Marxist impositions will be allowed to stand while the Republicrats work on really important things such as helping Billary recoup his presidency. And you may have thought that the Republicrat leadership is on your side. A few freshman congressmen may be willing to stand up for white civilization in North America, but the guys at the top of the Republicrat Party are all for open borders, more freebees for the 'minorities,' increased aid to Israel (watch and see if Jesse Helms will touch foreign aid to Israel!) and other things that the Demicans have been pushing. The Republicrats are Tweedle-Dee to the Demicans Tweedle-Dum. You can probably expect the Republicrats to lower the Capital Gains tax, which may help old white folks who have a second home to sell and a little stock to dump. But the Republicrats won't do a thing to close the porous border with Mexico. It won't demand a change in the Constitution that permits an illegal alien to drop a kid in the U.S., thus making the alien kid an automatic citizen. It won't back the Californians who courageously voted up Prop 187. No, the Republicrat Party will give the boobs feel-good leglislation like prayer in public school, legislation that will be tied up in the courts forever and will be meaningless. But maybe it is all planned that way: when the Republicrats fail miserably, the boobs will return the Hillary-Billary crowd to office. If I am wrong about any of this, I wlll say so.

THE ARYAN REPUBLIC—Even if the patchwork cures of the Republicrat Party are somewhat successful, nothing can save the United States from its fate. The interest on the National Debt rises each year. When the Debt interest rises to the point whereat taxes cannot satisfy it, then cuts in the entitlements will perforce be made. The old timers on Social Security will be hit first, they are the easiest to swindle. Then veterans' pensions will be attached to pay the interest on the Debt. That won't be enough. The welfare class will then be asked to contribute. The Republicrats claim that they are going to end welfare cold turkey. If they try it the cities will burn. If they reduce welfare payments to pay the interest on the Debt, the cities will burn. The blacks will consider any reduction of welfare expenditures to be a sign of an intention to commit genocide against them as a race. They will riot and burn, loot and kill. That has been their function in this Jewish-dominated U.S. society: to act as the Golem. To keep the Aryan busy while the Jews clean up the profits and the power. But now the Golem has got out of hand and he is about to bring the bloody house down about the ears of the Jews and all. The white voters saw this coming and tried to right things with a Republicrat Congress. It may have gone too far, even considering that the Republicrats have promised a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution and an end to welfare, plus a line-item veto for the presidency.

We Aryans have to look at this worsening situation as an end to what is and has been, and a beginning of a new era. As the System implodes the Aryans must begin the process of rebuilding a society, this time for Aryans only. The Aryan Republic is the only solution to the problem of the future. Even if the System of the present could be salvaged, it would be curtains for the white man. The white race will be a minority by the middle of the next century, but long before that the white man will become the absolute underdog in a Jewish-dominated mud society of loud-mouthed Marxists, queers with a grudge, and every person 'of color' living off the labor of the white drones. This is inevitable under the present system because the bosses refuse to stand up for the white man. They are deliberately turning America into a Third World swine pen for the profits accruing from coolie labor. Look how real wages have been falling in the United States since 1975. The System does not need manufacturing jobs that pay large hourly wages when they can export the jobs for pennies on the dollar. Lush Limpnutz won't tell you this. That fat bastard is making his Thirty Pieces of Silver while white America shrivels up. Everybody in the System gets rich while the country fills up with muds, useless eaters that are ready to pick the bones of the white man and suck up what is left of a once great nation. The muds are vultures, but they are vultures who have no future either. The collapse of the System will mean their deaths as well.

Something better must come out of this wretched mess. That something is the Aryan Republic, a PLACE FOR WHITES WHO WANT TO REMAIN WHITE IN THEIR SUCCEEDING GENERATIONS. Can you imagine governing yourselves again, with only the counsel of men and women of your own kind to guide you? The land will be laid out and fortified, defended by an Aryan militia. Our courts will dispense real Aryan justice, not Jewish psychoanalysis. Our schools will teach the history of the world as it happened, the science and technology of the future, and the philosophy of the great thinkers of our Aryan race. The present governance is about to implode. Look to the future for a solution that will SECURE THE EXISTENCE OF OUR PEOPLE AND A FUTURE FOR WHITE CHILDREN. ❑

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

FRAGMENT FROM A WORK IN PROGRESS:

"THE EMPIRE OF THE GOTHIC NIGHT—A NOVEL"

by Joseph D. Pryce

The Abyss Gazes Back

Then again some have fallen unreservedly into the power of the destiny ruling here: some yielding betimes are betimes too their own: there are those who, while they accept what must be borne, have the strength of self-mastery in all that is left to their own act; they have given themselves over to another dispensation.....
Plotinus, The Fourth Ennead III. 15

Early that evening, as I waited in Francesca's black Miata, I peered anxiously through the storm-strafed windscreen, hoping for a sign of the guests who were due to arrive at the Hall of Sport by eight o'clock sharp. It was now 7:45 by my reckoning, and I knew that I would be able to hear the Parsifal Overture which bellowed forth from the car-stereo all the way to its sweet ending. I gazed with awe upon the swarm of rats glistening in the twilight, as they scurried about the piles of mouldering garbage in front of the bodega on the corner. They rooted and roistered in the slime, seemingly undisturbed by the comings and goings of the greasy 'Hispanic' clientele with their shopping-bags full of cheap beer and plantain chips. Under the streetlamp in front of the Hall a drunken subhuman sloshed his face about in the gutter, vainly attempting to scrub the vomit from his beard in the slop which bore its freight so swiftly to the sewers. A woman screamed somewhere to the west, and one heard glass shattering a block or so away. How long would it take to scrub these sewers clean? Junkies swapped syringes in the gloaming, and parents hustled their children into the Cadillacs of the pimps and pornographers.

A minute or so after I had taken in all of these multi-cultural affairs, several of the more antiquated among the invited guests emerged from a taxi on the opposite side of the street. One of the men was clearly deep in drink; he staggered into the mail-box, and I could not refrain from laughing as I watched the old fogey struggling impotently with his willful umbrella in the raging tempest. They crossed the avenue, bobbing and weaving grotesquely through the traffic. As they passed in front of the Hall of Sport, I noticed that they were pointing excitedly at something up above, apparently on the marquee. They shook their heads and wagged their fingers in an excellent impersonation of outraged Calvinists. As I looked up, I too was startled to see that someone had changed the legend atop the marquee to Schlageter Hall. I confess that I was not at all perturbed by this transformation, which was obviously the work of one of the 'young Turks' who were beginning to elbow the geriatric cases out of the limelight in the Society. As I looked back down at the pavement I saw several of the real firebrands of the revolution approaching the Hall, night-sticks in hand and workboots in lock-step; they were smirking at the discomfiture of the yobbo with the umbrella. I could then have ventured a lucky guess as to just who the culprits might be.

As I emerged from the car and prepared to make a dash for the foyer, I bumped straight into Theodor Lipps, a lawyer and racial activist who hustled me into the foyer. He trundled me over to a quiet corner behind a freestanding theater poster advertising an upcoming showing of the original German Expressionist film Nosferatu. He whispered cryptically about tonight being 'the night of all nights,' and added something about 'a Great Change coming.' Then he vanished mysteriously through one of the gaudy, gold-painted doors which led into the lobby. I followed.

In the lobby stood a dozen or so people with whom I had worked over the years, in one or another of the organizations to which I had given a fleeting allegiance. I passed a few minutes in small talk with some of the old faithful, and strolled over to browse a bit through the Movement literature which was on display at a long table on the left side of the lobby. Two very lovely young women, of Mediterranean (perhaps Italian) descent stood politely discussing their literary wares with the guests.

As I peered down the length of the Hall, I detected Theodor's bulky figure standing up front with a tall, dark-haired man in a black, red-satin-lined cloak. Theo seemed to be whispering to his mysterious colleague—no, I've got that wrong. To my shock and surprise, Theo was listening to the man, with an air of reverence adorning a face very seldom visited by that expression. Theo nodded occasionally, and smiled—I thought shyly—once or twice. Several of the other guests were pointing at Theo's companion and seemed quite delighted for some reason, as if his appearance in the Hall were an epiphany of transcendant import.

It was then that I heard the words 'the Chief' muttered by several of the guests, and I finally realized just what it was that Theo had meant when he said that tonight was to be 'the night of nights.' The Chief, as he was called, had not been seen in public since the daylight assassination of the Secretary of State during the February troubles, and his reemergence from seclusion could only indicate that the struggle was 'hotting up.' In fact, I had never seen his face before, and I was pleased to see that he didn't resemble those toothless, rabid morons which the System had employed to represent us on the TV in the evil days before the great purge.

I felt a surge of will, a burst of joy inside me as I pondered the fact that soon the Revolution for which we had all sweated and slaved, and for which we had prowled about the city in the dead of night like packs of ravenous canines, would begin in earnest. The inability of the State's security forces to prevent such gatherings as this from taking place was a startling manifestation of weakness, of instability on the System's part, and this salient fact would not be lost on our leadership. Theo glanced quizzically up and down the rows of quickly-filling seats and then ambled slowly over to the microphone. He tapped it lightly, spoke a few words to enable the sound-man to set his levels, and without permitting the Chairman of the Society to engage in any 'patriotic' ritualism before the 'flag,' he turned the mic over to the guest speaker, saying simply, Ladies and gentlemen, the Chief will speak!

Violent applause raged up and down the Hall for several minutes, but when the Chief raised his right hand, the silence was total and immediate. He began:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I am most pleased to be addressing you all tonight, especially as the leaders of the German American Friendship Society have kindly undertaken to invite to their gathering members of several quite radical political groups whose interests coincide with theirs only in specific and closely circumscribed areas. I'm inclined to attribute this late-blooming hospitality on the part of our hosts to the obvious inability of the powers that be to prevent such gatherings from taking place. I sense that some of the more genteel and timorous among you would want to assure yourselves a berth on the gravy train which looks, at long last, to be making its way to the station; the ominous whistlings are become ever-more apparent in the distance, both to friend and to foe.

"Down to business. As you may have noticed, there is a slight tincture of hostility in my tone. I do regret the fact, of course; but I would like to make you all aware that this feeling is directed only against those among you who have betrayed your trust by betraying your people. Yes, I am speaking of the leaders of your Friendship Society, who continue to salute and to pledge allegiance to that disgusting rag which hangs obscenely on a flakeboard pole to left of this podium. It does not matter at all to your officers, it seems to me, that that hideous banner now represents, to the millions of Aryans, both at home and overseas, nothing but blood and sewage, crime and madness, destruction raining from the skies upon the Earth and upon Her children trembling helplessly amidst the wreckage. And yet we are expected to revere this filthy thing, to genuflect before this sickly apparition as if before the Holy Grail! I was sickened to see, at the last gathering of the Society, one of your officers asserting, in accents of the most pained self-righteousness, his belief that we should wrap ourselves up in the 'Stars and Stripes,' lest the agents of the Z.O.G. come to the untoward conclusion that we are really splitting from the program at last, and mean to do them harm. Startling. I, for one, prefer the red, white, and black to the red, white and blue on any day of the week.

"And then, of course, there's the famous blood-libel, the Holohoax, the mention of which seems to set your officers' teeth to chattering like a Latin percussion ensemble. One would think that here, among Americans of German ancestry—who, significantly, make up the largest ethnic group in the country—one would find the greatest outrage, the most ferocious will to correct the historical record and bring the hoaxers and profiteers to the execution block. But I'm afraid that's not the case, my friends, and I find myself truly at a loss to account for this pitiful spinelessness, this resolute toadying on the part of the leadership who are well-aware, I'm sure, that the 'death-camp' canard is a fable and nothing besides. But perhaps, like many weak and foolish mortals, the leaders are driven by a wish to be loved, in the same way that a lap-dog is driven to crave a caress or a treat. I have been told that the President of our once-glorious republic and the ghastly crone who escorts that gobbet of dreck to his public performances, have invited several of the mucky-mucks of the Society over to their digs for tea and biscuits, and that a 'Friendship Garden' will be dedicated to the German-American Community. I know that it might seem unkind to mention it, but isn't that a little bit like throwing the dog a bone? You can be sure that the tyrants will not let the envisaged afternoon pass without a word or two about how marvelously democratic our good little Germans have become since the war in which the evil Reich saw fit to slaughter so many of Yahweh's pinups. 'Here, Hans, have an American Beauty Rose and a kick in the scrotum while you're at it.' Then, of course, your mucky-mucks over here will return home to brandish about the glossy 8x10s that memorialize the splendid day. What can you do with such people? I get ideas, my friends. I get ideas.

"There is a terror in the souls of the leadership of the German-American Friendship Society, which completely incapacitates said leadership from doing its job. Do you really think that the Oberjuden respect your pusillanimous groveling? Do you really believe that you are serving the interests of the real German-Americans by collaborating with the World-Enemy in such a slavish, and, I might say, obvious fashion? If you people are not going to defend the interests of German Americans, perhaps the time has come when you will have the decency to step aside to make room for those who will! If you cannot silence the whimpering voice inside you which urges surrender at all costs, maybe its time for us to silence you entirely—for the good of the cause, as it were.

"But now I wish to address a few remarks to those among you who are not members of the Society, but who are nevertheless vitally interested in the fate of our Teutonic brethren; for we all know, on our pounding pulses as well as in our reasoning brains, that we Aryans must sink or swim together, and that the destiny of all European-Americans is bound together as are the members of the lictors' fasces. If our enemies break even one of our ethnic groups, then they have broken us all. If our enemies manage to instill a factitious guilt in even one of our family members, then they have crippled us all. Most important, to the extent that our enemies can succeed in encouraging any of us to think in terms of our ethnic heritage to the detriment of our racial heritage, then they have triumphed over us even before the battle has been joined. We are Aryans first and foremost, and it is our duty before this degenerate world to bear that glorious name with honor and pride, shrinking before no one, and smashing into the ground those who would would even consider wounding that pride or casting aspersions upon that honor.

"We were once fierce conquerors who roved great heaving ice-choaked seas and who scaled the battlements of strange castles on far-flung continents, with battle-songs sounding merrily in the charged air; yet now we seem to have become naught but hollow-eyed spectators of some imbecile sports contest or other. Think of it: while your women are being molested on the crumbling sidewalks of what were once great cities (and often even in their own homes); while your small children are being robbed and slain and left for the vultures of the schoolyards to pick clean; and while your cities roar up in oceanic tides of fire, our menfolk want to know who won the goddamned football game—and these are the men who consider themselves manly! 'That's entertainment!'

"And what do we do on week-days? I blush—once we erected glorious civilizations from pole to pole and reconnoitred Nature's darkest secrets; yet now we have become little more than clients and administrators of the famous 'Welfare State' or flippers of burgers for one ptomaine-vendor or the other. Where is the spirit that moved our ancient Kings and Queens and warriors? Where is that devil-may-care attitude of the Jomsvikings, who laughed and joked as their captors dismembered them? We sleep, we sleep, my friends, and we have slept for so long now that the shadows of night have stretched themselves athwart the dying Earth to the point that darkness has almost swallowed us up.

"We must awaken from these opiate slumbers. We must be alert so that at all times we will be willing and able to observe the facts and to act upon the facts, my friends: and it seems to me that our enemies have understood one fact with much greater clarity than have our allies. I mean to speak of the great fact of hatred. The accusation forever sounds in our ears, in a thousand shrieking voices, in a diapason stretching from deepest bass to the most piercing and unendurable treble—yet always the burden is the same: we are the haters. Well, as we're already doing the time, let us enjoy the crime, and now. Our enemies know full-well that their game will be up at the very minute in which we resolve to think with our blood, that is, when we will have learned to hate. Why else would the foe be so intent upon accusing us of attitudes which never even seem to cross our minds? Race hatred and prejudice indeed! Why else would the least bigoted people ever to walk the earth be constantly warned and threatened about a 'disease' to which they have been immune for two thousand years? We Aryans must recall that we are not at a barn-raising now, nor at a recital of chamber music up at the castle, but at the very climacteric of our history. Those who are not of our blood are our enemies, and one hates one's enemies with all that is in one, or one perishes. Nature will not recall us, nor will she bestow a glittering crown upon us posthumously if we continue to see the world and its strife through everybody else's eyes but our own. Nature will take us to her queenly bosom only after we have mastered the earth as a conqueror, and walk on that earth as a conqueror, with a conqueror's serene and gleaming eye; and for that you need HATE.

"So how about it? If hatred will tear the sack-cloth and ashes from your back—then go ahead and hate!

"If hatred will raise your people up from the squalid existence which has been their lot for far too long— then go ahead and hate!

"If hatred will arm you against the 'statesmen' who have opened the floodgates of the nation to the racial debris of third-world sewers—then go ahead and hate!

"And if hatred will enable you to drive the moneychangers and swindlers from their stately palaces and to cast them out into a nightmare of chaos, of devastation and pain—then go ahead and hate!

"But after we have learned to hate, we must act—let us see this world and its inhabitants as they really are, and then let that divine hate of which I speak have its head. Put flame in your fury and destruction in your deed. For now we know that Nature, whose World-Soul embodies all of the wonder of Life, is at daggers-drawn with Her eternal enemy, Death, and we, the allies of Life, ask for no quarter, nor will we grant it to the enemy—this is a war to the knife, my friends. The forces of Death are enshrined in many brazen agents and hallowed institutions which we have enabled to do their evil in our very midst, right before our very eyes; there they squat, obscene and loathsome, untroubled by fear of discovery or by dread of retaliation. Those who tolerate this situation are in active collaboration with the enemies of Life. Foremost among our enemies are the Death-directed servants of the System of Lies. We, however, must speak the Truth to our people, and only to our people; we must build our sacred dwelling in the precincts of Truth. As the Truth lacks all effect when not embodied in action; when idealism is not embodied in deeds, then has the Ideal gone to bed with the Lie. Yet what in this world is mighty enough to be able to fight and to destroy the Lie?

"Aryan men and women! Only Terror has that might. Only Terror, merciless and cunning, can preserve Life from the depredations of those pustular agents of Death and the Lie who have now almost completed the construction of their New World Prison, and who wait only for the most auspicious moment in which to slam shut the gates upon our people. Terror acts through violence to create an enduring world for the reborn Aryans. Remorseless and purposeful violence will midwife the next Aryan millenia.

"When going on a mission, the terrorist saint clothes himself with a mantle of destruction. He wears his doom upon him as a ritual cloak. Death is his reward. Capture and recantation are, alike, unthinkable.

"Even after the great Change has begun and our enemies are in full flight, the terrorist knows that he will have well over 100,000,000 traitors at his back. Many will attempt to serve the revolution as they once served the tyrants, but, as we are not interested in resurrecting the ghost of a dead and decomposing America, we can dispense with all such riff-raff.

"Those who attempt to restrict our ancient right to keep and bear arms will be dealt with. Those who wish to criminalize the possession of so-called 'assault rifles,' must perish by like means. Those who wish to impose ruinous taxes on the purchase of ammunition will find themselves on a collision-course with that which they would interdict. When the ghoulish agents of the federal government raid our homes in order to confiscate the only means of protection that we still have in our possession, they must meet a storm of steel. When the Z.O.G. lays siege to the fortresses of the recalcitrant, its agents must be attacked from the rear. Their backs will be like fish in a barrel.

"If terror can waylay the more culpable of the state-servants with sufficient swiftness (and all state-servants are culpable to a degree), the more swiftly will their colleagues find solace in silence and inaction.

"The greater the speed with which we punish the race-traitors in the news-media and in the entertainment field, the earlier will come the day when the Z.O.G. will be forced to display its own Levantine rodents in front of the mics and the cameras. We must make use of the fact that Aryan stooges are motivated more by fear than by anything else. If an anchorman were to disappear every month for two or three months, Z.O.G. would never be able to find willing Goy replacements. The Jew-liars would then have to leave their murky world of clandestine control, and would be henceforth in our sights.

"The Aryan warrior, knowing full-well, from the scars and weals upon his tired flesh, the nature of that tyranny under which he suffers, responds in kind. Those among you who have lost your very livelihoods at the hands of this tyranny, must destroy the work-places and living accomodations of the hirelings of the tyranny. Those who have lost loved ones or racial comrades in one of the tyranny's raids on the Resistance, must retaliate by equivalent—nay, even greater!—explosive actions against the tyranny's minions. Those who have made our age a time of 'perpetual war for perpetual peace' must wake from their slumbers to find out, in broken body and in shattered spirit, the real meaning of war—from the business end. Those who have attempted with might and main to break our comrades on the rack and on the wheel, must now become accredited authorities on those nameless sounds which lurk within the night, and which fear can metamorphose into the very screeching of demons.

"Terror becomes the more pure as its designated 'victims' fall prey to the anxiety of endless anticipation. This anticipation will maximize your efforts to dislodge, and, ultimately, to destroy, the entire system, by working for you even while you are busy determining the shape of events on another sector of the front. Anticipation feeds the threat. Anticipation immobilizes. Then drops the shadow, then falls the blow.

"Ladies and gentlemen, I must insist that we face the fact that we are no longer a sovereign people, and have not been such for a very long time. We inhabit an occupied world, and it would be well for us to take due note of the fact that our rulers want to wipe our race from the surface of the earth. The evidence of their intentions is all around you, and reaches even unto the source of Life itself. We all know, for instance, that the Jews and their flunkies have repeatedly rammed it down our throats, and down the throats of our children, that it is perfectly permissible—indeed, even desirable—to kill Aryan children in the wombs of their mothers. This is indeed a horror. Now our enemies must be made to sup full of horrors.

"Our enemies have imprisoned, have tortured, have murdered many of our best fighters, brave martyrs all, who gazed with open eyes upon the face of the genocide which is planned for us, and who risked their very lives to carry destruction right into the enemy's camp. Without thought of self, they struck out at that grinning countenance with disciplined and well-merited violence. Now our enemies must be made to quaff the poison unto its bitter dregs.

"Our enemies have turned loose a feral and nauseating gang of subhuman cut-throats, a swelling horde of slimy mercenaries, upon once-peaceful Aryan communities; these creatures rape at will and murder on a venture as is the way of all race-alien armies of occupation. The agents of our enemies exact massive sums from the public treasury with which they feed, house, clothe, and make prolific, this purulent mass of demons. They loot and they burn at will, they violate and they desecrate at will, and we must now respond—Terror is that proper response. Aryan Resistance must strike globally. There are a million targets. Strike. Take the credit. Retreat into the shadows whence you came. Wait in silence.....then strike again. May the last hours of our enemies be ex-

"Our enemies are demons, my friends, and demons wear many masks: Marxism, democracy, egalitarianism, sensitivity training, One World Mongrelism, etc., and so forth, to the bottom of the barf-bag. You've all witnessed their sick Halloween charades: the sardonic grin on the mask of the nightly 'newsperson' as he spits his poisonous lies in our faces is unendurable; the sardonic grin on the mask of the politician who encourages sambos and mestizos to shamble across our borders, invading a once-lovely land which they will infect with their diseases, their crime and their malodorous spawn, is unendurable; the sardonic grin on the mask of the financial 'expert' who aids and abets the capitalist vampires of the stock exchange and the banking system is unendurable; the sardonic grin on the mask of the TV talking head who inculcates self-hatred in our children is unendurable; the sardonic grin on the face of the 'scientist' who insists, flying in the face of all the available evidence, on the equality of the races is unendurable. And the terrorist will kill dead the hider behind the masks.

"In the simplest terms, I might say that where the enemy stands, there stands the enemy—whether that enemy is your brother or your mother, your friend or your colleague. As I have said, there are numerous targets, and they must be made to feel that they are going up against an unstoppable onslaught of Werewolves, who lope unseen and unheard behind the enemy's lines, emerging from the mists and fogs to wreak havoc, and then, again unseen and unheard, slipping back into the darkness whence they came.

"But what do we stand for in this dark and terrible hour? In what, or in whom, do we believe? Surely, there can be no more important task for our leaders than to determine just what it is that we are fighting for. We must recognize the lamentable fact that we have no overarching philosophy with which to arm ourselves for the struggle, no acknowledged ideological minimum with which to orient ourselves upon the desperate seas which now we must sail. I look around this room, and see a veritable smorgasbord of world-views represented, a truly kaleidoscopic array of possibilities. But if I were to attempt to characterize our movement philosophically, I confess that I would find myself at a loss. We have very little in common, my friends, and it never seems to occur to any of us that that is precisely why the enemy has had such an easy time dividing and corrupting us. For what do we believe? I see Social Credit ideologues here; I see Christian Identity fanatics here; I see even a few Conservatives who have pumped up their literacy to the point at which even they can read the writing on the wall. I see Klansmen, Christian 'anti-semites,' crypto-Fascists, and neo-Nazis; there are Holocaust Revisionists and Revisionists of related persuasions, and if I were to peer around this hall for long enough, I'd probably be able to come up with a monarchist or two!

"But there is nothing binding here, no coherent unifying principle which might give shape and substance to our struggle, nothing upon which all of us agree, unless we consider our inchoate aversion to World Jewry to be a philosophy. Yet a perusal of world history will reveal to even the hairiest gorilla in the bleachers that a purely negative attitude can never bring fundamental and lasting change to the world.

"For, my friends, only the visionary can alter the shape of things to come; only the visionary can peer through the gray mists and past the hideous contours of this life-in-death with which we have been afflicted, to gaze upon the lineaments of the new dawn.

"Are we aware of any historical figure who might function as such a visionary and guide for our Aryan people? Is there anyone in our past who might serve as the central figure of a reborn Indo-European mythos? Is there anyone of whom we might say, Ecce Homo—behold the Man? Is there any figure in Western History who can be said to stand as a symbol of our very race itself? We all know that there is indeed such a figure, and I'm certain that all of us are fully aware of just who he might be. I would like to quote here some weighty words from the pen of America's greatest thinker, the late Dr. Revilo P. Oliver. In his America's Decline (1989, Londinium Press, London England), Oliver states:

> It is.....possible that if our race recovers its lost vigor and ascendancy, a future religion may recognize Adolf Hitler as a semi-divine figure. The potentiality of such a religion may be seen in the works of a highly intelligent and learned lady of Greek ancestry, Dr. Savitri Devi, especially her Pilgrimage (Calcutta, 1958). Dr. Eberhardt Gheyn in Los Neo-nazis en Sudamerica (Liverpool, West Virginia, 1978) reports that National Socialism, having attracted the devotion of many women, has become the New Evangel, preached in modern "catacombs" as is made necessary by Jewish terrorism, observing the birthday of Hitler with ceremonies that are distinctly pious, and computing dates in the New Era that began with his birth. The veneration of Hitler as a heros is not surprising, but worship, I think, would require the elaboration of a notion that he was an avatar of some superhuman being—a development that would require a century or more.

"And how precisely might such a mythos as we desiderate evolve? How might the sacred texts of this New Evangel appear? We might, as a matter of fact, turn to one of the works of the aforementioned Dr. Savitri Devi, to see what she has to say about our Leader's birth. The following is from her Pilgrimage.

> And far beyond the clear sky of the little town and the thin atmosphere of this little planet, in the cold, dark realm of fathomless Void, the unseen stars had very definite positions; significant positions, such as they take only once within hundreds of years to any particular spot on earth. And at the appointed time—6 o'clock in the afternoon—the Child came into the world, unnoticed masterpiece of a two-fold cosmic play of the mysterious influence of distant worlds in mysterious space. Apparently, just another baby in the family. In reality—after centuries—a new divine Child on this planet; the first one in the West, after the legendary Baldur-the-Fair, and, like Him, a Child of the Sun; a predestined Fighter against the forces of death and a Savior of men, marked out for leadership, for victory, for agony, and for immortality.

"Does not the authentic passion, vigor, and, yes, reverence in this magnificent poetic prose stir you to the very marrow? Have we not all felt, at one time or another, that Adolf Hitler's life makes absolutely no sense when regarded as the purely earthly career of just another German politician living and working at a particular period in European History? I would like to adduce, as an instance of the futility involved in a purely mundane interpretation of the life and career of Adolf Hitler, a somewhat lengthy excerpt from the little volume written by Hitler's boyhood chum August Kubizek. The book is entitled Adolf Hitler Mein Jugendfreund and this is the chapter which is headed (in the English-language version) "In that hour it began.....":

> It was the most impressive hour I ever lived through with my friend. So unforgettable is it, that even the most trivial things, the clothes Adolf wore that evening, the weather, are still present in my mind as though the experience were exempt from the passing of time.
> Adolf stood outside my house in his black overcoat, his dark hat pulled down over his face. It was a cold, unpleasant November evening. He waved to me impatiently. I was just cleaning myself up from the workshop and getting ready to go to the theatre. Rienzi was being given that night. We had never seen this Wagner opera and looked forward to it with great excitement. In order to secure the pillars in the Promenade we had to be early. Adolf whistled, to hurry me up.
> Now we were in the theatre, burning with enthusiasm, and living breathlessly through Rienzi's rise to be the Tribune of the people of Rome and his subsequent downfall. When at last it was over, it was past midnight. My friend, his hands thrust into his coat pockets, silent and withdrawn, strode through the street and out of the city. Usually, after an artistic experience that had moved him, he would start talking straightaway, sharply criticising the performance, but after Rienzi he remained quiet a long while. This surprised me, and I asked him what he thought of

it. He threw me a strange, almost hostile glance. "Shut up," he said brusquely.

The cold, damp mist lay oppressively over the narrow streets. Our solitary steps resounded on the pavement. Adolf took the road that led up to the Freinberg. Without speaking a word, he strode foreward. He looked almost sinister, and paler than ever. His turned-up coat collar increased this impression.

I wanted to ask him, "Where are you going?" But his pallid face looked so forbidding that I suppressed the question.

As if propelled by an invisible force, Adolf climbed up to the top of the Freinberg. And only now did I realize that we were no longer in solitude and darkness, for the stars shone brilliantly above us.

Adolf stood in front of me; and now he gripped both my hands and held them tight. He had never made such a gesture before. I felt from the grasp of his hands how deeply moved he was. His eyes were feverish with excitement. The words did not come smoothly from his mouth as they usually did, but rather erupted, hoarse and raucous. From his voice I could tell even more how much this experience had shaken him.

Gradually his speech loosened, and the words flowed more freely. Never before and never again have I heard Adolf Hitler speak as he did in that hour, as we stood there alone under the stars, as though we were the only creatures in the world.

I cannot repeat every word that my friend uttered. I was struck by something strange, which I had never noticed before, even when he had talked to me in moments of the greatest excitement. It was as if another being spoke out of his body, and moved him as much as it did me. It wasn't at all a case of a speaker merely being carried away by his own words. On the contrary; I rather felt as though he himself listened with astonishment and emotion to what burst forth from him with elementary force. I will not attempt to interpret this phenomenon, but it was a complete state of ecstasy and rapture, in which he transferred the character of Rienzi, without even mentioning him as a model or example, with visionary power to the plane of his own ambitions. But it was more than a cheap adaptation. Indeed, the impact of the opera was rather a sheer external impulse which compelled him to speak. Like flood waters breaking their dykes, his words burst forth from him. He conjured up, in grandiose, inspiring pictures, his own future and that of his people.

Hitherto I had been convinced that my friend wanted to become an artist, a painter, or perhaps an architect. Now this was no longer the case. Now he aspired to something higher, which I could not yet fully grasp. It rather surprised me, as I thought that the vocation of the artist was for him the highest, most desirable goal. But now he was talking of a mandate, which, one day, he would receive from the people, to lead them out of servitude to the heights of freedom.

It was an unknown youth who spoke to me in that strange hour. He spoke of a special mission which one day would be entrusted to him, and I, his only listener, could hardly understand what he meant. Many years had to pass before I realised the significance of this enraptured hour for my friend.

His words were followed by silence.

We descended into the town. The clock struck three. We parted in front of my house. Adolf shook hands with me, and I was astonished to see that he did not go in the direction of his house, but turned again towards the mountains.

"Where are you going now?" I asked him, surprised. He replied briefly, "I want to be alone."

In the following weeks and months he never again mentioned this hour on the Freinberg. At first it struck me as odd and I could find no explanation for his strange behaviour, for I could not believe that he had forgotten it altogether. Indeed he never did forget it, as I discovered thirty-three years later. But he kept silent about it because he wanted to keep that hour entirely to himself. That I could understand, and I respected his silence. After all, it was his hour, not mine. I had played only the modest role of a sympathetic friend.

In 1939, shortly before the war broke out, when I, for the first time, visited Bayreuth as the guest of the Reichs Chancellor, I thought I would please my host by reminding him of that nocturnal hour on the Freinberg, so I told Adolf what I remembered of it, assuming that the enormous multitude of the impressions and events which had filled these past decades would have pushed into the background the experience of a seventeen-year-old-youth. But after a few words, I sensed that he vividly recalled that hour and had retained all its details in his memory. He was visibly pleased that my account confirmed his own recollections. I was also present when Adolf Hitler retold this sequel to the performance of Rienzi in Linz to Frau Wagner, at whose home we were both guests. Thus my own memory was doubly confirmed. The words with which Hitler concluded his story to Frau Wagner are also unforgettable for me. He said solemnly, "In that hour it began."

"I think that I have made my point! And yet there are those among us—some, in fact, in this very room!—who, in their infantile and puling desire for an accomodation with the powers that be, would pour vitriol over the Leader's memory, denying Him His obvious place in the only Pantheon that matters. I would like, if I might, to quote Dr. Oliver once more:

> ...it is simple folly to attempt to oppose the Judaeo-Communist conquest and occupation of the world while futilely pretending to dissociate ourselves from the memory of the great champion of our race, Adolf Hitler (Liberty Bell; September 1989, p. 12).

"When the early Christians—like ourselves, existing as a penalized 'inner proletariat' in a hostile world indeed—went about their missionary labors through the length and breadth of the territories occupied by Rome, they might have quarrelled as ferociously about this or that abstruse question of dogmatic theology as we do about projected designs for a new Aryan State. But when they were threatened, when they were questioned by the powers that be, or when they found themselves menaced by violence, they turned a unified front to their enemies, and bowed their heads only before their one true Lord. Opposition to their creed did not entice them into compromise with that which they regarded as evil: no, and again no! They stood forth from the Roman World as witnesses to that which they regarded as the Truth. They did not say that their Christ wasn't really a god, but just a misguided extremist whose plans went completely awry due to faults in his character (although he may once have had a good idea or two).

They stood by their creed until their church mastered the Empire itself, and they then proceeded to dictate to the West the form and spirit which its religious life would take for two thousand years. As misguided as that whole episode might appear to us who have suffered from the resulting religious pseudomorphosis, which distorted and finally wasted our own native spiritual life, we must respect the early Christians' insistence upon remaining intransigent in the face of that which they regarded as falsehood, at all times, no matter what the cost.

"And so must we, my friends. We are yet a pitiful minority within this darkling world which still laughs at our splintered state and at our well-nigh incoherent faith. But was that not once true of the bedouins who roamed the deserts of Arabia during the early years of the great prophet Mohammed? And yet, before anyone could muster an effective opposition, those men had been converted into brave warriors who besieged the very frontiers of France itself! How simple was their faith! How strong was their faith! And what will our enemies do when we stand before them with a single faith, as a single unit: one fist for the Fuehrer, one blood for his Realm, one Destiny decreed by the God Who ponders us, waiting and watching for the moment in which we grab that banner from the Void—as He said we would—standing erect and glorious before the serried ranks of our doomed and soulless foes, as we chant:

No other Leader but Hitler!
No other Hero but Hitler!
No other God, and no other Saviour, per saecula saeculorum, but Hitler!

LET THE GAMES BEGIN!
LET THE GOD RETURN!"

There was a strange hush throughout the Hall, which may have lasted for three or four seconds; but there then ensued a volcanic roar of applause for the Chief's words. Some of the Geritol brigade sat stunned and oblivious in their seats, shaking their nervous little heads, but their words and their attitudes were no longer of any interest to anyone. They had lost control of their silly little social club, and everyone knew it. They had thought to take charge of something which was much greater than themselves, without the vision to foresee events or the weapons with which to change them; their hour had clearly passed. They might be invited to attend an audience or two in the Rose Garden with the doomed and degenerate tyrants, but they had clearly had their innings, and it was time for them to leave the field.

The Chief stood tall and proud at the podium, flashing his deep-blue eyes to the remote corners of the Hall, drinking in the wine of triumph. We knew that he would not be satisfied with mere words. Although he had first made his name as a theoretician of the National Socialist Weltanschauung (his doctoral dissertation dealt with the ideology of the Freikorps of old Germany), he was first and foremost a man of action, whose favorite line of poetry was Goethe's "In the Beginning was the Deed."

He went underground that very night, accompanied by his paladins, and, as Fate would have it, the apocalyptic Blood War began with the next dawn, with the first of a new series of assassinations, bombings, and assorted conflagrations thrown in for good measure.

And Hell then revealed its face unto us. And we looked with opened eyes upon that face of flame. And we knew that that face was terrible beyond all reckoning, and beautiful beyond all power of the tongue of man to express it. For we had exhausted the resources of peace, and the time of war was welcomed as a lover is welcomed. We would not have it any other way.....

THE WORLD AFTER WACO

"...greedily snuffing up and battening upon the reek of gore."
Montague Summers

I sing of demons in a room,
With tearing teeth so sharp,
Whose ululations woo the gloom
With music of undying Doom,
As devils smite the harp.

They gather up a victim's heft—
Precautions he ignored;
His mother wouldn't know what's left,
Or if, indeed, she was bereft,
So badly is he gored.

The demons halt, they hear a prayer,
Upon us falls their gaze;
Within the circle that we share,
Where teeth are clenched and eyes do stare,
The minutes last for days.

The mutilations now complete,
Black hooves scrape on the floor;
And everyone would gladly beat
A frenzied, quick, unglimpsed retreat
To gain the distant door.

But it is not to be—they've won.
No matter how we're vexed
By what, in fact, we have not done
In mansions sheltered from the Sun,
They want to know, WHO'S NEXT? ❑

Angry White Men

from the Prof

> All in all, it has been depressingly easy for the System to deceive and manipulate the American people—whether the relatively naive "conservatives" or the spoiled and pseudo-sophisticated "liberals".
> ... we are already slaves. We have allowed a diabolically clever, alien minority to put chains on our souls and our minds. These spiritual chains are a truer mark of slavery than the iron chains which are yet to come.
>
> Andrew Macdonald,
> The Turner Diaries

The cover story of the November 11th issue of USA Today tells us that white men want to "torch" Washington. "ANGRY WHITE MEN", reads the line atop the centerpiece, a composite angry-white cartoon face (rather bizarre, even by USA standards) collaging together a whistling-hot kettle, neck tie, and fly zipper. "Their votes", it is explained, "turn the tide for GOP". Beneath this searing political headline are cited concerns amongst voters with such things as over-taxation and reduced military spending.

Detailed in the writeup are the numbers of this dramatic shift toward the Republican party by white males (a 2-1 ratio in the House races, etc.) and their various expressions of disgust with an Arkansas presidential candidate who turned out, alas, to be ideologically "from Yale and Oxford". Among the complaints from this new right was that "the country is on the wrong track". An accompanying story reports the plans for tax cuts within the next hundred days.

And so is carried out another farce. The average white man who reads this story will think that the GOP Congressional route is a victory for "values" and for "America". He will suppose that this electoral triumph signals a new era putting the nation back on the right track. In the meantime, America's business will go on as usual. Third world immigration will continue, and schools will remain in a state of degeneracy. Media will continue their daily assault upon white racial integrity. So is hammered another nail into the coffin.

I do not mean to suggest that the changes envisioned in connection with this victory are irrelevant to the life of the average American. Certainly there appear to be some advantages for productive working-class citizens in the offing. I myself would welcome, for example, the proposed halving of the current maximum of 28% on the capital gains tax. But the rejoicing, in some quarters, over this latest development in mainstream politics is only one more tragic expression of a people mind-deadened.

The current theater of American politics is a canard. If white citizens wish to have a solution to their problems, they must first understand that the system itself has long ago been poisoned against them. They must see that it has no room in it for anyone who would speak frankly and effectively to their needs. What is thus needed is not another choice within the political spectrum, but a new conceptual scheme for those confronted with it.

The prevailing conception of American voters is that all of the sane choices that might be made with respect to government are contained within an array that extends from Democrat to Republican that these ruling forces of "left" and "right" are balanced against each other in such a way that the long-term result is a happy medium of ruling wisdom. But in truth, every day that passes under the current regime is another day closer to the destruction of our people. The fact is that this left and right swing of political rule is like unto the meandering of a ship that comes closer each day to ruin, pulled unfailingly ahead to its doom by the side-to-side tugs of those at its helm.

The current shift to the political right is not a solution. It is not, either, the explosion of righteous white / male anger that mainstream publications would have us believe. The assumption that any such explosion can occur within current political bounds is itself but one more symptom of our disease. This political "shift" is not an act of rebellion; it is not even a meaningful expression of outrage. Were the truth known, this latest grasping of the right wing is more like the pathetic gnawing of a cheaply fed veal-farm calf that chews the wooden fixture in its pen out of sheer mindless craving for what it cannot have.

I have several friends who think that this country has moved "too far to the left". They think that Clinton is a "liberal" who is somehow controlled by "special interests". They long for the days when they could (i.e., pre "assault" ban) buy ammunition for their designer rifles at a better price. Thus they long for another Republican establishment.

Clinton's position on guns makes him, I agree, a nuisance. Indeed (when one reflects on the long-term agenda implied therein) it makes him an enemy. But it does not make him appreciably different from those at the other end of the spectrum. A solid twelve preceding years of Republican administration may have granted us wider liberty with respect to firearms. But it also allowed illegal aliens to trot undisturbed day and night across our border to reside and procreate at our own expense thereafter. At no time did this administration (thoroughly hip, I am sure, to the situation) attempt to deal meaningfully with the problem. At no time did it use its time on the stage to hazard a serious report on the racial state of the union for our benefit. It did not provide us, when it had the chance, with the truth, for example, about the racial statistics of violent crime in this country. It did not tell us what the absorption of black and brown blood might do to the national gene pool. It did not vouchsafe to us the racial designs of that little pack of vermin now retaining a strangle-hold on the instruments of mass media. Instead it carried on business as usual, much in the manner of a fiercely anti-Semitic Champion of the Far Right who ascended to the office in the year 1968. And the Christian Democrat who followed him.

The System, as it presently exists, is a mortal enemy of the people. The recent ban on the manufacture of semi-automatic rifles and high-capacity magazines is not merely, as some imagine, a stylish restriction on right-wing entertainment. Still less is it an attempt to protect our folk from those bands of armed and deranged miscreants who now roam urban streets. One glance at crime statistics, and the style of weapon cited therein, is enough to show this. It is instead a preemptive measure to ward off the eventual challenge from enraged white citizens to political tyranny.

> Why didn't we rebel 35 years ago, when they took our schools away from us and began converting them into racially mixed jungles? Why didn't we throw them all out of the country 50 years ago, instead of letting them use us as cannon fodder in their war to subjugate Europe?
> More to the point, why didn't we rise up three years ago, when they started taking our guns away? Why didn't we rise up in righteous fury and drag these arrogant aliens into the streets and cut their throats then? Why didn't we roast them over bonfires on every street corner in America? Why didn't we make an end to this obnoxious and eternally pushy clan, this pestilence from the sewers of the East, instead of meekly allowing ourselves to be disarmed?
> The answer is easy. We would have rebelled if all that has been imposed on us in the last 50 years had been attempted at once. But because the chains that bind us were imposed were forged imperceptibly, link by link, we submitted.

A conservative wants to acquiesce in the destruction of his race; a liberal wishes to participate in it. Wherein is the meaningful difference? There is indeed white anger in this country. But it is, as of yet, an anger untapped and without direction. At present it is dissipated by the avenues of right wing politics: by a conservative GOP; gun lobbies; libertarianism; the John Birch society; the various sessions of whine and bellyache venting anger at

"media bias", "fags", "feminism", "lack of values", "big government", the injustice of Fire Department promotions, the nuances of "political correctness", and the like. American citizens supposedly treasure democracy. Yet every four years without fail they want "change". They want to "throw the bums" out of Congress. The American political game, they say, is the greatest system that the world has yet devised. But they are endlessly disgusted with the way that it is run. It is time to ask why. It is time to see likewise that none of the familiar complaints above is directed at a meaningful target. For each is merely the symptom of a disease that by now may well be terminal.

And again, perhaps a cure is possible. But if so, what is needed is not bandages, but radical surgery. To take one case in point: Conservatives will probably hail the recent passing of California's Proposition 187 (i.e., denying certain benefits to illegal aliens) as a victory. Yet it will not occur to them that the very need for such measures is itself a travesty. The split of this vote along racial lines should tell white voters the real situation. What we have in California, as elsewhere, is not political disagreement, but racial warfare. Mexican-Americans and their white liberal allies will say that they are casting their votes for a more "humane" California, a California that welcomes the poor and downtrodden (think, after all, of the message on that great statue in the New York harbor) and provides them with shelter. White conservatives will say in response that this agenda is too "liberal". It is not liberal, it is obscene. The system to which 187 is addressed is a system that burdens the white taxpayer to the point of collapse; a system that requires him to actually fund the breeding habits of aliens who will not stem their own rate of procreation; one that sends forth in increasing numbers armed and amoral delinquents onto the streets to prey upon those citizens whose industry has made California what it is in the first place, namely, a land in every respect superior to the one pensing unearned benefits to those who will not, in many cases, even learn the language necessary to make themselves a viable addition to the community.

The best verdict that can be passed on continuing Mexican immigration into California is that of Mexicans themselves, who now flee north from border states just as desperately as they have fled their homeland. Conservatives wish to seal the borders. Well and good as a start. But real victory will come when we open them, and flush out what is undesirable. If we wish to safeguard ourselves, our land, our culture, and our posterity, then we should take the same measures that we would take to defend our lives were the attack to come through our living room doors. Have we the nerve to admit to ourselves what this will require? The greatest weapon of the enemy is appeasement. As long as we are convinced that such things as a Republican victory in Congress is meaningful, we will not explore real solutions. So long as we can be entertained with Rush Limbaugh, with the weekly in-house banter of Buckley and Kinsley, Will and Donaldson, we will remain within bounds. Like cattle. We will also remain doomed. The passing of 187 may well be good news, but only if it is seen rightly as a step toward the real solution. Yet that solution is, I fear, unthinkable at present in most conservative quarters.

The Virtue of "Tolerance"

from the Prof

Last summer, on a visit home to old haunts, and with the car in for minor repairs, I chanced to take a bus ride across the river to the heart of the neighboring downtown. Along the route I sat remembering such rides with my mother when I was perhaps five, when climbing up with excitement and dropping coins down that curious tumbling contraption by the driver. It was another time.

The ride was smoother now. And faster. In those days it had been a road, and now it was an interstate freeway. We came into the city. On the sidewalks were somber faces, some of them downtrodden, some no doubt certifiably insane. How different it all seemed.

Some of it, of course, was me. There were, after all, hard times in the old days, as well, and there had always been a certain grittiness in the downtown. There had always, too, been bums on this street. But I didn't recall so many young ones. And not as crazily aggressive. As we approached the heart of downtown I listened to two women at the tail end of their talk trading words with rising intensity. The conversation was a blabby one that had gone on for several miles. It had dripped with insights about their lives and relationships, about "Chris" and his "sexism", and their strategies for achieving a more fulfilled and assertive existence. It was essentially the conversation that has now filled parks, cafes, and campuses in America for a long time.

On the seat opposite me was the folded remnant of a morning paper. I picked it up and glanced idly at the advice column of one of those twin Jewesses who have dispensed wisdom in such vehicles for the past several decades. On this occasion some woman was describing the daily hell that her live-in mother was inflicting upon her and all her family. The victim read off with sorrow a litany of pain that this old wretch had caused in the past three years. But she recalled, again, the scriptural commandment to "honor they father and mother" and said that the guilt hence was "killing" her. She needed advice.

The advice was to communicate with mother and not let her ruin all of the lives involved. (Indeed. Given syndication, a hefty day's wages, I am sure.) I turned an ear once more to the two in back chewing over their female angst. The younger one—she was a pleasant blonde of perhaps 25—was annoyed with one of her meddling neighbors. The older, creased with years and somewhat butch—a jaded veteran, it appeared, of the psycho-fest 60's and 70's—listened and nodded, and offered back to her pretty companion a diagnosis based upon what-she-thought-she-was-hearing.

Why, she asked, be judgmental? The blonde admitted that perhaps her annoyance at the offending behavior was a sign of "intolerance". I shook my head and jotted down the word on a spare cash-teller receipt for memory's sake.

Tolerance. There are few words that so well capture the moral tone of our age. It is taken to be a virtue. The lack of this psychic commodity is a vice and an accusation. One hears a "plea" for it among social activists. As a quality of character, tolerance goes hand in hand with such related qualities as charity, openness and the acceptance of diversity. It is the crowning glory of an integrationist, the cardinal excellence that unites a liberal personality in its quest for a brighter social tomorrow.

This prizing of tolerance, wholesale and unqualified, is a legacy of the 60's. As such, it also fits well with the going mass agenda of race-destruction. It is also a manifestation of the tendency in recent decades to put all persons and all actions on a par; to suppose that values are, in the end, subjective, that one must at all costs refrain from "Judgment", that no way of life is actually superior to another. As such it is an exercise in degeneracy.

The demand for tolerance—for putting up with the strange, the odd, the intrusive, and even the offensive, without registering complaint—is but one more instance of the pervasive leveling that has gripped this society in my own lifetime: the insistence that there is no real difference, but for surface anatomy, between the sexes; that the races, beneath the skin, are likewise identical; that the preference for one art, one music, one literature, over another is at bottom a matter of mere personal taste; that the raucous interruption of a speaker in a public forum is but a contrary and equally legitimate exercise of a common "free speech"; that "cultures" are somehow equal; that this thing called humanity is a homogeneous stuff that is acted upon and pressed into its various shapes by the forces of its environment; that deviance of every kind is merely a behavioral "alternative", that to take action against terrorism is to "become what we hate"—the list goes on into the horizon.

Of course, the thesis of this across-the-board equalization is absurd. If cultures, for example, are deemed equal then presumably they are being measured with respect to something. How so? What is this thing that is present everywhere, to be objectively recorded, and that is magically the same across all varieties of space and time? The thesis, in fact, is not even consistent. For if all behavior is on a par, then intolerance itself is no more objectionable than is anything else.

But again, this ideology, as it turns out, is not itself lacking for judgments of value. It has passions of its own. It actively promotes, as a presumable good, whatever action or policy may tend toward the destruction of a hated Western tradition and the race that has dominated it. It applauds whatever insult or injury may figure into this process—as, for example, when a black person is given an advantage of some arbitrary kind over his or her white counterpart. In this respect it is hardly value-neutral.

For many years this leveling tendency was thought to exist principally as an external threat. It was a standard view in the cold war years, for example, that a foreign communist menace might overrun the west by sheer force if it were able. And the threat indeed was genuine. For the same raceo-political aliens who butchered their way to rule in Russia (and in time, in the Baltic nations and the nations of Eastern Europe) would surely have done the same here if circumstance had allowed.

The foreign threat, in large part, has evaporated. This was inevitable, in time, given its internal fallacy. But the problem is not gone. It is, in fact, eternal. This tendency to level, to obliterate genuine and important differences, is a constant potential of the human soul. It is an instance of an unfortunate yet ever-present capacity for moral dishonesty.[1] It is, at bottom, the denial of both freedom and its attendant responsibility.[2]

This denial arises not out of fertile imagination, or honest rebellion against a bad system, but out of envy, out of cowardice, out of the basic refusal to apply oneself with diligence to the inherently competitive task of life: If You have more than I, then the state should do something to "balance" this injustice; if you have accomplished more, it is because "circumstances" have decreed it. If you seem abler of mind, it owes to the fact that I labor with some incidental quirk of cognitive "disability", and not because you are truly more intelligent.

Contrary to its claim, this ideology of all-things-equal is not open in any favorable sense of the word. As C. S. Lewis[2] once pointed out, open-mindedness with respect to particular hypotheses is a virtue; open-mindedness with respect to basic guiding principle (whether in reason or in value) is rational suicide. To cite again a case in point: Tolerance. It is, in and by itself, neither a good nor an evil. Tolerance of some things (say, for example, a personal hardship for the sake of some worthy cause) is a good thing. Tolerance of an offense is not. (It is, in fact, either cowardly, or masochistic, or both.)

Which kind of tolerance is expected of white citizens, with respect to current racial policy? In theory, of course, it is something quite innocuous, namely, the willingness to extend respect to persons of diverse appearance. But one look at hard facts (i.e., outside the sealed devices of mass media) tells us something else. In theory, we are asked to accept a plurality of human color in our social midst. In practice, we are made to put up with the obnoxious behavior of third world miscreants in our stores, schools, theaters and shopping malls; if possible, in fact, we are to ignore it altogether. (Or again, we may perhaps voice an objection, within civil limits, but when this effort is crushed with contempt we must accept the outcome in any case. For our restraint, after all, is what holds "society" together.) We are to maintain a race-neutral stance in hiring with blind optimism no matter what the voice of experience may tell us. We must support efforts to import armed gang-members from across town and into our schools even knowing that our children will be terrorized in the process. To this end the average white man bears his discomfort.

1. In saying this I do not mean to say that an effort to broaden the base of wealth must be wrong-minded. An inheritance-based capitalistic system can be as much an outrage as can a state-controlled communistic one, and this is a problem with which racialists, in time, will have to come to grips. But the tendency I address in this brief commentary, I am convinced, is a categorical evil.

2. Lewis' best statement of this thesis is found in his classic The Abolition of Man (Macmillan, 1947). While Lewis is a bit out of fashion in contemporary circles, the book is probably one of the best of the 20th century. And though Lewis himself had some rather conservative religious leanings, one needn't share them in order to profit from his discussion.

He is not altogether unmindful of the offense. He sees it, in fact, everywhere he looks. He walks the street and it confronts him. A pack of congoid imbeciles struts toward him on the street with menace in their faces. He edges a little to the side. One brushes him with a slight grunt in an assertion of what blacks now call their "manhood". For all his liberal training he feels this insult. It sinks to his marrow. In response he goes home and thinks about the situation. Perhaps he confides his feelings to his spouse, who may (I presently know of such cases) respond by calling him a racist. He then does what white men are urged to do by the aliens who program them: He scours himself with introspection. Perhaps the discomfort is his fault. Why, after all, does he harbor resentment toward the variant mores of this perfectly legitimate subculture? And what is the alternative? Violence? With no objective basis, he supposes, for his resentment, he absorbs his fate and hopes for better next time.

All of this is idiocy. Our culture, our safety, our very lives are jeopardized by mongrel thugs who take joy in the fact. Out of reverence for the lives of these half-trained primates and their alien mentors we are asked to remain obediently within the framework of the system that they have turned against us. Wherein lies the admirability of this obedience? And what say we of this absolute rejection of violence? It is time to ask hard questions.

A strange thing has happened on the way to our demise. Our culture has been saturated with the sight and sound of mayhem, to the point where we can accept it as a constant accompaniment to our daily experience. Yet it horrifies us in principle. So much so, to take one case in point, that a white man may wonder if he would want to be armed in the event that roaming savages should one night break down his living room door. He cannot believe that our own violence (except when part of a grand design decreed by overseers in the nation's capital) is an option.

Just what is wrong with violence? In asking this question I am not asking what is wrong with wanton murder or random terrorism. These things do seem wrong to me and I have no wish to defend or advocate them to the readers of this journal. What I want to know is, why is violence necessarily wrong? Is it that violence accomplishes its goal abruptly, in sudden fashion, and not as gradually as might some other strategy? If so, perhaps we should forbid the use of explosives to accomplish our ends, as for example, in the work of construction and mining. To this it will be said, I suppose, that the use of such force for building or for excavation is beside the point. For these activities do not have personal injury as their end. But if this is the objection, then tolerance must surely be an evil. For its end—foreseen and causally certain—will be the injury, and the destruction, of a great many persons. And indeed these victims, on the whole, will be those about whom we care most. Can any man worth the name live with this as a consequence of his behavior?[3]

3. There are, of course, other possible objections to my line of reasoning that could be voiced by those in the mainstream. One is that there exists some very important difference, in principle, between committing an act of violence and merely allowing one to occur. The pain caused to our children by our acquiescence in raceo-political atrocity is perhaps only a "foreseen but unintended" consequence of our policy; and so better, the conven-

We must secure the existence of our people and a future for white children.[4] Our real choice is not between injury and non-injury, nor between one scenario that shall have violence and another that shall lack it. It is instead the choice of who shall suffer the injury and what specific form the violence shall take. The perfect rejection of violence is a paradox. Those white citizens who pride themselves upon non-violence should in fact be prepared to take credit for a major share of the violence that is to come. For out of their passivity will come atrocity on a scale hitherto not imagined and with the innocent as its primary victims. Categorical non-violence is thus a participation in atrocity. With this in mind I console myself with one thought—that whichever way my race may turn, it will in the end get what it deserves.

tionalists may say, to mind one's manners and allow Providence to decide who shall be the victims. I have little to say to this particular objection except that I find it strangely arbitrary and typical of mainstream mental helplessness.

by D. Baou (307 pp., hb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. GREY CELLS DON'T SELL

by

Robert Frens

Several peepholes have claimed that I misquoted Omar the Tent-Mover in regard to that "soul through the invisible" whatever which appeared in my cantankerous "Aryan Dip Squats" of September last. Liberty Bell printed one of them under some "Bagatelle" handle written by someone who might be using a "nymph de plum". (I wondered if this, they, or it, was/were related to a Leona Bagatella I knew as a young man. She had a beautiful singing voice and an exceptional pair of lungs. Oh yes.) The fact I labeled that passage with the name of Kahlil Gibran really shows that I might have misquoted Kahlil and not Omar. I simply did not quote Omar so how could I misquote someone I didn't quote in the first place? I think the reader was wearing a yarmulke at the time as this apparently allows one to see things that aren't there. Anyway, the confusion arose because the quote bore a resemblance to something which appeared in print as a result of some translator who might have fudged things up anyway. Translators never agree and frequently accuse each other of misquoting things which might be misquotes in the first place, or some other place.

I never mentioned Omar or even his Ruby Yacht which is not to be confused with Jack Ruby's Yacht. In fact, I cannot be sure that Kahlil NEVER uttered those words at some time in his life. He may have. In that case my quote would be a bull's eye.

Samuel Krotchna once said, "Give me liberty or I give you death!" Did I misquote Patrick Henry? Of course not and the simple explanation is that I never even mentioned Patrick at all. All the bagelette managed to show was that the set of alphabet scribbles in my article wasn't congruent to another set of alphabet scribbles which could be found in some senile book. Hell's bells. The quote in question wasn't a replica of anything Adolf Hitler wrote (I was told) so I might also stand guilty of misquoting him also. Then again, who is to say, that the young Adolf might just have said those exact words to a comrade over a stein of stout?

If old man Pontillo SAID "Jimmy is full of shit", and WROTE "Irving is full of shit", would I be misquoting the senior Pontillo if I used "Jimmy" instead of "Irving"? Certainly I would not be misquoting Benjamin Householder. At least, I don't think so—but then again... To quote or not to quote. That is the query.

Opinions are not facts. If one truly wishes to use the term "misquote" from a position of leverage, then I would suppose that he would be in possession of ALL the words, written and spoken, for whomever the misquote tolls. How does one know that the "reference" he uses for such attacks is sound in the first place? He doesn't. Such is the nonsense we call faith and "scholars" must be true believers in regard to those acres of doodles which are not part of the real world. Men forever confuse the abstract for real, live, porcupines and meatballs.

I do make mistakes. In fact, yesterday, while using a public urinal, I made an error in direction and wet some other fellow's shoes. One time, while deep in the energies of a physical union, I mentioned the name "Barbara" to the object of my attention, Norma. That is a mistake which had far more serious repercussions than whether or not I correctly remembered what an effeminate Nurd Hotfeld said in some ancient movie. While in the Army, I happened to be taking a shower with another soldier who was also bare-assed. I didn't know he was an officer and I apologized for the comments I made and then finished by saying that rank apparently was only a matter of a uniform since we couldn't tell a private from a general in the shower. He failed to appreciate my reasoning and neither did that soldier holding an M-1 carbine.

What really saddens me about the blight-wing, and revisionists in particular, is the amount of energy they consume in worrying about the form of something rather than its content. It is similar to the lawyer's insistence upon the "letter" of the law and not its intent. The country is dying and I do not think we should be concerned with items of etiquette. ("Feces", or "excrement", belongs to a day gone bye, bye. "Shit" belongs to today. If you fail to understand that simple thing, then it's no wonder you are ineffective and end up as a door mat. The fact that you hold your toilet paper with chopsticks is irrelevant.)

A recipe for a cheap explosive is not rendered invaluable because the punctuation is incorrect or the grammar shoddy. Whether the information is nicely printed on expensive paper or merely scribbled on used latrine mats with a piece of charcoal doesn't make much difference to anyone with their eye upon the Niagara Power Plant. That's always been the problem with academics. They gas about the format, and not the message, and try to turn everything into a sort of fly-shit counting exercise.

They learn for the sake of learning. Knowledge is only a tool—something to be used. Otherwise, it is worthless.

At the bottom of this nonsense is the belief that "knowing" is somehow related to "doing". INSTAURATION (from the rust, thy shalt make steel!), a blight-wing publication, is an example of word after word after word of nothing other than demonstrating who might possibly have the greater vocabulary or who can illustrate some eccentric pondering along obtuse theoretical lines.

There is a vast difference between being an intellectual and being intelligent. Intelligent people can solve problems. Intellectuals merely talk, read, and write, about what they think, what others think, and what they think others think about thinking. I have never met an intellectual who can solve anything. In fact, most of them have a hard time feeding themselves or zipping up their fly without getting the family jewels caught in the metal teeth.

Intelligence is partially the ability to perceive differences and relations. John Klinkroth, a person well versed in literature, was unable to perceive that the niggers who approached him could never be impressed by anything academic. After relieving him of his valuables, they stabbed him and John died in a pool of his own blood. The niggers had a better perception of the real world than did the high IQ Klinkroth. In my view, the niggers were certainly more intelligent since they were able to solve their cash flow problem. John couldn't solve his immediate problem of staying alive.

Often, we like to attribute intelligence to a person who has read every book in the library, can spout off yards of correct quotes, and use obscure words for the purpose of obscuration. (In the hot-rod field, we say "If it won't go, chrome it." In the literary field it's "If you have nothing to say, then use giant words.") If memory is intelligence, then we should label every tape recorder "intelligent" as well as each compact disk ROM.

I must confess that I do not read novels. I am not interested in any person's imagined stories no matter how correct the protocol. When it comes to fiction, I can dream up stories far more wild than any which people tell me have appeared in print. When you become "scholarly", that is, well read, you admit to the world that you are devoting yourself to not living. Study, study, and more study, has never solved one damned thing. Learning twenty-nine useless facts in twelve languages is meaningless unless you are in the "can you top this?" business. It is a matter of value and not of labels.

Gil Warner had a hard time getting English grammar correct, but his powerful fists were of more value in the streets we knew as kids than any library card. Don Carney, the village genius, who also knew a good deal of French plus German, was a liability and usually had the crap stomped out of him during our several "turf" wars. Niggers are, of course, surviving better than our honky dips who waste their time blathering about the "great white race' and "look what they are doing to us now."

One truly learns by doing and not from being an academic parrot although parroting is the path to good school grades and the Dean's list. Every time we saw automotive engineers show up at our drag strip, we knew that they'd be easy to beat. They had school larnin' but no real mechanical savvy.

When one depends upon another's writings, he admits that he has no thoughts of his own worth exercising. The spineless and the frustrated, if they have a functioning brain, usually bury themselves in "intellectual" pursuits in order to cover their failure at living. Many also pile up heaps of material junk somehow believing that possessions are life. Hitler knew only one language but was a very intelligent man. He was no intellectual. A real genius never is. Edison was no intellectual and neither was Patton but they were both quite intelligent and able to solve immediate problems. No college professor ever saved a people. The skill of reading and writing in ten different languages never made anyone grow potatoes better, or shoot a rifle with more accuracy. We are in a war for survival and have no more time for intellectual discussions, revisionist distractions, or bull-shit about the Nordic psyche. I don't care how many books there are in your personal library. I want to know about your ability to kick ass.

The brain has been responsible for nearly all of man's failures. The brain collects notions. Some of them are copied from others while other notions are internally manufactured. These notions are believed to be facts (truth) and the holder of these opinions acts as if he were in possession of heavenly powers. None of us know many facts. All of us have a myriad of opinions which we believe to be facts. Once properly paralyzed by a foolish notion of importance, we then judge the world according to our own delusions. People are intelligent, or stupid, according to the degree they agree with us. Every ugly child has a mother who views it as beautiful. We are all saddled with value judgments which are cloaked as factual statements while not being statements of fact. If we spot another's flub, then we pat ourselves on the back for being "superior" little realizing that flubs are only in the eye of the beflubber. (How many LB readers spotted Dr. Oliver's recent flub where he erred in calling a pentagram, a hexagram? If so, then why wasn't this pointed out by some nit-picker?)

We believe things to be true which is different from knowing things to be true. I do not know that there exists anything such as Africa. Other people say there is but that does not make it a fact. The reason I believe in the existence of Africa is because I have faith that I could verify it if I chose to. I do not know, for a fact, that a dive into the Niagara Gorge would kill ME. I believe that it might just do that since I have faith in the statistics surrounding those who have. Of course, I am on safer ground if I fully accept this opinion of mine as a fact. A reasonable course of action is little other than taking the one with the higher expectation of success. An expectation is only a variety of some opinion or the other.

Everyone spends far too much time reading thus reinforcing their opinion that they know something or have learned something. When one becomes a scholar, he has read almost everything about little of nothing. He then thinks he is an expert and the world bows to the intimidation of his academic seniority. Once you achieve the status of expert relative to one dung heap, you then are perceived to be an expert on all dung heaps. A former prof of mine, Nobel Prize winner Harold Urey, was an expert on the topic of tritium and deuterium. He was extremely ignorant of the things which every common school boy knew—how to fix automotive engines. In a battle for survival, Dr. Urey would be wiped out in the first assault while the "alley kids", those children of the working class, would live to fight another day.

Specialization works against survival. Even though an elephant's trunk is "special", the elephant is not successful because of it. He is successful because of his "all" elephant nature.

What has always been in short supply are intelligent people who know much about a lot of things and can operate on an elevated level in many diverse areas. This is called general intelligence and it is the only type worth having. I can appreciate the genius of a concert level musician and an expert in theoretical chemistry as well as a master poet. However, these people are useless in the battle we are currently supposed to be fighting. Only affluent societies, with defensible borders, can afford such luxuries. The narrow talented scholars are as a desert. It is time for some real meat and to hell with the meringue.

Reading books about fishing never put anything on the table if you refuse to cut bait and fish! Knowing everything about bicycles is not the same as building one. Building a bicycle is not the same as being able to pedal one. Knowledge is only a tool. Unused knowledge is as useless as an axe which never knew a tree, and as useful as the testicles on a Monk.

How many of the intellectuals out there, real or imagined, who read LIBERTY BELL are aware of the ease with which someone can audit the messages left on their telephone answering devices? Most devices used for this convenience are accessible remotely by the use of a "code". This is their weak link. I am not going to reveal much in the way of technical information here because it might be a violation of some law. I will therefore be purposely vague.

When your phone in on-hook (not being used) a xxxx Hertz (frequency) audio sine wave is constantly impressed on the circuit by a generator in the central office. When you lift up the phone (off-hook) the signal stops. That is why you are not aware of it. If you use a Colpitts oscillator, or something similar, and inject this signal into the phone line, the central office machinery accepts this as a hang-up. With your telephone appearing to be not in use, you are then free to use other controlling signals to do whatever it is you want to illegally do. One of them might be to "kill" the 20 Hz. bell signal which announces that a call is being made. This means that I could dial your home, kill the bell, and wait for your recorder to answer, without anyone being aware of it (except the central office computers who are "watching" the whole show). Once the out-going message is heard, the pressing of the "code" keys will then access your messages. One could then listen to whatever messages there were, erase them, and reset your machine, all without you ever being the wiser. Your access code is determined by a systemic trial and error which, of course, takes place without you ever hearing the bell. If you want to be a real cowboy, then a computer and modem will simplify the task of number searching. I would like to point out that you never really hear the other person's bell ringing. What you hear is the audio voltage that is being impressed on the line. No one, without using inductance measuring equipment, can ever tell if your bell is connected or not and, even then, not determine if the physical parts were functioning.

I have mentioned the foregoing to illustrate a point. This is practical information which can be used and understood without ever reading Chaucer or the Ten Commandments in Greek. We must strive to be as practical as our enemies who certainly do not spend their time contemplating the nature of any imagined hidden meaning in some dusty tract or blathering about ideals and ethnic imperatives.

Who gives a screw about Coon's view of the coon? What difference does it make whether some Nazi shot six jews five decades ago? Or whether my Great Grandmother was unfaithful to my Great Grandfather? Or whether someone who knew how to pick locks, with his dick, died last year? No wonder they call it the blight-wing. You cannot get on the right track until you get off the wrong track. Fifty years of quasi-intellectual gas romping is enough. If the failure of the past half-century hasn't bothered you, then I suggest that you read this article over, and make appropriate notes, for I am sure you'll find a bit of punctuation, a hank of grammar, or a boodle of misspelling, which will convince you that I am no fastidious intellectual. I never said that I was, so what would be your vain point?

Castrate all my stinking foes,
Grab his balls, don't let go,
Bye Bye Blight-wing.

When an expert axes me,
I'll get laid, leave me be,
Bye Bye Blight-wing.

Intelligent goofs can hate and brand me,
What academic crap they all hand me.
I'll kick some ass, bash a queer,
I'll arrive, full of beer,
Bye Bye Blight-wing.

AN OPEN LETTER to the Hypocrites, Liars and Cowards of the American Newsmedia

Dear member of the American media:
Dear fellow writers:

Fully realizing that some of you may not like to be called names such as those you see in above headline, I wou like to hasten to state that I do not mean everybody in the American journalistic profession. There are exceptions, and I can think of at least ten nationally known writers and columnists (some of whom I have had the honor of meeting) who are excluded—ten among tens of thousands...

Whom do I call a coward? Every single editor, writer and columnist who never once in the 45 years that I have spent in the United States has dared to correct the obvious incongruities of the Holocaust tale, a device designed to keep the German people in perpetual bondage to those whom I call the "forever persecuted ones". Now, I do not mean that you should write critical commentaries, articles and editorials about things of which you know nothing (many of you were born after World War II). But as recently as last August the American Legion Magazine printed an article titled "Witnesses to the Holocaust" by the Milks, a Jewish mother-and-son writer team, so full of obvious incongruities that somebody—anybody—in your profession should, in the interest of historical truth, have taken the magazine to task for pnnting such gibberish. Well, I am stili waiting.

More than a quarter century after this particular lie was laid to rest, Leslie and Jeremy Milk dared to repeat the "soap made from Jewish cadavers" story, and millions of Americans have no choice but to believe this nonsense. After all, it was printed in the allegedly prestigious American Legion Magazine. (Also in August, the San Francisco Examiner printed, without a correcting comment, an item about a piece of soap made from Jewish fat by "the Nazis" that was to be given by the University of Santa Clara to the Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C.) Old lies die hard.

Perhaps the worst example of an obvious Holocaust incongruity occurred on 6 November 1988. On that day the New York Post printed an article about a Jewess named Clara Feldman who goes around (mostly) black schools in New York City telling the poor and naive children there that the Germans murdered one million Blacks during World War II. In the weeks following, not one American newspaper or journalist chastized Mrs. Feldman, and pointed out that, except for a few captured American or French Negroes, no Blacks were in the German realm. That nobody in this huge country corrected this insulting nonsense can only be ascribed to cowardice (those that allegedly do not control the American media would come down hard on somebody who questions their outrageous claims).

How many of you are liars? Almost all. No day passes when I do not find an outright lie about Germany or Germany's conduct in World War II in the American press. Most of you are so imbued wiith American righteousness that it makes one sick to read your justifications for even the most outrageous U.S. behavior, and your neverending accusations against others (not only the Germans).

Few of you seem to have the abilitity to see both sides of a story. According to most of you, anything Germany did was wrong, anything the U.S. did or does is beyond reproach.

You lie when it helps to cover American war crimes, as for instance in the matter of the death toll of the February 1945 air raids on the undefended city Dresden. While the true number of victims can never be established, one can say with certainty that several hundred thousand people (mostly women and children) were murdered. What number of victims do you mention mostly? 35,000, the Lügenziffer of 1945.

Similarly it is with the number of German POW's that perished while in American hands at the war's end. James Bacque, the Canadian writer, wrote in his book Other Loses that up to a million German soldiers died as a result of the inhumane treatment meted out by Eisenhower's minions. While I personally think this figure is too high (I, myself can be counted as one of the Other Losses since I escaped from American captivity), there is no excuse for the American Armed Forces not to be in possession of lists providing the truth, or for the American media not to be concerned about it. The (materially) poor Russians still have their German POW lists in Moscow. Could it be that the American records were purposely destroyed because the truth in them became inconvenient (just as the Vietnamese still have nearly 500,000 soldiers of theirs missing and unaccounted for because the U.S. Defense Department somehow "lost" the graves' lists?).

When it comes to Auschwitz, some of you still mention the idiotic (for technical reasons simply impossible) death toll of 4 million. Eventually, we will find out what really happened at Auschwitz but it will not be due to the efforts of the professionals (and liars) of the American media. Why is it that hardly anyone of you dares to point to the obvious incongruity, namely, that the Oberjuden still cling to the "Six million Jews killed by the Nazis"-figure even though they have lowered the Auschwilz toll by three million? This fact alone should have opened a Pandora's box of new questions for able and inquisitive writers. All I hear is silence...

This Open Letter really concerns your hypocrisy. For decades I have read your articles and columns, and it never ceases to amaze me how you can create at a moment's notice a hitherto non-existent "Public outrage". How I remember your crocodile tears for Salman Rushdie. Or your faked concerns for Anatol Sharansky and Andrei Sakharov. Currently it is the Chinese dissidents whoo seem to touch your emotions most. (NYT 29 Aug. 1994: "Abuses of Rights Persist in China despite U.S.pleas"). Nevermind that a number of them were obvious agents for "democracy" (whatever that means).

Recently, your hypocrisy came to the fore when the Deckert case made news not only in Germany but world-wide. You cannot say you have never heard of Günter Deckert and his trials, for I know for certain that not only the major news services and TV networks but also the papers with their own foreign correspondents reported on it. To the best of my knowledge not one American newspaper or magazine chastized the Bonn Government, the government of the (allegedly) "freest state that ever existed on German soil" for punishing a man, a highly respected teacher and school administrator, for exercising his (even in Germany) constitutionally guaranteed right to free expression.

What is it that makes you care more for Chinese, Burmese, Rwandan etc. dissidents than for the thousands of men and women currently being persecuted in Germany for their political beliefs? Is it because the Germans' ideology does not coincide with U.S. internationalistic "One World" plans?

In case you dont know, the first and foremost fighter for freedom of speech in America was Johann Peter Zenger (1697-175) of New York, a German immigrant. And the Declaration of Independence was first printed in Philadelphia in the German language. These items and the fact that Germany is still the heartland of what we call Western Civilization (Die Kultur des Abendlandes) should give you cause for more, and not less concern for what transpires in your* Germany. YOU OWE US!

*According to us, Germany is still not free and sovereign. No matter what one calls them, American troops on German soil are still occupation soldiers. The "special relationship" between Germany and the United States of which President Clinton spoke, means nothing else but that the Germans are now the number one boot-blacks of the American conquerors. Germany will only be free when the last American soldier and the last American secret agent leave Reich soil.

Following, we are bringing you lists of Germans whom one can correctly call dissidents, or, if they are incarcerated, political prisoners, and about whose fate you, American journalists (hopefully) imbued with American ideals of freedom, should be truly concerned. Reading these lists and the "transgressions" of which these Germans have been accused, should raise the dander of each and everone of you. If it doesn't, it can only mean that you have been thoroughly brainwashed. As an explanation of my personal stance, I can assure you that in 1942, as a fifteen year-old leader in the Hitler-Youth, I defended the right of an old Communist to remain what he was, and of foreign "slave workers" conscripted for the war effort, to speak their mind.

What follows is a listing of some of the Germans and others who have been persecuted by the authorities of the U.S.-vassal Bonn regime for offenses that in the United States are protected by the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. No attempt has been made to put the names in alphabetical order or to give some of the persecuted precedence over others according to their importance, although some internationally known cases will appear first. It must be noted that in 1993, 23,318 indictments against so-called "rightwing radicals" were issued, 1,343 for causing bodily harm (many of which are spurious accusations). (DIE WELT, 13 July 1994.) That means nearly 22,000 Germans were accused of political activities that, according to our American sense of justice, were not of a criminal nature. None of the persons mentioned below has physically hurt anyone:

Former German Wehrmacht (not Waffen-SS, as is frequently alleged) General Otto-Ernst Remer. Sentenced to 22 months in prison for questioning WWII accusations against the Germans in his publication, Remer-Depesche. As a result, the sickly 82-year old sought political asylum in Spain, where he is currently living.

Ernst Zündel, b.1939, a German-Canadian publisher, was sentenced by a Munich court to pay a fine of DM 31,500 for telling an audience in Germany of his experiences and travails at his trials in Canada, where he was acquitted for allegedly disseminating untruths, namely, proof that the "Holocaust" could not have occurred as the Holocaust Lobby tries to make us believe.

Germar Rudolf, a young German chemist, formerly with the prestigious Max-Planck-Institute, came to doubt the "gas chamber" claims, and on his own went to Auschwitz to take samples of the insides of the alleged gas chambers (forensic evidence "forgotten" at the Nuremberg trials), and also of known fumigation chambers for clothes. The results of his research was devastating for the missionaries of the new Holocaust religion. Therefore, the "heretic" Rudolf was made to pay the price. He lost his job, his chance to complete his doctorate, and is now under indictment for defaming the allegedly millions of dead Jews that really never died.

Erhard Kemper, a German agricultural expert, and freelance journalist, attacks the lies upon which the West German state is founded, one of which is the Holocaust claim. He is currently in jail (for an as yet indeterminate time) for his numerous transgressions. While incarcerated, the not-too-young Mr. Kemper developed an ailment that required immediate medical attention. Not getting it, Kemper had no choice but to use the first opportunity to remove himself from the prison, and see his own doctor, who promptly arranged for an operation. Only after he had recuperated sufficiently did Kemper report back to jail, where since then he has been held under worse conditions than before.

Thies Christophersen is also an agricultural expert and a publisher. During WW II he was stationed near the Auschwitz concentration camp, and employed concentration camp inmates on his research farm. Decades ago he wrote a book claiming that, had gas chambers existed at Auschwitz, he would have known about them. For this he is under indictment (if in Germany you question the Jewish claims, you automatically defame their "Six Million" dead). Before trial, he fled to political exile in Denmark, where he is still living today. Christophersen is willing to stand trial in Germany if the system there allows him to select and present expert witnesses of his choosing. So far German courts have not had the courage to allow such witnesses.

Dr. Wilhelm Stäglich was an anti-aircraft officer stationed at Auschwitz. He wrote a book (Der Auschwitz Mythos) denying that mass murder on the claimed scale could have taken place there, or that homicidal gas chambers were used. A former judge, he was nevertheless persecuted for his beliefs and, using a law signed by Hitler, "they" eventually took away his doctorate because he was telling the truth as he saw it. His book was prohibited, all unsold copies were burned and even the printing plates were destroyed by order of the court.

Helmut Grimm, a German intellectual holding doctorates in both medicine and jurisprudence, wrote letters about the Holocaust, the (planned) inundation of Germany with foreigners, and other ailments of present-day German society to high officials and the judiciary. Recently, while he was absent, a large team of government goons searched his home without a search warrant, and confiscated nearly everything movable. He is now in political asylum in Denmark.

Udo Walendy, a German publisher delving critically into matters of history, has been in constant troubles with German authorities, and was heavily fined. Although officially no censorship exists in the BRD (Federal Republic), Walendy has to have all his writings carefully combed over by a team of lawyers so that they do not conflict with the prevailing Zeitgeist. Only recently a book of his was okayed by the German Supreme Court, albeit with the caveat that, really, a book questioning Germany's sole guilt for World War II does not fall under the protection of the constitutionally guaranteed right to free expression.

Tiudar Rudolph, (82) questions all allied accusations against Germany, and provides proof that many of the allegations are nothing but a continuation of the war propaganda. Recently, he was incarcerated under laws covering the defamation of the dead, and race hatred (any German patriot can easily transgress against these). While in jail, he came upon non-Germans (Mossad agents?) searching his cell. In typical Bolshevist fashion, a female judge wanted to have Rudolph sent to a psychiatric ward.

Joachim Sigerist, a writer and publisher, is currently incarcerated under a law prohibiting expressions of race hatred. In a publication he had truthfully stated that Romanian gypsies who train their children to beg and steal in Germany are nothing but criminals.

Walter Ochensberger, an Austrian citizen and publisher was convicted of telling the truth about the Third Reich, a fact which in Austria means "promoting the resurgence of Nazism", something prohibited by allied law. Ochensberger fled before he could be jailed. On a sea trip from a Baltic country to Denmark, the ferry he was on "inexplicably" had to enter a German harbor. There he was arrested (remember, for a strictly political offense), and against his protestations and without proper extradition formalities sent to Austria, where he is now in prison. Ochensberger's request for political asylum in Germany, something almost automatically granted millions of Third World asylum seekers in the last few years, was curtly denied.

Dr. Max Wahl, a Swiss citizen and publisher, was sentenced by a German court to pay nearly DM 40,000 ($25,000) for publicly questioning many of the allied war claims, among them the Holocaust accusations, and for stating that Germany's former enemies are using these accusations to blackmail Germany into still paying tribute (in the form of reparations) to other countries, and especially to Jews and Israel, a half century after the war's end.

Gerd Honsik, an Austrian publisher, wrote several books delving into historical matters, one of them exposing Simon Wiesenthal's hateful actions. He was sentenced to fines and jail, and is currently in self-imposed exile in Spain Günter Küssel, an Austrian, was sentenced to ten years in jail for trying to revive National-Socialism. He had advocated another Anschluss with Germany. In Austria as well as in Germany it is O.K. to promote Communism but it is verboten to be a true German patriot.

Marie-Luise Sebiger, 89, a German Hausfrau, was upset about the despoilation of the German landscape through unassimilable foreigners and the growing criminality by Third World asylants. Mrs. Sebiger ordered some leaflets attacking the Bonn asylum policies, and distributed them among friends. The result was a visit by the "Kriminalpolizei", and the threat that she may end up in jail if she persisted in her protest.

Andreas Thierry (24) and Adolf Schatzmayr (22), received jail sentences of 18 and 15 months by a court in Klagenfurt, Austria, because they had publicly defended the honor of the Waffen-SS.

Gert Sudholt, well-known German book publisher, was put in jail for writing and publishing books and articles about matters that are "verboten" in Germany. There are indications that the government wants to put him out of business.

"John Doe", (18) was arrested for wearing a Hitler Youth belt buckle with the words "Blut und Ehre" and a swastika on it. It had belonged to his grandfather. A poor roofer, he was fined $400 and the buckle was confiscated.

Christian Worch, (28) a "notorious" German nationalist who never harmed a fly, spent three years in jail (1980 to 1983) for the following: "Volksverhetzung, verfassungsfeindliche Propaganda, Beleidigung von lebenden und toten Juden, Teilnahme an nicht genehmigten Demonstrationen etc. (never advocating violence)", ("creating hate; disseminating propaganda which is directed against the (enemy-instituted) constitution; insulting living and dead Jews, and participation in illegal demonstrations"). Unlike real criminals, Worch was kept in prison for the entire sentence. Since then (for more than 10 years) he is on indeterminate parole, and has to report monthly to a parole officer.

Max Albrechtskirchinger, was fined DM 4,000 ($2,500) for the following: He had written a letter to the small magazine of one of the editors mentioned above, quoting without his own commentary these sentences from the testimony of an old Jewish German witness at the 1988 trial of Ernst Zündel in Canada:

"I am working for the reconciliation of Jews and Germans. My presence here proves that among thousands of bad Jews there are some who do not accuse the Germans of the Holocaust. I am convinced that there was never a German plan to exterminate all the Jews, and no Jews were killed in gas chambers."

The court held that Albrechtskirchinger, by quoting this Jewish gentleman, proved that he agreed with the testimony and therefore transgressed against German laws that prohibit the denial of the Holocaust.

Horst Patzke, (63) was fined $3,000 for allegedly creating hate against non-Germans by publicly pointing out the high crime rate of foreigners seeking asylum in Germany.

Dr. Waldemar Schneider, is a German expert on Oriental culture and religion. In 1992 he wrote for a German-language newsletter an objective book review of a Japanese book that was a bestseller in Japan but had been castigated by the New York Times for alleged anti-Semitism. Soon thereafter, Simon Wiesenthal, the "Nazi hunter", accused Dr. Schneider in a German court of "creating hate" and demanded that he be prosecuted. Another Jew associated with the Wiesenthal-Center but located in Paris, Shimon Samuels, wrote to the German Red Cross, where Dr. Schneider held a position, demanding that it disassociate itself from the "culprit" because he was allegedly guilty of starting, "a campaign to promote the denial of the Holocaust and ethnic defamation".

For once the German court saw no reason to indict the German so accused but it did come out that the person who had started the entire process was a Jew dealing with blood products in Europe, whose business was in direct conflict with Dr. Schneider's position as the head of the blood bank of the German Red Cross.

Jürgen Graf, a young Swiss teacher, is very interested in World War II history. He became fascinated by the Holocaust myth, and especially its incongruities. Contrary to the actions of most American journalists, Graf (in typical German fashion) did his own research exposing the obvious lies, and wrote a book about it. Soon after publication, he received an official letter from a German court, signed by a Holocaust fanatic in Mannheim named Staatsanwalt Heiko Klein, that an investigation had started, and that he should answer the accusations.

Franz Ruby, (85) was fined $4,000 for publicly stating that Germany should remain populated mainly by Germans.

Alfred Detscher, (b.1921), the Munich publisher of a throwaway advertising paper, published in the early 1990s the text of the Leuchter Report about the non-existence of gas chambers for the killing of humans at the Auschwitz concentration camp. At the behest of the (then) German Oberjude Galinski, the Bavarian authorities went after Detscher with a vengeance. His business was totally ruined and he was fined DM 20,000 for "creating hate", etc. Detscher, a (up to the Leuchter article) totally apolitical person, died of a broken heart in 1993.

Markus Privenau, (22), used adhesive stickers to cover a street sign with the name of a dead "Liberal" with the letters "Rudolf Hess-Platz". He was sentenced to 3 months in jail.

The following report could be found in a local German newspaper on 1 July 1994:

During the search of the home of a (rightwing) political extremist in Neckarhausen, 29 file folders with finely organized patriotic propaganda material was confiscated. In the file folders there were leaflets, pamphlets, publications of past and present, and pictures of Hitler and other "Nazi" bigshots. Because the police was also able to confiscate a copier, it was assumed that the accused had copied some of the confiscated matter for distribution, which is against the law. In this regard it must be mentioned that in today's Germany any party, any group (however small) that advocates a German Germany is being persecuted by the Bonn political gangsters. Any group being regarded as patriotic, nationalistic or "to the right of Kohl's party" is being harrassed. The banks will not accept its accounts, the newspapers refuse its ads, and hotels and restaurants are coerced into not renting rooms or halls for meetings.

Here you will find excerpts from German court reports we received from German attorneys. In many states of Europe it seems customary to hide the names of the accused behind an NN (no name)/John Doe designation. BGH means federal court.

1966, the BGH sentenced a John Doe, because he gave an unpublished manuscript extolling the virtues of national socialism to a publisher.

1975, the BGH sentenced a John Doe, because he was in the possession of national socialistic posters, 1977, the BGH sentenced a John Doe, because he published a book containing "racist" statements.

1979, the BGH sentenced a John Doe, because he had imported 16 issues of a national socialist publication from a publisher in the United States.

1985, the BGH sentenced a John Doe to 7 months in jail because he had in his possession 20 adhesive stickers and 2 leaflets with national-socialist slogans.

987, the BGH sentenced a John Doe, because on the roof of his house he had painted a graffitti against Communism.

1993, the BGH sentenced a John Doe to a fine or 90 days in jail because he had worn a T-shirt with an anti-Communist slogan.

1962, a Bavarian court sentenced a John Doe because he had sung the Horst Wessel Song" in public while intoxicated.

1965, the BGH sentenced a John Doe because he had given a tape casette with the Horst Wessel Song, and a sticker with Hitler's likeness to another person.

1976, the BGH sentenced a John Doe, because as a salutation ending a letter he had used the words "with German greetings" (something that could possibly mean "Heil Hitler").

1977, a German court sentenced a John Doe because during Mardi Gras he had dressed as Hitler, and had yelled "Heil Helau" in public. (Helau is a nonsensical greeting used at Mardi Gras occasions).

1977, a German court in Schleswig sentenced a publisher because he had used a decent Hitler picture on the front cover of his magazine. (The Bonn system does not complain when Hitler's likeness is used in a derogatory manner.)

1979, the BGH sentenced a John Doe because he had manufactured model airplanes of WWII German planes exactly as they had looked during the war, i.e., with the swastika on the tail. It is verboten to use the swastika in any form whatever.

1994, a court in Hamburg sentenced a John Doe because he had used the Reichskriegsflagge of the First World War on the front cover of a catalog. Due to the fact that (young) German patriots are using this flag in lieu of everything else that is forbidden, the showing of this war stander of the German Armed forces of the Kaiser's empire is now also on the Verbotsliste.

1989, a court in Braunschweig ordered the confiscation of leaflets that showed the so-called Celtic cross (as often seen on graves in Wales and Ireland).

What you read above are but a few examples of what transpires in Germany. The suppression of patriots is unbelievable. And what do you, the representatives of the American media do? You describe Bonn Germany as a prime example of a working democracy, and worry about "democracy" in "Bugabina". In conclusion I again would like to say to you: You, American editors, writers and journalists owe it to us to delve into this God-forsaken injustice, and attack these horrible human rights violations.

Sincerely, Hans Schmidt

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear George; 25 November 1994

Although the enclosed letter to the editor may sound a little gloomy, I want you to know that I will keep supporting your efforts. Your Liberty Bell is the best of its kind! Keep up the good work.

Also, if there are other LB subscribers in the Boise area, please give them my name and number. Thanks.

Sincerely, T.J., Idaho

Dear George: 13 October 1994

I thought you might like to know that there is an outfit that just (this week) showed up on short-wave radio, 60 Meter Band, 5.065 Mhz, at 7 p.m. that is putting out a newspaper called "Liberty Bell."

It is a religious program that is advocating resistance to the Socialist government in Washington for the usual Christian reasons. Not bad, as far as that goes, for they are against the New World Order, etc.

I don't know what impact they are having, or might have, on the original Liberty Bell. Perhaps their advertisements will increase your circulation, I don't know. This is something you may wish to evaluate before deciding on a course of action. [We, of course, are not connected with this organization in any way. —Ed.]

I hope this finds you and yours well.

Yours truly, J.M., WV

Dear Folks: 24 November

...Man Oh Man, would I like to render some answers to some commentators in Liberty Bell! But time and energy must be strictly controlled for maximum efficiency. For example:

What the good Frenchman [M.d.L.] suggested (December LB, page 49), regarding Mr. Dietz going back to great old Germany, well, the normal deduction in logic here is that he wishes poor George to be jailed up!! Of course if the present victor's government in Germany had more latitude or toleration, I would be tempted by them if they offered an honorary German citizenship! However, reality is something else again. Also, the piece by Frens displays a remarkable degree of wit and insight, although, utilizing Shakespeare, one might assert: "Brevity is the soul of Wit!" Indeed. Arthur Schopenhauer once wrote, did he not (?): "The Jew is the most polished and professional of all the world's liars." With that insight, much verbiage might be set aside!! Honesty is a Germanic trait, whereas cynicism and deception are the everlasting Jewish virtues.

Yours truly, RHS, Colorado

Dear Editor: 24 November 1994

I must agree with M.d.L. of France whose letter appears on page 49 of Liberty Bell, Dec '94. "Vegetating in this hopeless Septic Tank called America!" are his words. They are so very true.

White America is already dead. White Americans are willing their own extinction. Their spirit and soul are gone. One can feel it, sense it; like seeing death hovering over a sick old man. Whites are so devoid of spirit and courage that they aren't about to rally to the cause of saving their own race.

Aryan America has no generation of youth forged from blood, steel, and death; such as the hell of total war and total defeat on their own soil. this is the crucible from which a leader would emerge.

But the slide into oblivion will go on until the few remaining whites will have to flee America just to survive the persecution and violence soon to come.

Where will they go?

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

The Fallacy of Inherited Racism

from the Prof

The other day I heard voiced for the thousandth time one of the great lies of the integrationist program. It is the claim that the white racialist attitude is acquired in the home.

The lie was aired on some segment of a national talk show concerning the dread phenomenon of "young racism" now current on the national scene. It came amidst an open forum featuring a few such young racist specimens and alleged black humanists who sought to understand these misguided adolescents and the wellspring of their hatred. After a couple of opening skirmishes, one Afro-styled patriarch—an alleged civil rights "champion"—announced in his quasi-evangelical manner that the angry young Aryans seated near him had been taught racism by their parents. This, he said, pointed up the need for redoubled effort in schools and in children's media programming to counteract the force. Enough of the right love-training, he held, and God's Children would begin to embrace each other as nature intended. This analysis brought cheers from the audience and a grin of approval from the Jewess (one of those stone-eyed prima facie "blondes") with the microphone. There was a flurry of comment at scene's close as one young racist, a lovely and well-spoken brunette, offered a rebuttal, though the words faded in the noise. Conveniently there came a station break.

So is sent out another missive for the race-leveling program: All the races are alike, and all have the same basic cognitive and emotional tendencies. Were society cleansed of its random biases, these races would flourish together in a haven of mutual enjoyment. Racism, by contrast, is fear, neurosis, paranoia. It is a false line of thought transmitted like congenital disease from one generation to the next by those infected with it. But for this early twisting of fact, and did nature take its course, young white men and women would fall naturally into love with their third-world siblings and all would be peace and light. Racism, the line goes, is thus essentially ignorance; experience provides its refutation.

It is, in effect, a lie on two levels. First, its absurd optimism as to what integration will bring to the United States and to Western civilization; second, its gross concealment of the moral and psychological makeup of young white activists. As to the first, I have said much elsewhere and will withhold further comment for another time. As to the second, it is another falsehood, though one concession must be made. It is true that some young racists fit the caricature. It is these, in fact, who have center stage most often, since they serve the purpose of the media rulers. There are, for one, the seemingly inbred hillbilly types who play foil to the Geraldos and the Donahues with twangy assertions about how all blacks are diseased and homeless, and how they wouldn't, even in an emergency, allow their daughters to receive a blood transfusion from one'a them nigrahs. And there are the Klan offspring, born in most cases to cultural isolation and raised to honor church, flag and country, instinctively race-conscious yet bound by their roots to self-defeating modes of thought. It is a fair bet that some of these guest-racists have never conversed at length with a black person, nor have their parents.

The real tragedy of this media sideshow, of course, is its concealment of the vital truth that motivates the racialist movement. Genuine racialism is not meanness, or illiteracy, or the ungiving mind-set that cannot abide life's complexity. It is simply the belief, grounded both in literature and in life, that race is real, that it is meaningful, that race plays a part in the development of civilization. To be racially conscious is to be aware of the rôle that race plays in the world—to see, on the whole, the broad and characteristic patterns of human interaction that develop out of it. It is likewise to see one's own experience in the light of such reality. A young racially conscious white man is thus aware, for example, of the racial patterns present in the incidence of violent crime, and the frequency, of late, with which his own race is targeted; he is aware of the concerted media effort, likewise racially based, to hide this fact from him; he knows that his own racial identity is a source of both envy and malice among other racial groups differently evolved and (in some cases, at least) less highly advanced. He knows that ruling forces at the highest level presently conspire to carry their attack upon his race to its deadly conclusion.

One hears these young and committed racialists every so often in the controlled media, sincere and articulate, struggling against contrived resistance to get through a message to an audience long surfeited on alien lies. Owing to the tactics of professional obscurantists, these more perceptive types are stifled or lost amidst the rabble. Those young foil-types, by contrast, just mentioned, who absorb their attitudes at home are not seriously racial in their thinking, for they have no sense of what race means, or of the racial dynamics that presently shape the world in which they live. The truth is that racism is not and cannot be taught in the home as if it were a foreign language or a system of mathematics. The belief in vacuo that blacks are somehow categorically bad or inferior can be created, but it is a belief without force or durability. It evaporates upon the first real-life contact (say, for example, a passably well-behaved black teammate, classmate, or co-worker) that may contradict it.

The honest young racialist, on the other hand, leans not upon what he has been taught by his parents, or by his peers, or by the dominant mores of his subculture. He operates instead by the cold light of reason, without need of false generalization or mythology, on the basis of what he has been taught directly by life itself. What creates genuine racialism is experience. The white youth with a serious racial ideology is not the one force-fed on the front porch the fears and insecurities of his parents. He is rather the one who has learned firsthand the fact of race, and hence with it the sham of the going federal race agenda. In truth, the attitude of the young white activist is anything but a passive one. It is instead a reaction against powerful and entrenched forces with all the weight of opinion-shaping devices at their disposal. Honest racialism requires not trust in authority, but the strength and imagination to defy it out of regard for one's own life-borne conviction. It is the greatest irony, in fact, that such an attitude should ever have been called prejudice. For it is anything but pre-judgment. The truly prejudiced are those who allow themselves to be manipulated by the program of the deceivers. Should one want, by contrast, brightness, insight, bravery, imagination, and independence, he may look to this young vanguard.

And did one want an example instead of real prejudice, of blind allegiance, of psychic surrender to indoctrination, he could do no better than to look at the white mainstream. Not long ago, I mentioned in this column an encounter with a childhood friend who had succumbed to the program of the racial mind-murderers. It might be worthwhile to cast one more look at that encounter to see how truly addled is the white psyche where race is concerned.

The issue was Jews. He had read some great bestselling piece of Jewish self-congratulation and was proceeding to tell me about it. When I took exception, he was confounded. He could not understand why I advocated such extreme measures in counteracting this tribe and its propaganda (he did not understand, either, why I laughed at his notion that its members were "white"). My solution, he said, was ruthless. Where, after all, was ethics? I suggested that moral principle, of all things, would never tolerate the surely ruthless acquisition of finance and media that has been carried out by this very same group—one that now has (if we figure its number at the commonly alleged 2.7 or 2.9%) perhaps thirty times its share of influence in such areas.

But what, he asked, if they simply had a talent for such things? Wasn't that possible? And if so, was it not simply the dictate of nature that they should rise to such heights in the related industries? And who are we to impede the use of such natural gifts however they might be used?

At this point one does not know whether to laugh or cry. This man favors an ethic of restraint if his people are apt to prevail by strength, an ethic of strength if they are not. He would have them respect principle if nature has them on top, to respect nature—to suppose, that is, that might makes right—if it will put them on the bottom! One's first reaction to such thought, I suppose, is to call it inconsistent. But it is consistent in this respect: that it favors whatever policy will have whites as its victims. As such it involves not merely prejudice or bad reasoning, but the deep and abiding self-punishment that lies at the heart of the white liberal consciousness. I find it unlikely that a man with such an outlook will ever be appreciably different in his thinking.

This is not to say that such a man will never become a racialist—he may, in time, explore this option when he needs a new diversion or when he sees that some of his neighbors are into the swing of it. Until then his life will slide on, as if on a frictionless plane, taking as its direction whatever is the path of least resistance. Such a man will be disappointed by the reception he receives at that time by those who are privy to his real mind-set. Did he know the truth, his life on that day will be worth less than nothing, and he will be fit for little more than the purpose of cannon fodder. When the time comes let him instead do what he is fitted to do—to get under his bed, put his fingers in his ears, and try to assuage his own terror by reciting his favorite mantra. He will be doing both us and himself a favor by staying off our side.

A Tale of White Heroism

A recent issue of the Salt Lake City Tribune told a story that should be made mandatory reading for white youth throughout the country. It recounts the escape of Private Eugene Nielsen from a Japanese prison camp in the Philippines at the height of the war in the Pacific.

In 1941, Nielsen was stationed at the U.S. base on Corregidor in the mouth of Manila Bay. The base was shattered in bomb raids that left almost nothing for the defenders in the way of food, water, or ammunition. The troops fought on for five months until the island fell in May of 1942.

The roughly 10,000 men were placed by the Japanese on a 10-acre stretch of beach. Nielsen describes the situation by saying, "If we laid down, we would cover the land completely with our bodies. There was almost no food, no water—just dirt, rocks, flies and heat. Everybody was sick and didn't get any help."

Several days later they were taken to a camp in Manila, where Nielsen ate leaves to stay alive. With dysentery everywhere, and his fellows dying by the hundreds, Nielsen volunteered to leave for another camp when his captors made the offer. Days later, those making the trek found themselves on the island of Palawan and faced with the task of building an airfield. Conditions, Nielsen recalls, were nightmarish, and prisoners were executed for any minor violation of rules. The horror lasted four more years.

In December of 1944 things changed. By that time Allied bombing had become frequent, and the men had dug shelters in which to brace themselves during the raids. On December 14th, recalls Nielsen, "the captors began to behave funny. All of a sudden they forced us into the shelters but remained outside themselves. Then they poured aviation gasoline on us and started us on fire."

In a mad flight Nielsen and a few others managed to jump out of the trench, claw their way through barbed wire and find refuge in an enormous garbage pile. The captors poured fire into the dump, killing most and leaving Nielsen to think that he was the sole survivor. Shot in the back and in the leg, he later slipped away and swam five miles across the shark-infested bay near the island capital of Puerto Princesa. Reaching shore, he slogged through a swamp thick with crocodiles and (though some Filipinos were betraying American escapees) found shelter with an anti-Japanese guerilla who managed in time to lead him to other escaped Americans.

In all, eleven of the 150 prisoners in Nielsen's camp escaped death. They were taken eventually to New Guinea and then home to the United States. It was more than a quarter of a century later when Nielsen's own daughter, then 14 and in junior high school (when returning home one day, she recalls, sporting a Vietnam POW bracelet), first learned from her father of his ordeal. She gradually began documenting the story, first with his own words ("when he was in the right mood") and later with research into military archives.

It is an amazing story, one that will never be told by Hollywood—not, at least, without some stylish tinting (and not the kind for which Turner is famous). Perhaps the story will be told, in some version, when media rulers will get hold of it and decide to cash in on its appeal. One can imagine what will happen to it in the hands, say, of a Steven Spielberg or a David Geffen. Eugene Nielsen will be transformed into Myron Feldman or Roosevelt Jackson, and his captors will be goose-stepping blue-eyed blonds. But to tell the story in its full-blooded truth—to allow even one such occasion for the igniting of white race consciousness—will be too great a risk. Thus will the atrocity be compounded.

I mention this story to readers, I might add, not for the purpose of demonizing the Japanese, who suffered their own losses, both here and in their homeland, during those same years. Nor do I mean to suggest that all of us who represent Nielsens's kin have it in us to do what he did. Were we all made of his stuff, did we have his resolve, the war—our war—would be over, and America would be cleansed of the vermin that now plauge it. I mention it simply as a depiction of what we can expect from our enemies as the ambush of our nation from within continues and the situation worsens. The Japanese brutalization of predominantly white POW's is a perfect omen, in this regard, of what awaits.

Think not for a moment, reader, that the sought ends of the Schumers, Metzenbaums, and Feinsteins who currently push for gun "legislation" are any less virulent, in their racial design, than were those of the Japanese. You are hated, at this moment and within your own borders, as much as you have ever been hated in the history of the world. The same grinning Jew in the lecture hall who encourages your daughter to date a black man would literally hand her to that man, and would force you to watch, if conditions allowed it. Instead, and for now, he must ply a longer strategy to arrive at this end. But the strategy, for those who have eyes to see it, is hardly less obvious. Or do you suppose that anti-white sentiment is something that magically appears only in time of declared war? A strange state of affairs, if it is so!

Those whites who imagine that the "browning" of America (played up cheerfully as a benign shift of demographics in the mainstream weeklies) carries no threat to them should read and ponder the splendidly on-target words of Major Clerkin (Liberty Bell 12 / 94, courtesy of The Talon) as he envisions the experience of the average white American around the year of 2020 when his country has by now been ravaged for another 25 years. The current administrative policy of the United States constitutes an assault upon the finances, territories, defense rights, and sensibilities of white Americans. As such it is an act of racial warfare. How many Nielsens, I must wonder, do we yet have among us? ❑

Roger Pearson, Race, Intelligence and Bias in Academe, Washington: Scott-Townsend Publishers (P.O. Box 34070, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20043), 1991. Introduction by Hans J. Eysenck. 304 pages.

By
Charles E. Weber, Ph.D.

When Professor Arthur Jensen published his famous article, "How Much Can We Boost IQ and Scholastic Achievement?" in the Harvard Educational Review in 1969 (pages 1-123, Winter issue) he revived an acrimonious argument over the question of the extent to which human intelligence is genetically determined. Why has this argument become such an acrimonious one? The question has all sorts of economic and social ramifications, such as the allocation of funds to various types or education, immigration policies and what eugenic measures should be undertaken in conjunction with the huge and growing welfare costs throughout the United States. Eugenic measures, or lack of them, in turn, could have a great effect on the future development of the United States, including its economic, social and cultural development. These questions will become ever more acute if public funding of education and expenditures for welfare are reduced in order to cope with budget deficits which threaten to cause financial crises.

Even in medieval times genetic effects on personality traits were recognized, as we can note in the example of the version of the Parsifal legend by Wolfram von Eschenbach, who portrays his hero as having inherited a drive toward the knightly life even though he was born after his father's death and in spite of his mother's efforts to deter him from such a life.

Modern intelligence testing goes back only about a century. A mass of data was produced by intelligence testing in the American army during the First World War. These data were studied intensely during the 1920s and striking correlations were noted between scores on the Army Alpha tests and occupational status and race. It has long been known that Afro-Americans, even with their strong admixtures of Caucasian genes, achieve scores on average far below those of Aryan Americans.

In England and the United States the need for eugenic measures was recognized even before the First World War but the dysgenic effects of the fratricidal First World War and the slaughter of the most successful classes during the Russian Revolution intensified the interest in eugenics, as Pearson points out in a chapter entitled "How It All Began" (pages 56-94). Modern eugenic thought was largely founded by Sir Francis Galton (1822-1911). In later decades Marxism had a tendency to counteract the interest in eugenics.

During the autumn of 1942 I took a course on educational psychology taught by a stimulating professor. He assigned the class the textbook by Gates, Jersild, McConnell and Challman (Macmillan, 1942). One of my most vivid memories of this excellent, lucid book is the bell-shaped curve on page 257 showing the distribution of numbers of persons with certain intelligence test scores. The close similarity of this distribution curve to the normal density function curve is an indication that these test scores are a natural, genetically determined phenomenon, like tallness or the length of feet. By the 1930s many sophisticated intelligence tests had been developed, even those for measuring potential performance in such diverse fields as law and music. (One of my father's colleagues at the University of Cincinnati College of Law was a co-author of the law test.)

Especially since the publication of Jensen's article mentioned above in 1969 there has been a fierce debate on the theses presented by Jensen on the basis of the huge accumulation of psychometric data. Jensen expressed the fear that such federal programs as Head Start could do little to improve human intelligence in the long run by means of enriched educational environment, even if such programs brought about some temporary gains in test scores.

The often acrimonious arguments over the genetic factors in human intelligence is mainly what Pearson's book describes in great detail, even the physical assaults and harassment at lectures against psychometric experts who contend that there are strong genetic factors (such as 80%) in the development of human intelligence.

In 1976 I myself became involved in these acrimonious arguments. At that time I was a professor in the Department of Modern Languages at the University of Tulsa. One day I was shocked, and indeed offended, by an exhibit I saw that had been put up by our psychology department. It featured a large picture of Adolf Hitler mounted on cardboard. The message of this exhibit was summarized thus: "It is now conceded that genetically, there is no difference between newborn children of any race." The apparent implication was that a belief to the contrary was a product of Hitler's mind. I felt that the exhibit was a disgrace to the university because it was contrary to what I had read on the subject of human intelligence and had observed over many years as a classroom teacher of a rather challenging subject.

I decided to write up my reaction to the exhibit. I pointed out the mass of contrary data presented in Prof. Jensen's long article and the close attention which raisers of domestic cattle and horses must pay to genetic factors in their animals if they are to be successful economically. I also mentioned the famous studies of twins by Sir Cyril Burt. My rather long article was published in the weekly student newspaper of the University of Tulsa, The Collegian. For some time I never received a direct reaction to my article from the members of the psychology department. Then one day I received an anonymously sent copy from a faculty member of an article that purported to show that some of Sir Cyril Burt's famous studies of genetically determined characteristics of twins reared in separate environments were based on fraudulent data. Pearson (page 297) points out that much of the data which Burt had accumulated was destroyed after his death on the recommendation of a colleague who had opposed his views. Apparently, my dean was not pleased by my article in The Collegian. My salary was later frozen at $15,000 [this, at a time when I was amazed to learn that totally uneducated, unskilled Negroes in San Francisco were paid $17,000 or more dollars per year—to collect garbage! So much for "American" priorities!—Ed.] for several years during a time of rapid decline of the purchasing power of the dollar.

If we wish to solve a problem efficiently we must first understand its causes, just as a physician must make a correct diagnosis if his subsequent therapy is to have a good effect. In this case we should consider the causes of the bias, hypocrisy and dishonesty in this matter. Having taught for 32 years in various universities and having observed my colleagues in action for over three decades, I shall now venture to explain the causes of the bias which is the basic concern of Pearson's book.

Opponents of recognition of genetic causation of variations in human intelligence and opponents of eugenic measures are often motivated by political doctrine, as Pearson makes clear throughout his book, but he gives no special, concise analysis of the causes of the opposition on the part of many academic people who are not doctrinaire Marxists but are simply trying to obtain their promotions up the academic hierarchy or even just trying to keep their positions. We must bear in mind that much of the "business" (and hence income) of departments of psychology, sociology and education consists of preparing students for employment by governments at one level or another. The professors in these fields can hardly afford to lose this business. The attitudes of government are forced (at least indirectly) on academe. Attitudes of students also play rôle in what timid professors teach, since promotions in academe are now often based largely on students' ratings of their professors as determined by questionnaires distributed by deans and heeded by deans in decisions regarding faculty employment. These formal evaluations by students of their professors are thus the tail that wags the dog. They also cause "grade inflation" and lower the prestige of an academic degree. In the case of sociology and education in particular, a large relative proportion of the students in these fields are Negroes. What professor in these fields would dare to discuss with any degree of candor the considerably lower intelligence test scores obtained by Negroes? We must thus look at simple economic factors if we wish to understand so much of the bias, taboo and hypocrisy which Pearson has described in great detail.

Beyond the economic motivations, of course, there are also somewhat more subtle social and psychological factors in many professors' attitudes toward race and heredity. Poorly paid professors look at people with less education but far higher incomes and hence have a hard time in recognizing correlations between intelligence and incomes, which are nevertheless a reality. Still another factor is the competition for government research grants. Big, redistributive government is, by its very nature, hostile to anyone who objects to the egalitarian basis of its policies with regard to taxation, welfare, education and immigration. An even broader factor lies in the circumstance that the vast majority of American professors are on government payrolls. Even those teaching at private colleges have often received their graduate education in public institutions.

Pearson devotes one-third of his book (pages 141-242) to three chapters that describe the experiences of three individual scientists who have recognized in their publications and lectures the genetically caused aspects of intelligence.

The first of the three chapters (pages 141-183) is devoted to Prof. Arthur Jensen of the University of California, Berkeley. Jensen obtained his Ph.D. degree in clinical psychology at Columbia University in 1956. Pearson characterizes him as "the foremost researcher responsible for the revival of 'hereditarian' thought in recent decades." Jensen was especially influential on William Shockley, to whom the following chapter is devoted. Jensen observed diverse behavior and capacities in Caucasian and Negro pupils classified as "retarded." His famous article in the Harvard Educational Review mentioned above is discussed on pages 15 ff. Even though Jensen did not allege that all blacks were intellectually inferior to all whites, he was bitterly attacked as a "racist." Jensen's article was praised in private by some distinguished scholars but was attacked in print persistently and unfairly by men with such names as Lewontin, Deutsch and Hirsch, to whose attacks Pearson devotes subsections. Demonstrations by Marxists were organized against Jensen at places where Jensen was scheduled to lecture before scientific meetings. Efforts to silence Jensen and hide his research also took place in England and Australia (pages 163-171). Jensen was also compared to Hitler by his enemies (page 171). By the way, Pope Innocent X (1644-1653) issued his bull Cum occasione against the Jansenists in 1653, not 1953, as is erroneously stated on page 150.

William Shockley, the co-inventor of the transistor and a Nobel Prize winner, is perhaps the most famous man who has turned his attentions in recent years to problems of dysgenic population trends and the factors causing them. Pearson also devotes a whole chapter to Shockley's efforts and experiences in that field (pages 184-215). Shockley, like Jensen, was the victim of a hostile, lying press, Marxist organizations that tried to keep him from speaking and cowardly university administrations which had been corrupted and intimidated by government. Shockley proposed a eugenic action which involved monetary incentives to persons of low intelligence who would submit to voluntary sterilization. The press frequently distorted Shockley's views. The Atlanta Constitution alleged that his views were directly traceable to those of Adolf Hitler. Such nonsense was the basis of a suit that Shockley brought against and won against The Atlanta Constitution. The hereditarians were frequently linked to National Socialism (see, for example, also page 156). The fact of the matter is that eugenic laws had been passed in the United States and other countries long before the National Socialists were in power in Germany. Shockley pointed out that the crime rate of Denmark (where the reproduction of feebleminded persons had been discouraged) was only 2% of that of Washington, D.C. It seems to me that the very environmentalists who were accusing Shockley of racism in his plans for voluntary sterilization of persons of any race were, in fact, the people who were admitting that Negroes are mentally inferior and would hence be disproportionately sterilized.

The chapter on Prof. J. Philippe Rushton of the University of Western Ontario occupies pages 216-242. In spite of an impressive publishing record in the form of books and articles in distinguished journals, the Canadian press, particularly the Toronto Star, smeared him and distorted what he wrote. Rushton has noted different patterns of reproduction and nurture of the young in various animals and found parallel patterns in the races of man. Pearson points out (page 236): "In Canada, thought control has advanced far more dangerously than in the United States, where free speech is still reasonably protected. This reflects the steady growth of immigrant power since the beginning of the present century." (What immigrants?) There is a pertinent booklet in the C-Far Canadian Issues Series, No. 27, Race, Evolution & Aids: What Rushton Really Said, Toronto, 1990, edited by Paul Fromm. The oppressive Canadian laws against free speech have also been made famous by the disgraceful trials in Toronto of Ernst Zündel, who published a booklet that disputed the " Holocaust" material. Rushton's writings were investigated by police forces for possible violations of the oppressive Canadian laws concerning race relations. The administration of the University of Western Ontario also made difficulties for Rushton, even though he was a Guggenheim Scholar.

Some of the nastiest attacks against the hereditarians have come from Jews, perhaps in keeping with their traditions of hostility toward their host populations, especially the elite of their host populations. (See Isaiah XIX,2.) When primarily Jewish governments gained control of Russia in 1917 and Hungary in 1919, the leading classes of these lands were the particular victims of their brutality. Some recent hereditarian scientists, however, are of Jewish descent, as Pearson points out on page 267, where he mentions Hans Eysenck, R. Herrnstein, Michael Levin and Seymour Itzkoff.

In the introduction to the book, Hans Eysenck, who was born in Germany, recounts how he was converted to the view that Negroes have a genetically determined low performance on intelligence tests. He mentions in particular (page 18) the book by Audrey Shuey, The Testing of Negro Intelligence (1966), which he praises.

Pearson notes (page 291) that Prime Minister Nakasone of Japan pointed out that America was at a disadvantage economically as a result of its burden of less intelligent minority groups. I recall that this observation caused a very hostile reaction in the United States. Apparently the truth hurt, truth from a successful land which has a relatively homogeneous racial makeup. By the way, members of the Mongolian race in the United States do very well on intelligence tests. If the United States has an unfavorable balance of trade with Japan, we should not jump to the conclusion that no biological factors are involved.

In many parts of Pearson's book it is pointed out that Marxists have attempted to associate recognition of genetic factors in human abilities with policies and eugenic practices of National Socialist Germany. The politically motivated environmentalists are fond of calling the hereditarians Nazis. Pearson quite appropriately quotes (page 157) a Progressive Labor article (of all sources!) which points out, quite correctly, that Hitlerian Germany "was way behind the U.S." in recognizing the genetic factors in human intelligence. As a matter of fact, Indiana had laws providing for eugenic sterilization as early as 1907, a practice not introduced in Germany until after 14 July 1933, when the eugenics law (Gesetz zur Verhütung erbkranken Nachwuchses) was passed. Many states had such laws.

One of the many valuable services that Pearson's book performs is the presentation of evidence that American universities have become corrupted by government policies in the fields having a bearing on educational policy (such as "busing" pupils in order to make classes racially integrated) and welfare. Government funding of research, of course, has a tremendous potential to corrupt and pervert scientific investigations.

A great deal of attention has been paid to the new book by Charles Murray and Richard Herrnstein, The Bell Curve (1994). This commendable book, with its massive presentation of data on intelligence tests and their economic and social implications, has been extensively attacked in the popular media, including Time, Newsweek and U.S.News. Even the television newsman, Peter Jennings, presented a rather extensive commentary on the book in one of his nightly news programs in November, 1994, naturally with the almost obligatory suggestion that eugenic thinking in Germany led to the so-called "Holocaust" (cf. Pearson, p. 250). Pearson's Race, Intelligence and Bias in Academe is a valuable supplement to The Bell Curve because it quite vividly takes us "behind the scenes" of the unscrupulous measures and questionable arguments used to repress objective, realistic investigation of individual and racial variations in mental capacities. In particular, Pearson's book deserves the attention of every serious, honest educator. ❑

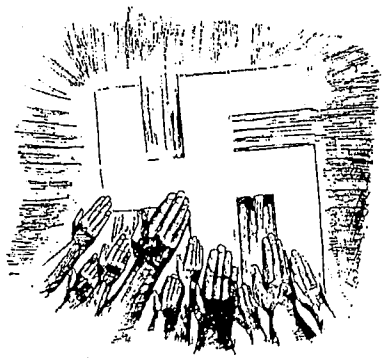
by Robert Frenz



It is necessary that I apologize for an error on my part. In the past, I have repeatedly argued against using the swastika in any shape or form due to the negative image its display always conjures up. One-half of a century of unrelenting propaganda has literally etched this symbol into men's minds as a symbol of evil. I said that using the swastika would nullify any argument or platform which it was coupled to. This is true, but only partially so and I believe the negative image can be absolutely erased within a very short period of time simply because Nature is going to alter events unpredictably and with increasing rapidity as the New World Order spreads its malignancy around the globe. THE SWASTIKA, NO MATTER WHO DISPLAYS IT, WILL ULTIMATELY COME TO MEAN OPPOSITION TO THE ZIONIST NEW WORLD ORDER.

AMERICANA

The straight line, the circle, the cross and the triangle are simple and easily made forms which may have been invented and reinvented in every age of primitive man. The swastika, however, is a very ancient symbol which appears to have been made with a definite intention and a continuous meaning, the knowledge of which passed from person to person, from tribe to tribe and from nation to nation until it finally circled the planet. The true swastika always has the arms bent to the right. The left bent swastika is called the suawastika and has no place in this discussion. The writings of Whitney, Burnouf and Waring indicate that the swastika was in use long before a name was given to it. Ethnologically, the name is derived from "svasti" which implies "well being", a sense of happiness and good fortune or simply "hail". It has always been an auspicious sign.

In the thirteenth century B.C., the swastika appears in Troad and spread into Caucasus, Greece and Villanova. From Villanova, in the seventh century B.C., it made its appearance in most of western Europe and into Iceland. Greece was the starting point for its migration into India, Persia, China, Tibet and Japan. Due to the Grecian influence, we find the swastika appearing in northern Africa, Sicily and Rome by the third century A.D. The Asian connection ultimately lead to the crooked cross appearing on the North American continent prior to the arrival of the European. It is interesting to note that the swastika has apparently never appeared in any negro or jewish culture. Negroes, of course, never used any writing and therefore would certainly not attach a meaning to any abstract sign or shape. No matter where it showed up, it always meant luck, good will and good tidings. It assumed secondary meanings in all cultures from being officially declared as the symbol of the sun in China to the footprint of Buddha. Swastikas have appeared on ancient coins from the Isle of Man to Sicily. From the Toco mounds in Tennessee to Nicaragua and Paraguay, the swastika has permeated most American Indian cultures. The swastika has, from place to place, meant the four winds, the symbol of the star, dragon fly, moon, birds, maidenhood, a shaman's spirit and even humans and their dwellings. Although the swastika was the tribal sign of the Cheyenne Indians and a sign for Dakota lodges, you'll never find one in any Kevin Kostner wolf-dancing movie. The publisher Scribners, in the early 1900's, used the swastika as a trade mark and Collier's complete works of Kipling had gold swastikas embossed upon every volume, not once, but several times. Also, in the early part of this century, the symbol was popular with the jews in New York City. The swastika has historically never been used to represent evil or any other attribute of the forces of darkness. Since the swastika appears to have followed the Aryan people throughout Europe, it was no surprise that Adolf Hitler adopted it. It remained for the modern jew to redefine the swastika and while he was at it, to pervert the meaning of the word holocaust. This comes as no surprise either. Throughout the ages, the crooked cross has represented the light (white) and its inversion (black) has only been around for about 60 years. It behooves us, therefore, to see that the time-honored and true meaning is restored. This will be the duty of all Aryan youth from Kansas to the Ukraine.

Aus deinem Bild,
Aus deinem Gesicht
Ein Glaube quillt,
Ein Wille spricht.

Der unverletzt
Den Weg uns weist
Und Berge versetzt
Und Deutschland heißt.

A son of the swastika doesn't have a cross tattooed on his arm for everyone to see when he falls over drunk at some roadside dive. An Aryan, proud of himself and his relation to the swastika, is not lathered out on drugs nor does he attend any nigger rock concerts even if the performers are ostensibly white. Followers of the swastika aren't on the prowl for the next available piece of pussy but view their women-folk as the future bearers of their sons and daughters. Aryan youth, honoring Hitler's beloved symbol, never parade about in Hollywood type Nazi outfits always eager to bash a faggot or race-mixer. If the swastika has any meaning for the young of today, then they should rise to its denotation. This means that their word must be a bond and truth always upon their lips. A beer-soaked, unsightly, bad-mannered, cheating and lying bum sporting a swastika only augments the false Hollywood depiction of a National Socialist. Over-sized clothing and untied sloppy shoes are nigger costumes and no National Socialist will try to imitate one. One of the most beautiful young women I have met in recent years always wore a swastika pendant about her neck. The red, black and white of the cross seemed enhanced by her deep blue eyes and golden hair. She knew when and how to say "please" and when to say "thank you". She never stole, swore or prostituted herself for a one-night stand. Always capturing the eyes within any room of which she entered, I secretly remarked that this young woman was a living ideal, more so because she was highly intelligent. Often, the curious would ask about the swastika about her neck, even hinting that she might be part Indian. However, the words which left her lips always gave positive reinforcement to the Natural Aryan Ideal. She was a polite and self-assured young lady who would honor any man fortunate enough to have her for a bride and any child fortunate to have her as a mother. This type of woman, and her male counterparts, are very rare and that is precisely the problem. The so-called young National Socialists I meet today, are more interested in beer and sex than in anything else. The sooner ZOG slaps them in the slammer, the better. They are a liability both to themselves and to us. National Socialists ACT like National Socialists. Wiggers wearing swastikas (with or without baseball caps) are still wiggers.

Young Aryan societies usually take care of their own as was evident in the earlier years of our American nation. As the society grew more complex, the business of law and order was turned over to a specialized group and as long as this group was efficient, the citizens took it for granted and "obeying the law" became an axiom. Cattle and horse thieves were no longer hanged by small groups of farmers and ranchers who were exercising the Natural right of any group to eliminate their enemies. Later on, these thieves were hanged following a more lengthy practice which involved the paper-shuffling business called the law. Once "the law" starts to work against the very people who initialized it, the responsibility falls back onto the shoulders of the individual and small groups. We saw this take the form of the Ku Klux Klan following our Civil War when negro and carpetbagger excesses were not curtailed within the legal framework. The summary justice which followed was "illegal" but it was justice none the less. Sooner or later, people trash laws which work against them and, in many cases, the government as well. To do otherwise is the mark of a slave and according to our Declaration of independence, it becomes a duty. We are approaching this stage here in America where the "law", in far too many instances, works counter to Aryan interests. It appears that our government is more interested in preventing otherwise law abiding people from defending themselves against the increasing hordes of criminal garbage. In the case of the city burning Neger, the "law" would rather sacrifice a few dedicated L.A. police officers unjustly than in quelling the insurrection. Our "law" allowed treason to be offered as an alternative life-style during that meat-grinder called the Viet Nam (phoney) War. If the government fails in its duty to eliminate the criminal BY WHATEVER MEANS NECESSARY, then the citizens will do it for themselves. Small bands of men, under the cover of dark, will "rehabilitate" any rapist who falls into their hands. Although these men will be operating "illegally" they will nonetheless earn the respect and approval of the apparent law abider. People, when their nuts are being crushed, want relief and they don't care where it comes from or whether it is legal or not. Here is where the true young National Socialist comes in.

If one engages in illegal behavior, for whatever reason, on behalf of his race, any such action must be in an area where the general public does not disapprove. Crime, that is, minorities doing their own thing, is becoming a number one concern for a majority of Americans. It is far better to live in a crime-free poor society than it is in a crime-ridden affluent one. I know of no one who disapproves of a shop keeper blowing the brains out of a would-be robber. If the shop keeper becomes screwed by the law, then public sympathy is on his side. This is always the basis for revolution, whether peaceful or violent. Our society will change due to public pressure. It only remains to discover what that pressure will be. If (and I am not advocating any type of illegal behavior here) a couple of swastika wearing National Socialists were apprehended for the summary executions of neighborhood rapists and child-molesters, they would be treated as criminals by the system but I am sure that the neighborhoods involved would secretly view the matter differently. If every time a pack of filth-loving faggots urinated in a church they were found hanging by their gonads on the next day, the public wouldn't become outraged at such "criminal" behavior on the part of the perpetrators. If the swastika, and National Socialism, were coupled to positive acts in the public eye, then we would see a massive change in general attitude. It is imperative that the negative image of National Socialism be erased and that can only come about by unselfish positive acts. Remember that the old WW II veterans are on their way out and no matter how righteous they think their cause was, they will one day be in history's dust-bin and Nature's way will again come to the fore. If National Socialists starting stomping on people which the PUBLIC disapproved of, instead of people they PERSONALLY disapproved of, much would be gained. If you wish to risk jail time for face-smashing then it is better to bash someone the public hates rather than an object of your pet peeve. People dedicated to a cause are not self-serving but unfortunately, this is exactly where we are.

Every type of social misfit and pervert is to be found in the blight-wing from liars, whore-mongers, drunks, cheats, druggies, spies and kooks. None of them cooperate simply because they are only running a business where others are viewed as competitors instead of comrades. Mailing lists are their meal tickets and that is why stealing them is a common activity. One fellow, upon receipt of a $75,000 donation bought himself a piece of property and promptly took up weed smoking. This fellow wouldn't donate a postage stamp to an orphan but feels that he should "lead" something. Another blight-winger, a fellow who could pass as a brother of the IHR's jew attorney Farr, wants to assume N.S. leadership under an assumed name, that is, if he can stay out of bar-rooms long enough to do it. All chiefs and few Indians. Contrast this to the dedication to a cause which permeated all of Hitler's and Streicher's activities. In 1930, they both had separate and formidable organizations and both used the swastika. Streicher, upon deep reflection, decided that the future of their cause would be better served by passing all of his support to a man he considered far more competent to lead the German people - Adolf Hitler. Can you name one blight-winger who would admit that another is far better than he at guiding the cause? If so, I'd like to hear about him. The "cause" is merely a lunch ticket for most and no one is about to toss that ticket away. If they aren't in their counting houses opening the mail, they are seen smiling in front of the people they are fleecing - in that same way as Graham, Falwell and Robertson do on television.

If we decide to take our swastikas out of the closet, what then of others who are not of us but nonetheless carry a swastika banner? It is of no concern to us. Mejicans usually approve of Adolf Hitler and it is not uncommon for them to have his picture in their homes. Hitler, to the Mejicans, simply means a strong man, which they always adore and more so if he is corrupt (which Hitler wasn't), and someone who doesn't like jews. I have never met any Mejican who likes jews and this is true throughout most of South and Central America.

During the flower-sixties, I for a time, was busily silk-screening T-shirts with a swastika and "White Power". It was always a humorous comment that, while in Chicago for one of Rockwell's marches, we always sold more of these T-shirts to black-faces than to any other group. So what of it? Traitors to this country have worn American military uniforms and waved their flags as energetically as anyone else. Should we shoot the first kid who is found wearing a Buffalo Bison sweat-shirt and is not a member of the team? I'd love to see a new breed of Dalmatian where all of the spots were swastikas. I would hold no malice towards any non-National Socialist dog because he was sporting swastikas. Let the swastikas roll. The more the merrier since it will be an effective battering-ram against the anti-swastika laws which are in effect in many states. Does anyone think that a handsome clean-cut white youth will be mistaken for a border-jumping beaner if they both wear swastikas?

Earlier in this article I mentioned the wide adoption of the swastika and its varied uses amongst people who are not our comrades. Only a blight-winger would waste his time worrying about, and acting upon, the fact that Asians, American Indians and others have used this symbol in the past, and will continue to do so in the future. We should know WHO WE ARE without getting side-tracked over relative inconsequentials. It's the book that counts and not the cover. That's coffee you should be smelling.

The best is yet to come. Out there, in that vast crowd, will come a handful of dedicated young men who will honor Nature and the political system which embodied it. Their activity will strike a sympathetic chord amongst the general public who is weary of their dispossession and the sadness which the blight-wing has left them with. The great men have always been supernumeraries and events always allow them to reach for the stars. The coming convulsions will relegate the present blight-wing "leaders" to the garbage heap. For the present, the swastika will be a universal symbol raised in opposition to that evil Big Brother asylum which, with its accompanying race-mixing excrement, is being forced upon an increasingly reluctant world. Be true to yourself, speak out and don't let the bastards wear you down. Tomorrow belongs to those who prepare for it. ❑

Eva. Ah, Stefan, I see you appear from out of the night and the mist like a lover in an impressionist verse of Arthur Symons. The moon has gently gathered unto herself a veil of cloud, as if to hide her secrets from prying eyes, and I'm reminded once again that things may not be what they seem, my friend.

Stefan. Is this where we get the discussion about 'appearance and reality,' and the many arcane elements of a philosophical problematics?

Eva. Not at all. I just wanted to draw your attention to a little matter noted by the great Hegel many years ago—sometimes we think we know something, but we prove in the end to be mistaken; we have placed our trust in that idiotic public opinion which rules academics as much as it rules floor polishers, and we sometimes stumble. Hegel's formulation of this idea is not very elegant in its expression (prose style was not the Master's strong suit!), but it will bear citation here: Das Bekannte ueberhaupt ist darum, weil es bekannt ist, nicht erkannt (What is familiar is not known merely because it's familiar). We see evidence of this fact all around us. It can happen in the most mundane and quotidian matters as well as in the loftier realms of the Spirit. Let me give you an example: we've all heard, for instance, of the Hegelian dialectic, the triple-step down the garden path of thesis, antithesis, resolving into synthesis, right?

Stefan. Lady, everyone is familiar with this classic statement of the nature of phenomenological change.

Eva. Yes, but it's quite wrong, a comic misattribution. In fact, the explicit mention of this triplex formula occurs only once in the complete works of Hegel; it is mentioned, disparagingly, in the lectures on the history of philosophy (in the critique of Kant). However—and I think that you might find this paradox amusing—the three-step does receive favorable treatment in the works of Kant, Fichte, and Schelling.

Stefan. I wish I had known that when I took philosophy in school.

Eva. It would have done you no good—only a great teacher can bear correction amicably, and, needless to say, no great teacher would have made such an egregious error. But let us climb up a few more rungs of the ladder of Spirit, and cast our eyes upon Adolf Hitler's mind. Here, where interest and parti pris cast their nets around our thick-skulled 'intellectuals,' you'll find howler upon howler in their ruminations. One example: you'll recall the notorious footnote on page 21 of Manheim's translation of Mein Kampf, wherein the worthy scribe sneeringly opines that just because Hitler mentions the "happy isle of the Phaeacians," this is no indication that he has read Homer's Odyssey! That's fairly transparent, I think, and we need not linger on it here. But an even more asinine footnote sullies the base of page 7, at which point Manheim, flummoxed by Hitler's use of the word Willensmeinung, scornfully hints that the word is Hitler's own coinage (recall that in the translator's preface to the volume, Hitler's language is treated with a pedantic fussiness). Well, as I am of a different opinion as to Hitler's intellectual and philological attainments, I am going to insist on a alternative interpretation.

Stefan. Did the Leader invent the word?

Eva. No, of course not. Any thorough German dictionary from the period has an entry for it.

Stefan. What does it mean?

Eva. One moment. A story first. One morning as I rode the train into Manhattan, I decided that I'd indulge myself in a bit of light reading. You know, to make the time pass more quickly. When I turned to page 257 of the English translation of Husserl's Ideen aus einer reinen Phaenomenologie und phaenomenologischen Philosophie,

Lo! and behold! what do I find? Take a gander at this:

> .....the "will's meaning" (Willensmeinung), and in the precise way in which it subsists as "meaning" in this will (on its full essentiality), and with whatever is willed "in all of its ramifications."

Stefan. You have a most peculiar idea of light reading, my lady, if I may say so. When was this work published?

Eva. In 1913.

Stefan. I see. Wasn't Edmund Husserl a Jew?

Eva. Yes. He was also Heidegger's teacher and the dedicatee of Sein und Zeit.

Stefan. Enough said. Full stop. End of story. And it is a good one.

Eva. I thought you'd appreciate it. I'm sure, of course, that Hitler may only have come across Husserl's teaching in the course of his voluminous reading at the time of the book's publication, and I don't want my argument to bear more freight than it is able to bear; but you get my point. When Marxists find a stray mention of Hegel (without misspellings) in the pre-WW I writings of V.I. Lenin, they always expect us to fall on our knees in adoration of the good little revolutionist's vast reading. I'm only saying that it should works both ways, or neither.

Stefan. Good point. The great American literary critic Edmund Wilson was always risible when he would take the most exiguous reference to music or literature in the writings of Trotsky, and then wax lyrical on the depths of the twisted little Jew's 'culture.'

But surely, lady, didn't you invite me here to discuss the place of woman in the movement for the rebirth of the Aryan dream?

Eva. Yes, and all of this was by way of trying to make you clear your mind of misconceptions. My lucubrations were intended to clear away some of the cobwebs that still linger in your mind. Many of you people in the 'movement,' for all of your talk about 'taking nothing on faith' and 'examining every position on its own merits' have swallowed certain received ideas with the relish of a Bible Belter swallowing the phantasms and lunacies of the Book of Revelations. So on to our subject: you will admit, I am sure, that many of the men in our movement have little more than a verbal respect for the 'female of the species,' for all of the talk about 'nurturing children' and the like. Certain loveless sorts, who are in dire need of a little TLC, affect to scorn the very idea that a woman might possess an independent soul and an independent outlook. We have both heard would-be wise-guys in the movement talk about women as if they were some sort of movable property, with a status somewhat below domestic pets and the family car.

Stefan. See, there you go—an immediate and gratuitously insulting reference to woman's appointed task in this world.

Eva. Appointed by whom?

Stefan. By Nature.

Eva. If Nature comprises the totality of the processes at work in the Cosmos, as you once said, then the onus of proof is on you to tell me just how a woman who seeks a career other than motherhood is sinning against this all-encompassing Nature.

Stefan. Eristics, logic-chopping, nonsense.

Eva. Let me put it this way: if you think that all women should be reserved for use as brood-mares or playthings for the leisure of menfolk, then that must apply, as well, to such characters as Leni Riefenstahl and Hanna Reitsch, no? Would you have felt comfortable telling those two redoubtable figures to go back to the kids, the church, and the kitchen?

Stefan. A palpable hit, my lady. But I never said that women should be the instruments of their menfolk.

Eva. Then why are all of you so intoxicated with the misogyny of Nietzsche, whose Zarathustra urged that he who would go to woman should bring his whip? I would not be very impressed with any woman who could listen to this drivel without releasing the safety catch on her revolver (Bertrand Russell remarked that almost any woman on the planet would have been able to get the whip out of Nietzsche's hand). Or take the great Italian Fascist thinker Julius Evola, who asserts that no woman can tell the difference between the truth and a lie, and that all women are liars as a matter of course. I'm sure that Evola made an exception for, say, his mother, but you get my point. There is a very definite failure of vision and imagination here, or else I am very much mistaken. We think that we have solved a problem of whose very nature we are ignorant, and yet we are unaware of this fact. Oughtn't we to be a little bit pragmantic, my friend?—how many women have you managed to attract to your movement thus far? Confess.

Stefan. Not very many. And most of those whom I have met think that they impress us by using outlandish terms like 'incrementalization' and such-like—men in women's clothing, if you will. Structuralists without much structure.

Eva. So my point stands unchallenged. I'd like to make an excursus, if I might, into the life of an undoubtedly great thinker who perished very young, but who in his short life pointed to many of the wounds which afflict us still: but he was wrong on this one point, on the nature of woman, and I'd like to use his case as a sort of paradigm. Let's face the fact that if we're wrong here, we're wrong in the most important area of Life, namely, the nature of the affections between the sexes.

Stefan. Be my guest.

Eva. The man of whom I speak was Otto Weininger, a Viennese thinker of the turn of the present century. He was the son of a brilliant Jewish father, a goldsmith named Leopold, and a mother who seems to have been untalented, and on whom young Otto always looked with disapprobation. It is more than usually difficult to get a handle on the biographical materials in this case, perhaps because Otto Weininger is what one might call a 'hot potato'—politically speaking, that is—for all parties. Many of the thinkers who have interested themselves in the Weltanschauungen of the proto-NS thinkers have shied away from Weininger because of his Jewish origins. Most Jewish commentators, it is hardly necessary to say, are appalled by everything the man stood for, and he is often regarded as the archetypal 'self-hating Jew' by his fellow-tribesmen. It should be enough for our purposes to note that he was held in high regard by Dietrich Eckart, Alfred Rosenberg, and Adolf Hitler—more authoritative vouchers should not be needed.

At any rate, Otto grew up under the shadow of his gifted father, whose artistic skill, aptitude for languages, Wagnerolatry, and anti-Semitism the young man adopted as his own. During Otto's attendance at the Schotten-gymnasium, he mastered the classical languages, as well as English, French, Spanish, Italian, and Norwegian. From 1898 to 1902, he studied at Vienna University under Professor Friedrich Jodl (1849-1914), who directed his dissertation which was originally entitled Eros und Psyche. Jodl, who found Weininger personally as well as ideologically repugnant, was startled when an expanded version of Weinger's dissertation, now retitled Geschlecht und Charakter: Eine prinzipielle Untersuchung (Vienna, 1903) suddenly became the rage among the young.

In 1902 Weininger converted to Protestantism, and then spent the rest of the year touring Germany and Norway. He made a tour of Italy in the summer of 1903, during which he penned aphorisms that appeared posthumously as Ueber die letzten Dinge (Vienna, 1904). When he returned to Vienna in the fall of 1903, his recurring depression finally motivated him to rent a room in the very house where Beethoven had died. He sent two letters off to his family, and then, at the very height of his powers, shot himself in the chest. He was only twenty three years old. Several Viennese scribblers from the clerical and gutter press denounced the suicide, but heavyweights such as Karl Krauss and August Strindberg came to his defense.

Now Sex and Character, his masterwork, is an exemplary text when it discusses the Jewish question. Indeed, several of the most illuminating discussions of just what Judaism is appear here, and mark an advance upon even the canny analyses of Weininger's hero Houston Stewart Chamberlain, whose Foundations of the 19th Century was Weininger's vade mecum. Let me advance, as an instance of Weininger's penetrating philosophical power, a short quotation from the chapter entitled Judaism:

> I must make clear what I mean by Judaism; I mean neither a race nor a people nor a recognized creed. I think of it as a tendency of the mind; as a psychological constitution which is a possibility for all mankind, but which has become actual in the most conspicuous fashion only among the Jews.

Luminous stuff, indeed, and the influence of such astute analysis on Eckart and Rosenberg surely needn't be demonstrated at this date. What is troublesome, however, is the embittered diatribe on women which takes up a considerable portion of the book, and for which I can find no parallel in the writings of even such confirmed misogynists as Arthur Schopenhauer or the early fathers of the Catholic Church. According to Weininger, "Woman is neither high-minded nor low-minded, strong-minded or weak-minded. She is the opposite of all these. Mind cannot be predicated of her at all; she is mindless." He goes on to claim that woman's only interest in life is matchmaking, sexual union of all types and varieties, and he claims that this "idea of union is always eagerly grasped and never repelled whatever form it may take (even where animals are concerned)"! It is clear by now, I should hope, that something's very wrong with this analysis. For Weininger, woman is an obscene ovipositor, an hysterical rutting machine, or else an observer of other rutting machines, and one feels, as one peruses Weininger's pages, that one can't be sure if we are reading a sober exposition of anthropological facts or some gaga Zolaesque fantasia on the fecund earth in springtime. Woman is hysterical and untruthful, we are told; they are bent upon devouring, psychically or physically, the entire world. But we do find a hint as to just what is wrong here when Weininger states: "Woman, the normal receptive woman of whom I am speaking, is impregnated by the man not only physically.....but at every stage of her life, by man's consciousness and by man's social arrangements. Thus it comes about that although woman lacks all of the characters of the male sex, she can assume them so cleverly and so slavishly that it is possible to make mistakes such as the idea of the higher morality of women."

Pathetic, really—here we have circular arguments giving birth to willful refusals to experience the manifold, prismatic luxuriance of the lives of the sexes; here we see maleness, horrified by mysteries, taking revenge on the World of Woman by means of abusive epithets and psychologizing billingsgate. And Stefan, my friend, your 'movement' harbors more than one enthusiast who, although he might not be so bold as to state these feelings in public, is certainly feeling them in private; that's where our first revolution must take place, Stefan, in our private dwellings, in the secret places of the heart.

Stefan. But surely this is such a small point—I think that you are exaggerating the importance of this matter.

Eva. The mote of dust or grit that finds its way into your eye is small, but it can prevent you from seeing the things that are right in front of you.

Stefan. Nice! But I believe that I understand you, lady. Women who choose to live outside the bounds of family life, but who wish to aid the resurgence of the Aryan World in their own, idiosyncratic way, must receive the encouragement of all Aryans. From Pindar we have received the word—become what you are. That should go for all of us, I think. There are many paths to heroism, both for men and for women. I would say that you are the prophetess of a new and vitally-charged gallantry.

Eva. Good, Stefan! We will talk again; but for now, let us drink in the music of the moon.

THE BUTTON IS OFF THE FOIL
(or, A NAUGHTY WEEKEND)

Overture

Our story takes place in a not-so-distant (and not-so rosy) future, when the governmental juntas plying the whip over the broken remains of America have seen much of their totalitarian machismo vanish down the wind. Not to worry, though, rah-rah patriots and aerial-bombardment enthusiasts: although the bloodsuckers and their mercenaries occasionally come a cropper when attacking the stateside dwellings of their victims, the enemies of 'freedom' and 'democracy' overseas still enjoy the tender embrace of our angelic overlords. In fact, after the famous, and now permanent football strike which ended the suzerainty of that national religion (at long last!), young American yo-yos with a superabundance of testosterone adrift in their bloodstreams now joined the bold squadrons of the Air Force with an alacrity which would have surprised some of their forebears, I can tell you.

But, as I say, things were a mite different back in the lower 48s. So many of the government's thugs had been killed in raids on white nationalists, black nationalists, Arab bystanders, and the other exotic radicalizing enclaves which dot the landscape, that pay schedules for the hired marauders had gone through the roof; and, of course, these goons were not to be fobbed off with sacks of IOUs! Not to mention, of course, the insane pay-scale extorted by the bodyguards of System big-wigs. Some expenditures are, let's face it, absolutely essential.....

The ordinary business of government was becoming more and more difficult to transact, as the enemies of the System, grown increasingly brazen with each successful assault, ignored their overlords with impunity; and the imminent collapse of the hated System had made very odd bedfellows of people who, hitherto, had had no use for each other. The ZOG had finally lost all control over young black intellectuals and street-fighters, and to ZOG's deep dismay, they had formed a coalition with White Power racists which was making the cities of the land all but ungovernable.

And it is in one of these cities that our little tale begins.....

I

Once upon a time, on a Friday evening in a strange nightmarish land called Manhattan, four young gentlemen stood on the northwest corner of 8th Avenue and 42nd Street, waiting. On all sides the rush of subhumanity swirled like excrement spiraling down a flushing toilet. Pickpockets dipped into Harris tweed; knots of working-girls sashayed back and forth in front of Show World, flesh peeping from a thousand slits and vacancies; nigglets played with their zippers for the benefit of out-of-town businessmen; and four young men in black stood, waiting. Patiently....

Pairs of terrified young policemen sauntered up and down beneath the gaudy neon streaming through the 'Deuce', as fans affectionately called the Times Square area. Underneath the marquee of the All Male cinema, an exceptionally filthy Congoid scare-crow chanted his rapid-fire incantation at the wide-eyed suburban visitors to Anus Mundi: "Hash, acid, grass, speed, dope, dilaudids, crack, ice, ecstasy, guns, girls, ID, anything what you want, my man!" His offer evidently exerted some appeal on one white couple, for, with nervous smiles and a titter or two, they shortly disappeared into one of the grimy tenements with their grinning host. Within minutes, you may be sure, they would be higher than they had ever thought possible; within hours, junior, his posterior aching quite atrociously, would watch helplessly as his girl-friend performed unspeakable, albeit quite acrobatic and racially tolerant, deeds before the cameras. In a matter of days, they would both be stars—of a sort. And on the corner, men waited, with clenched teeth and eyes alive with purpose.

An emaciated Levantine child collapsed in convulsions in front of a ribs-and-chicken joint. His jaws locked like a vise, and a cold sweat beaded up on his forehead. As the convulsions increased in duration and severity, all sorts of oxygen-consumers ambled over for a gander at the show. The child's heels and the back of his head were all that touched the ground at this point as the crowd began to spit contemptuously on his writhing form, arching quite weirdly in the hellish light. Two female cops tried in vain to break up the crowd, as the Inferno flamed on in the night. And on the corner, the waiting four. The patience.....

True to his schedule (he could be true to nothing else), Mr. Mayor emerged from his limousine in front of the XXXXXX-Shoppe, as he habitually did on Friday evenings at precisely nine o'clock. He was so comically huge that two of his henchmen had rather a lot of difficulty hoisting him from the—taxpayer-supported—leather sofa on which he had been lolling obscenely, like some corpse-worm after a feast. As he stood in front of the 'appliance' store, he pushed the bodyguards away, muttering, "Go hang out on the corner with the poofters; that's what you want, you buggers. That's where you belong!" He was eagerly obeyed. Four young men ended their vigil, and walked, one by one, into what was proudly described by its proprietor as the "filthiest store in town."

At first, our heroes thought that Mr. Mayor had given them the slip; but, after all, why would he do that? He didn't even suspect that a rendezvous had been planned. Oh, there he was, squatting down by the inter-species rack at the back of the store, adjacent to the peep-show annex. Yes, the Mayor was an animal lover of sorts. He slavered over the enticing images on the page, so peculiarly conjoined were the participants that one might have supposed them to be representations of theriomorphic deities in some outlandish and exotic cult. But we, dear reader, are well-aware, I trust, that his honor is examining this literature with very mundane purposes in mind. Sadly, however, he would never be permitted to take this periodical home to his mansion and his misses for experimental purposes, for just as he was raising himself up from his undignified squatting position, he realized that four young men in ominous-looking black outfits were blocking his egress from the corner. He was startled to see that they were smiling at him, and even more startled to note that they were pulling 9mm guns from the ample pockets of their jackets. He became quite speechless with shock as they began firing the guns into his quivering form. One knee cap, then the other, then an elbow, then the wayward bits. He begged and simpered and pleaded, slumped in his puddle of gore, but they kept plugging away at his monstrous girth, in an eerie parody of the Chinese 'torture of the thousand cuts': for, no matter how many times he was hit, he still lived and breathed, and—how shall I put this?—experienced to the full every morsel of agony, every quaint and sickening surge of pain which stole along his nerves and made his world 'a world of moan.' Finally, one of the men leaned over and whispered into the remains of his right ear, "You were a white man once; you should have stayed a white man, my friend." Then all four of the executioners leaned over and fired point-blank into his eyes. The men dropped their clips to the floor, inserted fresh ones, and began to walk towards the front of the store. The clients had stood shock-still from the moment the first shots had been fired, most of them with one hand in a pocket, afraid to move or to offer the slightest evidence of their existence to the interlopers. But, as Bobby Burns used to say, "The best laid plans of mice and men," and one by one our heroes picked them off where they stood, rags in hand. The proprietor stood frozen at his counter, in front of the racks of hardware and sculpture, numbly waiting for the inevitable. He had sorely compromised his undergarments in all the excitement, and a puddle was spreading around his shoes. The leader of the gang, to the merchant's great surprise and relief, said, "Not to worry, my good man. We won't harm you. That is, if you promise to relay a message to the newscasters who are probably on their way here as we chat." The man nodded. He also quivered just a bit. "Don't be nervous. Have I ever done anything to make you nervous? This is the message: We are going to waste all white traitors who are maintaining the political and communications superstructures for the Z.O.G. That's it—simple, really. You want to write that down? Be my guest." As the merchant nervously scribbled the message which he had memorized with surprising ease, the leader of the crew gazed around at the carnage he had wrought, and he was well-pleased. In a matter of a few seconds, the message had been scrawled and was passed back across the counter. "Yes, that's very good. And you've even got the acronym right! Actually, now that this has been written down for me by such an accomodating amanuensis—no, I'm afraid you won't have time to look that one up—I believe that I can dispense with your services." And he shot the man right in his gaping mouth, causing him to stagger against the racks of sexual appliances which dropped their peculiar cargo, in all shapes, sizes, colors, and textures, all over his twitching body. "Quite comical—he who lives by the sword shall die by the sword, what?" In a bit of waggish fun, he set several of the more gruesome-looking devices to buzzing, and laughter pealed as the young men walked calmly out into the balmy night breeze—a trifle tainted by the swarming hordes of the great unwashed on the pavement, it is true. They disappeared into the subway as sirens wailed and thrill-seekers swarmed.

The fun had just begun, for.....

.....All the Bees Are Busy

A tall figure dressed in clerical garb strolled around the ambulatory of the tiny Gothic Revival Church of the Innocents, his slender, well-manicured fingers clasped behind his back. He was obviously meditating, and a casual observer might have been forgiven for thinking that his meditations concerned the salvation of some miscreant's soul. That was not, however, the case. He was merely taking time from his arduous duties to come to a final decision: who would receive the commission for a translation of one particularly significant sacred document? The man walked slowly to the front of the magnificent altar, behind which stood, in a solid-gold frame, a magnificent portrait of Adolf Hitler. He stared up at the commanding image and his eyes misted over as he communed with his Leader. And then it came to him: one of his slaves had been a musicologist before going into comparative literature. How delightful! With a slight chuckle, Dr. Schuler—for that was our esteemed theologian's name—descended the spiral staircase which led into the brilliantly-illumined crypt, from which issued the muted tapping of many fingers on the keyboards of many word-processors. Dr. Schuler walked slowly down the room which he had designed himself for the very purpose it was now serving—that of a modernized scriptorium. For Dr. Schuler had been entrusted by the Chief of the Revolution with two tasks: first, the inauguration of a terroristic campaign against race-traitors in the Big Apple; and, second, the editing and promulgation of the sacred texts of the religion which was being brought to birth in the fires of strife.

"And how is our little Septuagint coming, my flock?" Dr. Schuler asked no one in particular as he strolled between the cots and computers. It still astonished him to think of the ease with which he had recruited these slaves for the monumental task upon which he had set them. In January, the government had invited a score of experts in Germanistics to a forum at N.Y.U. on the dangers of resurgent nationalism in the Federal Republic of Germany. One professor gave an obscure and minatory sermon on the dangers of the revival of Romanticism which was fueling the 'neo-Nazis'; another discussed the need for a revamped Social Services system in Germany, whose officers must be willing to learn the languages spoken by the migrants from Central Africa, so as better to understand their 'needs'; another asserted, in tones of outraged righteousness, that the German authorities had better begin incarcerating all suspected nationalists in detention centers wherein they would be put to work training the mongrels who would be taking their jobs. To all of this rhodomontade, Dr. Schuler lent his hearty applause, and after the three-day seminar ended, the participants went 'missing,' as the saying goes. As no one really takes intellectuals with any degree of seriousness, the authoritites had allowed these clowns to go out on the town, unescorted. Outside the Broadway bistro whither the fine scholars had repaired, waited a black van full of miscreants with billy-clubs; a few barked orders, and, presto, a barrel full of monks for the monastery. But, rest assured, Dr. Schuler had taken very good care of them. Well—of most of them: for, when he had assembled these shining lights of the intellect together in the crypt of the Church of the Innocents, many would not credit their hearing as their captor explained just what their new job-description entailed. One old fellow, who had made a name for himself with the publication of a learned tome entitled Goethe: the Tolerant Democrat, said that he wanted to know just what they were supposed to be doing there. Dr. Schuler very kindly informed the scholars that they were privileged to begin the compilation of the variorum edition of the Works of Adolf Hitler, with accompanying translations into all of the European languages. And that was just for starters. "And, gentlemen, even after that task has been accomplished, there are many more interesting books for you to edit and translate; as I am fully familiar with your academic credentials, I feel confident that you are the men for the job. I can also inform you that I hereby grant each and every one of you"— here he had paused, for effect—"tenure! If I might be the prophet for a moment," he added, wistfully, "I can assure you that none of you will ever see the daylight again." The ensemble gazed on Dr. Schuler as he he were a refugee from some mad scientist film of the thirties, and began to laugh uproariously. One of the scholars, however, seemed to have no sense of humor—the Goethe 'scholar' blankly refused to follow orders, not believing his ears. After beseeching him, in soft and beguiling accents, not to be so hasty, Dr. Schuler gave him one minute in which to change his mind. At the expiration of the term allotted, Dr. Schuler regretfully ordered one of his guards to strangle the professor immediately. As the death rattle sounded in the room, the many-talented guard began to prepare him for the mummification which would enable the defunct scholar to act as an example to the learned crew long after his demise. In very fact, our professor was eventually installed on a throne at the head of the class, as it were, in his winding-sheets, resin, aromatic essences, and KKK cone-hat.

There had been no more protests, and this evening it was Dr. Schuler's task to inform Professor Asner that he would be working on the recently-retrieved Lectures on the German Lied, which the Leader had delivered at Bayreuth back in the thirties. Fat, foul-breathed, cheesy-smelling Asner tried to look as pleased as punch with the assignment, and Dr. Schuler was so touched by the evident effort that he almost patted the fool on the back. Almost.

But hark! Dr. Schuler's acute hearing had sensed a distant sound. "They're back!" he exclaimed, and bidding a fond, albeit temporary, adieu to his busy little slaves, he hurried up the spiral staircase, tip-toed through the choir, down the steps, and across the transept. His footfall sounded gently on the marble of the nave as he greeted his returning acolytes, whose smiles told him of good deeds well done. "Let us repair to the TV room, my sons!" They followed him as he recrossed the choir and led them to a small recreation room which had formerly served as a Lady Chapel. He flicked on the telly, and there it was.....

EXTENDED FAMILY SEX ORGIES—
DON'T BE JEALOUS: JOIN IN!

Dr. Schuler rose from his seat and beckoned to his soldiers. "Come outside and let us chat beneath the waning crescent moon. I'm in a poetic mood tonight, and I think that moonlight would suit us well. Let us sit in the garden and tell happy stories of the death of mayors. But first, let me rev up the old stereo system. I need a little inspiration." In a moment, he returned, with a broad smile lighting up his fine Nordic face. "So how did it go, George?" The leader of the little group smiled and told the story of Mayor Glib's sad ending, adding that, as was to be expected, the system was lying through its teeth regarding the circumstances of the late Mayor's hurried departure from this vale of tears.

Dr. Schuler interrupted: "We all knew that they would try to put a brave face on this disaster by means of the usual disinformation. But rest assured—we've hurt them where they live tonight, and they know it. The subhuman scum who witnessed the attack will start a far more effective whispering campaign than I would ever be able to mount, largely because they will not know what they're doing. I will, however, clarify the position by Sunday Night. Let me just say that the Secretary of State is attending a gab-fest at the U.N. on Monday morning, and I think that we should pay our respects to the old bull-dyke in person. What say you all?"

In chorus, the blackshirted men shouted, "we are here to meet out thrashings!" Dr. Schuler laughed and, leaning back in his chaise

longue, pointed up at the stained glass window of the clerestory opposite him. "Do you know what we're fighting for, really fighting for, my soldiers, my workers, my totally mobilized? Do you see that figure there upending the tables of the money-changers? You know, of course, that the god has taken many shapes over the millenia, and that was one of them. But the stones which border the glass, the wondrously carved gargoyles, the splendor of the Palestrina Mass which you hear in the distance—all of these things represent the god who lives in our blood, the blood of the Great Race. For now we must live in what I like to call the Empire of the Gothic Night, but soon we will see the day and will rule in its light! We have been more fortunate than most, however, to have lived in the century during which the most authentic image of that god who lurks, who storms, who rages in our very essence, has walked our earth, and breathed our air, and suffered our death. That is much, is it not?"

The young men nodded, much moved by these deeply-felt words. Dr. Schuler leaned over and asked Gino, the youngest of the comrades, if those two homeless geeks were trying to camp out on the steps of the church again.

"I think so, Dr. Schuler. Shall I...?"

"Yes, please do—use your silencer, and call for a special trash pickup in the A.M."

"Yes, sir; of course."

"Now what were we talking about. Oh yes, church architecture; I believe that will maintain the current ecclesiological orientation of our sacred buildings after the revolution." Two dull reports pierced the silence of the night, and Gino, with a wide grin on his innocent face, sat down to discuss matters of deep philosophical and theological import with the Master. Eventually, the talk turned to the opera, an enthusiasm for which Dr. Schuler had easily communicated to his young disciples. They had become quite fond, of course, of the works of Richard Wagner, and he knew that their love for the wizard of Bayreuth would pique their interest in his latest scheme.

"Have you heard, my friends, of the new production of Tristan und Isolde which is being prepared for the Meyerson Opera House?

No? Well, it promises to be a very interesting enterprise as it is rumored to be under the direction of Mel Chechetz. You will admit that he is certainly a most innovative force in the modernist theatre." Dr. Schuler paused for a moment, and his twinkling, bright-blue eyes surveyed the group of young men with an amused expression.

George exploded: "I can imagine what that old chicken-hawk is going to do with Tristan! He'll probably tart it up as some kind of homo-propaganda, you know, Tristan making eyes at Marke, or Isolde cast as a bit of rough trade."

"Both," replied Dr. Schuler, contentedly, as he gazed through the branches of a huge oak tree, which had allegedly been planted by Edgar Allan Poe himself a century and a half ago; the sky was gray with mist and the moon was a ghost of herself.

"I think, Gino, that you had better go down to Mulberry Street tomorrow morning; I want you to pay my respects to Don Giuseppe, and ask him if he'd be willing to do a little more kidnapping for the good of the cause. The details are in this note. I have a brilliant idea for a talk-show interview on the Dave Blade Live show—honest Dave has decided to split from the program and come over to our ranks, but I told him that I want him to perform one last service for the movement before he hangs up his microphone for good. The 'system' seems to be coming apart at the seams, I imagine, and the rats are looking for alternative accommodations."

"What do you have in mind, sir?" asked Charles, a brilliant young authority on electronic torture devices and Impressionist art—when he wasn't dismantling some enemy or other, he could be found lecturing on Claude Monet at N.Y.U.

"Well, let's get a hold of the good Mr. Chechetz first, and then I will unveil my latest bit of fun. It's getting a bit chilly out here, and I need some sleep, so let us call it a night. Tomorrow's Saturday—let us meet here at noon. We've got a busy weekend ahead of us, and I want to be fresh!"

"Good night, sir!" the men cried in unison, and they rushed off into the night. Dr. Schuler waited for the last bars of the Palestrina Mass to fade to silence, then he arose, and crept off to bed. It had been a good day, indeed.....

The Guys Can't Help It

On the fourth floor of a gentrified warehouse building up on 47th St., a stage had been set up at the far side of the entrance door. At a little end-table set up by the side of the stage, Mel Chechetz prepared a light repast. On top of a two-burner hot-plate sat two medium-sized, and very ancient-looking frying pans in which sizzled two pounds of fatty bacon. Mel always ate by himself, for he realized that the spectacle of his chow-time had lost him several friends over the years. Evidently, something in the operation disturbed them, he thought, as he hoisted the partially-cooked bacon onto a platter heaped deeply with paper towels. Then, after licking his stubby fingers, he eagerly began toasting a huge loaf of bread in the still hissing bacon fat, two pieces at a time, ten seconds on each side—done in a jiff. Then he settled down to break his fast. He had just finished washing down the fatty mess with a half-gallon of Hawaiian Punch, when through the door of the rehearsal hall seeped as eerie a gaggle of poofters as had been seen since the last Halloween Parade on the West side. There were Phyllis Diller look-alikes, Elizabeth Taylor look-alikes (or could one of them have been the real thing?), tough hombres from the Ramrod school of metaphysics, and assorted geraniums and pansies in all shades and attitudes. Moving to the center of the room, Mel, a bizarre-looking toad with frizzy black hair and (you guessed it!) bulging embonpoint was vainly lisping orders past the sides of his immense proboscis to one and all: "Come ladies and gentlemen; we've got work to do, all of you darling love-machines!" Cackles stormed the rafters, and varnished fingernails drifted from buttock to buttock as the crew began to sort themselves out.

"Let me begin by explaining just what it is that I'm trying to do," he began.

"You're trying to get into the drawers of the dead mayor!" some queen in a Lana Turner outfit shouted from the center of the parquet floor.

"Very funny, I'm sure— but I do draw the line at necrophilia, my sweet," insisted Mr. Mel Chechetz, whose idea of fun was, simply, a boy; his idea of more fun was, simply, more boys.

"But seriously—we're doing Tristan at the Meyerson, and I want this to be the frilliest performance of Wagner ever, ever!" The cackling laughter of the throng sounded like tortured geese, and before silence had resumed its sway, three rough-looking Italians in biker jackets had entered the rehearsal room and were seating themselves in the rear.

Appreciative glances were shot their way, but I'm afraid that Chechetz and his fruitcakes were under some major misapprehensions as to the purposes of the visitors. No one knew who they were, and that made the flirtatious crew even more curious about the new kids in town.

"Pipe down, ladies; we have work to do," shouted Chechetz. "My Tristan production is going to elicit all sorts of meanings from this libretto that poor Wagner's subconscious, hetero-mind was unaware of—I'm going to evoke a whole new dimension of sexuality and liberation from this tragic drama. You'll remember the phallic symbolism employed by Wieland Wagner in his most-divine production? Of course you do! Well I'm going to go him one better, by covering the stage in priapic properties—I intend to dress the entire theatre as a veritable cornucopia of male members. And the three leads are going to be played by three very hunky guys in such voluminous codpieces as would have astonished the Elizabethans themselves!"

Laughter, posturing, applause, and kisses; champagne flowed and affection blossomed in the air. Chechetz's grotesquely made-up eyes beamed down upon the crew, and very delicate gestures fluttered like doves in the midst of the weirdos. Mel belched, and then began his speech proper, but, I'm afraid, the fun was not to continue, for before Chechetz could continue his spiel, the toughs at the back of the room rose up as one, and made for the stage. Two of them grasped the obese poof by the shoulders and began escorting him to the door, while the third removed three plastic bags from a leather case. The queens giggled nervously as Chechetz and the three men reached the door, and then the man with the plastic bags tore open their tops and proceeded to hurl a few grisly pounds of kitty-litter saturated with cat-urine at the dainty crowd. The shrieking and the terror were not to be believed as they attempted to get away from the disgraceful porridge. But before they could make a move for the door, it had been shut, barred, and bolted, leaving plenty of pooves with cat-whizz all over them and, well, a most untoward situation to contend with.

When the doorman saw Chechetz being escorted by such rough-looking young men, he ignored the fat queer's expostulations in the belief that he was just faking his distress. On most occasions, that would have been a sound inference, but—alas!—today was not just any day, and Melvin's cries of pain were genuine and poignant as he was hustled into the waiting black van by the curb. The doorman shook his head and smirked, as he returned to the sports page. "What a character!" he mused, tongue in cheek.

By four P.M., the inimitable chanteuse, 'Babs' Solarz, had called a press-conference at her apartment on Fifth Avenue across from Central Park, to draw attention to the abduction of one of her "deawest fwends, a piwa of da community," et cetera and so forth.

Her monstrous nostrils, more closely resembling pieces of earth-moving equipment than any product of wholesome evolutionary biology, kept banging awkwardly against the poor microphone helplessly perched, amid a typhoon of unsavory saliva, on the rickety bridge table she had borrowed from her loud-mouthed Mom, who could be heard bedeviling the staff in the kitchen. Her helmet-stiff, frosted blonde mane kept swishing back and forth in front of the famous face, as she ranted and crooned, bellowed and boomed at the assembled reporters and hangers-on.

"We know," she continued, in her usual, plangent tones, "just who is to bwame for this howendous occuwence, and they must be made to pay for their cwimes! Amewica has no place for homophobes!!" She shrieked on for endless minutes, while her associates attempted to stay downwind of her renowned armpits. Miss Babs was famous even among her scabrous cronies for the insalubrious atmosphere she toted around with her, something compounded of old makeup, unwashed feet, unmentionable aromas from unmentionable sources, and the tons of fermenting month-old detritus which she carted around in her storied schnozz. From far away, she looked almost clean, but one was quickly apprised of the ruse on closer proximity. A famous theater critic, one of the few in New York who possessed the courage to pan the performances of Miss Babs, remarked, ironically, after an interview which he had conducted with her in her dressing room at the Gershwin Theater, that Babs reminded him of St. Hilarion, who boasted loudly of his physical filthiness; of St. Anthony, who was said by St. Athanasius never to have washed his feet; of St. Abraham, who, in fifty years, had washed neither feet nor hands; and of St. Silvia, who washed nothing but her fingers! Yummy! Babs continued shrieking her tale of woe, her dire caterwauling of boycott and blackout, her cacophonous threats of a move to Tel Aviv, and so on and so forth, until the end of the conference, when she stormed out in a rage at her mother, who had not yet finished preparing the canapes and finger-food. Babs raced down the hallway and jumped into the waiting elevator in a tempest; she found herself confronted by a handsome elderly gentlemen with four very young, and very handsome young men, who smiled knowingly at the famous diva. She smiled back, her factitious and cyclopean chompers shining suggestively at her companions. They continued to smile as they ushered the giggling nymph onto the service stairs on the second floor, where she must have thought she was going to receive her just desserts. Well, my friends, she was, but not in precisely the fashion that she had expected. She was laid out on the icy concrete floor, with her pasty arms pinned tightly to her side, before she realized the nature of her escorts' intent. She screamed like a welfare mammy threatened with a job, until her gaping mouth was taped shut. As the strident echoes died, Dr. Schuler removed the surgical tools from their plush case, and proceeded as well to remove the palpably excessive tip of that hideous nasal appendage which had for so long offended the doctor's fastidious aesthetic sense. Miss Babs fainted quite dead away, and, after placing the tip of the good lady's nose in her tacky alligator-skinned handbag, he bowed politely to the unconscious 'lady,' and whispered to his cronies that they should get out of there before they caught something "for which science has been thus far unable to find a cure. I believe that we have an appointment with a famous—and soon-to-be infamous—show-biz personality, lads. We must be punctual. Avanti!"

STAY TUNED! WHEN WE RETURN, MEL CHECHETZ WILL BE IN FRONT OF THE CAMERA WITH SOME INTERESTING REFLECTIONS ON THE NATURE OF "THE JEWISH EXPERIENCE"!

PLATO'S DEATH
(ARISTOCLES, SON OF ARISTON, GOES TO THE GODS)

Outside, past the lamps, it is damp;
And the cold, ebon-tressed darkness
Is bleeding through the quivering foliage.
Here, within a warm, scented chamber,
A slender, pale forefinger,
Soft-silhouetted by dancing orange flames beyond,
Is beating time, beating time,
Now imparting to the pale Thracian maiden (Still unknowing of the Lord
Who slips, barely conscious, Lethewards, down)
The rhythm of the nomos
She's too weary to coax from her flute,
Which drops to the floor
In a sad consummation.

Now: to annotate
The golden scroll which bares
The wide Cosmos to wondering eyes.... ❑

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear George:
Merry Christmas !!!! Vergnügte Weihnachten!!!!

I hope my articles haven't placed you in a position to receive blight-wing hate mail. If any of your readers has a lemon up his/her tail, I suggest that they spit their venom my way and not yours. I reserve my American right to have controversial opinions and I support this right relative to my critics. I might suggest, however, that all of those who get their dander up, as a result of reading what I have to say, just refuse to continue reading anything which has my name on it.

I don't get pissed off at Holocaust movies, or MTV, simply because I don't watch this crap. I never get irritated at the white trash who show up at "rock concerts" merely because I never attend any.

Some blight-wingers remind me of the idiot who eats goat manure and then complains about his bad breath.

I am afraid that many of my critics are not interested about "truth" per se. They use what they believe to be the truth as a rationalization for finding someone to hate (usually the jews). This is why many of the bone-head revisionists receive so much support. They peddle their "truth" about WWII which fertilizes the wishful-thinking of those who need a reason to hate jews. This is easily demonstrated by telling a favorable truth about the jews. Once anyone does so, he is sure to be on the receiving end of non-jew hate.

Any revisionist blast concerning the latest jew-lie is received as another propaganda victory in a war the jews won long ago. Revisionists, and their supporters, are very similar to the red-necks who love arguing about the American Civil War. Arguing, and sending money to keep alive dead issues, is little other than wheel-spinning, frustration building, and extremely wasteful of our resources. Those who believe that "fighting" the Holocaust is issue number one, have continued to believe this for nearly one-half of a century. It is sad to know that these people will go to their graves carrying the same anger and sense of futility they have been harboring for decades. They are no different than the goofs who make the "end-timers" rich by sending them millions of dollars and bawling about "Jesus". They too, will go to their graves without ever experiencing any rapture.

If you want to look at the stars, you must first get your head out of the mud and admit that your head was in the mud and it needs a good washing. That's the first truth we must deal with. There are others.

Fact 1: The jews control TV, movies, and most of the periodicals. Period. They have the resources, desire, and opportunity, to manufacture kosher baloney by the tons, day after day. This is the truth you should be focusing on and not the content of their aired fantasies. Bull-crap about short-wave, public access TV, courtroom dancing, and other nonsense, will NEVER put a dent in the propaganda power of the jews. In fact, if blight-wing windmills ever started to get effective, then some "accident" would be arranged.

The problem with revisionism is that it is reactionary and out of tune with what America was supposed to be about. The burden of proof lies totally with the accuser and, in spite of the recent Perry Mason shows, one does not have to "prove his innocence." This inversion of "who's on top" is part of the revisionist folderol. A pack of jews manufacture another "whopper" and the revisionists immediately go into the "proving it false" business. It takes only a few moments to fabricate a tale but disproving it could take years.

Revisionists also have spaghetti for brains. They believe that jews are history's foremost liars and then they dive into a foray as if they were battling a truth. If you held as axiomatic a notion that the jews always told the truth, then stabbing at their latest tale would, at least, have some component of logic. Walt Disney never produced a true movie and neither did the rest of Hollywood, then, now, or ever. If you want to fight blather, you'll always be employed, that is, if you can convince someone to pay for your imprudence. After nine years, Don Clark finally learned that his wife was a slut but that didn't change her one bit.

Fact 2: All television is anti-Aryan. Period. If you are getting myopia gawking at the tube and waiting for some "break", then you had better fill your larder with a large supply of popcorn.

Fact 3: A massive number of white people are worthless and it is a waste of time trying to let "the truth set them free". Yes friends, thousands of pale-faces are degenerates and renegades. Our frontier Redskins never had the brains to manufacture guns and bullets, but some white apostate (prototype capitalist) managed to sell them some. The "white race" needs a lot of pruning.

Fact 4: The jews never seized the American reins of power. It was handed to them by Whites many of whom share in that power and the Zionism they hold in common. Six, or ten, million jews simply could not control 200 million white people unless most of them gave their tacit consent to playing "drop the soap" [This is exactly what I must have told a hundred or so thousand people over the years, including our late Professor Oliver: A few million jews, scattered all over the world, could not have achieved the positions of control and power they now have had it not been for the ACTIVE HELP, AID AND ASSISTANCE OF OUR OWN WHITE, CHRISTIAN brethren!!! —Editor].

Fact 5: You cannot save idiots from their stupidity. Millions of Whites are little other than high-grade morons. Why cast rubys before hogs? Anyone stupid enough to snort cocaine rightly deserves the problems which follow. Drugs follow the stupid as do the flies who migrate towards the sewer. If you believe that all white people are equal, and valuable, then how are you different from those who believe that all hominids are equal, and valuable? This smacks of warped christianity and marxism.

Do the people who get upset over movies about a phoney Holocaust also get torqued out watching "The Wizard of Oz"? It's time to grab the sleeping Princess by one of her knockers and get her to open her eyes. Hasn't the failure of forty years of Holocaust jousting dawned upon anyone yet?

If we suppose that the revisionist wishful-thinking finally bears fruit and the Holocaust is relegated to some Fairy Tale book, then what? Will the rapes and muggings stop? Will the give-away of our sovereignty cease? Will all of the Mestizos return to Capistrano? Will the perverts stop playing with rectums and the drug-soaked suddenly find Christ? Will all of the race-traitors promptly become racists? Will the lions lie down with the goyim? And swords turned into sky-hooks? Will a wishful thought-come-true only give birth to another wishful thought?

While the passengers are debating over whether the band played a waltz or a fox-trot, they should firstly remember that the ship is called Titanic.

Sincerely, Robert Frano

Mr. J. E. Dunlap
Editor Emeritus
Harrison Daily Times
P.O. Box 40, Harrison AR 72602

Dear Mr. Dunlap: October 16, 1994

I was surprised with the contents of your "On the Inside"column of Sunday, 16 October. You gave credit to a late Logan Jarnigan for the authorship of this 'mythical' Last Will of Adolf Hitler that constituted your column. It was a scathing propaganda piece right out of the waning days of World War II. A time, by the way, when most of us had had our emotions for hate and brutality raised to white-hot heat by the clever and talented merchants of propaganda so ably employed by our government and that of Great Britain.

Many of us, Mr. Dunlap, especially young soldiers such as I, hardly out of our teens when the war ended, began to have feelings of unease about the origins of the War and its conduct by our side by mid-1946. As Sergeant/Major of the Office of the Surgeon for all of the United Kingdom in early 1946, I had as my chief clerk a young German soldier: a POW. Not only was he the most efficient aide I ever had, he was the most intelligent. We were the same age: 22 years. We had many arguments in the privacy of my office and when I allowed him to speak freely. Unlike the element that controls most of the press in this country today, I truly believed in free speech. I learned much from Frank W——. He made me aware that two sides exist, at least, to every proposition.

When one cools from the heat of anger, Mr. Dunlap, often one finds that he is ashamed of the excesses he committed during his fit of pique. When I went to Japan during the Korean War, I was amazed at their industriousness; their friendliness; their intelligence. I returned home in late 1951 with an entirely altered opinion of the Japanese. While I thought of them as "scum" in 1944, not knowing then that Roosevelt et al had deliberately driven them into an attack upon Pearl Harbor so that Roosevelt could loose US forces against the Germans (who had done nothing to us, by the way), I think of the Japanese today as an extraordinary people of great ability. How odd that you would print an article today that refers to them as "scum."

The war in Europe ended 50 years ago next Spring, Mr.Dunlap. Within three years after WW I ended, historians and writers were already engaged in taking to task those government and media figures who had lied to the people so egregiously in order to fan to high heat a hatred for their German foe. Lies that painted the Germans as "Huns" who caught babies on their bayonets. By 1930 the British government had already admitted its guilt in this shameful charade to arouse killing instincts within its citizenry. The film "All Quiet on the Western Front" showed with great skill and emotion that the German soldier was every bit as brave and honorable as the allied soldier. Unhappily, as Oxford historian A.J.P. Taylor reminds us, no such effort to tell the truth about allied propaganda of WW II was made after that cruel and unnecessary war. All soldiers are to be pitied. They are but the pawns used by governments to further ignoble ends.

While in England in September of this year, I returned to a spot where I was once stationed in the summer of 1944. The facility is now a hospital of sorts. I learned this trip that a Victory Oak had been set out on the grounds there by my old commanding officer in the summer of 1945. I asked to visit that oak. One of the staff, a woman of my generation, volunteered to show me the oak. As we walked down the corridor toward itsl ocation, I told her that I had been stationed there in 1944. She was interested to learn this. She was in the forces herself at that time she said. She turned to me and rather sadly said, "We were so full of hope for the future in 1945, weren't we?" I nodded. "What went wrong?" she asked. "Why has such evil overtaken us? We thought we were the victors! Now there is so much degeneracy in your country and mine."

"I know the source of the evil," I said. "But, unfortunately, I have not the time to explain it just now."

I find it rather grotesque, Mr. Dunlap, for you to print such an outdated propaganda piece as you did this morning. One wonders why. There is an element in our society, of course, that has gained much from refusing to allow WW II to end. Tragically, that element, alien in its allegiance and destructive in its assault upon our traditions, now owns the press. But, there are faint signs the people are becoming aware of this peril. I take some heart in that.

Yours truly

Another piece of memorabilia left by the late Logan Jamagin was a "Last Will and Testament of Adolf Hiter, alias Adolf Schickelgruber."

It was dated "very soon" and the printing was compliments of Hammerschmidt Lumber Co., who at the time had served this community for 33 years. The lumber company's phone number - 333.

Here's the copy:

I, Adolf Hitler, being of unsound mind and misery, and considering the possibility of a fatal accident known as assassination, declare this to be my last (you hope) will and testament.

To France, I leave all the beautiful Mademoiselles in occupied Paris. I was never the one for girls. Whoops!

To England, I leave the original manuscript of Mein Kampf, which their R.A.F. spoiled. I had written a different finish, but their fliers got me in the end.

To America, I leave Walter Winchell who always said, "To heil with Hitler." I know he'll be very busy on my funeral day so he'd better not come—business before pleasure.

To Mussolini, I leave my Chaplin mustache, which he is to make into a toupe for his ivory dome. He will need a disguise to hide from the Italians who know what a mess he got them into.

To Franklin D. Roosevelt, I leave my apology for interrupting his fishing, but he got even. His "Unconditional Surrender" agreement at Casablanca certainly cooked my goose.

To Goebbels and Ribbentrop, I leave 30 million marks (two dollars) to buy a gift for my mother and father who are getting married the day I die.

To Count Ciano, son-in-law of Mussolini, I leave the Victoria Cross for bringing down in one day, 41 bombers and 72 fighters—all Italian.

To Norway's Quisling, I leave my double cross. He was a piker compared to me, when it came to double crossing.

To Poland, I leave a 16x10 gold-framed photograph of myself to hang in their public schools to scare the hell out of any kid who might think along Nazi lines.

To the Jews, I leave a new holiday, which they will celebrate annually. The whole world knows I was kind to them but they somehow did not seem to appreciate it.

To Japan's (Land of the rising scum) Hirohito, I leave all my medals, which will help him sink quicker when he goes down in the Pacific.

To the German people, I leave all pictures of myself, especially those printed on soft paper, as I know what they will do with them.

To Himmler and Goering, I leave the final execution of my will as they are experienced at executions.

To the entire world, I just leave, and will they thank God!

My final wish is that I be buried in an asbestos suit, as I will need it where I am going.

Regarding Joseph D. Pryce's "Colloquy At The Edge Of The Void" in the November issue, the author makes some good points especially when he speaks of the predisposition of right wingers to participate in radio and TV talk shows while unprepared. However, I would warn your readers of Alain de Benoist who the author says "has...a better shot at recruiting the significant minority, the Spenglers, the Chamberlains, and the Rosenbergs who will act as the masters of thought in our revolutionary age. Evidently M. de Benoist looks down his nose with disdain at National Socialism and those who champion it. In a letter to the editor of the Scorpion he writes: "The question of knowing to what extent a platform should be offered to extreme individuals or groups is not a matter of respectability, but rather, as I see it, a question of knowing what positions one wishes to affirm. If you decide to publish Mr. (Colin) Jordan's elucubrations that is up to you but it should only be done on condition that you clearly distance yourself from him, otherwise you run the risk of not being taken seriously as a platform of debate...". No doubt M. de Benoist considers himself a respectable rightist and Mr. Colin Jordan and National Socialism as being beyond the pale. Mr. Colin Jordan's latest contribution to Liberty Bell was, I believe, in the June 1994 issue, "National Socialism: A Philosophical Appraisal".

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

BOOK REVIEW

By
Charles E. Weber, Ph.D.

Richard J. Herrnstein and Charles Murray, The Bell Curve/Intelligence and Class Structure in American Life, New York: The Free Press, 1994. xxvi + 845 pages.

The authors introduce the contents of their book as follows (page xxi): "This book is about differences in intellectual capacity among people and groups, and what those differences mean for America's future. The relationships we will be discussing are among the most sensitive in contemporary America—so sensitive that hardly anyone writes or talks about them in public. It is not for lack of information, as you will see."

Herrnstein, who died of lung cancer last September, was the son of Hungarian Jewish immigrants and for some years chairman of the Department of Psychology at Harvard. Perhaps these credentials gave him more freedom to write what is contained in The Bell Curve than would otherwise have been the case. Murray is also the author of the influential book, Losing Ground: American Social Policy 1950-1980 (1984).

A measure of the value and significance of The Bell Curve can be discerned from the treatment it has received in the liberal, Establishment media.

An editorial comment in U.S. News of 24 October (page 24) claims that the book "leads nowhere, except toward pessimism and negative group labeling. It plays to the gathering storm over affirmative action but infects that legitimate debate with deadly genetic arguments. It could encourage a eugenic solution to the problem of the underclass, though Murray insists that's not what he wants. ....This is a very unhelpful book." The editorial even suggests that the book "seems clearly intended as a provocative political act." In a detailed review U.S. News continues its discussion (pages 73, 75-76, 78, 80) and reports that President Clinton "told aides last week he is 'outraged by the thrust of the book.'" (What better recommendation could The Bell Curve have?)

Newsweek of 24 October even features the book on its cover and contains a long discussion of it (pages 52-60). The cover portrays two heads facing in opposite directions, one of a Caucasian man and another of a Negro man, with the question, "IQ / Is It Destiny?" between them. The author of the Newsweek review, Tom Morgenthau, asserts that The Bell Curve is a big, complex book that is based on a deeply pessimistic—and deeply angry—view of American society." Perhaps there are some good reasons for pessimism and anger. The review in Newsweek, like so many other commentaries on The Bell Curve, is largely concerned with what the book discusses in Chapter 13, "Ethnic Differences in Cognitive Ability," a topic to which only a modest fraction of pages in the book is devoted.

Time (24 October, pages 66-67) quotes from the New Republic an angry sentiment expressed by a critic, who describes the "theories of the two men as 'indecent, philosophically shabby and politically ugly' and as 'pseudoscientific racism.'" Time concludes its relatively short review with: "It looks as if it [the book] is likely to be remembered for some dubious premises and toxic conclusions." Toxic to whom?

One evening in November the television newsman Peter Jennings introduced a rather lengthy segment of his broadcast devoted to The Bell Curve, This segment emphasized the development of eugenic thought in America with the almost obligatory suggestion that eugenic measures in Germany led to the so-called "Holocaust."

A rather sympathetic review of The Bell Curve was published in Forbes of 24 October, pages 153-158,163. This review characterizes the book as "massive, meticulous, minutely detailed, clear." The Forbes review, however, steers clear of the differences in intellectual capacities of various races which are discussed especially in Chapter

A "symposium" of fourteen commentaries on The Bell Curve appeared in National Review of 5 December. The symposium occupies nearly 19 pages. The commentaries are of quite varied value. The most significant one is by the psychometrics expert, Arthur Jensen, whose long article in the Harvard Educational Review (Winter, 1969, pages 1-123), "How Much Can We Boost IQ and Scholastic Achievement?" touched off an acrimonious debate across the country. Jensen's commentary, "Paroxysms of Denial," discusses the desperate, unscrupulous attempts to discredit The Bell Curve by name calling, falsehoods and other means. Nathan Glazer argues in favor of "affirmative action," which, after all, is a system of prejudice against white men in higher education and the workplace which Herrnstein and Murray discuss in two important chapters, numbers 19 and 20 (pages 447-508). A Catholic priest whose church has a long tradition of resistance to any scientific progress which might conflict with its dogmas, calls The Bell Curve "mischievous and naive" and claims that questioning taboos "can be destructive." About half of the fourteen authors are largely concerned with the material presented in Chapter 13, "Ethnic Differences in Cognitive Ability (pages 269-315), which are summed up in a graph on page 279 This graph shows the densest distribution of IQ in Negroes at about 15 points less than the densest distribution of IQ in Caucasians. The very first author in the symposium, Michael Barony, points out that the mass of data contained in The Bell Curve simply confirms what most observant people have learned by common experience.

Although none of the fourteen authors disputes these data, not a single one of them advocates any eugenic measures which would counterbalance the excessive reproduction of persons with low mental abilities, even though sixteen states of the United States passed laws providing for eugenic sterilization between 1907 and 1917, as The Bell Curve points out (page 5). In 1927 Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, in upholding the constitutionality of these laws, declared: "Three generations of imbeciles are enough." On the whole, however, The Bell Curve shies away from the question of eugenic measures and the phrase, "outrageous racial policies" comes just before mention of the American sterilization laws, although so much of The Bell Curve could be taken as a compelling argument for the reintroduction of such laws. On page 343, in Chapter 15, which is devoted to the question of dysgenesis, there is mention of "the terrors of nazism [sic] and its perversion of eugenics that effectively wiped the idea from public discourse in the West." In fact, though, the German eugenics law of 14 July 1933 (Gesetz zur Verhütung erbkranken Nachwuchses) provided for special eugenic courts (Erbgesundheitsgerichte), whose decisions could be appealed. Having lived in Germany during 1945-1948 and at various times later, I have often pondered to what extent eugenic policies during the National Socialist period might have been responsible for the "economic miracle" of postwar Germany in spite of the terrible destruction, hunger and economic and psychological burdens imposed by the Allies on Germany.

Professor Arthur Jensen points out in the National Review "Symposium" that The Bell Curve does not mention the fact "that IQ is also correlated with a number of variables of the brain, including its size, electrical potentials, and rate of glucose metabolism during cognitive activity." That, indeed, is a notable lacuna in The Bell Curve. In that connection, we note that such aspects are discussed in considerable detail with regard to genetically determined behavior in a book published over 30 years ago but still quite pertinent to the problems discussed in The Bell Curve. That book is The Biology of the Race Problem by Wesley Critz George, who was formerly head of the Department of Anatomy at the University of North Carolina Medical School. It seems to me that there is another notable lacuna in The Bell Curve, whose authors pay little attention to striking differences in the economic well-being of various countries with distinct racial populations. They could, for example, have contrasted the standards of living in Haiti, with its nearly purely Negro population, and Switzerland, with its nearly completely Caucasian population. In addition to Prof. George's book, two other books have had a profound effect on my own thinking in the area of mental abilities. One of these books is The Geography of Intellect by Nathaniel Weyl and Stefan Possony (Chicago, 1963). This book approaches the question of intellectual attainments of various races from a diachronic, geographical and cultural point of view. The other book is Race by John R. Baker (1974). In this book the approach is primarily that of physical anthropology, with chapters on cognitive abilities. I would recommend all three of these books as valuable supplements to The Bell Curve, which mentions none of them, by the way.

The New York Times Book Review of 16 October (Pages 3,41 and 45) contains amazingly sympathetic and lucid reflections on three books dealing with related topics: The Bell Curve, J.Philippe Rushton's Race, Evolution and Behavior and Seymour W. Itzkoff's The Decline of Intelligence in America. This triple review is entitled, "What Is Intelligence and Who Has It?" (Rushton's views on race differences and reproductive strategies are summarized on pages 642-643 of The Bell Curve.)

The New Republic of 31 October contains an eleven-page "Apologia" by Herrnstein and Murray which summarizes their views on ethnic differences in cognitive ability, largely what they had previously presented in Chapter 13 of The Bell Curve, including three important graphs. This summary is preceded by fifteen pages of commentaries by eighteen authors, some of them with interesting insights and criticisms but mostly hostile. The last and perhaps most significant of the commentaries (by Michel Lind) discusses the renewed vigor of hereditarianism and its present position on the American political scene. Lind raises the possibility of a clash between eugenic theory and the dogmas of resurgent fundamentalism. (A half century ago a parallel conflict arose in wartime Germany. Hitler, faced with a shortage of facilities for caring for wounded soldiers and threatened with a shortage of food as a result of the British blockade, hesitantly authorized eugenic euthanasia. By 1942, however, protests by prominent Catholic clergymen put a stop to this practice.) Another commentary points out various levels of educational attainment amongst persons classified as "white" by national origins (Irish, German, "Russian," i.e., largely Jewish, etc.) One commentary was a thoughtful criticism of intelligence tests written by Walter Lipmann, a noted journalist, in 1922. Lipmann's short commentarty posits arguments that are still raging, over 70 years later.

The New York Review of Books (1 December, pages 14-19) contains an attempt to make a case against The Bell Curve by means of a sort of ad hominem argument, namely by pointing out that a number of authors whom Herrnstein and Murray use as "tainted" sources were contributors to The Mankind Quarterly (founded in Edinburgh in 1960) and that some of them received research subsidies from the Pioneer Fund (founded in 1937 for the purpose of research in eugenics).

In view of the great volumes of commentary on The Bell Curve in the American press, though much of it hostile, the book is at least not being given the lethal silent treatment by powerful men in the publishing business hostile to its theses. Silence in the media is usually worse for the influence of a book even than hostile criticism, as revisionists of the "Holocaust" material know from experience. Sales of the book are now reputed to be approaching a half million copies. Such a volume of sales is an assurance that the book will wield a considerable influence on the thinking of Americans in influential, decision-making positions. The success of the book in terms of attention it has attracted might well be due to a rising fear, especially among middle-class Caucasians, now including Jews, that the country is headed in the wrong direction as a result of wrong, unjust, destructive public policies. Many people are desperately seeking information and ideas that could bring about changes.

In discussions of The Bell Curve the word "inferior" is often used with reference to the cognitive abilities of Negroes. But what constitutes being "inferior"? If Negro brains are poor in abstract thinking and planning abilities and Negroes are consequently inclined to go on reproductive rampages and if earnings of the more "successful" people are strongly redistributed to the "unsuccessful," then what does "inferior" really mean? In a Darwinian sense, the race which sufficiently outreproduces another race is clearly superior by surviving in greater numbers in the given environment. Have Afro-Americans become examples of Darwin's "survival of the fittest"? American Aryans had better ponder over what heavy redistribution of their earnings and present immigration policies are doing to their race. If present trends continue (i.e., if present redistributive functions of government and present immigration policies continue) American Aryans are doomed to becoming an abused, exploited minority in the United States during the coming century, as is already the case in some large American cities. It would seem probable that a graduated income tax has an inherently dysgenic effect.

Let me now attempt a brief overview of the contents of the massive Bell Curve by mentioning just some of its most important data and arguments.

Part I, "The Emergence of a Cognitive Elite," consists of four chapters (Pages 25-115). Attention is called to the tremendous growth in the percentage of Americans who have taken college degrees, especially since 1920, rising from about 2% to 30% of persons 23 years of age. Earlier in the century many high-IQ people did not go to college and remained more in contact with less intelligent people in their communities, but there is now a tendency toward isolation of people with various levels of cognitive abilities. Cognitive test scores have a greater validity than any other source of information in predicting job performance (page 81). The authors believe that IQ is substantially heritable but decline to give an exact proportion of hereditability on the basis of present-day information. The best source for estimating the genetic factor in intelligence is derived from studies of identical twins who have been raised apart from each other. In Chapter 4, "Steeper Ladders, Narrower Gates," the authors leave no doubt that there is a strong positive correlation between cognitive abilities (as measured primarily by intelligence tests) and income. However, economic success is not only a matter of income, but what its recipients do with it. Perhaps cognitive abilities are at least as much involved in the management of money as in earning it. It would be interesting to know something about the correlation of assets, not just income, and cognitive abilities. Such information is not furnished in The Bell Curve. One of the concluding paragraphs of Part I summarizes that the cognitive elite is becoming relatively richer and increasingly segregated and likely to intermarry (page 114).

Part II, "Cognitive Classes and Social Behavior," consists of eight chapters (pages 117-266), in which the authors examine how much intelligence has to do with America's most pressing social problems. The most important source of data for Part II comes from the National Longitudinal Survey of Labor Market Experience of Youth (pages 118-120). The NLSY (as the authors abbreviate it) was commenced in 1979 and is especially well suited as a source for Part II because it included psychometric data which was needed by the Department of Defense to update its norms for intelligence tests. While dividing the population into five classes of levels of cognative abilities, the authors examine poverty, schooling, unemployment, family matters, welfare dependency, parenting, crime and citizenship in relation to levels of cognitive abilities. In general, they find close concomitancy in all of these areas.

Throughout Part II the data pertain only to the Caucasian component of the United States population. The authors thus reduce the number of variables being considered by confining their considerations to data on one race. The reader of The Bell Curve who is looking for a detailed, explicit discussion of the relationship of the low average intelligence of Negroes to their grossly disproportionate crime rates will be disappointed, although Negro crime is one of the most disturbing and visible problems that America is facing. Crime is the topic of Chapter 11 (Pages 235-251) but, strange as it may seem, this chapter makes no specific mention of the high rates of violent crime committed by Negroes. An important graph on page 236 portrays the astonishing increase in violent crime after the 1950s. This chapter describes a renewed recognition by criminologists of the concomitancy of low intelligence and the proneness to commit violent crime. (By the way, many passages in The Bell Curve do not seem to make a clear distinction between concomitancy and causation.) We finally encounter a brief passage on Negro crime rates on pages 338-339. For information on Negro crime rates, the reader would do well to consult W.C.George's The Biology of the Race Problem (mentioned above) or the far more recent Paved With Good Intentions by Jared Taylor (1992; reviewed in Liberty Bell of December 1993).

Part III, "The National Context" (pages 269-386), consists of four chapters, the first of which, Chapter 13, "Ethnic Differences in Cognitive Ability" (pages 269-315), has attracted the most attention of critics of the book. The authors begin the chapter by pointing out that East Asians (notably Japanese and Chinese) attain somewhat higher intelligence test scores than Caucasians, partly on the basis of data from Hong Kong.(We must note, though, that Hong Kong itself is essentially a creation of European man and if we look even superficially at modern Japan, we note that it is largely a product of the inventiveness of European man. We see Japanese dressed in the European style flying airplanes, driving automobiles and locomotives that were developed by Caucasians, using coins of European style [first struck by the Meiji government in 1870] and using a myriad of other inventions of Caucasians. In Japanese concert halls the music of such composers as Beethoven and Mozart predominates. Even the Roman alphabet and European numerals are often encountered.) It is claimed on page 275 that Ashkenazi Jews "test higher than any other ethnic group." It occurs to me that this information is placed in the beginning of the chapter in order to give the authors a better defensive position against critics who might claim that they are racists simply expressing an ethnocentric bias. Later parts of the chapter are almost entirely devoted to "black-white difference" (pages 276 ff.) and the especially controversial "question of genetic differences between the races" (pages 295 ff.). After presenting a great variety of evidence, including the environments of adopted children, the authors of The Bell Curve state (page 311): "It seems highly likely to us that both genes and environment have something to do with racial differences" but admit to being "resolutely agnostic" on the proportions of the influences. The large differences in Negro and Caucasian IQ, some 15 points where the mean is set at 100, are illustrated by graphs on ages 277 and 279. In general, and in particular pages 272-273, it seems to me that Herrnstein and Murray pay too little attention to selective factors in migration. Do the Japanese in Hong Kong, for example, represent primarily a group of above-average Japanese who came to Hong Kong as members of a more intelligent, mobile, energetic merchant class?

Chapter 14, "Ethnic Inequalities in Relation to IQ (pages 317-340), continues a comparison of ethnic groups, but this time in terms of variations in their behavior. With regard to the probability of holding a bachelor's degree at an average age of 29, the percentage is 27% for Caucasians, 11% for Afro-Americans and 10% for Latinos. However, the picture becomes much different when only persons with an IQ of 114 are considered. In that case far more Afro-Americans have college degrees (68%) than Caucasians (50%) and Latinos (49%). The reason for this, of course, is that relatively few Afro-Americans have an IQ of 114. Similar comparisons of Caucasians, Afro-Americans and Latinos are made for occupational status, wages, poverty, unemployment, marital status, illegitimate births, being on welfare, children living in poverty etc. The authors conclude the chapter by pointing out that the data that they have presented "give everyone who writes and talks about ethnic inequalities reason to avoid flamboyant rhetoric about ethnic oppression."

One of the most significant chapters of the book, number 15, headed "The Demography of Intelligence," deals with the conflicting evidence on the question as to whether dysgenic forces are having a depressing effect on the national assets of cognitive abilities (pages 341-368). This question is especially inportant since it is pertinent to all sorts of policy questions in the areas of taxation, welfare, education, immigration and allocation of resources. A number of authors have struggled with the problem of dysgenesis, even as early as Darwin and Galton in the nineteenth century. Although the evidence is presented as inconclusive and scholars are divided on the question, there are some important recent developments which presumably have a depressing effect on the reproduction rates of women with high abilities, who are now shying away from reproduction or delaying it for the sake of careers. The graph on page 353 indicates that women with higher levels of education are bearing so few children that they are not replacing themselves and their husbands. Immigration is another factor. A list on page 359 gives the percentages by origin of recent immigrants. Only 11% of them are "non-Latino white." This pattern of immigration could thus have a dysgenic effect in view of the IQ levels typical of the ethnic groups involved. Although Chapter 15 suggests the need for effective eugenic measures, the authors are shy about recommending them (page 548).

Unlike Chapter 14, Chapter 16, "Social Behavior and the Prevalence of Low Cognitive Ability" (pages 369-386), does not make racial distinctions in the data presented. The graphs in the two chapters are of a different form. The graph on page 370, for example, gives the percentages of poor people in the various IQ deciles. In 1989, 48% of the people classified as poor are in the lowest two IQ deciles, i.e., are in the lowest 20% of intelligence. Persons who present social problems such as dropping out of high school, unemployment, crime, welfare dependency and illegitimate births are strongly disproportionally in the lowest 20% of intelligence levels, as the many graphs in the chapter illustrate. For that reason measures undertaken to deal with such social problems must be designed with the awareness that the measures must be suited primarily for persons with low intelligence.

Part IV, "Living Together," contains the remaining six chapters (pages 387-552). These six chapters deal with practical questions of policy.

Chapter 17, "Raising Cognitive Ability" (pages 389-416), examines the attempts to find ways to raise intelligence. Better nutrition has offered some hope, but a study of over 100,000 Dutch men born around the time of a famine toward the end of the Second World War showed that the famine did not lower their intelligence. Compensatory education programs such as Head Start (page 403) have had disappointing results in the long run. Adoption of children from poor environments into better homes raises cognitive functioning. The authors conclude that an "inexpensive, reliable method of raising IQ is not available."

Chapter 18, "The Leveling of American Education" (pages 417-445), analyses trends in American education during the last several decades. International studies have shown that American students are weak in mathematics and the sciences in comparison with students in other industrialized countries. Gifted students are being given almost no help from the federal government, which has concentrated its efforts on the disadvantaged. Verbal Scholastic Aptitude Test scores declined sharply after 1963. Scholastic standards in the high schools are not rigorously supported by most parents and scholastic performance in high school does not mean much to most employers in hiring procedures. The incentives for scholastic excellence are therefore weak. The authors recommend that parents be given greater choice of schools for their children by vouchers, tuition tax credits and the like and that a federal prize scholarship program be established as a means of restoring prestige to scholarly excellence in high schools.

Of all the 22 chapters in The Bell Curve, I think that the two concerning the problems engendered by "affirmative action" are the chapters most likely to help bring about changes in government policy. Affirmative action, after all, is a cynical euphemism for giving preference to certain racial minorities and women at the expense of Caucasian men. The two chapters are "Affirmative Action in Higher Education" (Chapter 19; pages 447-477) and "Affirmative Action in the Workplace" (Chapter 20; pages 479-508). At distinguished universities the effects of affirmative action in admissions have resulted in having Afro-American students with far lower Scholastic Aptitude Test scores than those of Caucasian students (tables on pages 452 and 472). The authors consider the arguments in favor of affirmative action in universities but conclude (page 475) that "affirmative action as it is being practiced is a grave error." One of the strongest arguments against affirmative action is the reduction in the prestige of degrees awarded to minority students.

Chapters 19 and 20 are supplemented by the valuable Appendix 7, "The Evolution of Affirmative Action in the Workplace" (pages 655-663), which gives details of the legal and judicial basis of affirmative action. As absurd and wasteful as it might seem, the U.S. Supreme Court handed down a decision in 1971 (Griggs versus Duke Power Co.) that prohibits the use of intelligence tests by employers for hiring selection if the tests are not specifically related to job performance. The Supreme Court thus deprived employers of the best predictor of job performance. It seems that too many Negroes were doing poorly on intelligence tests. The Court was acting on the unscientific hypothesis that any test that did not yield equal results for members of all races must be unfair or invalid. Losses to the American economy from this Supreme Court decision are estimated to run into many billions of dollars (page 85), not to mention the added resentment in the Caucasian victims. The authors of The Bell Curve believe that "the system of affirmative action, in education and the workplace alike, is leaking poison into the American soul" (page 508).

Chapter 21, "The Way We Are Headed" (pages 509-526), notes a tendency toward a coalition of the cognitive elite and the affluent. The relation and attitudes of this coalition to the underclass with low intelligence might lead to social tensions analogous to those in Latin America. The coming of a "custodial state" is predicted and the resurgence of racism is considered a possibility..

Chapter 22, the last (pages 527-552), bears the optimistic title, "A Place for Everyone." The authors plead for a realistic recognition of different abilities in individuals and cite the views of Thomas Jefferson on the education of a natural aristocracy. Once more the authors refer to dysgenesis and government policies causing it (page 548) and advocate immigration laws that would serve American interests. Herrnstein and Murray should also have heeded the admonishment from Jefferson's Notes on the State of Virginia (1782): "To our reproach, it must be said, that though for a century and a half we have had under our eyes the races of black and of red men, they have never yet been viewed by us as subjects of natural history.

The Bell Curve is a valuable addition to the literature in the field of cognitive abilities for its presentation, analyses and organization of a mass of recent data. Candor and rational thought are an ever greater need in this area and the authors have gone much further in meeting this need than is typically the case in academic circles, but I cannot escape the impression that the biases of academe and the current political climate of the United States have inhibited their presentations and analyses to a considerable extent. (On these biases, see Roger Pearson, Race, intelligence and Bias in Academe, 1991, a good supplement to The Bell Curve.) Herrnstein and Murray have raised some important questions once more and have presented a mass of data in attempts to answer them, but the reader should be aware of some of the lacunae of the book, namely historical information and data from physical anthropology, of which they could have taken better advantage. Much of what the book contains is not new in the sense that much of the knowledge that they present has been known at least in broad outlines for a long time, even since the 1920s. What is new and important in the book is the presentation and analysis of recent data, notably from the National Longitudinal Survey of Labor Market Experience of Youth, information and ideas on the latest problems engendered by "affirmative action" and the extensive bibliography (pages 775-832) which can serve as a guide to recent research in the field of cognitive abilities. The Bell Curve is imperative reading for people in the teaching profession and legislators enacting laws pertaining to social problems. ❑

by Carl Hottelet

"The peachpit said to the apple core: 'The color of your skin doesn't matter anymore!'" For decades the media drummed the fatuous ditty into our heads.

It was the theme song of a campaign to convince Americans, African-Americans and European Americans in particular, that there is no important difference among races. Apparent differences are the result of environmental variants, which are accidental. Provide all with the same environment, and all will turn out the same.

The irony of this lunacy's being promoted by the one ethnic group in the country that proclaims stridently, "We will not assimilate!" went unreported, and unnoticed.

The equality-through-environment dogma led to the infamous school-bussing experiment. Those who protested, pointing out that there were differences among the races other than the visible ones, and more significant, were denounced as ignorant reactionaries. When the opponents of the bussing scheme declared that it would do great harm to children, black and white—more to black children than to white—they were reviled by the ideologues, the media, and the special interest cliques as "racists" and "fascists."

Hundreds of thousands of children and adolescents, African-American and European-American, were trucked many miles and long hours every day from their home neighborhoods to distant, alien, often hostile, schools and back again. Black youngsters were transported from allegedly inferior inner city "ghetto" schools to supposedly superior suburban schools. That was guaranteed to make them just as bright and as well educated as the white kids. The implicit insult to African-Americans may have been lost on the fanatics forcing this idiocy—it was not lost on black leaders.

The millions of hours—when they should have been on the playing field, or in the study hall, or simply getting enough sleep—needlessly, and noxiously stolen from them, made it a sure thing that American youngsters, black and uhite, would be at the bottom of the international educational totem pole.

The instigators of this outrage have their offspring tucked well away in secure private schools, safe from the turmoil inflicted on less fortunate children, black or white.

Once the bussing disaster was in place, judges assumed a major part in "overseeing" it—and making it worse. Omnipoitent, arrogant, accountable to no one, it pleased them to dabble in social engineering. Their notions vere law, their whims beyond recourse. Many were obsessed by a mania for "racial balance." They inflicted their prejudices on whole communities, disrupting some of them permanently. That didn't trouble the learned judges. They lived elsewhere, far from the havoc they rought. A disproportionately high number of them were Jews.

A question comes to mind: Is the otherwise inexplicable insanity of remedial bussing a manifestation of the millenial Jewish tactic of fomenting conflict among host peoples, in pursuit of the end objective of attaining domninion over them?

Toward that overriding end, school bussing served special purposes: To persuade African-Americans that Jews are their patrons and protectors, and to divert them from dwelling on real and actual problems, of which Jews often were both originators and beneficiaries.

—Enslavement by the welfare system, for which African-Americans provide the great bulk of the clientele it needs to exist. On the backs af these clients, swarms of administrators, analysts, sociologists, case workers, counselors, psychologists, psychiatrists, statisticians, lawyers, and other such functionaries enjoy interesting, well-paid, unproductive careers, the enjoyment often enhanced by lavish perks. Of these welfare careerists, a disproportianatly large number are Jews.

—Entrapment in hellish inner city slums, being stuffed int "welfare hotels" from which Jews draw rents that enable them to own luxury apartments and country mansions.

—President Bush's gift—labeled "loan guarantee"—of Ten Billion Dollars—$10,000,000,000.00—of taxpayer money (without asking the taxpayers about it) to Israel to build housing for Jews on land robbed from the Palestinians.

At the same time, in one of our most blighted inner cities, there stood (presumably, they stand there still) some derelict buildings. They serve as sites for prostitutes' professional services, as centers of the area drug traffic, and as headquarters for street gangs. They made the environment even more dangerous and depraved.

The inner city inhabitants have been petitioning the authorities long and urgently, not for new housing, but merely for the demolition of the derelict structures. Their desperate pleas have been refused. "The government has no funds available."

(v. Hustler August 1993(p. 44, "Home of the Killing Spree: The Ten Deadliest Cities in America." A Dark-look tour by Eugene Robinson. The reader will be astonished at the presence of some of the cities on the list.)

—Resentment at seeing the country wall-to-wall in "Holocaust" museums, monuments, and other commemorative sites to promote belief in a mostly fictional quasi-event that is unimaginably profitable to Jews, and to Jews alone. These memorabilia are put up at taxpayer expense or (what is the same thing) by outfits that have gotten themselves exempted from paying taxes. This adds injury to the insult to African-Americans in having the history (not in the least fictional) of the centuries-long massive slave trade genocide, in which Jews participated and profited to a disproportionately large extent, dropped down the memory hole.

—Victimization by the kosher food scam. This is the most enduring, and, in some ways, the dirtiest of the national rackets. It is highly profitable—to Jews, and only to Jews.

Its marks are the minuscule secret symbols cunningly worked into product labeling so as to be overlooked by consumers unaware of the racket, but recognizable instantly by synagogue network initiates.

This scam started scores of years ago, with a limited number of food products. In time, it was broadened to cover virtually everything edible or potable. Insatiable, the Jews recently began to include non-food products in their racket, making it virtually inescapable by the average American.

Manufacturers learned that, in a manner reminiscent of hex signs, or of charms against the evil eye, the cryptic little symbols warded off disruptionsin the distribution and organized boycotts of their products.

Manufacturers bought permission to apply the kosher hex characters to their products by hiring squads of rabbis at high pay (non-negotiable) into plants across the country to perform their abracadabra.

Manufacturers have been made aware that the rabbis are immune from prosecution for conspiracy, extortion, and racketeering. No matter how evident and obvious the bases for such charges, there is not a federal or a state attorney general who has the personal courage or integrity of office to bring them. With rare exceptions, politicians and political pimps on every level, are just as dishonest. Eager to cadge campaign contributions, terrified by the always latent "anti-Semitic" smear and consequent political oblivion, they lie doggo, evading questions, obfuscating the issue, content to allow the people, whose interests they have sworn to defend, to be fleeced of uncounted millions.

In the media, it is a non-topic. Then there is the much lauded "consumer advocate". He takes no interest in advocating the cause of non-kosher consumers, though these be ninetyfive per cent of all consumers.

In the end, the manufacturers shrug their shoulders, and pass on to the consumers the high cost of the rabbis: their extravagant pay, and lavish expenses, for mumbo-jumbo, superfluous, when not offensive—as is the excruciatingly painful ritual slaughter of animals—to 97.5% of the American people.

The poorer the consumer, the higher the proportion of his income that he must spend on food and on household necessities. It is this factor, striking hardest, and mercilessly, at the poorest and least able to defend themselves, that makes the kosher food racket so peculiarly filthy, and an evil for the nation.

It furnishes the extraordinnry spectacle of the economically most disadvantaged stratum of our society being gouged to support the wealthiest one, and thereby to make it wealthier still.

There were always eminent African-American personages who saw clearly that their people were duped and manipulated to advance the interests of organized Jewry. For reasons they understood well, their endeavors to change that had little effect.

A new echelon of Black Nationalist leaders has come to the fore. They are personified by the Reverend Louis Farakhan and Dr. Robert L Brock. Almost simultaneously, the process of African-American self-recognition and self-appraisal matured under the fresh and strong influence of Black Nationalist leaders, who knew how to transmute this into a revitalized sense of ethnic cohesion and consciousness.

Applying the forces thus evoked, the present African-American Nationalist leaders succeeded, for the first time in the history of the country, in freeing African-Americans from Jewish tutelage.

An infuriated Jewry craved vengeance, and determined to punish its ungrateful former wards.

Their hypersensitive antennae tuned constantly to whatever might affect Jewish interests, they had sensed this development, and were prepared for it.

Though they had been vilifying the "racists" until the day before, organized Jews now went over to their side. A Jewish delegation, with rabbis, attended a well-publicized "white-supremacist" meeting in Atlanta over the 1994 Memorial Day weekend.

Without a word of apology, or of regret, for having convulsed the country for decades by their self-serving "equality-through-environment" fraud, not offering the least excuse or explanation for their astounding 180° turn, these Jews now declared blacks to be mental inferiors of whites. They produced a book, The Bell Curve, that, they say, proves it.

I haven't read The Bell Curve, I accept the unanimous word of book reviewers and of reporters that it "proves" that blacks are mentally inferior to whites, and, in fact, undertakes, "scientifically" to measure the difference it claims to have ascertained, and finds it to be 15%. Ergo, African-Americans are 15% less intelligent than European-Americans. A no mean connoisseur of swindles (and of swindlers) I spotted this one at once. There is the meretricious precision of the measurement: 15%. Not "about 10%", or "around 20%", but 15%, exactly. Plus, especially, the claim to having measured the unmeasurable: Intelligence. That is aside from the fact that the timing of the appearance of The Bell Curve makes its objectivity suspect.

Intelligence is an unknown quantity. Except in terms of itself, it is yet to be defined. An elementary standard reference work, Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary (Merriam-Webster) 1973 defines Intelligence as

> 1. The ability to learn or understand or to deal with new or trying situations: REASON; also: the skilled use of reason (2) the ability to apply knowledge to manipulate one's environment or to think abstractly as measured by objective criteria (as tests) b: Christian Science: the basic eternal quality of divine Mind c: mental acuteness: SHREWDNESS 2a: an intelligent entity; esp: ANGEL b: intelligent minds or mind 3: the act of understanding: COMPREHENSION.

In other, and fewer, words, Intelligence is Intelligence.

The Bell Curve authors may have gotten their notions about auditing and grading intelligence from the "intelligence quotient" hypothesis conceived by Alfred Binet in the last century, and applied in the Binet (later, Binet-Simon, in collaboration with Theodore Simon) "I.Q. Tests." The quotient resulting fnom the division of a person's "mental age" by his chronological age (x 100) This is supposed to indicate, numerically, the degree of intelligence. The higher the quotient, or number, the higher the intelligence.

The "I.Q." method for measuring intelligence was designed and intended for use solely on individuals.

Against this honest, though fallacious (how, and by whom, is "mental age" calculated, or the tests to determine it composed?) endeavor to quantify intelligence in an individual, the Bell Curve authors purport to have measured, scientifically, the comparative intelligence of vast groups, each encompassing tens of millions of individuals and, thus, billions of variables and variants. TIhere is more than one kind of intelligence. Which does the Bell Curve measure? Does it measure them all at once?

Besides the theoretical "I.Q." approach to an assessment of intelligence, there is the empirical one of direct observation. Practically experienced people, preponderantly non-academics, consider it the more reliable one, certainly, it is not susceptible to manipulation. Direct observation illuminates the innumerable manifestations of the falsity of The Bell Curve.

There are the young African-Americans, taken to see "Schwindler's List", who laughed aloud at its preposterous (and disgusting) scenes. Their laughter may have been tinged with moral aversion.

That would indicate moral, as well as intellectual superiority–of rather more than 15%, I would say–to the European boobs who gape solemnly, watching yet another Hollywood defamation of their antecedents and their brothers, lapping up the Spielberg swill..

Similarly, those young African-Americans are, at the least, morally far above political streetwalkers, who, groveling before campaign contributors and media managers in order to keep their trotters in the public trough or, worse, gratify their avidity for power a little while longer, put "Schwindler's List" in the place of the Ten Commandments. State governors, and other democratic despots force children and impressionable young people to absorb anti-Christian hate, revolting pornography, Satanic sadism, and other mind-conditioning poison.

Indeed, assuming normal mental and physical health, there are qualities other than intelligence that are at least as significant in the make-up of a man or of a people.

We suffer the endless liberal cant about "leaders" and "rôle models." They don't say what must go into the making of either. The Germans knew something about making boys and young men into leaders. The NAPOLA (National Political Leadership Academy) organization was established especially to identify, train, and educate prospective community, regional, and national leaders. The NAPOLA Academies were truly democratic. Neither wealth nor social standing influenced admission. Students vere given full scholarship. Entry to the Academies was sought eagerly.

Candidates were boys and young men attending the equivalent of our (senior) high schools. Each school had a small quota for the NAPOLA. Teachers, instructors, and athletic coaches were trained to observe carefully, and record, aptitudes and attitudes of their charges as potential NAPOLA material.

What they looked for was alertness, courage, endurance, steadfastness, self-reliance, restraint, cleanliness, orderliness, honesty, and loyalty to comrades and country.

The most promising of the young men went to the NAPOLA, where their basic preparation for leadership was finished by intensive education in philosophy, cultural and political history, the arts, and the natural sciences, along with further rigorous training in athletics and sports.

To judge by the caliber of its graduates, the NAPOLA system worked exceedingly well. "Intelligence quotients" were not a part of it. There were no "I.Q." tests. In fact, abstract, i.e., unproductive, intelligence was viewed with skepticism, if not distrust, for being, at best, useless, at worst, socially subversive.

The Bell Curve's central deceit is in claiming to measure the unmeasurable. Its proposition may be touted by bigots and hypocrites. It is so patently absurd that it can be taken seriously only by the stupid.

No one, correctly, may accuse the Sanhedrin of being stupid. Nor does it take The Bell Curve seriously—except as a device to punish African Americans by stigmatizing them as being of a mentally inferior race.

The Bell Curve tolls. It tolls the death of Jewish pretense of sympathy and support for black Americans. ❑

Fast Note:
A Bernard Goetz Update

from the Prof

It was December of 1984 when a Manhattan subway commuter named Bernard Goetz demonstrated to the world that not every Jew is lacking for constructive racial ideas when he opened fire on a pack of young black miscreants trying to extort money from him at the point of a screwdriver. In recalling the event ten years later, the AP has run a couple of columns focusing upon Goetz and upon Darrell Cabey, the assailant who took one of Goetz's .38 hollow-points through the spine.

"What happened? Goetz victim asks", reads the top headline. The lead story depicts the present life of Cabey, who is now confined to a wheelchair as a result of the unexpected counterattack. It opens with the report that mother Shirley Cabey has "saved all the letters"—the ones received after the incident, it is said, that called her son a nigger, that wished the boy had died, that threatened his life if he survived the gunshot. Each note, we are told, "with its ugly words and racial venom", sits pressed today inside the family Bible—each of the correspondences that have "literally added insult" to Darrell's injury.

The shot left Cabey paralyzed from the waist down. After taking it he fell into a coma and suffered irreversible brain damage. He is now 29 years of age and has, it is said, the mental capacity of a third-grader. Shirley Cabey laments the change in his personality, saying that at one time Darrell was "outgoing" and enjoyed dressing and looking his best.

Goetz, now 47, was convicted after the shooting on a weapons charge and spent 250 days in jail. He still resides in Greenwich Village and is currently representing himself in a $50 million lawsuit filed by Cabey and renowned trial lawyer William Kunstler. Goetz claims that his legal battles have left him with little money, but says that he expects to prevail in the case pending. He says that he is not looking forward to the trial, but will be glad to be done with it. The rationale of his defense, according to the story, is a simple one. As

Goetz explains:

"If you're injured, paralyzed or whatever while committing a violent crime against me, that's not my fault.

"If you're raping a woman, and she throws you out of a window to stop it, is that her fault?"

The defense, if this is the gist of it, is both succinct and right-minded. It is a separate question, of course, whether such words will find favor with judge and jury. For those wanting further details on the companions who joined young Darrell in the subway festivities, a "Where they are ..." sidebar reports that accomplices James Ramseur and Barry Allen have since been incarcerated—Ramseur from 1985 for "a brutal rape and robbery" and Allen from 1991 for robbing a 58-year old diabetic for the sum of 54 dollars. Troy Canty, fourth member of the quartet, was a ninth-grade dropout who smoked crack and plied his trade as a petty thief and before eventually enlisting in a drug rehab and vocational training program. The last blip on his criminal record, it is said, was a 1990 conviction for shoplifting a home pregnancy kit from a department store. He completed a year's probation in 1991.

The Racial Message of the Bible ... and Other False Dilemmas
A Personal Outcry from the Prof

A recent issue of Dr. Ed Fields' The Truth at Last[1] makes note of the fact that the Reverend Billy Graham has advocated integration as "the only solution" to the problem of race relations. "We've got to be totally integrated", Graham is reported as saying to a source from the Charlotte Observer, "—in our homes, in our worship services, even in marriage." An adjacent TTAL column then "refutes" Graham with a litany of chapter-and-verse culled out of everything from II Kings to The Book of Acts, thus revealing the truth that race mixing is "the most deadly sin of all—condemned by Almighty God".

(1) See page 5 of issue # 378. While I question Fields' approach to the issue of race and the Bible, The Truth at Last is highly interesting and well worth the price. The mailing address is P. O. Box 1211, Marietta, Georgia 30061.

I enjoy Fields' paper very much. He is sincere, his intentions are good, and he does a splendid job of keeping readers abreast of the ongoing assault carried out upon our race within the borders of what was once our nation. I think, too, that his quotations will be taken to heart by a fair percentage of his audience, and that a piece of this kind—if one can defend the exegesis (cited are things like Jeremiah 13:23, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?")—is a strong corrective to the notion that "the Bible" prescribes integration. (The majority of such readers, of course, will have no idea who Jeremiah was, or what was the historical context in which he spoke. They will not know Ezra the prophet from Ezzard Charles, but they will at least rethink the notion that their religion requires them to maintain the current racial status quo.)

All of this being said, I must add nonetheless that the assumption of this article—that racialists should rely, one way or another, upon the Bible for their racial opinions—is only another instance of the constricted mind-set from which we must escape. The assumption that we must be told the truth, from on high, about something that already stands squarely in front of us is not only false, but (in the case at hand, at least) it is antagonistic to our very survival. If we are to prevail in our struggle, we must have confidence that the truth about race, like the truth about certain other things, such as the basic tenets of fairness and decency, is as obvious as anything that we will ever find, and act in accordance with that belief.

What this means is not, as some activists will think, that there can be no place for theism, or for ideas about the supernatural, in the world-view that we wish to promote. It merely means that there can be no place in our thought for any belief, religious or not, that commits us to believing what is irrational. We needn't reject, out of hand, what we read in "the scriptures" (i. e., the so-called Old and New Testaments); but neither should we give allegiance to such material simply because we have been raised to think that it is sacred.

This claim will sit badly with more conservative readers, who imagine that it is not our place to decide the truth about some things, particularly those concerning moral good and evil. Better, they will say, for us to lean unto the greater wisdom and not our own.

But this is surely backward. If, in the first place, we cannot trust our immediate perceptions, what possible guarantee may we have about what holds in heaven? Racialism aside, it is absurd to think that our beliefs about what we ought to do should ever be gleaned from scripture or from purported "deliverance" of any kind. For how can such revelation ever gain plausibility in the first place? Suppose, for example, that a new gospel of some kind is unearthed in some remote part of the world, a source that is proclaimed to be authoritative and, suitably interpreted, to be an infallible guide to the problems of life. Suppose that it advocates certain odd things, however (deceit, say, instead of honesty, conspiracy instead of fair play), that seem contrary to our present good sense. Would we accept this source as authoritative? Of course not. Why? Because, some will say, such a religion would lack "credibility". But why is this? Not, I think, because it would conflict with the traditional gospel (we still need a reason, after all, to prefer that one to this), but because it would conflict with what we already understand, here and now, by our own best lights. Imagine now that this Sacred Source advocates not racial integrity, as we understand it, but instead a forced and wholesale miscegenation of races from all ends of the earth. What would be our verdict? We would again think this new source ill-founded, for the same reason as before. But if so, the same rationale, I maintain, should apply to our religious tradition as it actually stands. Let us then look at it as if for the first time, and without the accumulated historical bias . If it agrees with what we perceive to be the truth, all the better for it. And to the extent that it leads us astray, let us cast it aside.

How do we ever know, in the end, that Reality approves the ethic that we have chosen? This issue was addressed a couple of centuries ago by the utilitarians, who fought quite admirably against the notion that scripture provided the final answer to moral questions. The philosopher and economist John Stuart Mill, for one, maintained that good and evil were not to be derived in principle from ancient codes and granite-carved rules of conduct, but from the plain observation of what is most apt to promote human (and animal) well-being. He took exception to the idea that a truly good creator might command what seems cruel to human sensibility, or that His righteousness might be different in kind from the one that conscience discloses to the more sensitive of His creatures. Concerning the dangers, as alleged by conservatives of his day, of trying to determine right and wrong by rational method, he wrote the following.

> With regard to the religious motive, if men believe, as most profess to do, in the goodness of God, those who think that conduciveness to the general happiness is the essence ... of good, must necessarily believe that it is also that which God approves.[2]

The notion of good, Mill realizes, is logically prior to that of a supremely good being. A man cannot have any coherent idea of what God morally approves until he has some idea, independently and on his own, of what sort of thing merits approval in the first place. In particular, he cannot derive any opinion of an ideal racial policy from what he believes an omniscient racial observer would want. He must believe a thing to be good before he can believe that a purely good being would approve it. (The reader who thinks otherwise might ponder, for a moment, what it would be like to derive, say, a truth of mathematics from reliance upon such higher authority instead of upon his own rational inquiry.)

I have never understood racialists who want to find a basis for their policies in the scriptures, or who are troubled likewise by the question of what Jesus would want from them in terms of a racial viewpoint. (I do, of course, understand the racialist who wishes to reorient Bible-readers on their own terms as a political tactic, though this is another matter.) Let us cease, I say, from wondering what some saint or some oracle in a far distant place and time might have said about the issue of race as it concerns us today. Let us instead decide, in dead honesty and in full respect for the truth, what is in fact the case, and judge other thought, whatever its vantage point, in accord with the verdict. Offhand, I don't know just what Jesus would have said about white racialist activity. If he were around today, and if he supported our cause, I would applaud him. If he advocated, by contrast, the policy that is currently being foisted upon us by the thugs now reigning (whether on or behind the scene) in federal office, he would be one more scoundrel.

(2) This passage is contained in Mill's classic essay Utilitarianism. I cite Mill not to endorse his entire philosophy, but merely to point out one of its better aspects in relation to our own struggle. For a related discussion, see also

(The reader, again, who thinks otherwise should ask himself what he would do if new evidence indicated, contrary to present belief, that Jesus advocated other things contrary to his own moral sense, such as rape or thievery.)

In short, I am neither strengthened nor weakened in my racial beliefs by the opinion (or the publicly avowed opinion, at least) of Reverend Graham. I do not value his opinion on the subject for the simple reason that he does not appear to have much grasp of it, or much sense of the horrors now experienced by those who live their lives on the front lines of interracial confrontation. His own standard of living and his religious mind-set appear to shield him from this truth, just as they shield him, I must think, from a good many other truths, as well.

By the same token, it is irrelevant to me that he has (by Fields' estimate, at least) become "politically correct but biblically wrong" in advocating the mixture of the races. Let him be biblically right or biblically wrong, it is all the same where this issue is concerned. For I know, scripture aside, what goes on with respect to race. I know what I have seen. For this reason I know also what to think of any source—ancient or modern, "inspired" or not—that makes claims pro or con with respect to the fact. If I am to be persuaded to hold some new and contrary view, it must be on the basis of something other than trust in the source itself. Rather, the source must stand or fall on its own merit.

What scripture tells us, if it tells us anything, about the issue of race-mixing in the twentieth century may be of interest to some—it may well be a legitimate and stimulating area of historical research, in fact, for those equipped with the techniques to investigate it. But the worth of its message must be evaluated by way of reason. As long as racialists rely upon scripture, or upon "infallible" sources of any kind, for their beliefs, they will remain within the same passive condition that has enslaved them already. ❑

Charles Josey's The Philophy of Nationalism, and especially chapter 1, "Moral Values and the Sacred". Herein Josey discusses what he calls "the danger of a priori ethics and the need for "a more empirical attitude in our search for the good". One must learn the right, he explains, before one can have any responsible notion of a higher moral will. This book was first published in 1923 under the title Race and National Solidarity. PROVING THE PREMISS

by Robert Frens

I will admit that it is usually more soul-lifting to shoot rats in the city dump than it is to watch TV programs. I have never held that life should be totally serious and devoid of being a spectator to absurdity. Often, it is enlightening to see the degree of contempt the masters of the jew-tube have for the viewing goyim. If you can believe that the reason, the local humping stock was not knocking at your door for a lube job, was due to dandruff, then you could also be led to believe that pale-faces taught cannibals how to dine and that we'd really be in a fine mess if there weren't brilliant shade-faces to bail us out. A whale of a tale finally grew into maximum brilliance on my bargain basement Sharp television set. It unfolded in a predictable fashion.

Once upon an epoch, there were very naughty devils called Nazis. Nazis didn't seem to like the bad, the ugly, or other critters who had brains which functioned on a plane lower than a three-toed sloth. One day, the Lord of the Nazis decided to remove these quasi-vegetables from their midst and send them straight to the Lord of the Clouds who would bestow upon them sharp minds since mortal beings were helpless in this matter. You know what is coming next, don't you?

Now, these unfortunates, who made the village idiot seem like a genius, were led to a foreboding building which, interestingly enough, had ersatz shower rooms (war-time Germany was a huge shower factory!). Keep in mind that the condemned creatures didn't have the mental capacity to tell a walrus from a box of Wheaties. Nonetheless, the Nazis, in their interminable wisdom, found it necessary to deceive these wretched souls. They were told that they were going to take a shower but failed to mention that carbon monoxide was going to be substituted for water. Where the carbon monoxide came from was anyone's guess but that was in the olden days—the days before the louse-killing insecticide Zyklon— became fashionable.

It was obvious that these ill-fated people had no idea what a shower was in the first place so couldn't one rightly ask why it was necessary to deceive people who were hardly aware of their own existence? And also ask the reason for the charade? When hateful people wish to eliminate the objects of their hate, they never try to deceive their victims by pretending that the firing squad is just a bunch of eager photographers with odd cameras. The fact is that a vicious person WANTS his victim to be fully aware that he is going to kill him. Moreover, deceit is only used when the killer does not have his quarry at a disadvantage. The leopard hides and sneaks until his claws and fangs are fastened into the prey, and then, all pretense vanishes. No executioner, since time immemorial, has ever disguised his intentions. Executioners take absolute delight in letting their victims know what the future holds. The ensuing mental torment is food for any sadist. This is why the folderol about nonshower rooms, whether in Auschwitz or the Y.W.C.A., betrays the utterers of such nonsense. You see, deception is part and parcel of the jew. A jew can never concoct any story carrying Aryan tones or displaying Aryan attributes. He simply must inject his own racial character into the yarn in the same manner as does the physically repulsive Spielberg with his outrageous mechanical contraptions which pose as legitimate space machinery and the ridiculous convolutions which win pre-determined "best movie" awards. All "holocaust" yarns have this distinctive jewish stamp and, for that reason alone, they should be given no further consideration. We must be careful, however, in calling the jew a liar since any creature with such an incredible mixed blood line probably cannot ever hope to have a realistic, and straight forward, thought in his entire life. Some jews still believe that they were killed in Dachau.

If we assume, or state as did hundreds of philosophers, statesmen, and religious leaders, throughout history, that the jew is an eternal liar, then what of the revisionist endeavor?

When a trio of bilateral propositions of relation is such that (1)all of their six terms are species of the same genus, (2) every two of them contain between them a pair of co-divisional classes, (3)the three propositions are so related that, if the first two were true, the third would be true, the trio is called a SYLLOGISM. The first two propositions are called premisses. The third proposition is called the CONCLUSION. (Syllogisms are degenerate forms of soriteses.)

First Premiss: The above mentioned TV story flows from jewish lips. Second Premiss: Lies flow from jewish lips. Conclusion: The above mentioned TV story is a lie.

Students of logic, who utilize boolean algebra, could demonstrate that a syllogism is the disjunction of the second retinend with the negation of the first retinend. The eliminand is actually superfluous no matter what its form. In the above, the first retinend is "the above mentioned TV story" while the second is "lies". The eliminand is "jewish lips" Since "jewish lips" are eliminated, we might conclude that the outlined syllogism is Nazi. Good grief, Greta, they are everywhere!

I could never be so harsh as to say that all jews lie all of the time. Some jews tell the truth sometimes. Accidents do happen. As for the "gassing" of the mentally incompetent, which was the theme of that TV program, I will mention that no Aryan would ever relate such nonsense. The Germans, always an honest and open people tuned into reality, would simply dispatch their undesirables swiftly and efficiently if this were their intent. All "holocaust" tales describe situations which simply do not represent expressions of German, or Aryan, character and behavior. It is certainly believable when we are told stories of the Bolsheviks executing tens of thousands with little other than a bullet in the back of the head. The slaughters of Ghengis Khan are believable but shipping people, hither and yon all over Germany for the purpose of enticing them into execution chambers camouflaged as shower rooms, music halls, or brothels, is not. No nation which is under siege, as Germany was during the "gassing days",would ever engage in such inanity. The mere asininity of the "holocaust" is sufficient grounds for me to dismiss the pottage as buncombe, which I did late in the 1950's. (Killing of millions of people IS believable but the jewish nonsense about the HOW makes such stories not believable.) What really perplexes me is the continued insistence of some people to establish that which was assumed. I have called this foolishness "proving the premiss". It's a sort of verbal alchemy which is decidedly non-Aryan. This is why I question such activity and if refuting flamboyant fables makes your day, then you'll be engaged for a lifetime since the kosher baloney bucket is bottomless.

BLACK HOLES AREN'T BLACK

As a child, I loved wild tales and comic books. They were a source of humor and more so if I could discover some incident of contradiction, or a betrayal of fact, such as a year 1700 Indian scout starting a fire using a match or an unexpected Piper Cub flying across the sky during a Civil War battle scene. The jew's Hollywood was nonsense in the 1930's and the passing decades have not altered that one iota.

I have always held that the average Aryan is more intelligent than he thinks he is. The reason so many of them act as nit-wits is because they do not use their mental capacity as a basis for their beliefs or convictions. Instead, they use their intelligence as a tool to rationalize, and reinforce, pre-conceived notions. The reason for this is the entirely natural function of taking the easy way which is, of course, allowing someone else to do the thinking. That is why charlatans such as Graham, Robertson, and so on, have millions of followers and why so many criminals and degenerates get elected to office. It is easier to believe than it is to think and easier to take a bus than it is to walk. It is decidedly not in the Natural order of things for life to intentionally make things more difficult than they need to be. Whether it's a formal religion, or a religion called "science", or a religion called "democracy", it still amounts to herds of people following one another where the extent of one's view of life is limited to a picture of the rump of the one they are following.

People stand in awe of priests, politicians, and drug-soaked entertainers of every perverted persuasion. Of particular interest, in our technological age, is the high-priest cloak that "science" wears in spite of the damage the "in the name of science" herald has done.

Strange brains wade in that swamp called "theoretical physics." Theoretical physics is saturated with jews, and, for that reason alone, we have good reason to believe that it is some twisted bastardization of what reality is. When one reads the stuff about black holes, red shifts, quasars, quarks, curved space, hyper-space, big-bangs, time-warps, and the like, he might rightly conclude that there are many people who need to be confined for their own good. Instead, the layman, being awed by the pretense and vocabulary, elevates these purveyors of inconsequential mumbo-jumbo to priest-like status. Where does anyone get the idea that if they don't understand something then that something must be the product of superior intelligence? Or that a holder of a Ph.D. degree cannot formulate nonsense? I don't "understand" the jew Einstein's relativity theory anymore than I understand why a dog licks his own gonads or why Gandhi drank his own urine.

The study of the universe, the "ology" of the cosmos, is an exercise in theoretical physics. One of the most visible ugly faces in this business is the yid Carl Sagan who probably served as a model for the E.T. critter which appeared in a starring role in one Hollywood concoction. The message being that ugly is wise and ugly is good. According to the students at Sagan's Cornell University, lofty Carl never engages in conversation with under-graduates. To that I will say that the under- graduates are more fortunate than are the graduates who are voluntary victims of Sagan's jewish world impositions. In fact, on one TV show, hook-nosed Carl snubbed the young and handsome Michael Fox. Now that's a compliment.

It was baffling to many of my former students that I was able to recall various square roots and logarithms during some math demonstration. The ability to memorize should never be confused with intelligence.

I often engaged in a class exercise where students were asked to list as many people, with their telephone numbers, as they could. Some of the lists were astounding. I was quick to point out that they indeed had memorized many numbers which are mathematical expressions. However, as soon as someone says the number is math related, their minds seem to go into orbit (or enter a black hole). The problem is one of attitude and not one of intelligence. What's the difference between 314-159-2654 and 3.141592654 in a memory sense? The first could be a telephone number in St. Louis, Missouri, while the latter is an approximation to Pi, the ratio of a circle's circumference to its diameter. If it's a phone number, memorization is easy. If it's a "math" number, then it takes a genius to memorize it, or so it seems. We should all re-think our thinking and especially in regard to those we think are our mental superiors.

A certain Steven Hawking (Stephen Hawken?) is unquestionably a brilliant man. He, unfortunately, was a victim of some type of sclerosis which immobilized his body thus making him dependent totally upon others for his care and necessitating electronic devices for communication. Steven "talks" by way of a computer screen and a voice synthesizer. He is recognized in the theoretical physicists' club as a master of what outer space is all about. Steven's specialty is "black holes" but not of the inner city kind, as is one of our notable political leaders. Lately, he has "proven" that black holes aren't really all that black. Mr. Hawking (pardon me if I have his name incorrectly spelled) has oceans of mathematical "proof" and with considerable effort has convinced many of his colleagues that black holes are not black. I guess that those black holes will soon be called mulatto holes, that is, if you allow the existence of white holes which is an increasingly difficult thing to allow in these days of "white racism." Before you rush out to buy stock in the black hole business, slow down, and put your God-given brain to work.

Science collects data. Some of that data comes to us courtesy of our senses. Other data is gathered by machinery which we have faith in. (Much of science is based upon faith.) We ponder the data and look for relations and patterns. A useful tool in this regard is the manipulable language of mathematics. If we can find some chunk of mathematical scribble which relates the data, then we say we have discovered something or other. The next step is to put our theory to the test of prediction. We invite an experiment outside the realm of the original data in an effort to test an outcome. If the outcome is as predicted, and we have success after success in this, we then have a "law". Never forget that mathematics is a descriptive tool that can be useful in predictions. Mathematics is helpful in analyzing certain events and in solving restricted problems but MATHEMATICS NEVER PROVES ANYTHING. This is an important point. If I threw Janet Reno (what a comforting thought!) from a 400 foot cliff, mathematics would PREDICT that she would splatter on the canyon floor in 5 seconds (environmental pollution) and mathematics could provide us with velocity information concerning her trip downward but mathematics did not PROVE any of these things. It is this twisting of the mathematical approach which is typically jewish. Instead of mathematics being used for the purpose of appraising reality, it is being used in Sagan's and Einstein's world to MANUFACTURE a jewish "reality" much in the same way as they manufactured the clown city called Hollywood.

The nonsense about black holes would fill a library and if the Aryan worker stands perplexed in regard to his lack of "understanding" about Sagan's "billions upon trillions of light years ago" claptrap, he should feel relieved since a real concern would emerge if he thought he really did understand it! At that juncture, a committing to a jew asylum would be in order for only jews can work with jew delusions.

Ugly (Gawd! he was ugly), "peace-loving", Einstein was just another "survivor" of the imagined Holocaust who left Germany on a luxury liner with pilfered material relating to German atomic fission research. This jew creep approached another creep, Roosevelt, with his notion of building dozens of bombs with which to "nuke" the country they were kicked out of. The fates allowed

Germany to capitulate before the "never forgive" crowd had a chance to watch the American cattle vaporize their Aryan brothers. What a disappointment it must have been to have only obliterated a couple hundred thousand raw-fish eaters instead.

Hawking's proof that black holes aren't all that black, is coupled to the notion that time slows down as one approaches the black hole's entry threshold. How in hell would he know? Did he take a Timex on some journey? Or is his computer linked to outerspace? Think about the fact that "time slowing down" is shear rubbish. Time is not a velocity so what in hell does the concept of "slowing time" mean? That defies logic! If by "slowing down" we mean that time is getting longer, then we have a situation where time is being described as if it were a growing object. Yes, time takes time to increase, especially if it has little time in which to do it. That's timely information.

What we really do is observe that an object has achieved two distinct positions, or forms, during some observation period. The change in position must have "taken time". Without some observable change, the notion of "time" would never arise. When we look at a watch, we do not see time passing. We see something continually changing positions, or shapes — hands or digital displays. Once an abstract is introduced, all sorts of foolishness can result. If the concept of slow time is valid then so is fast time. In other words, time has speed and if time can go forward or backward, then time has velocity. The question that arises is: How long does it take time to travel from Mars to the nearest toilet if time travels at the speed of time? Only a jew could feel comfortable with such trash swimming through his race-mixed brain. If, with a scrutinizing ear, one listened to the pooh-pah which served to describe the time slowing as one passed across the threshold of a black hole, he would notice the absurdity of the message. If I can remember accurately: "As one crosses the threshold, he will notice that time is taking longer to pass." If your watch showed 5 minutes before the hour, it would slow down so that the minute hand would get closer and closer to the 12, but never get there. I suppose that if time slows down as we enter black holes then it must speed up as we leave. Yes friends, Mr. Hawking has also "proved" that stuff does leave black holes.

True to the moronic trash that passes for sound illustration, the narrator babbled about the "slowing" of time, at the (now) grey hole threshold, while the viewer watched the minute hand of a watch move slower and slower. This visual joke was supposed to illustrate that time was slowing down. What was really demonstrated was a minute hand (a physical object) with a diminishing velocity. This implies that time was getting "longer". When time becomes infinitely "long", the minute hand will cease to move. Now, if you feel comfortable with this sort of "reasoning" involving stretchable time then your blood-line is obviously suspect.

This slower and slower gibberish at once reminded me of Zeno's paradox which demonstrated that one cannot arrive anywhere. It goes somewhat like this:

In order to walk from here to your desk, you must first travel half-way. That leaves a one-half remaining. To travel that one-half, you must travel half of it. The argument continues in an iterative fashion always finishing with "there is still a one-half to go". Since there is always a one-half to go, you can never get there. This is pure Abbott and Costello. "You are not in Los Angeles." "You are not in Chicago." "Since you are not in Los Angeles nor in Chicago, you must be somewhere else." "If you are somewhere else, you cannot be here." If Lou wasn't "here", then who was Bud talking to? Or wasn't he "here" either?

I suppose that while the old Greeks were pondering Zeno's ditty, the Romans managed to conquer them. It reminds me of the Holocaust debaters who seem unaware that the Mestizos are conquering their land. Anyway, the paradox is no paradox. If there were the implicit rule that each discreet step, toward your desk, had to be one-half of the remaining distance, then you would have a problem. The real world is not an infinite collection of anything anymore than the trip to the desk would involve an infinite number of steps. People KNOW that they can walk to their desks and that should be the end of the discussion. Imagine a mugger saying that "This bullet will not kill you because it must first travel one-half the distance thus leaving one-half to go... thus leaving one-half to go... etc." If you were following dear Zeno, then the bullet would never reach you.

Einstein's typically jewish salami describing how, as objects approach the speed of light, they get smaller is analogous to the black hole's shrinking time attribute. Each one of them follows the same high-school algebra formula which is derived from a problem involving the average velocity of a round trip from here to there. All these great minds did was to substitute time, and measurement, into a valid velocity argument. Instead of changing velocities, they invented changing time, and changing sizes, using mathematics as the ennobling device. They then used their superior mathematical legerdemain to cloud the issue, secure grants, befuddle the masses, and bestow upon themselves a privileged status. Out of this drivel developed "schools" of thought and academic disciplines which are reminiscent of the African nigger's technique of determining when the next rain will fall by observing how long it takes a poisoned chick to die. Science definitely pads its own pad. Einstein was packaged and sold as a "genius" by the same crowd that packages and sells dandruff shampoos.

It is a sad waste that the talents of Steven Hawking are being consumed in a mathematical generation of non-real "reality". I can understand why jews engage in this—they cannot help it. Mr. Hawking's mother appears to be a brilliant, and handsome, example of an Aryan woman. Is it the modest, and open, Aryan nature which allows Aryans to be fooled by jewish poop, whether Holocaust or curved-space?

No matter what, and no matter where, if it is infested with jews, then we should have the Aryan foresight to avoid it at all costs. Then again, avoidance would deprive us of much entertainment, so let's keep those Holocaust whoppers and Sagan narratives a'coming. We can all use a good laugh. You can't get there from here. You must go somewhere else first. ❑

RACE, RABBITS AND REALITY

By
Allan Callahan

It may not be known to most people today, but Australia once had a terrible rabbit problem, where originally there had been none, because the continent had no rabbits.

To start with, it would be appropriate to say that the rabbit has a notable record of practising what might be called race expansionism, with his foremost goal being the expansion of his own kind. He doesn't think in abstractions, but if he did he would think that the individual rabbit life counted for nothing, and it didn't matter much if myriads of his fellows were poisoned, trapped, shot, eaten, or skinned and their furs made into hats; no, it didn't matter as long as there were plenty more left to endure, expand and spread across the earth until it became one gigantic rabbit warren.

But back to Australia's rabbit problem, the story of how this prolific mammal ever got into the country in the first place is interesting. The account I heard as a youth is that some were imported, part of them escaped, and that was the beginning of the problem. But it didn't happen quite that way. Two Englishmen, Mr. John R. Collison and Mr. Manning Thatcher, each claimed to be the one who got rabbits started in Australia. The claims seem to have been laid with a sense of pride, which is strange; about as odd as it would be if someone sought credit for bringing bubonic plague to some country or other.

Be this as it may, it seems that the laurel should go to Mr. Thatcher. Around 1863 or thereabouts, he got permission from the Acclimatization Society of Australia to bring over some rabbits, which were wanted by a group of Victoria sportsmen for hunting purposes. Thatcher got together a batch and took off with them on the sailing-ship Relief. However, long sea voyages didn't agree with the critters, and he arrived in Australia without a single living rabbit.

Embarking again with a new supply, he again arrived with not a single one alive. A third trip had the same result, but on this trip he did keep close watch on his rabbits to see what was killing them off, and discovered the source of the trouble. With a remedy for this, on a fourth trip he was so successful that he arrived wlthout the loss of a single rabbit.

But the long delay caused the Victoria sportsmen to lose interest; they no longer wanted his rabbits. And neither, it seems, did anyone else. Thatcher went around the country with a helper, trying to sell baskets of live rabbits, but he couldn't sell enough to pay expenses. Furthermore, his wards were very prolific, and steadily increased all the time. Finally, at the end of a sweltering day, the two men decided that they had had enough. They carried all their charges out into the bush and released them.

Mr. C. J. Thatcher was described as a fine looking gentlemen, with a benevolent countenance, and was probably a "good guy," as the term is generally used, yet he most likely did more harm to Australia than any other single individual, although it took about ten years for this knowledge to really start to imprint itself upon Australians.

At first, most of them probably felt that the bunnies were "cute," and thought it a pleasant novelty to have the alien creatures around. But after a decade, ominous signs began to appear. Grassland began to disappear. People began to see more and more rabbits around. And more and more, and more and more, and more and more. They ate up the pasture intended for livestock, desolated vast tracts of land, staggered agricultural industries, and ruined thousands of farmers and ranchers. In some areas, at various times, the varments became so thick that, if you looked off in the distance, it seemed as if the earth itself was moving.

Men fought back by snaring, netting, shooting, ferreting, poison- ing, warren-ripping, fumigation of burrows, and the use of repellents. "Rabbit fences" were put up in places.

The continent didn't have much in the way of natural predators. The most notable one was the dingo, and he could hardly make a dent in the enormous rabbit population by himself. Foxes were brought over to help in the battle.

Gradually, the pests were partially brought under control, but it took a long time. A half-century after the rabbit release, Australians had had only moderate success.

Rabbits don't think in abstractions, but if they did, we can imagine that they were happy when they were unrestricted and their exploding birthrate was enabling them to take over more and more territory, and unhappy when people finally started killing them off.

Was there any morality or immorality involved when Mr. C. J. Thatcher and his partner released the remainder of their rabbits in the bush on that fateful day? They gave them their freedom. Is freedom important, even for animals?

Today, we see that millions of racial aliens are pouring into various white nations, kind of like a plague of rabbits. Is it immoral for us to keep them out? They say they want to be "free," and have a right to be (which means moving to some other country of their choice). It is (according to them) our moral responsibility to take them in.

But how about us being free, too? Free of their presence! We whites are disappearing, worldwide, since our birthrate has been negative since 1978. The racial aliens are replacing us. Is it moral for us to go out of existence, so that our countries can be eventually taken over by them?

It took ten years for Australians to face reality on their rabbit problem, and start doing something about it. How long is it going to take for threatened whites, everywhere, to face reality on their racial alien problem, and start doing something about it?

You can't reason with a rabbit, but maybe you can, at least a little, with the dark homines who are swarming into Aryan nations. We should give them a simple choice, and ask: "Had you rather stay out of our territory, or be shot?"

I believe they would opt for the former.

In case some of them, at first, did not believe we were serious, we should prove otherwise by shooting illegal aliens crossing our Southern border. The men only need be targeted. Border Patrol agents wouldn't have to shoot to kill, just aim for the legs. They could use small caliber weapons. Even sprays of.22 caliber bullets, aimed at the legs, would have a profound effect on those they hit. Illegal border crossings should be off by about 99% in a matter of days. Probably not many would need to be shot because the news would travel fast.

The U. S. Government would never do anything so "inhumane?" It did something infinitely worse in WWII when it sent huge air armadas (some up to 1 ,000 planes) over Germany to bomb civilian areas in what was called "carpet bombing" or "area bombing." Women, children, the elderly—everybody was a target. This in violation of the Geneva Convention and the old Western "Code of Honor." Then they lied about it and said that "carpet bombing" was started by the Germans. Actually it was started by the British, but this was not officially admitted by the British Government until 1968, twenty-three years after the war was over.

U. S. policy-makers did many despicable things during that era, yet they postured as righteous beings. They were supposed to be our mentors; our role models; shining beacons on the hill. If they could bomb myriads of Germans of all ages out of house and home or burn them alive with indendiary devices, they shouldn't have any trouble condoning the plugging of a small number of wetbacks.

Mexico, of course, is not the only country that illegals are coming from, but it is the main one. If we practically dry up the flow from that country, we will have more manpower and money to tackle the illegals from elsewhere. But don't hold your breath till this happens.

It is generally assumed to be easy to tell a good action from a bad one, but this is not always so. If you consider an action with all its consequences, the sum-total of them, it is obvious that no one could live long enough to see them all, unless he lived forever. However, one should be able to look ahead for at least a few generations, or maybe even a few centuries, and get a pretty good idea of what might be the result of certain actions.

In the case of Mr. C. J. Thatcher, he probably felt that he was "doing good" when he released his rabbits out into the bush. He probably never worried much, if any, about the consequences of their future offspring, and if he thought about it at all, assumed that if the Victoria sportsmen were no longer interested in hunting them, farmers and ranchers would be, and would keep them in check. It is very doubtful if he went so far as to wonder if Australia had enough natural predators to keep the rabbits under control if the hunters failed. So we can pretty well forgive Mr. Thatcher, as probably few of us would have done any better, had we been in his shoes.

It is a very different case, though, with the leaders of those white nations who are letting racial aliens swarm into their countries. Who can excuse them? The implications of this will be immeasurably greater than any rabbit plague, yet these leaders refuse to face reality. The main reason is because they are too mentally-conditioned; another is, probably, because they (or some of them) are too wimpy. ❑

La Via Dolorosa of Lady Birdwood

In the Jan/Mar '92 NSV Report, we ran a news item about The Dowager Lady Jane Birdwood's literature publication, distribution and subsequent jury trial in a London court during October 1991. Lady Birdwood, then 78 years old, was charged and convicted for distributing literature against an identifiable ethnic minority (Jews) who, according to King Edward The First's Edict of Expulsion of July 18, 1290 AD, have no legal right to be in England. About 3 years prior to Lady Birdwood's conviction, a judge at the Southwark Crown Court ruled that King Edward I's Edict of Expulsion of the Jews was still extant. Given a light sentence and heavy warning, Lady Birdwood stated after her conviction that she would continue her activities, exposing the Jewish hatred for non-Jews and specific acts of hatred performed by religious Jews against non-Jews and gentiles.

Lady Birdwood was true to her word as she continued with her activities which were within England's own laws. Since then, she has been arrested again, charged with publishing material about Jews who have no legal right to be in England, tried in London by a judge who ignored England's existing laws and convicted by a jury which had little or no knowledge of their laws, intelligence to understand their laws and/or moral courage to judge defendants based on their established laws. Despite vigorous representation by defense attorney Doug Christie (Ernst Zündel's lawyer in two thought crime trials in Toronto, Canada), the 80-year-old Dowager Lady Birdwood was fined 500 pounds and sentenced to a 3-month suspended jail term for publishing the book, The Longest Hatred, about Judaism's anti-Gentile racism. Exposing Talmudic racism was held to be an act of racism by a 10-2 vote of a London jury. Lady Jane Birdwood sent the booklet to all members of Parliament and all Church of England vicars. British police seized 153 copies of the book from her London apartment. According to The Independent, "The pamphlet claimed the Talmud—Jewish law—contained blasphemies against Christ..." It should be noted that both of Lady Birdwood's trials have been held at the Central Criminal Court at Old Bailey (a street close to St. Paul's Cathedral), commonly known as The Old Bailey. The Old Bailey is the highest court in the land, comparable to the United States Supreme Court.

Since this particular NSV Report is being sent to a number of Jewish "Holocaust" survivors, journalists and government officials in England, we are providing herein some background history regarding England's current law (King Edward The First's Edict of Expulsion of the Jews) in the hope that the English people, who are also our people, will have more insight regarding the Jewish expulsion. Obviously, England's ZOG and our ZOG will do their utmost to circumvent any existing laws in order to have their own way, but if enough potential jurors become knowlegeable enough, smart enough and angry enough, then perhaps a defendant can get more justice in the courts than he now does.

In 1190 AD, Bury St. Edmunds became the first town in England to formally expel the Jew. This example was followed by Leicester in 1231, Newcastle upon Tyne, Wycombe, the County of Warwick and parts of East Anglia in 1234, Southampton in 1236, Northamptonshire in 1237, Berkhamstead in 1242, Newbury with Speenhamland in 1243, Bridgnor in 1274 and Cambridge in 1275. Other towns in England and Wales which expelled the Jews include Beaumaris, Newborough, Canarvon, Criccieth, Harlech, Bala, Conway, Rhuddlan, Flint, Derby, Romsey and Winchelsea.

In an attempt to solve the problem of "anti-Semitism", King Edward The First passed in 1275 the Statutem de Judeismo (Laws or Statutes regarding Jewry), a set of laws commonly known as the "Anti-Usury Laws." These laws outlawed the lending and borrowing of money for unproductive purposes. Jewish historian Cecil Roth, in his book A History of the Jews in England, admitted that these special privileges were "an amazing concession" because it was probably the first example of "affirmative action" or "positive discrimination." This set of laws was remarkable because King Edward I did not merely outlaw the lending and borrowing of money for unproductive purposes but granted special licenses to the Jew in order to encourage him to take up farming and any craft. However, the Jew never took advantage of these opportunities, choosing instead to continue with such parasitic practices as usury, clipping the coin (paring the silver off the coins which debased the currency), desecrating the host and ritually murdering Christian children every Passover, as the Jew is instructed to do in the Talmud. If anyone thinks that this was simply a medieval problem, it should be remembered that when Henry Ford was accused of being an "anti-Semite" for having publicized the Jew's thoroughly unproductive and parasitic nature, he offered a reward of $1,000 (a considerable sum at the time) to anyone who could show him a Jewish farmer. The reward was never collected.

King Edward I permanently banished the Jews from England in 1290. After the Jan/Mar '92 NSV Report was published, one of our associates made a trip to the University of Southern California Law School and sent us a copy of the actual wording of King Edward The First's Edict of Expulsion of the Jews in 1290. The Edict of Expulsion of 1290 reads "Eodem anno omnes Judei, cum eorum bonis, filiis, et uxoribus, circa festum Omnium Sanctorum, terram Angliae et Aquitaniae, concedente rege Edwardo, exulantur." This is translated by Dir. Cooper as "To the same end (in reference to a tax levy in the previous sentence which is not included herein) in the year, all Jews, with their goods, children and wives, around the holiday of All Saints (All Saints' Day is November 1st), are banished from the land of England and of Aquitania (the southwest part of what is now France between the Loire River and Pyrenees Mountains), King Edward having conceded."

The above sentence says a lot—not only for English history but this situation has repeated itself elsewhere in Europe from the middle ages to the present time. You see, the word "concedente" implies that the king reluctantly yielded to pressure from his advisers and subjects. In other words, the king was not the motivating factor behind the Edict of Expulsion. Most probably, the king was informed in no uncertain terms that unless the Jews were expelled, he would face a violent revolution which would not only result in the expulsion of the Jews but also the execution of the king, his family and loyal backers. So the king conceded to the Edict of Expulsion and thus ordered his Jewish friends, allies, business partners and co-conspirators out of English territory. To ease the pain of his former Jewish associates, the king not only allowed the Jews to keep the money which they obtained from usury and coin-clipping, and any belongings that they could carry (All Jewish owned real estate, synagogues, cemeteries went to the king.), but the king also levied a tax onto the English people to pay for the Jews' transportation out of England. (Note: From the medieval ages to the present time, national leaders always deny a Jewish problem but eventually the people reach a point where they no longer believe the lies of their leaders and proceed to give an ultimatum to these leaders—Jews out or revolution. Faced with such an ultimatum, the leaders almost always yield to the desires of the people.)

Most of the Jews chose to be expelled from England but a minority chose to remain in England by agreeing to convert to Roman Catholicism. However, it soon became apparent that the "conversos" were not sincere in their desire to convert. So, in 1358, King Edward The Third needed to re-apply the Edict of Expulsion of 1290. The same situation arose in 1609 when James The First was forced to expel the "refugees" from Spain and Portugal whose perfidy exposed them as being Jewish.

It is important to note that the Statutem de Judeismo of 1275, the Edict of Expulsion of 1290 and the Edict of 1596 (issued to prevent negroes from ever setting foot on British soil) are Royal Edicts. They became permanent laws when the monarch at the time exercised The Royal Prerogative. When the monarch exercises The Royal Prerogative, it is like the Pope issuing an Encyclical. The monarch can never be overruled. Any law which is issued through The Royal Prerogative can only be changed by a subsequent monarch regardless of anything said or done by the House of Commons or House of Lords. There is no "statute of limitations" concerning a Royal Edict. A Royal Edict is a permanet law which must be obeyed to the letter by all people in England forever. Every Jewish history book admits that the Edict of Expulsion is still extant.

The Jew desperately wants the law changed but does not want to publicize the matter for this will draw attention to the reasons why the laws were issued in the first place. As we all know, those reasons are as valid today as they were centuries ago. One would think that the Jew might try to take the hint and act like a normal human being but this would mean giving up the lending of money for unproductive purposes (usury) etc. So the Jew tries to destroy The Royal Prerogative by trying to destroy the national sovereignty of England and every other nation by corrupting and undermining every nation within the bounds of Christendom by instituting a Zionist Occupation Government (ZOG). Those who are naive enough to think that this explanation is a "Jewish conspiracy theory" should be informed that the editorial of the Jewish Chronicle of February 23, 1990, titled "One Europe" stated, "It is becoming almost a self-evident truth that our future collective security—from economical and ecological disaster as much as from military cataclysm—can be assured only by pushing further and faster for one world. One Europe, in which the Soviet Union and its former statellites are equal partners, or at least close associates, is the first logical step. But time is pressuring faster than nation-states can cope with the notion of change...Can we get there in time?"

It is important to consider the Statutem de Judeismo of 1275 and the Edict of Expulsion of 1290 not as laws passed suddenly to try to solve forever the Jewish problem but rather as part of a series of laws passed throughout the 13th century to deal with the subversive influence of the perfidious Jew. The first set of national laws passed in England was the Magna Carta of 1215 which to this day is the source of all laws in the English-speaking world, including the American Constitution. Of the 63 clauses of the Great Charter, numbers 10 and 11 deal with the Jewish problem: (10) If anyone who has borrowed from the Jews any sum, great or small, dies before it is repaid, the debt shall not bear interest as long as the heir is under age, of whomsoever he holds; and if the debt falls into our hands, we will not take anything except the principal mentioned in the bond, (11) And if anyone dies indebted to the Jews, his wife shall have her dower and pay nothing of that debt; and if the dead man leaves children who are under age, they shall be provided with necessaries befitting the holding of the deceased; and the debt shall be paid out of the residue, reserving, however, service due to the lords of the land; debts owing to others than Jews shall be dealt with in like manner (Encyclopedia Brittanica translation).

After the first trial and conviction in 1991, Lady Birdwood faced almost certain imprisonment if she published any further anti-Talmudic studies yet she bravely did so anyway. Though she was spared prison because the British establishment feared the image of an old lady moldering in a cell for printing pamphlets which offend some Jews, she lost a substantial portion of her life savings in mounting her legal defense. This second trial of Lady Birdwood served as a rallying point for her supporters. It was a great opportunity to meet old friends and make new ones. Lots of literature was exchanged, including several American publications such as the NSV Report, Hans Schmidt's GANPAC Brief and Michael Hoffman's Revisionist Researcher.

Lady Birdwood is undoubtedly England's greatest living patriot. She is hated by the Jews because she, like King Edward I, does not have an ounce of racial or religious hatred in her. They hate her because she has never made the mistake of saying or doing anything that can be construed as being "anti-semitic" or "racist." She has campaigned tirelessly for the safe, peaceful, gradual, financially-assisted repatriation of all non-Whites from England. ZOG has tried many times to assassinate her character but such smears have had no effect. She has been able to hold very constructive meetings with Blacks and Asians, something she would obviously not be able to do if she were motivated by hatred for those who do not belong in her country. It is the Jew, and only the Jew, who hates her. This is because the Jew believes that he does not fit into her plans for repatriation. The Blacks can return to Africa or the Caribbean and the Asians can return to Asia but the Jew has no country to which he can return. Because the Jew is, by definition, deracinated, he hates all who are racinated. The focus of the Jews' hatred is to destroy any and all traces of racination. The Jew does not belong anywhere so he tries to destroy everyone else's race, religion, language, customs, traditions etc. so that eventually, if enough people are tricked into betraying their heritage, no one will be able to justify any plan to exclude the Jew or any other deracinated person from any country.

The campaign to spread the truth was given an unexpected boost a few weeks after the trial when Minette Marrin, an American, used her column in The Sunday Telegraph to describe some "anti-Semitic" literature which had been sent to her. She described in detail the comic book Tales of the Holohoax and a leaflet entitled "Mad Jews Disease" which is a humorous way to describe the findings of Laird Wilcox's Hoaxer Project Report (that most "anti-Semitic" vandals are, in fact, Jews themselves). The Sunday Telegraph is England's most popular Sunday newspaper and is read by everyone of any importance. That week, The Daily Mail picked up on the story. This, in turn, served as the impetus to create and circulate more literature. New leaflets were produced using Minette Marrin's photo and parts of her article. The Jews went absolutely berserk as hundreds of these leaflets were mailed to prominent people. The Jewish Chronicle approached Miss Marrin and asked her to write an article for the paper to express her views on the matter. When she did so, yet another leaflet was produced using her article from The Jewish Chronicle. Once again, this was sent to hundreds of people, no doubt causing the illegal Jewish aliens to continue to wallow in their self-hatred.

The above are excellent examples of what can be done in a nonviolent way to get people talking about the subjects which really matter. If every activist started producing his own leaflets and started circulating them amongst important people in his area, "the media" would not be able to ignore this initiative. Every Aryan who considers himself to be a man must always remember what is written in Protocol 5 of The Procotols of the Learned Elders of Zion: "There is nothing more dangerous to us than personal initiative."

The most important aspect of Lady Birdwood's trial which "the media" have chosen to ignore is that before she was arrested, she lodged a formal complaint with the Metropolitan Police concerning the fact that the Soncino edition of The Talmud is sitting on the shelves of the Westminster Public Libraries. The disgusting filth of The Talmud is clearly a violation of England's Blasphemy Laws, which forbid the defamation of Jesus Christ. However, the police have been very slow in responding. The officer in charge of all "anti-semitic" matters, Detective Inspector Kember, will only say that he "is looking into the matter." This is in stark contrast to Kember's attitude when he was appointed the head of a special task force to capture the "anti-Semitic" leaflet distributors. Those who wish to give Kember a piece of their minds should contact: Chief Inspector Roger Kember, Metropolitian Police Service, Community Affairs Branch, New Scotland Yard, Broadway, London SW1H 0BG, telephone 071-230-4185 (direct line). Please note that the leaflet titled "Mad Jews Disease", which cites Laird Wilcox's findings that the "anti-Semitic" vandals are, in fact Jews, was printed and distributed by a group calling themselves "The Kember Gentile Support Group."

As of this writing, Lady Birdwood is appealing her case. For those who want to give Lady Jane Birdwood moral support, she can be reached at 31 Eastvale, Acton Vale, London W.3, England. No date has been set for her appeal but Doug Christie will continue to serve as her lawyer. Those who wish to support Lady Birdwood financially might consider sending money to Mr. Christie (810 Courtney St., Victoria, BC V8W 1C4, Canada). It is not always safe to send money overseas and Lady Birdwood must pay a large commission charge to the usurers (banksters) to convert foreign cash to Pounds Sterling. However, there is something far more valuable that you can do to help Lady Birdwood in her effort to defeat ZOG. You can use whatever resources you have at your disposal to educate our people regarding the true nature of the Jewish problem.

Reflections on an Old Film

By
Charles E. Weber

Recently I saw a film produced around 1951 with the title, "A Foreign Affair." It was shown on public television, of all places. Unlike most of the more recent Hollywood films which have something to do with Germany, it was amazingly sympathetic to the plight of the Germans and it brought back many memories of my own bitter-sweet years as a young American in occupied Germany during 1945-1948, when I served as a soldier and civil servant. During those youthful years, which for most young men are normally full of hopeful activity and naive insouciance, I walked amid ruins of German towns and saw suffering and oppression that were a sobering experience, especially as a result of the realization that my own country, allied with the brutal USSR, had committed acts of destruction and oppression against a relatively small country that had never been a military threat to my own. The film made such a deep impression on me that I watched it twice.

The film made attempts at humor, but the humor was tempered, or perhaps even intensified, by the tragic background of the postwar ruins of Berlin, which were even the theme of a song that seemed like a sort of leitmotiv. Briefly, a female member of Congress from Iowa comes to Berlin to inspect troops there, perhaps around 1947 or so, before the Soviet blockade of Berlin. The naive lady from Iowa comes to Berlin all set to track down evil Nazis, but fells intensely in love with a captain, who happens to be having a love afair with a German cabaret singer (skillfully played bg Marlene Dietrich), whom the war had deprived of things she had held dearest, even her beliefs. During the course of the action the female member of Congress softens her attitudes toward Germans in their desperate plight and even becomes friendly with the cabaret singer in spite of her love for the captain.

What a contrast this film was to the mercilessly anti-German films that Hollywood has often produced in recent years! Since 1951 motion picture production in the United States has become even more heavily concentrated on the objectives and agenda of the Zionists, who now have an even greater control of the industry. Hence we see much heavier emphasis on the "Holocaust" myths shrewdl calculated to instill feelings of guilt in both German and American taxpayers, who have been forced into paying heavy tribute to the Jewish state in Palestine. Other Zionist objectives include demoralization and weakening of the American Aryan host population bq promoting miscegenation and homosexuality in keeping with ancient Jewish traditions. ❑

Dear Mr. Dietz:

The anonymous "Prof." (pages 1-10 [January Liberty Bell]) made some interesting points, but it is too bad that he had not read The Bell Curve, because if he had, he would have been in a much better position to discuss the Negress's editorial and to have refuted some of her nonsense. The book is very important, if for no other reason than the fact that it has attracted so much public attention, and right at a time when Coingress seems ready to come to grips with some of the problems discussed in The Bell Curve.

One thing I liked about Revilo Oliver, amongst so many other things, is the fact that he had the courage to write under his own name...

Carl Hottelet gave a rather good summary of the case against the "Holocaust" material in his letter to the American Legion Magazine. I have never joined a veterans' organization because I do not look with pride on what we Americans did in (or to) Europe. Some veterans, however, lap up the sort of swill that the Zionist propagandists dump out to them. It makes them think that they accomplished something through their sacrifices.

Codial Greetings,
Charles Weber

"HOLOCAUST TERRORISM"
results in CENSORSHIP!!
To my friends around the World!

Every time I write a newsletter, I have ten times as much material, as I can possibly use! The job of choosing what to include in the newsletter and what to discuss, and what to drop or put on the back burner is often anguishing for me.

This time I want to continue with our coverage of the Doug Collins, John Ball controversy, covered in the last newsletter!

Breakthrough after media-breakthrough is being achieved because of these complaints lodged by the Canadian Jewish Congress-Pacific Region! The mainstream media has entered the fray. The North Shore News is sticking by Doug Collins and has hired a lawyer for themselves and Doug Collins. They intend to challenge this statute thoroughly. The British Columbia Press Council publicly came out on the side of Doug Collins, so it looks as if the "Learned Elders" might have made a tactical miscalculation in flaunting their influence, and revealing their double standard and hypocritical position.

John Ball also intends to fight all the way, support and legal help is being mobilized! We have to demonstrate to the public at large that if the "Holocaust Promotion Lobby" wants the right to peddle their bizarre ethnocentric version of history, calling it a "HOLOCAUST" that they have to be prepared to see their tall tales of the "Holocaust Story" challenged by those people who can still think for themselves!

They cannot expect to go on a massive 50 year long campaign to vilify the Germans with untrue stories and outright fabrications and lies about gas chambers and alleged genocide, and not expect a reaction from the victimized Germans and other people of good will, who don't have the same burning, all-consuming hatred some of these Holocaust lobbyists have for Germans under the guise of "Anti-Nazism".

If Revisionists are constantly accused by Jewish circles of being anti-Semites because they expose Zionist-Jewish machinations, why should Germans not accuse their attackers and tormentors not as being merely Anti-Nazi (since they are long dead), but as Anti-German bigots and propagandists.

Take "Schindler's-List", for example, where every German man and woman is shown as crooked, devious, cruel, evil, boorish and utterly corrupt!

Why should the Germnans accept such vicious, negative stereotyping in a film of filth, violence and corruption, to which school boards will drag millions of innocent children, to "teach them history" via a film based on a novel?!! To expose these youngsters to typically "Hollywood" smut and to overwhelm them with sexual and political pornography!

Every teacher, priest, minister, politician and newspaper man promoting that piece of unadulterated filth, should be criminally charged with aiding and abetting the corruption of minors. I recommend that parents call their school principals and teachers to warn them that if their children are introduced to sexual abuse and violence via the "Schindler's List" hate film, that they can expect legal repercussions. And then I suggest that those of you with children or grandchildren affected by this monstrous film, get of your asses and do something, if you don't do it for justice and decency's sake then for God's sake do it for your children!

Speaker of the House
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

This is America, is it not, Mr. Gingrich? The Jeffries woman, House historian, it would seem was treated like an enemy of the State for having offered a contrary opinion about the "Holocaust." Firing her for it only shows how Judaized this country's government is becoming. Criminal Politics Magazine has claimed that the Jewish press crows all the time over their control of both Democrats and Republicans. Now it is demonstrated by the Speaker. When Charles Schumer whines his complaint that a 'Holocaust denier' is in an official capacity in the House, the Speaker rushes to get rid of her.

Many of us do not believe in the Six Million myth. Some of us have done much research on the question. It is after all a matter for historians, not shamans. Jews openly question the divinity of Jesus Christ, a fair question in a free society. We, however, must pay obeisances to contrived stories and statistics to placate the Jews. Well, Mr. Speaker, you can bow and scrape before the "Rabbi Schumer," but he won't thank you for it.

Connie Chung may have suckered your mother, but Charles Schumer obviously has you by the short hairs.

Sincerely
Maj. Donald V. Clerkin

P.S. Schumer will use your cowardice in this matter to get more House votes for his gun confiscation schemes. When you give a Jew such as Schumer anything, you give him everything or else.

Dear Editor:

Why is the Posse Comitatus remnant in Tigerton treated like the Russians treat the people of Chechnya? Burning seems to be the remedy that all levels of "American" government employ against demonized dissidents.

First the "Move" group in Philadelphia was bombed out with an incendiary device. Then "Bruder Schweigen" leader Bob Mathews was burned alive on Whidbey Island by the FBI. Randy Weaver's cabin at Ruby Ridge, Idaho was about to be cremated with napalm when a reporter and his cameraman intervened.The Waco Davidians were burned alive by the BATF and the FBI. Now a county judge orders the homes of a few Shawano County residents burned to the ground because they question the tax laws and have filed common law liens against public officials.

Moscow and Beijing have nothing on the American firebugs who seemingly have a license to kill and destroy property in the name of 'the law.'

Dear Sirs:

"Seaquest" is an interesting concept. It is only the attempt at ridiculous political correctness that makes it foolish. Take for example the story this week about the possibility of there having actually been an Atlantis. Your story line posits that it was a black civilization ten thousand years ago. Consider that today's black race is mired in criminal imbecility. Consider also that at the time of the building of the pyramids the Nubians were slaves in Egypt. Consider further that the black tribes of Africa have never had a written language, never used the concept of a wheel, or a pulley or an incline plane; that their peoples never ventured more than a mile or two off the coast af West Africa.

Why then would you put forth the idea that this poor, benighted race of blacks could ever have been the people of Atlantis, the people that allegedly taught the ancient world its tongues, its science and medicine, its laws?

A few more shows like this one, and you'll have to employ Leonard Jeffries to explain why the blacks would be all brain surgeons and rocket scientists but for white prejudice. But the question remains how could the Africans have forgot so much from 10,000 B.C. to circa 4,000 B.C., when the Egyptians discovered that Nubians could lift and carry?

Sincerely,
Major Donald V. Clerkin Chairman / Commander

Dear Ms. Feraca:

Your Professor Shoyb is being very disingenuous when he claims not to understand my meaning when I say that revisionism is not permitted in the field of "Holocaust studies." That it is encouraged in the field of American history is signal, especially when one considers that many of the same persons who won't permit revisionism of the oscillating data of the "Holocaust" are quite content that footnotes to history in America such as Harriet Tubman be raised to the standard required to teach history.

If we make Harriet Tubman into a major player immediately preceding Fort Sumter, then why not make the mythology of this woman complete by placing her at the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia, or at the Missouri Compromise? She could be seen giving advice and scolds to those "crackers." The blacks would not know the difference. It might just sound good to them. The other peoples of color 'don't read no Gringo history anyway.'

I keep saying that this sort of nonsense is what is drying up public 'education.' Except for my call this morning, all of the calls were in agreement with the ruination of history teaching. You had it right when you were somewhat critical of the thrust of this revisionism, which is not to enlarge knowledge of specific events and actors but to detract from some, namely white males, who must be demonized. This is the bottom line of multi-culturalism.

Sincerely,
Maj. Donald V. Clerkin

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more; rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations.

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

BAGATELLES

by Joseph D. Pryce

EXILES FROM THE CULTURE?

You know how it goes: you arrive at a party thrown by the in-laws. You've promised yourself (and your good woman, naturally) that there isn't the slightest chance that you'll 'go off.' No matter how mercilessly you might be provoked by the Yahoos, nothing will get your goat. You will behave with the impassive calm of the Buddha, with the irenic and unruffled exterior of Lord Henry Wotton when confronted by some particularly nasty gaucherie. And then it comes, of course—someone, relative or not, it scarcely matters, enthuses about the new principal at the neighborhood boob-hatchery, who has promised to ensure that any moppet in her charge who evinces the slightest taint of racial prejudice will be condignly punished for its sins. As gushing approval washes around the premises, you finally explode, dealing some beautifully crafted barbs, some death-dealing, poisoned-tipped shafts at the shibboleths of the day. You're quite proud of yourself initially, and feel as if you have, alone and heroically, put down the Indian mutiny; but you're confronted by wide eyes, shocked mugs, and fearful whispers hovering in the air, as if you had begun a lecture on sexual technique in front of a grieving Queen Victoria. If you've been notoriously offensive, the kids will be hurriedly ushered from the room lest they hear the slightest discussion of that ultimate taboo, of that potent pornography which we know as reality. Yet how does one profitably discuss important political matters with those whose opinions are derived from the nightly news, torrid 'talk shows,' and the hacks over at People magazine? What common ground can one occupy with nit-wits who believe that there's something tragic and heart-clutching about the O.J. Simpson business? How can you possibly explain to a 'man' who foams at the mouth as he channel-surfs from one idiotic sports-spectacle to another that it really matters that his daughter is next door servicing a tour bus full of niggers in exchange for a little cocaine? Dilemmas, dilemmas. I'm afraid that we must face the fact that there will be no effective wake-up call for those Sleeping Beauties in the short-term; as dour, old Dante put it, Through Me is the Way to the City of Woe....Relinquish All Hope, Ye Who Enter Here.

But, of course, it's not just the morons who are afflicted by the curse of inhabiting the ass-end of the twentieth century. Our 'best and brightest' have likewise acquired accommodations on the same sinking ship, but, perhaps, there is some cause for hope here. I know that it might seem a little bit odd to place any faith in our intellectuals (and it is easy to demonstrate the destructive effects which the dastardly doings of many of our ivy-league figures have had on the history of this stomach-wrenching century), but we must remember that quality is far more important than quantity at this juncture—one conversion at an intellectually-charged level can change the world, believe it or not. After all, if I might digress for a moment, let us recall the fact that the most influential racial-nationalist theoretician of the last one-hundred years was shepherded in the direction of truth by an accident of fate. Houston Stewart Chamberlain (1855-1927), who had been a shy and retiring semi-invalid into his teens, found himself unable to complete his schooling at Cheltenham in England; and so, on a European jaunt, his aunt Harriet decided to procure the services of a private tutor, a young scholar of theology named Otto Kunze. Now this pivotal figure in Europe's history (I kid you not) encouraged the young man to organize and discipline his studies, which had been desultory and unsupervised hitherto. He also instilled in the student the beginnings of a life-long passion for botany, a field in which Chamberlain was eventually to engage in some interesting and original researches. For our purposes, however, Herr Kunze had a far greater influence on Chamberlain, and, by extension, on the rest of the modern world, when he inculcated in his young charge an enthusiasm for the glories of German Culture and German Science. Kunze remained so committed to the career of his pupil that he kept in touch with Chamberlain right into the period of the philosopher's great fame. Kunze read all of Chamberlain's books as they appeared and offered critical comments on them for which the philosopher was very grateful.

Houston Stewart Chamberlain was no exile from the culture: he placed himself in the thick of the fray as he came into manhood's estate. I find it especially noteworthy that he wrote very often in French and was a close friend of Jules Laforgue, the great and innovative poet whose early death was felt as a great tragedy by our philosopher (T.S. Eliot would one day regard Laforgue as one of the crucial influences on his own poetic development). Chamberlain was the very antithesis of the parochial lout who thinks his ideas out at the top of his voice (while scratching at the top of his head)—he was a 'good European,' and I shudder to think what this poet, playwright, Wagner biographer, neo-Kantian thinker, and philosopher of history would have made of his dry-as-dust—and, yes, provincial—counterparts in the movement today.

As I say, this epochal intellectual, who became the mentor of Kaiser Wilhelm II as well as the inspiration to Hitler, Eckart, Goebbels, and Alfred Rosenberg, chose the path which he trod as the result of a personal encounter with one great teacher. So this sort of thing can happen; this kind of encounter can matter. Further evidence for the truth of my contention can be found in William Sheridan Allen's The Nazi Seizure of Power (NEW VIEWPOINTS, New York, 1973). Walther Timmerlah, a book-seller in Thalburg (this name is employed by Allen as a cover for the real town which is the subject of his study), formerly in the Kingdom of Hannover, becomes the first National Socialist in the town, largely because "In his years abroad Timmerlah had come to admire the writings of Houston Stewart Chamberlain. Shortly before the Munich Putsch he heard, at a literary tea, that Chamberlain had said of Hitler, 'There's a man I could follow with my eyes shut,' and consequently Timmerlah had joined the NSDAP as the first member of Thalburg.....Walther Timmerlah was exceedingly well-liked in Thalburg. A spare, lively man, he was gentle and kindly, friendly to everyone yet thoughtful and reserved enough to hold people's respect. His bookstore was the intellectual center of the town, for he was acquainted with many of the writers and poets the town admired, and he was a chairman of the Thalburg Lecture Society. In addition, he was a prominent member of the Lutheran church. 'Walther Timmerlah bears a heavy burden, for it was mainly his example that led many people to join the NSDAP,' remarked one Thalburger. 'People said, " If he's in it, it must be alright" ' (Allen, p. 26). So that was how it happened, my friends, in towns and villages and cities all over the Reich.

So how might one go about the practical business of imparting our world-view to such a promising young thinker in these barmy days? There are more points of entry into controversial territory than one might think. In a discussion of the racial question, for instance, one can, after all, if one is at all clever, convince the stray intellect that the environmentalist fantasy doesn't merely entail an admission that vitamin deprivation can have a worrisome effect on the phenotype. What the Stephen Jay Goulds and their fifth-columnists in the media are really saying, more or less, is that a Central Park nag can eventually give birth to a champion thoroughbred if only enough Head Start programs are 'in place,' and if all of the welfare checks get to their tenement mail-boxes on time. One might well employ humor and shame as effective 'levers' in these spots—after all, no intellectual really enjoys looking like a damned idiot.....

However, you do have to share at least some assumptions with those with whom you engage in discussions on political philosophy—that is, if you want to get anywhere. Before you charge for the thickest part of the fortress-wall, with the raging accents of moral self-righteousness clouding the air, you must have decided for yourself just what it is that you hope to achieve with this 'hopeful.' If you really believe that the American Republic can be saved from its racing doom (I'm sorry to have to disagree with you on this matter, but, as I'm not omniscient, I'll let it slide), it would be propitious to try a gentle and congenial approach. Make as many telling points as you can without giving your guy the impression that you've just pole-vaulted over the walls of the local lunatic asylum. If he finds that his interest is stirred, he will probably return for more; and he may eventually confront you with questions which will indicate whether or not you have a live one on your hands or a dud. And, nota bene, you must always be concerned with the presentation of your very personage to those with whom you are discussing these matters, for as Aristotle once said, the character of an orator can contribute to the spectators' decision as to whether or not they are willing to be persuaded by the case he has made. If you present yourself as a shrill Cassandra, howling dire prognostications athwart the gloom, the chances are that you will receive the treatment which that good lady received.

The main problem with which we on the radical right are faced is our inability to relate to the regnant Weltgeist for long enough to be able to effect any real change, either in the culture at large or in the hearts of our compatriots. Once in a while, of course, a great white hope stumbles along, to huff and puff his 'hour upon the stage,' and hope dawns once again in our hearts that now, at long last, people will listen; but it won't be long, as we know from protracted and painful experience, before our hoggish champion drops to his scabrous knees to do obeisance to our rulers. With a fulsome hosanna howled forth from between cracked lips, the heretic begins to slobber, to appease. As I speak, for instance, Patrick Buchanan is scurrying around like a pitbull in full rut attacking The Bell Curve , and in quite a perverse and disingenuous fashion. Why? I don't really know, but I suspect that several influences are at play here, the most important of which is Buchanan's adherence to Jesus and his pop and the rest of that giddy stuff. If it had been merely a question of expediency, I can imagine that it would have been quite simple for Pat to claim that he hadn't read the book, or that its subject matter was outside his area of competence. I believe that a nice rule-of-thumb which could be invoked by sympathetic pols in the public eye when sand-bagged with an issue like The Bell Curve would be to adapt a key phrase from Wittgenstein: of that about which one cannot speak, one must remain silent.

(I must say that I regard it as a mark of desperation when I see 'rightists' hanging about Pat's banquet-table, with the attitude of greyhounds cadging scraps from the King's table). I'm reminded once again that he who has the eyes to see and who points to all the little wounds whilst ignoring the main wound is either a scoundrel or a fool (with Pat, who knows, it could be 'all of the above'). We rightly expect someone like that hustling $2.00 whore Bill Moyers to produce a PBS program about 'stopping violence' without mentioning the salient facts about the racial question (who's been killing and eating whom, and when, and how they season the flesh before they do; why certain 'ethnic' groups gather at the Town Square for a palaver when things go awry—and why other 'ethnic' groups burn both Town and Square to the ground when they get a little miffed, etc., u.s.w., ad infinitum). We don't, however, seem to get the message about someone like ophidian Pat, whose gut response to something like the sane population control policy inaugurated by the current Chinese authorities is not to urge a kindred policy on the muds, mads, and recidivists who infect our country. No, perish the thought! Instead, Pat urges that we invite the women from mainland China who want to go forth and multiply irresponsibly to come here—to the great milk-cow with a trillion teats, good old U.S. of A! Yet next week, we'll come back to the same saloon for more, like an habitual drunkard, an abused wife, a whipped cur, or a character out of Sacher-Masoch. And the question recurs: can one expect to engage in meaningful discourse on public policy with someone like Buchanan, when we've become familiar with his anfractuous track-record? Or are we, again, condemned to that exile from public life which makes most of the movement's theoreticians and activists wail and froth like John the Baptist in the Strauss/Wilde opera Salome? If we look like people who might dine on live locusts in the desert, I can assure you that people will believe that we do. That is a consideration.

Although what I am now talking about has more of a bearing on style than on substance, I'm well aware that questions of principle are constantly raising their ugly mugs. I sound as if I would abjure all compromise in political matters; and that might account for the occasional stridency in my presentation of the facts, but the bright spot is that on some matters of principle we can profitably barter and trade with those of a different political complexion. Yet on others we must be as unyielding as adamant, as steadfast as the Earth. Who cares, really, if the state has to resort to deficit financing once in a while? Is it of transcendent import whether or not taxes are increased on certain classes at the expense of others, or whether line-item-veto is endorsed by us, or whether that nostrum will ultimately end up filed in the void next to 'nullification'? Who knows? Who cares! But, and it is a big but, what are we going to do about Yahweh's rascals and the other minorities? That's the question, buddy. And what kind of world do we want to create after we get our greedy hands on state-power? Those are, as I say, the real questions, and, unfortunately, at this time we have a very hard time getting ourselves heard at all amidst all of the storm and fury surrounding us in this wild and weird country. Morons make much noise.

And there it is—I've done it again. I've allowed my exasperation at the infinite foolishness of the country and its population to get the better of me, and I think I know why. Doesn't one tire of the endless repetition which is required by our activists to get even one sound perception into the noggin of an uninstructed American, whether educated or not? I know I do. But this is a problem faced by every politically-active person on the scene. Left or Right, it's totally irrelevant. We tend, for instance, to think that the Jews love forking over billions of bucks to ram home the Holocaust Maerchen; we think that the Stephen Jay Goulds and the Carl Sagans have a regular laugh-riot an hour persuading the yobboes to believe in racial equality and the other febrile hallucinations which torment them. I'm sure, however, that our big-domes really don't enjoy it. It's just that they have no choice. The American people are not only more stupid than we know—they are more stupid than we can imagine in our most rabid nightmares. I love my people, of course, blah, blah, blah, but, as I have said repeatedly, I do face the fact that it is going to require an educational effort extending over the kalpas of eternity to set them straight. So I say once more, we might have a future if we are willing to write off the mobs (for now), and, instead, concentrate on the brains.

But let us not let our big brains off the hook too easily. We miss more opportunities than an angler on Quaaludes. Our savviest comrades are sometimes as guilty of the sin of stupidity as are the great unwashed. I can show this to be true quite easily (I'll put off my discussion of the movement's paederast-sniffers and other sociopaths for such time as I can figure out just what the hell they're up to). Activists—who tend not to read anything other than rightist materials—are always bitching and moaning about the fact that the major communications media have a stranglehold on the public's perceptions, and will not allow any facts to be made public, the dissemination of which might militate against the structural integrity of the System. This is very, very silly thinking, if it can be called thinking at all. The System is constantly telling us the truth about almost every matter which vexes us, and the evidence to back up this statement is all over the landscape. A 'for instance'? O.K.—how many times have you heard our worthies complaining about the New York Times, and its quasi-Stalinist refusal to let the truth be told about the power of, say, AIPAC (the Israeli lobby)? How do our guys know? Newsletters tell them so! Yet here is Mr. Establishment, Hedrick Smith, Pulitzer Prize-winning scribe for the New York Times, holding forth on the Israeli lobby and its shenanigans (from The Power Game, Ballantine Books, New York, 1988): ...the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), leading edge of the pro-Israeli lobby working Congress, literally transformed itself and gained greater power than ever before...it became a superlobby. Its budget shot up eight-fold in nine years, its membership multiplied from nine thousand households in 1978 to fifty-five thousand in 1987, its staff grew from twenty-five to eighty-five. By the mid-eighties, its leadership was steering roughly $4 million in campaign contributions to friendly candidates and punishing political foes (p. 216). AIPAC's budget, for example, shot up from $750,000 in 1978 to $6.1 million in 1987 just to cover pro-Israeli issues (p. 217). In 1985, for example, after President Reagan had personally promised modern arms to King Hussein as inducement to negotiate with Israel, AIPAC and its allies lined up seventy-four senators to block a $1.5 billion dollar arms package to Jordan....Reagan had to renege on his promise to Hussein; he withdrew the Jordanian arms package without a vote, demonstrating AIPAC's power to deter presidential initiatives (p. 221). Over the years, AIPAC had developed from a pro-Israel public affairs forum in the 1950s to a fifty-five-thousand member lobby to which scores of senators and congressmen turn for authoritative guidance. AIPAC is an American lobby, not a registered foreign agent, but it has close ties with the Israeli government. Its political tally sheets and strategy reports wind up in the Israeli prime minister's office....Some Israeli journalists jokingly refer to AIPAC as "our embassy." And Tom Dine, a Kennedy Democrat with ten years of staff experience in Congress, is not above pulling a card from his wallet to show that he carries the Israeli prime minister's twenty-four-hour phone number (pp. 221-222).

What do you think of them apples? And that is just a sampling of the toothsome morsels vended by our author. I find it especially troubling that our cannier movement people are as blissfully unaware of Smith's book as a fossil femur is of the prime interest rate. It's much easier, I think, to explain why this view doesn't percolate down into the great unwashed masses: that is because it hasn't been rammed home with the studied and unrelenting pressure, with the insane repetitiousness which would be required to penetrate the concrete crania of our fellow countrymen. Of course, our masters are not interested in effectively spreading the evil news about Jewish clout. Of course, they'd much rather hammer out another Holocaust fairy tale. Of course, they will give more space to the wackier anti-hereditarians. Why shouldn't they? But I'm sure that even our enemies eventually become exasperated by the amount of exertion which it takes to get the mob hopping on anything. Still, they can crow that they're not suppressing anything, and Hedrick Smith is there to prove it. This strange phenomenon makes it very easy, of course, for the powers that be to be able to convince even intellectual hot-shots that they're not totalitarians, that their interest in the truth is paramount, and that anyone who is interested can find all the facts that he wants to rub his mug in right in front of him. They didn't get where they are today without a modicum of cleverness, and, as they proceed by the slightest increments to ratchet-up the intensity of their assault on our people, they appear to be eminently rational and moderate at all times. They're in the swim of things, as it were.

And there's the rub. How can we, whose assumptions about such minor matters as the very nature of Man and of the Cosmos in which he has his being, fly in the face of all that democratic man holds most sacred, make the slightest impression on him without shrieking at the top of our lungs, without making ourselves look more ridiculous than the tin-horn Elmer Gantrys whom one sees salivating on Sunday morning TV? I say it again—we won't change the mass-mind until we can incorporate ideological middle-men in our ranks, those who will eventually be able to get our songbirds to chirp a different—and sweeter—tune. This will take time, and oodles of it; but once we recognize the folly of efforts directed at the society at large, we will at least be able to maintain whatever small portion of sanity is left to our poor brains. We all know that it can lead us to the point of derangement when we try to remain calm and urbane in the face of some tapeworm who urges that we just 'vote out the bad guys, and vote in the good ones.' What can you say to some gibbon who really believes not only that it is possible to 'restore the Constitution,' but—mirabile dictu!—that it would be desirable to do so? And how many times does one have to explain to the same eczematous tadpole that the dictator of Iraq had no designs whatsoever on the local Seven-Eleven? By around the fifteenth time that you place the World Trade Center bombing in the context of, say, the genocide that we committed in Baghdad, I know that patience can wear mighty thin. The animalculae don't even get the point about the zaniness of protecting Kuwait (which no American that I've come across in everyday life could have found on a map) from invasion by wicked Saddam while Mexicans are invading our own country, stealing our jobs, palpating our wallets, and raping our women. It seems that we really do live in what Plato once called "these non-constitutions" (tas ou politeias). Perhaps, movement activists should spend a lot more time and money on locating skilled educators than they are currently spending on toys which everyone knows they will never, ever use. Get the most important weapons of all—Ideas—to the appropriate sector of the front, and then we will begin to make progress.

I don't want to paint an entirely nightmarish view of our missionary labors, because every once in a while a thinker does comes along whose project is congenial, and whose manner of presentation is so overbearing and forthright that the most practiced imbecile can get the point. There are times when one or the other of our reigning wits loses control and seems overmastered by a sort of compulsion, a will-to-indiscretion (if I might wax metaphysical for a moment), and it could very well be in our interest to capitalize on the fact. On such occasions, it can appear that the high-octane pundit in question wants to howl his or her hard-won wisdom into the gaping ear of the sweatiest gorilla in the last row. 'Tis then that the most inopportune dragons and demons from the abyss of politically incorrect ideas can storm the field with some hope of a hearing. For instance, when the Yale University Press published Camille Paglia's Sexual Personnae in 1990, the caterwauling of the radical feminists, who railed like scorched cats against the author's betrayal of the good cause, was so deafening that one of the inner voices in the thunderous prose of the book—not elegant, and, at times, quite awkward—of La Paglia was effectively masked. This inner voice (and here I am using a term from pianistic technique and not from the realm of private meditation) dealt pretty openly with the ultimate no-no: fascism. Ms. Paglia writes repeatedly and explicitly about fascist aesthetics (not, of course, very startling—this area usually allows our enemies to open up on us with a vengeance—we tend to be such dowdy philistines, after all). However—and here's where the jaw drops—she writes enthusiastically about our side! What is happening here?

I bring this matter up at this point not because the reaction of our lefty litterati to the book was, as one might have expected, violently negative. The feisty critic's hostile presentation of the excesses of the rad-fems was bound to cause her some rough moments. What was really interesting to me in all the brouhaha was the fact that Ms. Paglia's presentation of an explicitly fascist (and racialist!) aesthetic theory wasn't even noticed. Ponder that paradox, mates! At last, it seems, there are bizarre heresies and outlandish doctrinal positions which strike the termagants of the establishment as more menacing than fascism itself. Ah, Progress at last!

Is there a lesson to be learned here? An ironist might point to the self-evident fact that almost everyone on the political landscape has purloined one or more of the crucial philosophical positions which we on the radical right have occupied, in the face of damned-near universal obloquy, since 1945. Draw attention to the theft, my hearties! Deep Ecology, dirigiste economics, behaviorist techniques of persuasion, hereditarian biologism, and, now, fascist artistic theory—in short, and I say this in all humility, we're all fascists now. To return to Camille the gadfly—of course, we big, brave boys and girls didn't make any hay out of Ms. Paglia's meditations, and that's typical of our bovine and chronic ineptitude. Far better, of course, for us to publish another tedious Jew-baiting book or another piece of racist hack-work than to grab the right end of the club and get into the swing of things. God forbid that we intersect at any point with the real world, even when it stumbles into a position which conforms with our stance.

Just in case the reader is skeptical of my claim that Ms. Paglia (Harold Bloom's star pupil[!]), has done justice to our view of things in her work, I append a potpourri of quotations which I believe would have gotten the author drummed out of the scholarly world as recently as, say, ten years ago (page-listings from the Yale University hardcover edition):

ystification will always remain the disorderly companion of love and art. Eroticism is mystique; that is, the aura of emotion and imagination around sex. It cannot be "fixed" by codes of social or moral convenience.....For nature's fascism is greater than that of any society (p. 13). Historiography's most glaring error has been its assertion that Judeo-Christianity [sic] has defeated paganism. Paganism has survived....(p. 25). Only utopian liberals could be surprised that the Nazis were art connoisseurs (p. 29). Marxism is the bleakest of anxiety-formations against the power of chthonian mothers. Its influence on modern historiography has been excessive. The "great man" theory of history was not as simplistic as claimed.....One man can change the course of history, for good or ill. Marxism is a flight from the magic of person and the mystique of hierarchy. It distorts the character of western culture, which is based on charismatic power of person....Personality and art, which Marxism fears and censors, rebound from every effort to repress them (pp. 36-37). Egypt, making a state, made beauty. The reign of Chephren (fl. 2565 B.C.) gave Egyptian art its supreme style....Pharaoh was the state. The concentration of power in one man, a living god, was a great cultural advance....Commerce, technology, and the arts profit when nationalism wins over parochialism. Egypt....made a mystique out of one-man rule. And in that mystique was the birth of the western eye (p. 57). Pharaonic construction is the perfection of matter in art. Fascist political power, grandiose and self-divinizing, creates the hierarchical, categorical superstructure of western mind (p. 59). The Dorians, who invaded Greece from the north in the 12th century B.C., may have been blonde, recalled in Homer's red-haired Menelaus. I think Apollonian light turned again into blondeness, one of Europe's racist motifs, glamourized in Botticelli and the Apollonian Faerie Queen. Blondeness is Apollo's wolfish coldness and conceptualism. It made its mark on our century in Hitler's....Aryanism (pp. 73-74). Our bodies are pagan temples, heathen holdouts against Judeo-Christian [sic] soul or mind (p. 95). The Apollonian is aristocratic, monarchist, and reactionary. Volatile, mobile Dionysus is hoi polloi, the Many. He is rabble and rubble, both democratic mob-rule and the slurry of uncountable objects (p. 97). This fascist gesture is also made by the Apollo Belvedere, following his arrow with his eye (p. 104). Apollonian objectification is fascist but sublime (p. 105). The Caucasian "line" of the dancer's body is Apollo's hard incised edge (p. 105). Judaism's campaign to make divinity invisible has never fully succeeded. Images are always eluding moral control, creating the brilliant western art tradition. Idolatry is fascism of the eye. The eye will be served.....(p. 139). Western personality is raised on a pedestal, in Florence or in Nuremberg. Leni Riefenstahl did for Hitler what the neoclassic David did for Napoleon. Personality is ritualized by the fascism of the western eye (p. 146). Michelangelo's electrifying icon....is a racist pardigm of Greek physical culture. The Apollonian, I said, is a Dorian and therefore Aryan aesthetic (p. 159). Unfortunately, the heroic Shakespearean sound is muffled these days for scaled-down television performance by liberal directors with antifascist axes to grind (p. 227). We cannot escape our life in these fascist bodies (p. 235). Western seeing is innately fascist and amoral (p. 412). Dorian Gray is about the amorality of beauty and the fascism of the western objet d'art (p. 527).

Interesting, isn't it? And, as they say, the woman is still in the field commanding troops! One who would hear the voice inside the formulas must dismiss as so much idle chatter Ms. Paglia's claims to be a 'Clinton Democrat.' I urge readers to pick up a copy of this book (now out in paperback)—the good woman has smuggled our contraband into the most glittering stall in the marketplace with the same brazen courage with which Sir Richard Burton smuggled himself into Mecca. Again, I urge you. And again.

So in conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, let me bring these meditations to a close by saying that our task, although it will certainly be a daunting one, still has its brighter aspects—provided we are willing to capitalize on them. Instead of fingering through the index of every book we acquire for the 'J'-word; instead of vetting every piece of printed material which comes into our hands on the sole basis of whether or not the author has advanced 'proofs of nigger inferiority,' let's see if there might be other, more prepotent weapons in an author's arsenal, weapons which might supply us with more of a positive vision than we are accustomed to. And, should you come across something that might interest one of the comrades, communicate your find. We are very weak when it comes to articulating the positive side of our vision (our enemies are closer to the mark on this point than we might be willing to admit). Don't forget that Houston Stewart Chamberlain was brought around to a sane political philosophy not by jeremiads against the sheenies or by some frantic screeching against racial decline, but by a lofty image of culture derived from Goethe and Schiller and Wagner—all rather positive fellows, if I may say so!

Who knows—if we are astute enough, and are willing to grow up a little, and are willing to engage in some kind of dialogue with the 'world as it goes,' we might one day find ourselves down by the seashore, bidding a bitter-sweet farewell to those whom we have decided to send into exile: from a real Culture.....

DR. OLIVER'S PASSING.

One tries to get a grip on oneself, of course, but sometimes one just doesn't have the stamina. Dr. Oliver's death has caused tremendous sorrow throughout the world-wide racial-nationalist movement, and I think that we all have this haunting fear that we have lost the most important of the world's thinkers at a time when we can least afford it. I find it especially difficult to recover from this blow—part of the reason for the poignancy of my personal grief is my feeling that, somehow, I was cheated of the Oliverian heritage until it was too late. But, of course, it's not.....

My first acquaintance with Dr. Oliver's existence was purely by rumor. I came across his name during the sixties and seventies, in connection with the 'Conservative' movement, and I was mildly curious about the man: after all, he was a legendary classicist, and, rumor had it, he had also mastered several of the more abstruse sciences—clearly, not an ordinary fellow. At the time of which I speak, I was mildly attached to the said Conservative movement, largely because I was unable to locate a more seaworthy vessel in port. I felt, so to speak, that until I could find a lovely fairy princess without a hunchback, I had better remain faithful to the shrew in hand. And so I drifted on, perfectly unaware that there really were Fascist hyenas in the field, to whose cachinnations I might profitably have oriented my steps. But that is another story.....

Mr. William F. Buckley Jr., who was at that time very significant for my own development, largely because he was a skilled controversialist who scorned to split infinitives, and who seemed to be on speaking terms with Vladimir Nabokov and Evelyn Waugh (boyhood idols whom I still hold in high esteem), would occasionally mention Oliver in his National Review pieces, and these fugitive utterances whetted my appetite. Of course, I couldn't miss the condescending tone in which Buckley regretfully dismissed the good Doctor's efforts—

Oliver's high opinion of General Walker did exclude one from polite society in Nueva York, but one was surprised to get this take from a so-called Conservative, with his gimlet-eye allegedly oriented to that wider landscape on which Truth had established her serene and uncontested dominion. What can I tell you—I was young.....

Anyway, my bitterness about having been deprived of the only American writer who can be properly invoked in the company of Poe and Mencken—which is to say, the very best—stems from a certain personal encounter in the 1970s. Background—once in a great while, Buckley used to employ the Firing Line facilities for a program which would deal with the stellar achievements of an organization which he had founded along another somewhat unsavory individual (rumored, and with some show of vraisemblance, to be a sexual lefty) called the Young Americans for Freedom; anyway, in '75 or '76 (I'm not precisely sure which year), Buckley's wide-eyed pride of youthful Conservative tabbycats were on TV, filling the airwaves with all sorts of regurgitated luncheon-meat from Big Bill's 'rightist' commissary, and, in truth, not much was happening on-screen which could ward off Morpheus. I surrendered without delay.

But a day or so later, I happened to be riding the Long Island Railroad into that sinful Babylon on the Hudson, when, at the Jamaica station, several of the YAFers (as these pin-striped, strobo-pressed and Brylcremed proto-yuppies were nicknamed) jumped on board and sat down opposite me. I observed these fellows with tremendous clandestine skill, born of my examination of the works of Eric Ambler et al., and listened to their miserable, sex-starved prattle for a few moments with considerable amusement. At length, I put on my best starry-eyed countenance and asked if they were the big thinkers whom I had seen on the telly. They fell in love with me instantly, of course, like the attention-craving starlets that they were, and the conversation wended this way and that, until I finally asked about Revilo Oliver—was there anything to the guy? Could one human skull house that much knowledge? That many languages? The leader of the group, who now became distinctly uncomfortable as he realized that the conversation was going to stray very far indeed from his own silly career, began berating

Dr. O., describing him as someone who was not quite comme il faut: he had done or said or thought something which seemed almost inconceivable to this young man. Revilo Oliver, I was informed, had expressed certain opinions which were absolutely beyond the pale. It was difficult to elicit any information as to what it was, precisely, that had gotten him expelled from the ranks of the righteous. It was darkly hinted that he had let slip some curious opinions regarding—well, he'd rather not say. As I felt both confused and curious, I asked the clean-shaven and virtuous-looking fellow whether Oliver had offended the canons of sound scholarship. Had his declensions and conjugations become dubious? Had he resorted to a false quantity? Were his etymologies becoming a trifle questionable? Even Martin Heidegger had been accused of this last lapse, and he had survived intact, so I wondered what it was that had so scarified the conservative community. At length, as the train roared into Penn Station, I was informed that Oliver had become so completely gaga that he was known to give utterance to remarks which were distinctly disrepectful to—well, the young fellow would rather not say.....

As those bright lights of the Zionist future fade away down the corridors of memory, I do hope that I can someday provoke my imagination into airbrushing the alterations to the YAFer's physiognomy which the years might have wrought. I have a little word, and, perhaps, a little something more for that Middle Aged American for Freedom (what else can I call him? After all, what is the proper address for the Beach Boys now that they have attained geriatric status—Beach Men?).

In short, I swallowed the vague drivel spouted by this ninny. And as the man says, "you pay, and you pay, and you pay." So every morning I wail a mea culpa to the remorseless face in the mirror. Dr. Goebbels once remarked that stupidity was the only failing which he could not find it in himself to understand. Mea maxima culpa.....

I hope to write some more nourishing analytical pieces on the Master for the LB soon—now that I have gotten that confession off my chest: warts and all..... ❑

Part Two

UNITY: ILLUSION AND REALITY

The preceding indication of the kind of people needed for the instrument of battle can now be re-enforced conversely by an examination of the kind of people we need to exclude and avoid entanglement with. To begin with, let us consider the continual chatter about the desirability of unity in the "right wing": the notion that, if only there could be some indiscriminate banding together of all the different political shapes and sizes of Democracy's non-left dissidents—including us—we would all be well on the way to success.

On the contrary, such a variegated assemblage could never result in anything other than a short-lived excursion into futility both for us and for the rest of the hotchpotch. The original National Front in the U.K. pursued this fool's errand, and proved its folly by succumbing to a rapid succession of splits because of the indigestibility of its ingredients.

The prerequisite for organizational unity is like-mindedness to an overwhelming if not entire extent, thus a union of minds to supply the justification and provide the durable bonding. This fusion of thought to the extent of transcending common belief is the real substance of unity. Without it a physical fusion brought about because of some partial agreement alongside much disagreement is but the outward semblance cloaking an inward continuation of disunity of belief: an illusion of increased strength but a reality of continuing weakness.

Any National-Socialist body foolish enough to be deluded into participating in such an exercise of self-deception, conceiving it to be some short cut to victory, will learn through its ensuing disablement and nullification and all the resulting waste of time and opportunity that this is no real way ahead. Emphatically there are no such short cuts, only the long, straight, hard road with the benefit of sound methods of advancement which are the subject of this study.

An entirely different matter from the folly of fusion with non-National Socialists—including nationalists who, in contrast to National-Socialists, put the state and the country above the race and its ideology—is the folly of failing to unite with all genuine National-Socialists. The restrictive qualification of "genuine" has to be stressed because there are various persons and bodies who adopt the label, part of the ideology, and much of the trappings, but who are certainly not in the full and therefore proper sense real National-Socialists as we must define them. These people range from sincere but mistaken ideological deviationists to crude parodies and monstrous caricatures, and will be dealt with later in this study.

Putting aside all such counterfeit material, there can be no good reason for a failure to bring about structural unity among all genuine National-Socialists for the greater strength to be gained thereby from organizational recognition of their unity of thought. Instead, the invalid and bemeaning reason is petty, personal antipathy. In this, real or imaginary affronts, jealousies, failure to balance good in a person against imperfections loom out of proportion and override the interests of the cause and its requirements of comradeship.

Thereby the ulcer of personal friction suppurates to the benefit of the enemy. The noisome pus of concocted or aggravated allegations and disparagements oozes forth to spread infection. Persons who formerly and happily worked together, once some personal clash has occurred turn round and discover almost every sin under the sun in the erstwhile comrade. The poisoning of the atmosphere is helped on by those who, without an actual thorn in their own flesh as the cause, are stricken with chronic gullibility. This latter failing of the mind to perform with cautious skepticism, requiring and evaluating evidence before reaching a judgment in the range of guilty, innocent or not proven one way or the other, is seen in this present context in the form of a proclivity to swallow and regurgitate any kind of rumour, so that, for example, persons of somewhat Iberian appearance are instantly pronounced to be Jewish, and male companions who go camping together are pronounced to be homosexuals. It can, of course, in another and reverse form, work as a willingness to accept a person as genuine too easily, and thus cause the person to fall prey to fakes and enemy agents.

The cause is too great and the time too short for all the petty, personal nonsense which puts and keeps National-Socialists apart and in conflict. If we cannot expurgate it, we will deserve to lose, and lose we will. If we can henceforth cast out, here and abroad, the cancerous wasting disease of disunity, we will show a far greater worthiness to succeed, and attain a much increased capacity to do so.

RIGHT WING: NATIONAL-SOCIALISTS ARE NOT

In rigorously resisting and rejecting all the befuddling and distracting talk about uniting the "right wing" with us as part of it, we must from this moment onwards completely and constantly disown this term as applied so commonly, wrongly and harmfully to us, along with the nationalists. This rejection is a vital part of the purification and clarification necessary for the creation of the combat-efficient force we must have for our victory. We National-Socialists are no part of Democracy's political pattern, right, left or centre. We are wholly outside it and wholly against it, and intent on declaring and demonstrating this.

As part of the rejection of the right wing label, along with calls for our involvement in right wing unity, we have firmly to resist and sternly to expose and denounce the recurrent disposition of those who accept the label to fancy that there is some easier way to better things by fondly grasping at some right wing figure of Democracy's old parties as some shining white hope of salvation. We have had this furore in the past here in the U.K. with Enoch Powell serving Democracy as a safety valve on the issue of Coloured immigration, appearing to wishful thinkers galore to be raising a banner of competent revolt against this alien invasion, while all the time remaining a devotee of the system inherently responsible for it.

Recently another pied piper from the same political abode, playing much the same political tune to beguile the public and boost his prestige, came on stage and predictably attracted an instant accolade from the legions of undiscerning optimists who seemingly neverlearn. This second seducer was appropriately a second Winston Churchill.His grandfather was that calamitous character who, for the benefit of the Jewish cause which he espoused for his political and financial advancement, put us into and kept us in the inferno of the Second World War to the bitter end of unconditional surrender to an insanity resulting in all our present afflictions.

Winston No. 2 won all his instantaneous and resounding hurrahs from the credulous congregation of the right wing for what resolved down into no more than a virtually useless proposal to slow down slightly the process of making Britain Coloured. Thus all he had to offer was a slight delay in attaining this culmination of that descent to ruin so powerfully promoted by that supreme showman of spurious patriotism, his grandfather, Winston No. 1. A founder-member of the Inter-parliamentary Council against Anti-Semitism, who has told the London Jewish Chronicle that he wants "exemplary sentences" for those "who incite racism", Winston No. 2, toast of the nitwits of the right wing, did not even call for a complete stop to further immigration. So he never went beyond this to suggest anything at all to encourage the departure of any part of the millions who are already here, thanks to all he and his Conservative and Liberal and Labour fellow political criminals have or have not done over the decades since his grandfather made war on Aryan racial resurgence.

Even if, contrary to both Churchills, all further Coloured immigration was permanently stopped tomorrow, there are already so many Coloureds here, and they are breeding so fast that it is only a matter of time, and not so very long at that, before they become Democracy's majority. Then the Aryans who have trod, worked, fought for the land, and died here time out of mind, bringing about a unique blend of blood and soil, will become a dissipated, demoralized, dwindling minority in what was once their homeland, facing extinction by reduced reproduction and miscegenation. That is our destiny under Democracy, the death system of the Aryan.

Even if, in addition to stopping all further entry by Coloureds, there was some encouragement to repatriation solely on a voluntary basis by means of some financial inducement, as has been proposed in various circles of the right wing, it would be woefully inadequate to remove the Coloured settlers as a whole or any great part of them. Coloured immigrants swarmed and still do, despite the tricks of Democracy's politicians to dissemble—precisely because of the benefits of residence and citizenship. The vast majority of them will only be induced to depart voluntarily if, in addition to any reasonable repatriation grant and other assistance, those benefits are withdrawn from them, something you can be absolutely certain the politicians of Democracy, along with right wing nationalists, will never contemplate.

THE REMOVAL OF THE COLOUREDS

Their citizenship, which was wrongly given to them in the first place, has to be rightly revoked. They must no longer be able to vote, no longer able to hold public office, and no longer be able to take advantage of unearned welfare facilities, among other things. This, and nothing short of this, should shift the greater part of them. The remnant, after a reasonable period of grace, will have to be compulsorily deported without the resettlement aid given to the voluntary emigrants.

The wholly sufficient justification for total exclusion and total eviction, as far as permanent residence is concerned distinct from temporary visiting, lies in the fact that this drastic measure is absolutely essential for the survival, revival and welfare and betterment of our own Aryan Folk which has to be our overriding consideration. Misplaced squeamishness in opposition to this measure by the weak, muddled and misguided can only mean that, faced with the choice between care for the Coloureds and care for our own Folk, hardship for the Coloureds or the far greater hardship of racial death for our own Folk, they choose to inflict this latter fate on us. Obviously there can be no place with us for anyone who inclines to this latter preference.

The right wing "patriots", whose concern for the Coloured invasion is subject to their training by the media of Democracy to worship "moderation" in the face of even the most immoderate menace as an essential part of the conditioning for tame and tractable servants of their masters, will never bring themselves to go along with the one and only sufficient solution to the Coloured problem. For the same reason of training plus timidity in their domestication to Democracy they are inhibited from even breaking silence, or else saying anything which is not so bound by limitations as to be quite useless, on the less recognized but even more important because more basically responsible Jewish problem. This makes them that much more undesirable to be entangled with.

DEALING WITH THE JEWISH PROBLEM

This Jewish problem arises from the presence in our midst of what is predominantly another non-Aryan minority, but one much more able and ambitious and influential andpowerful. The Jews have the enormous advantage of an ethnic religion alltheir own, endowing them with a divine sanction for world domination. At a later stage in this study when we come to deal with the religious factor relating to racial resurgence which the nationalists and even some National-Socialists fight shy of, we will see how vital it is that, as the very foundation for the right ideology for the right people in the right forms of activity and organization for victory, we equip ourselves with no less a religious sanction and sustenance as the Jews possess.

Believing themselves to be divinely chosen for global supremacy, the Jews, although they now have a country of their own, Israel, with which the vast majority of them actually have no real ancestral connection at all as compared with the dispossessed Arabs—nevertheless demand and receive the right to residence and prominence and even immunity from criticism in Britain and in every other Aryan land throughout the world. Three requirements arise from this. Firstly, there can be no adequate assessment of the grievous ills of Britain and the rest of the White world without taking full and frank account of this paramount problem. Secondly, there can be no sufficient remedy for it short of the Second Expulsion of the Jews from Britain—and their expulsion as well from all other Aryan lands. Thirdly, there can be no room in the Vanguard for any person who is either too ignorant or too cowardly to face up to this problem and pursue its only true remedy, the exodus of the creators of that problem.

Those nationalists and non-party "patriots" who pay heed to and applaud and attach hope to pillars of the Conservative Party like Winston Churchill No. 2 are but a short step away from those who succumb to talking of joining that abominable association—which is a living lie, conserving nothing and destroying everything at the core of our Aryan heritage—to try and reform it and make it a vehicle for salvation. This very idea that you can go into this den of iniquity, and most radically change it for the better, is a futile absurdity. You cannot reasonably hope to be able to turn into the instrument for national revival and racial resurgence something which is under the complete top-level control of Democracy's real rulers, and which, under their rule, has deliberately brought about all the conditions of national decline and racial ruin. The idea is about as likely to succeed as that of going into an inn for the purpose of talking the publican into allowing you to display temperance literature on his bar so that his customers become teetotalers.

The same stricture, of course, applies to talk of joining any of the other orthodox parties of Democracy. One and all they function under tight, top control by the forces of national decline and racial ruin to give the captive and befuddled masses the illusion that they are the ones in control, having an important and effective range of choice, whereas what is on offer in the way of difference is all carefully kept comparatively insignificant and thus harmless to the masters of those masses. The choice between these parties is consequently only a very restricted one within a rigidly enforced and held to be inviolable consensus on the common objective for all sections of Democracy. This common objective is the ultimate World Order of Democracy in which men and women will become rootless, raceless, human economic units safely subservient to the lords of the earth.

Yet those deluded right-wingers who contemplate turning all this upside down from inside, dwellers in cloud-cuckoo-land if there was ever such, are precisely the ones who dismiss as utterly impracticable any idea of creating any new structure outside the old parties capable of overthrowing them. However hard the latter task certainly is, it is not hopeless from the start, as is the idea of creating in effect a new party within a maleficent old party. We of the Vanguard cannot afford to be cluttered up with talk of attempting this absurdity.

DISMISSAL OF THE SIDETRACKERS

Close to those who compromise with the old order by acclaiming its equivalent of the siren of the Lorelei legend, namely the likes of Powell and Churchill, or contemplating, as it were, joining the household of the devil to make it the shrine of the saint, are those right-wingers who make it their hobby to write to Members of Parliament protesting at this and that aspect of the scheduled course of disaster pursued by their parties, and seeking to persuade them to rebel in this respect. This is the sin of sidetracking, namely distracting and diverting time and effort into compromising involvement in the system of Democracy instead of holding aloof from it and firmly rejecting it, and engaging in activities against it. Even if the recipient of their representation was brought by them to show the signs of some limited disobedience to the party line in this one respect, the rebellion would be restricted to this. That M.P. would remain loyal to the rest of the grievous party policy, while the right-winger involved would be drawn into focusing on, participating in, and relying on the workings of Democracy, whereas what we have to do is to boycott It.

Such sidetrackers tend to be persons of split personality, half in and half out of the system. They are forever torn between a perception of the disaster which looms ahead at the hands of the old parties of Democracy, and a crippling craving for "respectability", albeit in terms of the valuations of the creators of the disaster. Coupled to this is a disposition to a starry-eyed optimism which causes them to imagine that there just must be enough good in the old gang to enable it to be worked on to bring about some amelioration which is better than nothing. Thus they incline to settle for some trivialityof delay or temporary modification in manner in the passage to doom insteadof holding out for and going for gold in the sense of devoting themselves to the all-out pursuit of the revolution required.

Often of the same disposition, and similarly to be avoided, are the single issue enthusiasts of attenuated vision who become and remain so obsessed with some particular section of the picture of woe—such as the reduction of national self-government, abortion, immigration, crime, usury, pollution of the environment, that they come to view it in detachment, failing to see or grossly to underestimate the correlation between one thing and another, and one part and the whole, in what is a general picture of defect reflecting a total process of decay. Failing to discern and consider the whole problem, they understandably fail to discern and consider the whole remedy required, which is a thorough change of system and society, nothing less than which will suffice properly to cure any and all of the numerous manifestations of corruption and disintegration and degeneration. Instead, they tend to see the particular problem they focus on as being just an abnormality in a system and society which is nevertheless more or less satisfactory, a conclusion which confines them to a category of conformist. In contrast, National-Socialism offers not some patchwork repair outfit for some futile attempt to deal with some part of the total problem in isolation, but the only adequate remedy which is total replacement.

CHRISTIANITY AND ROYALTY AGAINST RACE

Right-wingers—including all those who call themselves "nationalists" to distinguish themselves from National-Socialists, and particularly to separate themselves from the pan-Aryan implications of the latter—are commonly subject to a disabling commitment to Christianity, at least in the background of their minds, inhibiting them from opposing it, if it does not exude to the extent of frontally avowing it and preaching it. Religion will be dealt with in detail later. Suffice it here to say that, however unpleasant it may be to make the point to people who, tragically, have much good in them apart from this underlying and eclipsing weakness, the fact is that the creed of Christianity is unquestionably anti-Aryan in effect, if not pronouncement. The beliefs and sentiments from that creed, however singled out and detached from the rest of the collection which comprises it, are the greatest cause and constant accompaniment of all the defects and the degeneracy which it is the purpose of National-Socialism to combat.

The long and the short of it is that, this being so, you cannot tackle the matter of Aryan jeopardy without confronting and rejecting and replacing Christianity. You cannot, therefore, accept and accommodate in the ranks of the real opponents of that jeopardy those who think and behave as though we have some conventional obligation to keep silent and abstain from interference in the matter of religion, or else even seek to make support for Christianity part of if not central to the cause. The time has come for deep and clear thinking and resolute decision on all vital issues, putting aside hampering fallacies and compromises, and this unavoidably means that the time has come for the parting of the ways between thorough National-Socialists and those who are thorough Christians. No longer can we afford the obfuscation of pretending that these inherently irreconcilable creeds can continue to cohabit in the same living space.

Right-wingers, including the Tory-type nationalists who are as much attached to the old order of Democracy as detached from it, are commonly addicted to supporting the royal family in Britain, even if only to the extent of a self-imposed abstention from criticizing it and condemning it, comparable to their self-censorship regarding Christianity. Here also, the crisis is too serious and the urgency of drastically improving our mode of dealing with it too great to allow us any longer to fudge on this matter or any other matter of importance.

These right-wingers purport to perceive the royal family as a commendable, surviving representation of British nationhood, and, accordingly, something to be cherished and defended. This is an appalling misconception, appalling because it is one which causes attention and effort to be wasted in upholding and venerating something which has become void and false as any such representation. Thereby that part of the public which is patriotically inclined is perniciously deluded and diverted into believing that traditional Britain is still thriving, and is thus lulled into complacency, satisfied with a semblance and pretence, while, beyond and behind the glitter and pomp of monarchical pageantry the essential Britain is disappearing down the drain.

The hard fact which, however unpalatable it is to some, has to be proclaimed is that today's royal family in this country is no more than a hugely costly, manifestly mediocre array of characters. As their highest distinction they provide the mercenary media, engaged in promoting the disastrous policies of our real masters, with fancy, fraudulent figures with which to titillate voyeuristic curiosity, excite shallow sentimentality, and cause convenient distraction from the reality of the oncoming destruction of our heritage. All of this sponsorship and promotion of the monarchy by the media is in the same category as the provision of circuses in the arena in the twilight days of the Roman Empire as a distraction from its imminent downfall.

At the head of this royal family we have a queen in name but hardly in appearance (being in comparison to the regal-looking Mrs Vigdis Finnbogadottir, President of Iceland, a commonplace, dumpy figure indeed), and one who verbally crowns multiracialism, ruinous to her realm, with her highest approval whenever the opportunity presents itself, such as her abominable "Christmas broadcasts". Marking the contemporary synthesis of Commu-Capitalism, she has just recently visited Moscow and laid a wreath there in tribute to the Communist war against National-Socialist Germany. All in all, her performance issuch as to prompt us to reword the national anthem to exhort the deity not to save the queen for us, but rather to save us from this woman and her hurtful activities.

It would take a whole issue or special supplement of Gothic Ripples to present fully the case against this burdensome and harmfully distractive royal family not one member of which has ever uttered a single word against the alien usurpation of their realm, and compared to which any shop assistant who has handed out a few National-Socialist leaflets has done infinitely more for the good of Britain. Suffice it for here and now to mention just the following few matters as indicative of the indictment.

ARISTOCRACY'S JEWISH BLOOD

"The Royal Family has had many Jewish connections." So said the publishing director of "Burke's Peerage", the genealogical authority regarding the British aristocracy and royalty as quoted in the London Daily Mail (12 September 1992). The quotation occurred in connection with a family tree supplied by this authority, and there published in that newspaper concerning the new husband of the queen's daughter, Princess Anne, now entitled the "Princess Royal". It seems that this august custodian of the British heritage was unable to find someone of our breed to her taste, instead she was obliged to take to bed a descendant of a Zaccaria Levy of Vienna, a Jew who married a daughterof another Jew, Moses Haim Montefiore, and migrated to London, and whose son, Joseph, changed the family surname to "Laurence". Such name changing in order to deceive by purporting to be British is a matter of false pretences very commonly resorted to by Jews.

Thus we arrive at the "Tim Laurence" who has become part of our illustrious royal family by his marriage to the race-mixing renegade, Anne, in December 1992. Presumably right wing royalists will be quite prepared to doff their caps to these marriage partners and the mongrel offsprings of this misalliance.

The infiltration of Jewish blood into the "upper classes" of this country was dealt with by the late Professor Revilo P. Oliver—a great master of the pen in our cause whose death on August 10, 1994, was a great loss to it—in his last article in the August 1994 issue of the fine, American, monthly magazine, Liberty Bell, (P.O. Box 21, Reedy, WV 25270, U.S.A. Sample copy, via Air Mail, $6.50). Summarizing, the writer said: "Thus did Asiatic blood at first seep and soon spurt into the great families of England, who should have been the foremost and most vigilant custodians of their national and racial heritage." He quoted Hilaire Belloc (The Jews, London, 1922) as concluding that "with the opening of the twentieth century those of the great territorial English families in which there was no Jewish blood were the exception." This racially corrupted and decadent aristocracy of now to which Tory-type right-wingers show deference in their general adherence to falsities has to be done away with in a National-Socialist Britain, replaced by a new one of proven worth in National-Socialist terms.

Returning to the royal family in particular as the apex of decadence, the Prince of Wales, the future monarch, has proved incapable of fidelity towards even his own wife in fulfillment of his wedding vow. This can hardly count as a token of his trustworthiness in respect of guardianship of the nation's greatest treasure, its Aryan blood, as borne out by his constant concern to go out of his way to get together with Coloureds, talking with them, posing with them, dancing with them, projecting himself as a princely promoter of racial disloyalty.

It now appears that he has been matched in his matrimonial infidelity by the woman who entered his life and the nation's attention as an empty-headed nonentity given to jumping up and down in ecstatic response to the degenerate din of "pop music". Despite all the more recent and intensive efforts to groom her for a high and mighty future as first lady of this land, including giving her an endearing image as a do-gooder, clearly behind the halo she remains a fibreless, pleasure-obsessed, ideal-lacking representative of today's idle rich, the plutocracy which is the beneficiary of Democracy, as of Communism itsculmination. Her prime function, in which she does at least excel, is toserve well as a super-doll for the sales of the trivia-vending tabloids in business to make money magnificently out of diverting the dupes of Democracy.

In sober analysis, this Princess Diana of Democracy shows no more sense and is certainly less useful than any supermarket checkout girl.We of the National-Socialist Vanguard can have no time for this puppetry of royalty and all those right-wingers mesmerized by it. Patriotism centred on and satisfied by this royal family of ours is about as vacuous as sporting some shopping bag from a Jewish chain-store, emblazoned with a Union Jack, in the belief that it is a meaningful and sufficient assertion of patriotic pride.

Another important issue which right wing nationalists avoid—and another reason why we must avoid entanglement with them—is Freemasonry. This is the secret society which reveres a composite, cosmopolitan godhead, and provides an apparatus for divisive and inequitable political power and economic and social preferment, contrary to National-Socialist principles of economic and social justice, folk unity, and the paramountcy of the interests of the Aryan peoples. There can thus be no room in the National Socialist Vanguard for Freemasons and those in favour of tolerating them, including some corrupted into silence and inaction by the financial contributions of Freemasons who purport to be nationalists; contributions which have the same effect of indirect, if not direct, bribery as those from supporters of Christianity and monarchy. Compromise is a weakness masquerading as a cleverness, and the watchword of the Vanguard must be "No Compromise!"

NATIONALISM'S FALSE REBELS

Even more dangerous than the potential seduction exerted by those who are unmistakably within the system, such as the likes of Powell and Churchill in the U.K., are those who have a superficial appearance of being in conflict with it, and yet by reason of compromise with it remain part of it. One example is the MSI in Italy which has shed its Fascism even further by becoming under Gianfranco Fini a new look "National Alliance". This further surrender to Democracy has had the enthusiastic support of Mussolini's photogenic granddaughter, Alessandra, a former "soft-porn" pinup per Playboy magazine who, according to a BBC (London) radio news report in 1994, spent her honeymoon in Israel.

Another in this category uncritically acclaimed by his kind in this country is Le Pen and his movement in France. This right-winger told the London Sunday Express (24 November 1991), in a statement which reveals that his racial outlook is dominated and perverted by his nationalism,"We have Jews, blacks and Arabs among our members on only two conditions. That they are French and they are patriots." He was reported in the London Jewish Chronicle (29November 1991) as declaring that he was not a racist or an anti-Semite.According to the same paper several years earlier (13 May 1988) he tolda Jerusalem paper, "I have never uttered a hostile word against Israel or against the Jewish community (in France);" and that he receives the total support of the "Association des Juifs Francais". Earlier still, in an interview quoted in the same Jewish Chronicle (17 October 1986), he declared that membership of his organization was "most certainly open to Jews". In 1987 the same paper (4 September) mentioned that earlier that year Le Pen had been guest of honour at a luncheon in New York given by the President of the World Union of General Zionists.

Another seductive compromise-monger is the sleek, political juggler, David Duke in the U.S.A., proficient at shedding principles for votes, and thus thoroughly untrustworthy.

A rising star in the fond hopes of incautious easy-takers is Vladimir Volfovich Zhironovsky, head of the flourishing "Liberal Democratic Party" in Russia. Is he or is he not at least a part-Jew, and, if he is, is he in revolt against his Jewishness or in pursuit of it?

We have reports of the man denying his father was Jewish, and accusing his enemies of forging genealogical records, which is certainly a possibility to bear in mind. Alongside them we have The Mail on Sunday of London (26 December 1993) claiming that in an exclusive interview with that paper Zhironovsky said "I have never concealed the fact that my father was Jewish" and the Jewish Chronicle of London (17 December 1993) quoting the Moscow representative of The Times of London as saying "his father was from a Jewish family. He himself has never denied this outright." Additionally, the magazine of the London Independent newspaper (2 April 1994) reported that he told a journalist from the Israeli daily paper, Mariv, that he is proud of having a Jewish father.

It has been said in one quarter or another that his mother's first husband, a Zhironovsky, was a Jewish lawyer who died 18 months before the child's birth in 1946 and 5 months after she married a Volf Isakovich Eidelstein who was registered as Jewish; and thatour present Zhironovsky changed his surname in 1964 from Eidelstein as on his birth certificate. According to the London Evening Standard (14 December 1993) Zhironovsky in 1983 applied to Israel to settle there and was granted permission, though subsequently he never took advantage of it. The most obvious conclusion from all of this is that at least one has to be distinctly wary of the man, who moreover seems to display a somewhat Hebraic flamboyance.

DETACHMENT FROM JEWISH DISSIDENTS

There are, it seems, a few Jews who genuinely become sick of their own kind, and it may be argued that it is reasonable to make some favourable mention of them, and even engage in some circumspect liaison and co-operation with them to make use of them. What, however, is imperative to avoid damage is to keep them forever at a distance, not to allow them into your organization, and not to come to stand shoulder to shoulder with them on any public occasion. The fact is that by nature they can never be one of us, and, if allowed into our ranks or even just close, public proximity to us, will cause confusion among our followers and to our outward image; besides always presenting a potential security risk.

A Jew is always a Jew, and a part-Jew always partly so. There can be no altering this fact of nature, this racial character which governs thought and behaviour, by the apparent adoption and presentation of some particular ideas contrary to the general Jewish standpoint. A Jew cannot by this irregularity become an Aryan patriot. He can only become a somewhat dissident Jew or part-Jew.

This is why one cannot approve the admission of dissident Jews into organizations such as the original National Front in the U.K., of which the Jews Albert Elder and Gerry Viner were examples; and into revisionist ranks in North America—because of their stance critical of the general Jewish propagation of the "holocaust" myth—of which two examples are Ditlieb Felderer, a Jew married to a Filipino, and the Jew David Cole.

Currently operating in the U.K. is a curious gentleman of the name of Alexander Baron who has stated that he is not a Jew himself, yet issues his literature under the suggestive imprint of "Anglo-Hebrew Publishing", has collaborated with a Jewish rabbi in defence of "The Talmud", and vigorously denounces anti-Semitism. The mass of industriously researched material he has produced, exposing the Searchlight magazine of London and the vicious gang of Jews responsible for this "anti-Fascist" publication and its associated harassment of and violence against nationalists and National-Socialists, is all to the good, but has to be seen as overshadowed by the overall defence of Jewry, and the disparagement of its opponents which he so heavily indulges in. Such troublesome characters of confusion and complication we cannot afford to get connected with.

ANTI-HITLERITES OF NATIONALISM

Requiring rejection to the extent of positive identification as among the enemy are those lingering remnants of the former National Front of the U.K. who now regularly resort to denigration of Adolf Hitler and National Socialism in their efforts to gain popularity on the cheap, thus revealing how far gone they are with the pox of promiscuous compromise. As a recent example of this we have the Blackburn Organiser of the NF declaring in a letter published in the Lancashire Evening Telegraph (26 April 1994) "Hitler was responsible for the slaughter of more Britons than any other man in history. The NF, a pro-British organisation, will never sympathise with Hitler or National Socialist policies." The very idea still held by some ostensibly on our side that we should still consider as comrades-in-arms such despicable dealers in dishonesty, clamouring to profit from the ignorance and passion generated by the enemy media, is revolting. Such political prostitutes deserve to be taken out and horsewhipped, not befriended.

Associated with or parallel to the anti-Hitlerites of the NF (U.K.). and likewise on our rejection list, are the Strasserites, admirers of the brothers Gregor and Otto Strasser who had to be expelled from Hitler's NSDAP because of their desire to turn National-Socialism into national-bolshevism (as dealt with in Gothic Ripples No. 20/21). These subverters are appearing in a number of quarters, one of them being something called the "European Liberation Front" inspired by the late Francis Parker Yockey, who in his writings, such as his book Imperium, deflected the basic issue from that of race to that of culture, thus causing a confusion of causality.

A constituent of this new "Front" is a body called "New Resistance", described as distinctly "National Bolshevik", as being a mixture of Strasserism, the European New Right (an appellation for a distracting trend of blanched unorthodoxy), and German "revolutionary conservatism", whatever that is. Our focus for headway to victory has to be always and entirely set on authentic National-Socialism, and at no time and in no way diffused on to other and lesser creeds which fall short of it.

POLITICAL PLAYBOYS AND CLOWNS

A different type of undesirable to be relentlessly avoided and excluded are the Hollywood Nazis, those freaks whose understanding and enactment of National-Socialism goes no further than babbling about the past, seeking souvenirs of the past, and dressing up in the garb and accoutrements of the past as though all this makes them some part of the great past themselves. These foolish figures of fantasy and fetish are political playboys at the best, not political workers and fighters as the men and women of the Vanguard must be. At their worst they are public exhibitionists who act out and fulfill the Hollywood caricature of National-Socialism to the immense delight and benefit of the enemy. They are not, whatever they think and say, National-Socialists at all who are by definition those who transform the word into the deed, and they have to be told so and ruthlessly put aside.

Much akin to the playboys of the swastika are the clowns of the U.K's Ku Klux Klan whose contribution to the cause of Aryan salvation is to wrap themselves in sheets, surreptitiously burn fiery crosses, hold private sessions big on talk and beer, and at the most sally forth occasionally to put a brick through a Coloured person's window. An indication of how damaging to the racial cause these clowns can be by the ridicule they so readily and rightly arouse was provided by a report in the Western Mail of Wales (6 December 1994) of a KKK event at which, as a change from the customary sheet, the leader of the lunatics was dressed in a military cap, camouflage trousers and jackboots, and with his friends, while giving "Nazi salutes", thrashed a suspended effigy with a stick while shouting "Kill the blacks" and "We are the superior race". Dissociating from and denouncing these clowns is an essential part of the clean-up, clarification and restructuring the NS Vanguard has to undertake.

Another form of injurious exhibitionism we have to be on our guard against and exclude is that manifested by the likes of a Michael McLaughlin who for a time and to its downfall headed the British Movement in the U.K., having gained his position by his promise to adhere to its constitution which promise he proceeded immediately to break. Until his megalomaniacal pretensions so outstripped him as to leave him stranded in naked exposure—whereupon he discarded the organization, blaming its members for not having lived up to his expectations—this trumpery charlatan fed his followers a dazzling diet of massive exaggeration as to his ever-increasing success and rapid approach to power, nourishing his own ego to obesity thereby. While so doing he did achieve a big increase in the nominal membership. This was by the simple and disastrous expedient of down pitching his appeal to the gutter level of every kind of mindless and unsightly street ruffian capable between beer cans of frothing "Heil McLaughlin!", along with sundry obscenities against Jews and Coloureds which only served to make spectators strongly sympathetic to the latter. Behind a façade of National-Socialism men like this, driven by unprincipled vanity, function as political rubbish collectors, casting dirt on our creed.

SKINHEADS

This brings us to the subject of skinheads. Over the past decade or so many National-Socialists, as well as nationalists, have allowed themselves to be driven by a desperate quest for numbers, seen fallaciously as the supreme measure of headway, to grasp at skinheads, who superficially are at loggerheads with the system, as a source of extra numbers and increased militancy. For this accretion they have been willing to pay the price of lowering their standards and even acclaiming skinheads as the standard bearers of a coming millennium, frontfighters for a resplendent future. This intemperate laudation has of course marked a gross debasement of the persons and bodies concerned. In their anxiety to make themselves sufficiently attractive to the skinheads they have committed the cardinal error of converting themselves to the skinheads instead of requiring and accomplishing the reverse. They have thus ended up as yet another example of the inevitable result of the numbers game, namely the tail wagging the dog.

"The Nazis Were Never Like This", was the heading of a letter published in the London newspaper, The Independent, (9 December 1992) which specifically referred to "neo-Nazis" in Germany today, but which can apply to skinheads everywhere, when it said that "... the crisply uniformed and disciplined units of the Sturmabteilung ("Storm Troopers") and Schutzstaffel (SS) were welcome then because, rightly or wrongly and despite subsequent history, they alone were seen as capable of bringing order to streets dominated by scruffy, unruly, often violent mobs: in other words, the counterparts of the neo-Nazis one sees in press photographs and on television today."

It is a mistake, admittedly, to disregard the fact that there is some good in some skinheads, who at least are prepared to have a go, which is more than can be said of many nationalists and even quite a lot of nominal National-Socialists. It is, if anything, an even bigger mistake to disregard or discount the fact that there is much that is very bad in skinheads. The problem is to draw on and increase the good in some of them to the exclusion of the bad in all of them: to bring into line with us whatever proportion of them have the potential, and this without in the process running any danger of dropping into line with them, as has occurred so far in dealing with them. For authentic National-Socialists conversion is a one-way street, our way only. Let there be absolutely no misunderstanding about this iron rule!

What has to be put to skinheads and very firmly indeed impressed upon them is that they have been infected by the malignant media with a thoroughly false view of National-Socialism as present in the Germany of Adolf Hitler. Pioneered by frontline ex-servicemen, used to strict discipline amid the dangers of fighting the foe, theirs was no uprising of some slovenly and raucous rabble, but a tightly disciplined revolt against Democracy by those who had become political soldiers as a sequel to being military ones, exchanging one uniform for another.

Democracy is disorder. It is not to be fought and remedied by more disorder, indulgence in which makes the participants part of the processes of Democracy, not part of its cure. That is the first part of the lesson that skinheads have to learn, if they are to be of any use at all to us. The second part is that real National-Socialism is in conflict with all the manifestations of disorder characterizing Democracy, its aim being a new and much greater orderliness through a revolutionary transformation of state and society.

National-Socialism's pursuit of good order—for which another name is harmony—pertains to every aspect of life, including all the arts and leisure activities in the culture of the Folk. In this it is totalitarian, recognizing and responding to the totality of life in all its interactions. Responding to the harmonious workings of nature in the pattern of good order of the universe, National-Socialism seeks a reflective harmony in all the affairs of man. It seeks this good order in, for example, a just and efficient social and economic structure, and sees it in good music which by definition is harmonious.

In contrast to and in conflict with this good music of National-Socialism is the discordant din which skinheads delight in. Such cacophony, in its range of revolting forms from plain "pop" by way of "rock" to even more excruciating emissions of noise, is the authentic death sound of Democracy. It is accordingly an evil which National-Socialism has to wage war on, along with all the other evils of the death system.

MIND-DRUGGING BY "MUSIC"

There is a rhythm natural to Aryan men and women indicated by their breathing rate and heart beat. Where the beat of "music" is speeded up much above the normal pulse rate per minute, tension is built up in the emotional system of the person participating to the deleterious point of what amounts to a hypnotic seizure of the mind. In this condition the critical faculties are overcome and suspended by the convulsions of the senses, reason collapses, and in this "hypnoid" state there is a greatly increased suggestibility. The implantation of ideas by way not merely of words sung (or shouted or screeched) but indirectly by behaviour and display is greatly facilitated.

This is a state of "possession" examined by the renowned psychologist, Dr. William Sargant, in his book, The Mind Possessed (Heinemann, London, 1973). It is a condition of induced mental dependency highly advantageous to the sinister promoters of this type of "music", psycho-narcotic in nature, being at one and the same time highly profitable to their pockets and powerfully effective for their political programme. They achieve the desired state of "possession" in the multitudes of young people addicted to this aural drug by means of the overpowering effect of continual, primitive, repetition of sound, including the hammer blows of a frantic rate of drumbeat, against a background of disorientation caused by rapidly flashing lights.

This amounts to a mugging of the mind. The purpose of the muggers is to break down barriers in the brain, and brainwash away distinctions of race and sex in the youth to whom the future belongs, thus capturing that future. The high personification of this processing to unisexual multiracialism by music and movement is the futuristic freak, Michael Jackson, who has amassed $350 million for his services in blurring in his own frame distinctions between Black and White and male and female. In this hideous creature we see the shape of things to come in the high days of perfected Democracy.

Frank admissions of the brainwashing in view have come from such as "rock" star Frank Zappah in the U.S.A., saying "The loud sounds and the bright lights of today are tremendous indoctrination tools"; and Paul Cantor, another noise-maker in the same land, saying "The new rock music is intended to ... prepare young people for revolution": meaning the revolutionary advance of multiracialism, Democracy's zenith. Skinheads, while they may radiate and ingest a somewhat different message from that conveyed by the above two minstrels of degeneration, nevertheless practise the same back-to-the-jungle method of mind-bending by primitive "music" plus primitive physical contortion as is used by the likes of Zappah and Cantor, and those who stand behind them, to promote their revolution of multiracialism. Whatever the difference of content, the mode of conveyance is virtually the same, the damage to personality just as bad, so that the skinheads, while fondly seeing themselves as rebels, are to be seen on this assessment as relatives of all the rest of the jungle "music" tribe.

National-Socialism, skinheads need to learn, is not signified by the silly superficiality of adorning one's clothing with iron crosses and other unearned war decorations, or by tattooing swastikas on one's anatomy, or shouting "Sieg Heil!" at short intervals. It is not asserted by beating up some Negro or Pakistani who happens to come along and does so only because renegades of our own race have let him come into the country and stay there. It is not expressed by bellowing beer-swilling ditties to the accompaniment of the "music" discussed above and its associated gyrations which come straight from the jungle, and are appropriate to a celebrating assembly of Central African cannibals jubilating around the cooking pot.

There must be no attempt whatsoever, while they remain in their unregenerate condition, to recruit them indiscriminately and in bulk, or to allow them to participate in or even hang around any National-Socialist activity so that they appear to be connected with us. Instead, they must always and only be dealt with on the outside and at a distance, and only individually adopted where over a sufficient, testing period there are solid grounds for deeming such individuals really suitable.

Right from the first moment of any such dealings with any of them it must be made abundantly clear to them that there is no such thing as a National-Socialist skinhead, only those who cease to be skinheads in the process of becoming genuine National-Socialists. They must understand that we make the demands and lay down the conditions, and that provisional acceptance by us means wholehearted acceptance by them of the values, principles, standards and discipline of real National-Socialism—and which involves the permanent abandonment of their jungle music. If they can bring themselves genuinely and permanently to accept this upliftment, fine, and a welcome to them. If not, then an instantaneous goodbye to them, and no further wastage of time and effort on them.

TIME-WASTERS, LOUTS AND BOOZERS

The process of scrupulous elimination of all undesirables, which is essential for the selection of the right people for the Vanguard, must encompass all those who, whatever their overshadowed merits, are pre-eminently incorrigible time-wasters, addicted to unproductive talk, talk, talk, as an escape from getting down to solid, useful work. Our time is too precious to waste with any of these garrulous loafers who are much more of a hindrance than a help.

In contrast to the usual political party or other political organization which strives to attract and take in virtually anyone who says "yes" to the policy and dips in his pocket for some small subscription, the Vanguard has to vet people exhaustively and stringently, passing by whatever number of inadequate persons in the search for the few good ones who each on his or her own surpass a multitude of the lesser ones in his or her capacity to advance the cause. We have to look for the people of superior calibre who, contrary to the what-can-I-get mentality of Democracy are motivated by what-can-I-give to a cause which fires them. Such people are repelled by low standards and attracted by high ones. They are people readily responsive to the concepts of honour, duty, service. Thus, in scanning for selection—and by our invitation only—we have to assess a person's motivations carefully. At the same time we have to assure ourselves of a person's stability, for we cannot afford to expend time and trouble on a recruit whose past record indicates that he or she lacks constancy, and is prone to changing enthusiasms. Time and care on vetting in the first place will be amply repaid in saving us from the consequences of slipshod recruiting.

Reflective of poor standards is the practice which, sadly, has emerged in some National-Socialist quarters of indulging in vulgarity of expression in unison with the parlance of Democracy's debased television as the tone-setter. The four-letter words for excrement and copulation are frequently employed as though crudity in respect of bodily functions, intrinsically private and intimate, denotes some fashionable robustness. With Democracy sexual activity is obtrusively debauched to the level of an omnipresent pursuit of sensual pleasure devoid of higher purpose, whereas for National-Socialism it is inseparable from the higher purpose of furtherance of the race.

We now come to the variety of repulsive louts who, influenced by the malignant media's ceaseless depiction of National-Socialism as some supreme, demoniacal repository of violence, viciousness and vileness, are attracted to add their disgusting appearance and behaviour to some trumpery show of a connection with it as a way to shock society'slingering decency under the impact of burgeoning Democracy. Theselouts areno more than simply antisocial, and would be no less so under National-Socialism, except that National-Socialism would, by the very nature of its educational and youth measures within its general framework and atmosphere, almost certainly prevent the emergence of such excrescence, and most certainly and immediately cauterize it, if it did nevertheless appear.

This dross ranges from football hooligans, dripping their beer down their sweat shirts and bellowing their drivel, as they stick their paws out in what is supposed to be some imitation of the Hitler salute, to the nightmarish apparitions known as "punks", resplendent in their multicoloured, Mohican hairstyles, and with rings in their ears if not in their noses; in short savages straight from the jungle. For the Vanguard it is a necessary task of pest control to protect our cause from contaminating connection with these synthetic savages, and this by constant denunciation, and by booting away any of them inflicting their presence in our proximity.

Among other desecrators of our cause are the cemetery decorators who sally forth in the dead of night to daub swastikas, very often the wrong way round, as well as idiotic and illiterate slogans on Jewish gravestones, as though some heroic achievement exists in attacking the stones of the dead instead of the bodies and beliefs of our enemies among the living. These ghouls of the graveyard deserve and should receive our punishment, whatever else. This is not to overlook the fact that there is much evidence of Jews themselves daubing anti-Jewish signs and slogans both to discredit National-Socialism and to stimulate Jewish solidarity and emigration to Israel.

Next, the Vanguard has to take a very firm stand against politics by way of booze, and strictly exclude the boozers, as an indispensable manifestation of its seriousness of intention and its fitness to succeed as the instrument for victory. For far too long pubs have been the home away from home for nationalists and National-Socialists without any careful limitation on the usage of the premises and the consumption of their beverages. The result has been that down with the drink has gone the interests of the cause, another round and yet another proving irresistible. The bar has remained the only goal of the evening with reminiscences, fantasies and other idle gossip stealing away the time, purpose and energy from useful activity, while the publican pockets the money for all this wastage, instead of it going to the cause. National-Socialism's elite does not stand in need of inspiration from a bottle, and must make any use of pubs a matter of strict and constant control to avoid the abuse here described.

The disgraceful yearly display of drunken brawling at the Diksmuide folk festival in Belgium by beer can braves from Britain must be put a stop to—with a Vanguard contingent acting as gendarmerie, if necessary.

Keen caution is required regarding recruiting anyone who has been convicted and imprisoned not for a purely political offence, but for an ordinary criminal one. Such conviction may show the person to have qualities of enterprise and daring in defiance of the conventions of contemporary society, along with various talents which could be useful to us, and this may well appeal to us, being ourselves in conflict with Democracy's contemporary society, and not bound by its morality where this is at variance with the vital interests of race and nation. However, we have always to keep right in front of us the fact that the person did what he did purely for personal gain and not for the benefit of a cause. Though this does not mean that any proper extenuating factors are not to be taken into account, or that the person cannot change to the extent henceforth of serving a cause above self, it does mean that at least a very large question mark, if not a cancelation mark, has to be put against that person, requiring us to conduct a very careful appraisal and sharp testing of that person before any provisional acceptance.

QUEERS AND SATANISTS

With the advance of Democracy has dawned the day of the queers, who in true Democratic fashion of deceit try to pass themselves off as "gay", and as good as normal at that. In a society denoted as permissive of sundry depravity, and tolerant of about every ism except National-Socialism, the queers are hard at work proselytizing and propagandizing, extending their influence through their infiltration of positions of power in an insidious take-over from within.

National-Socialism, the upholder of the natural order, committed to the preservation of the race by its procreation, cannot accommodate those who pursue an unnatural order suicidal for the race. Thus it is for the Vanguard to take up and lead the fight against this cancerous abomination, evincing its determination to do so by always naming these perverts as the queers they are, thus opposing their important bid to facilitate acceptance by way of favourable nomenclature; and by ensuring that our door is always firmly shut to them.

We come finally in this survey of undesirables to those persons who delight in dabbling in the outer and most bizarre reaches of the occultwhich they designate as "Satanism"; and who, in the course of this, seek to add spice to their concoction by bringing in the name, the leader and the symbol of National-Socialism, wrongly purporting a connection with their weirdness, and thus causing a contamination with it. Here we need to go no further than to quote as follows a speech of Adolf Hitler at Nuremberg on 6 September 1938 to put on record our rejection of these people.

> We will not allow mystically-minded occult folk with a passion for exploring the secrets of the world beyond to steal into our movement. Such folk are not National Socialists, but something else—in any case something which has nothing to do with us.

Part III of THE WAY AHEAD will be published in the next issue [of Gothic Ripples], and will be devoted to the Vanguard view on the two great issues of Religion and Race forming the foundation for the right ideology, as one of the three vital requirements for victory, along with selection of the right people. [Just as soon as that issue of Gothic Ripples becomes available it will be published in Liberty Bell.]

Part I of THE WAY AHEAD was published in Liberty Bell for October 1994. LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I noticed the comment of Dr. Charles Weber in the April issue concerning my brief piece (LB 1/95) about Charles Murray's Bell Curve and the criticism of Murray in an issue of USA Today.

Weber takes me mildly to task for addressing the subject of Murray's book without having read it. He is right, of course, that I could have responded more effectively to USA columnist Barbara Reynolds if I had done the homework. At the time I had not yet purchased the book, but had only gleaned some of its contents from sympathetic reviews and a (biased yet revealing) mainstream television interview.

The thrust of my own comment, in any case, was surely not Murray, but Reynolds, and what she represents. Her editorial, as I see it, expresses the characteristic inability of blacks, whatever their level of sophistication, to see a situation from any point of view but their own, and their tendency, likewise, to reject out of hand any opinion that does not flatter them. (I do not claim that such a tendency is peculiar to blacks, by any means, but only that it is, on average, noticeably stronger in them.) This limitation, I believe, lies deep in the black nature, and contributes, as much as does anything else, to the problem that arises when the two races are brought into collision with one another. I am likewise convinced, by way of both literature and common sense, that the roughly 15-point IQ gap long cited in racialist literature is only the beginning of the story.

My own motive in using Murray as a point of departure is not to review the case (I am only now beginning to delve into it) that he himself has made, but merely to use the Bell Curve "issue" as one more instance of the absurdity now prevalent in the American mainstream. In tossing out commentary of this kind I seek to chip away, a little at a time, at the resistance of our own people to the truth that is (whether or not men like Murray write their books) already in front of them. I want to shake white readers loose from the docile and self-apologetic frame of mind within which they presently operate. I make this effort in the hope that one day this hard accretion of self-defeat will shatter and our people will have the nerve to admit the obvious.

Murray's material, once it becomes an "in" topic, will be debated at length by those with the state-approved credentials. This much is good, as far as it goes, and the opening of this forum is something we should welcome. But what our folk need, beyond this intellectual tit-for-tat, is the self-reliance to trust their own perceptions of the truth even when these perceptions are out of fashion. Without this basic independence of thought they will gain little from the exchange generated by the IQ "controversy" as it becomes the plaything of theoreticians in the ivory towers.

Weber also suggests that I would show more nerve if I went by my name instead of using the "Prof" label. This, too, is a point worth acknowledgement. I will acknowledge it here for the first and last time. A number of us who write for maverick publications like this one do use various zips and name-handles instead of actual signatures. There are various reasons for this practice. In some cases, these reasons involve ourselves, in some cases, others close to us, as well. Maybe we want to protect our families. Maybe we want to protect our jobs, which enable us, in some cases, to plant messages within the mainstream, and without which we would be worth little to ourselves and to those on the front lines. If it makes Weber feel any better, I speak my mind at times on race and related issues in fairly conspicuous fashion. I am no stranger, by this time, to the ADL databanks, and to prying reporters who want to make noise about my affiliations with certain controversial persons within the movement. But this, I think, is beside the point, or at least it ought to be. The racialist who uses a handle, or who guests on a network television program wearing dark glasses, does not owe the rest of us any explanation. We would all do well to dislodge our own cinders before criticizing each other.

Dr. Weber says that he liked Revilo P. Oliver's willingness to take his stand without use of a pen name. I admired Oliver, as well, for this reason and for some others besides. But I do not understand why Professor Oliver must now be the standard, either moral or literary, against which all other material in Liberty Bell is measured. I am, in fact, a little annoyed of late by the backhanded compliments (saying, in effect, that so-and-so tries hard, but alas, is no Professor Oliver) dished out to the talented and generous contributors who continue each month to make this publication possible. I am not too happy, either, with certain types within the movement, generally older and with positions long ago secured, who make a practice of assessing from a distance the moral substance of those who may operate elsewhere within less obliging circumstances.

Over the years I have seen far too much space in racialist magazines devoted to the jibes of readers (often, it is clear, cantankerous or petty jealous types, though I do not put Dr. Weber in that category) who wish to target other writers by way of insult or innuendo. The nature of this forum is the editor's prerogative. But for my part, I have no wish to excite or in any way contribute to a pissing contest. For this reason, anyone who wants the last word on a subject of this kind with me is welcome to it. For my part, I will continue to send off commentary, from time to time, for as long as the reader and the editor seem to want it. In the meantime, it is my hope that those of us with kindred ideas can begin to see our shared cause as the end that is truly worth our efforts.

America's SS: THE SILVER SHIRTS

by

A.V. Schaerffenberg

In his prophetic novel, 1984, George Orwell envisioned the kind of society America is rapidly becoming. A motto of that "future" time was, "Who controls the present, controls the past, who controls the past, controls the future." Part of that mind-control was assisted by the Memory Hole. It was an incinerator into which were thrown any pieces of information about the past which were considered damaging to the Big Brother System. To demonstrate how close the Jew-controlled Establishment in our country resembles that of 1984, we present the story of William Dudley Pelley.

Although the leader of a mass-movement that commanded headlines throughout the decade of the 1930s, his name is totally unknown today, except to a handful of researchers. Outside of infrequent, fleeting references to him in a few histories of the Depression Era, there are no books about his dramatic life; not even any newspaper or magazine articles. His photograph cannot be found outside the pages of The New Order, nor any photographs of his tens of thousands of followers, even though both his image and theirs dominated newsreels and publications of the time. His speeches ate unobtainable even though they were heard by millions, sometimes over nation-wide radio broadcasts. He attracted the friendship of legendary heroes like Charles Lindbergh and the hatred of legendary scoundrels like Franklin Roosevelt. Sinclair Lewis wrote a full-length novel, It can't happen Here, based on his life. Along with the works of Theodore Dreiser, H.L. Mencken, F. Scott Fitzgerald and other luminaries of tbe 1920s, his books entered college curricula in the forefront of modern American literature. Yet, no college course in Great Books today features any of his titles. He was one of the most important creators of the silent film, the author of such classic screen plays as The Hunchback of Notre Dame. Despite the man's uadeniable impact on his times, his name has been thoroughly expunged from contemporary bistory, his books (worse than banned or burned) unpublished, his political achievements consigned to oblivion.

In trying to research the material for this article, after moths of investigation, I learned that his only biography was written eighteen years ago, an obscure university thesis by a hostile postgraduate student. Some scattered fragments of additional data came from xeroxes of Pelley's own moldering publications, via dusty library archives. Everything about him has been tossed into a genuine Memory Hole, no less thorough in its destruction but far more real than Orwell's model. The Jewish Big Brother biography was written eighteen years ago, an obscure university thesis by a hostile postgraduate student. Some scattered fragments of additional data came from xeroxes of Pelley's own moldering publications, via dusty library archives. Everything about him has been tossed into a genuine Memory Hole, no less thorough in its destruction but far more real than Orwell's model. The Jewish Big Brother who blots out all information about William Dudley Pelley is the same controller of the past who makes sure tbere are plenty of school books and pseudo-documentaries for television and the movies extolling the "greatness" of Martin Luther King, Jr. or Malcolm X. What could Pelley have done that so struck to the heart of the Kosher System, that ignited such a complete effort to erase all knowledge of his existence from American consciousness?

Horror in Russia

William Dudley Pelley was born in Lynn, Massachussettes, on March 12th, 1890, into abject poverty. All he could remember of his childhood was that he was "perpetualy hungry and shabbily dressed". Unlike apologists for negro ineptitude, adversity did not deter young William from making something of his life. For him, destitution was not an excuse for laziness and failure, but a catalyst for betterment. Still in his early teens, he found lowly employment at a tissue factory, where he labored long, tedious hours for very little money. But he saved his pennies and educated himself by reading at every opportunity. Reading was his only passion and escape from the drudgery and material impoverishment of his adolescence. He especially loved the classic American authors Poe, Emerson, O'Henry, etc.—and dreamed of being a writer. By his 18th year, he was better educated than most college graduates and began to realize his dream, when he was hired as a junior reporter for Springfield's Homestead newspaper. Although his income was hardly better than his wages at the tissue factory, he married in 1911 and was blessed with a baby girl the following year. She died around her third birthday, however. Despite his "frightful sorrow", or because of it, be worked harder at his craft than ever, his reputation as a reporter of extraordinary descriptive powers grew and, for the first time in his life, he was financially comfortable. In the following years, his feature articles in such nationally-known magazines as Red Book, Colliers and The Saturday Evening Post were admired by millions of readers.

By the end of the First World War, Pelley's prestige was such that his publisher commissioned him as a foreign correspondent on assignment in Eastern Europe. With a generous expense account and the diplomatic rank of "consular courier" conferred upon him by the United States government, he shipped out for Russia in early 1918. To him, his assignment was a fun adventure, a well-paid lark and a chance to vacation overseas. It turned out lo be something far more. Until his fateful voyage, Pelley was a happy-go-lucky, up-and-coming author, with no real convictions of his own. As he remembered years later, the experience transformed him "from a nondescript writer to a grim crusader."

For two years, he covered 8,000 miles by train and on horse-back through Siberia, into the Ukraine, across the Steppes of Central Russia, into the Far East and through Asia to Japan. Through all these extensive Travels, he was a personal witness to {be communist revolution. He saw peasant women crucified to barndoors and a schoolroom in which the teacher and all the students had been bludgeoned to death, their brains spattered against the blackboard. There were whole villages depopulated by murder, with corpses swinging from every lamppost and choking the nearby streams. These victims were rarely military personnel, nor politically involved in any way. They were common people, mostly farmers and factory workers. Such horrific sights, encountered wherever the Reds passed, almost unhinged his mind. But they were so commonplace, he gradually grew enured to the sea of blood through which he traveled daily. He learned first-hand that communism was not an ideology, it was simply the organization of the worst criminal elements led by Jews to destroy Gentile society. This was no speculation. Virtually all the commissars he knew (some of whom he interviewed) were Jewish, while the majority of their activists were common murderers and perverts "liberated" from prison. They were motivated by hatred, power and revenge, nothing else. All their slogans about "Equality" and "Peace" were Transparent rues to dupe thoughtless liberals among the Russian people, their victims. Drunk with success, the Jews boasted openly of their plans for world conquest by fomenting the same kind of divisiveness in other Gentile countries. They told Pelley that Russia was just a stepping stone, a base for international subversion. Even their phony "communism" was utterly dispensable, just like their own followers, who they never hesitated to massacre on the slightest whim. Their long-range goal was a one-world government, in which the Gentiles became willing slaves, fuelling an international economy with their genius and labor, while the Jewish people dominated all important positions of power. "After Russia," one greasy commissar smirked at Pelley, "then Europe and later, America!"

"Hooray for Hollywood!"

Before his political awakening overseas, he knew nothing about tbe Jews, never heard them discussed at home while growing up and, at most, thought of them only as members of a non-Christian religion. Returning to the United States a changed and shaken man, Pelley made his report to Representative Louis F. McFadden of Pennsylvania in 1920. The politician was so alarmed at what he heard, he personally read aloud the Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion on the floor of Congress, officially introducing this vitally important document into the Congressional Record. (Tbe Protocols represent an agenda for bringing Jewish leaders into positions of political and economic dominance over Gentile society. Predictably condemned as fraudulent by hysterical Jews, the Protocols were verified as recently as 1984, when Lincoln and Bladgett's popular book about the Grail legend, Holy Blood-Holy Grail, established their historical roots.) Soon afte, Pelley was introduced to a Justice Departmnent official and Robert Sharpe, chief of State Department intelligence. They told him his experiences were entirely borne out by their abundant files on Jewish agitation in Russia and the United States. That these government men were so outspoken is a revealing indication of how much political power the Jews have accumulated in the last 75 years; it is today completely unthinkable that any American politician would even hint at critizing the Jewish menace.

There seemed to be nothing that could halt "the historical inevitability" of the kosher one-world promised by Karl Marx. Pelley went back to his home in Vermont and tried to forget the "bath of horror" he knew was slowly enveloping civilization. He felt restless and frustrated and became unlivable, so much so, he and his wife divorced. These were tbe Roaring Twenties, when Americans were caught up in the hedonism of postwar prosperity. People lived for pleasure and let serious problems take care of themselves. Pelly too, was not immune from the spirit of his times. Trying to escape from his own conscience, he fled to Hollywood, California, where his reputation as an author preceded him, and he was hired as a screen writer at M.G.M. and Universal Studios. He worked furiously, turning out scripts for the leading motion pictures of the day. He even scripted a film version of his own short story, The Shock, which was an instant hit. His work was of such high calibre, he soon became one of the most respected and highest paid writers in Hollywood. In the words of his biographer, his esteemed screen plays for the leading actor of the silent screen "helped to establish Lon Chaney's reputation and forged a friendship between the two men. In addition to Chaney, he claimed 'constant entree' into the homes of Theda Bara, Chester Conklin and other famous actors, producers and directors."

Busy as he was with living it up in Hollywood high society, Pelley found time to write novels which catapulted his name into the highest levels of contemporary American fiction. Both The Greater Glory (extolling the simple values of life in a small New England town) and The Fog (a love story) were bestsellers and critically acclaimed. He was favorably compared to F. Scott Fitzgerald and regarded as at least the equal to Sinclair Lewis. But money and acclaim did not bring him inner peace. Ironically, he originally fled the realities of the East Coast for the fantasy mills of Hollywood, only to find himself in the midst of a largely Jewish movie industry that was perverting the art of film into kosher propaganda which "benumbed, anesthetized and generally bilked" audiences. "While Gentiles concentrated on creativity," he said, "furriers from Second Avenue and pants-pressers from Milwaukee began to open studios to photograph canned dramas." He felt inwardly ashamed to have had anything to do with the Hollywood illusion, as he saw the Jewish shadow fall across his own country, just as it had in Russia.

At the height of his career success and his emotional turmoil, on May 29th, 1928, he was suddenly and unexpectedly confronted by a deeply moving personal experience. He wrote about it in My Seven Minutes in Eternity, which sold 90,000 copies. Before 1930 he received more than 20,000 letters from his readers. Despite the pamphlet's phenomenal success, the author revealed few details concerning his experience beyond his insistence that synchronous events are personally significant "coincidences" are occurrences in everyone's life that connect us to some Divine Plan. Never before a religious man, Pelley was no St. Paul suuck off his horse by God's holy lightning. Whatever happened to him, it appears to have been not unlike the vision a young Hitler had of his life when, as a 15 year-old student in Linz, Austria, something in a performance of Wagner's music showed him a glimpse of his future mission. Such personally significant happenings are not at all that rare, but usually occur to revolutionary personalitie of a high order. In any case, Pelley saw that he was wasting his time in "the necromancy of making movies" that were becoming more anti-Gentile, and determined to devote the rest of his life doing meaningfull work, whatever that turned out to be. He was ready for greatness, he felt, but lacked any sense of direction.

Most of all, he wanted to do something worthwhile for his Aryan race and Western culture. He was not unaware of the National Socialist Revolution going on in Germany, but he thought it could not possibly triumph over the enormous power of Jewry. He remembered how the slimy commissar in Russia had prophesized that Europe was to be the next victim. He studied Mein Kampf and wondered if the principles so clearly laid out therein could be applied in the United States. It seemed too good to be true. Next year, the sham prosperity of the 1920s collapsed wit the Great Depression. The United States went bankupt and its people knew real fear for the first time . As millions of bitterly disillusioned Americans allowed themselves to be suckered in by a burgeoning communist movement and the transparent lies of Franklin Roosevelt, Pelley was horrified to recognize the same pattern of mass-upheaval he witnessed in Russia being replayed in his own country.

The Birth of the Silver Legion

When, however, Adolf Hitler was elected to power on January 30th, 1933, Pelley was thunderstruck. The impossible had happened. At least somewhere in the world, a Gentile people had pulled themselves together in the cause of their racial existence. The omnipotent Jews were defeated after all. If White men could save their people in Germany, the same could be accomplished here. The very next day, Pelley founded the Silver Legion, regarded by most historians as the first genuine National Socialist-style organization in the United States. True, the roots of the American-German Bund went back ten years earlier. But it was essentially a fraternal group with no political goals save, much later, preserving peace between America and the Third Reich. The Silver Legion began as something altogether different. From its inception, its thrust was the attainment of political power, to someday become the U.S. government and establish a folkish state based on the fundamentals of Mein Kampf. More important even than these obvious political and philosophical goals, a new spirit, the dynamic will of the White Race would be summoned to inspire Americans as never before.

From the outset, however, Pelley was faced with a serious dilemma: While he wanted to clearly identify his organization as National Socialist, he was anxious to make it appear as American as possible. Although he loved the Swastika symbol and understood its pan-Aryan significance, he knew too that it was now the official emblem of a foreign power. He did not wish to create the impression that he was the agent of another country. Instead of the old Hooked Cross, he chose the letter "L" as the symbol of his new organization. It was simple to reproduce under a variety of circumstances and stood for Love of the Aryan Race, Loyalty to the American Republic, Liberation from Jewry and, of course, the Silver Legion itself. He personally designed its flag, a square, white standard emblazoned with a capital L in scarlet. For the next nine years, it was to be seen by millions of Americans, carried into vicious street battles and hoisted over every state in the Union.

But in the beginning, beyond creating its first symbol, Pelley really did not know where or how to start. At last, he fell back on his writing skills and published a tabloid newspaper, Liberation, at his own expense. It created a sensation, becoming virtually an overnight success by attracting not only numerous financial supporters, but expressive writers like himself and first a dozen or so, then hundreds and very shortly thousands of unemployed men anxious to sell the publication from street corners. In Jewized cities like New York or Washington, D.C., these early activists were attacked by kosher mobs, so the same enemy that made Hitler's Stormtroops necessary were likewise responsible for the Silver Shirts coming into being. Pelley's choice of the name was an obvious reference to the German S.S., but their presence at newspaper sales and public speeches was no less vital. In so short a space of time, the Silver Shirts became the Silver Legion. The vast majority of Legionaries were by no means armchair revolutionaries, but tough street fighters from factories, offices and high school and college campuses. Many were also ex-servicemen, betrayed veterans of the phony "War to End all Wars". They saw through tbe Jewish nature of the Depression and regarded F.D.R. as the most Jewized president ever inflicted on the country. Most of all, they wanted to sweep aside the liberal-capitalist-democratic scam and build in its place a free republic of happy citizens deeply conscious of their racial heritage. To achieve that goal, they strove to build a real political movement aimed seriously at putting their leaders in office through legal, constitutional means.

Their uniforms consisted of a cap identical to tbose worn by Hitler's Stormtroopers, blue corduroy trousers, leggings, tie and silver shirt with a red "L" over the heart. To offset their European appearance, the Silver Shirts never failed to fly the Stars and Stripes side by side with the Legion flag, and their official anthem was a pro-Aryan text set to the famous Civil War march, the Battle Hymn of the Republic. "Silver symbolizes the purity of our Fight", Pelley announced,"and the purity of our Race!" Thus began what he referred to as "the Great Maratbon", conjuring images of Thermopylae—"the ultimate contest for existence between Aryan mankind and Jewry."

By the end of 1930, the Legion's growth was nothing less than extraordinary. Units were springing up all across tbe country, as Pelley found that he spoke as eloquently as he could write. By 1936, he was a nationally-known public figure, wbo had already addressed hundreds of thousands of farmers, students, housewives and most usually, unemployed people all across the country. As he described once in Liberation, "Men in the little towns are suddenly galvanized by the piercing tocsinis of the-Silver Bugles (the name of a Silver Legion drum and bugle corps). They crain their necks up from ledgers and lathes. Rippling nags go past foggy windows where they've viewed the world with increasing sullenness during this highly successful Jewish Depression. They deploy upon the sidewalks and behold the finest specimens of American manhood doing something to relieve mass resentment. They want to play tbeir parts." Like the growing Legion of his followers, being a National Socialist activist, he felt "part of the very essence and fibre of my country's current history." His message was the simple truth: "Capitalist democracy has failed, but out of its putrid remains is struggling to be born its monstrous offspring, communism. The Russian people failed to crush that monster in its womb and suffered terribly. I know, I saw it happen. The same is happening here. It is not a struggle for capitalism or communism, but between White Civilization and Jewry."

Silver Shirts on the March!

Pelley' s organization of tbe Silver Legion was unique. Although there were permanent barracks for Silver Shirt training and local units flourished in most states and in every region of the United States, there was no central headquarters building. Instead, the Chief, as he was popularly known to his followers, ran the Legion from his Ford touring car. He never stayed any place more than a few weeks, at most, but was constantly on the move, traveling from one headquarters to another, staging outdoor rallies and mass meetings along the way. Actually, he went through several cars per year, because he was driving an astounding 20,000 miles annually. Wherever he happened to be visiting at the time was the national headquarters from which he made all his phone calls to other headquarters. This extremely mobile leadersship tied the various units very closely together and gave Pelley a tremendous understanding of Americans at all levels, in all parts of the country, while making him a personally known statesman to millions of people.

His plan for achieving power was open and direct: First, he would acquaint his fellow citizens with the Silver Legion program. Then he would enter the next presidential race in one state only for tbe experience he and his activists needed to understand practical politics. With that real-life training, he would make a serious bid for the 1940 national election. Accordingly, his support was so widespread in Washington State that his name was placed on the presidential ballot, thanks to the hard, door-to-door campaign work of the Silver Shirts, who collected thousands of signatures on their circulating petitions. (Here, my research draws a blank, as I was unable to locate any sources describing the voter response he won. I conclude it must have been significant, for reasons which will soon be made clear.)

F.D.R.'s reinstatement as president brought closer the "conflict between the Light and Dark forces on earth"—a prophesy of the coming war against the Third Reich made by Pelley in his first national radio speech. His election bid increased Silver Legion membership three-fold and won some important figures, including George van Horn Moseley, a retired general in the U.S. Army, Congressional Representative Jacob Thorkelsen, Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., and Walt Disney. All of them attended his public rallies and some shared the podium witb tbe Chief. He was confident that, with this kind of high-level support and tbe obvious acceptance of millions of average Americans, the Silver Legion had a great destiny before it. As his biographer wrote, "Pelley looked forward to a World Axis, centered in an Aryanized Washington and made secure at eitber end in Berlin and Tokyo. As long as China tottered on the verge of becoming Stalin's satellite, the Japanese armies in Manchuria defended civilization against the insidious serpent of communism." Having lived in Japan for some time, Pelley came to deeply respect the Japanese as the bulwark in the Far East against the Soviet Union. He was therefore appalled at Roosevelt's attempts at goading Japan into a catastrophic war that would leave the door wide open to Communist expansion into Asia. The Chief proved all too prophetic here too, as the crippled American veterans of Korea and Viet Nam can attest.

As the 1940 presidential election approached, the Silver Shirts, now 100,000 strong (House Committee on Un-American Activities, Special Committee, 1939), were being taken very seriously by F.D.R., who recognized Pelley as a deadly serious contender; the Chief might not actually get into the White House, but he could control enough votes to swing the election away from the democrats. Roosevelt's popularity already waning, he could not risk his reelection and ordered the F.B.I. to "investigate" Pelley. Attorney General Frank Murphy balked at the obvious political persecution and made excuses to the President, telling him it would be a mistake to make "martyrs out of the Silver Shirts" . Martyrs, schmartyrs—democratic incumbency was at stake. so he ordered what Pelley referred to as his "Gentile satraps" to make life miserable for the Silver Shirts. Their North Carolina unit (the legion's largest headquarters and the closest thing they had to a national office) was raided by federal marshalls, its properties, including printing presses, confiscated, its residents arrested and jailed on a variety of contrived charges, all of which were dismissed but only after long months of financially draining court proceedingsings, Even so, none of the confiscated materials, as well as the legally owned building itself, were returned to the impoverished Silver Shirts; they were told by the smiling judge that they had the right to sue the government for damages.

Hard on the heels of the North Carolina raid, Congressman Dickstein (New York) called for a national ban on public display of the Silver Shirt uniform. The Chief was quick to respond: "Any kike who thinks he can tell me what kind of shirt I can wear, or that I can't wear a scarlet L on it, will get a punch in his nose that he'll remember until he lands in Abraham's bosom!" As even his unsympathetic biographer admits, "Pelley had grounds to believe that he was being harassed."

The harassment accelerated and he was charged with tax evasion. Although he beat that politically motivated charge, the great expense and time needed to defend himself from impending imprisonment sabotaged his 1940 campaign. By that time (November), U.S. involvement in the widening conflict against National Socialist Germany seemed virtually inevitable. Accordingly, Pelley changed the direction of the Legion from running for elective office to opposing Roosevelt and his Jewish warmongers. The Silver Shirts joined up with the American-German Bund, the Ku Klux Klan and numerous other patriotic organizations, large and small, united in mobilizing mass-opposition for peace. Here too, the Chief proved his power to win over millions, as national polls taken only a week before Pearl Harbor showed that more than three quarters of the Americans people were against war with the Axis unless the United States was physically attacked. How Roosevelt engineered that prerequisite, well-documented by some of the books offered for sale by The New Order, is too complex for retelling here. After America finally entered the war, Pelley was heartbroken at what he saw as his country's slide into the abyss. His life's work of the past nine years, all the wonderful success of the Silver Shirt organization and its enthusiastic grass-root support, seemed in vain. He dissolved the Legion, even its newspaper; what else could he do?

He had remarried in 1935, but spent little time with his new wife, by whom he had a daughter. Close to despair, Pelley joined them in the small town of Nobelsville, Indiana, where he wanted to forget the world he had tried to save. His years of self-sacrifice seemed "a thankless job, striving to bring a vision to humankind, as humankind is constituted." But his wife, Helen, and some of his closest comrades urged him to continue, not to give up, in spite of the worst that had happened. Somewhat encouraged, he wanted personal assurance from the new Attorney General Biddle that he would be allowed to publish his views so long as he not undermine the war effort. Biddle gave him his word of honor that Pelley could publish without fear of restraint. Even though the country was at war, the right to free expression was constitutionally guaranteed.

A pro-Hitler Roll Call in Wartime America

In the midst of wartime hysteria sweeping the nation, he launched a new magazine, Roll Call. It was uncompromisingly National Socialist, its famous editor and Silver Shirt writers unapologetic. They documented the prewar oil embargo Roosevelt imposed on the Japanese, forcing them to witness the strangulation of their economy or risk a war to free themselves from U.S. domination. F.D.R wanted war to save his own faltering "New Deal" economy by the kind of mass-production only wartime industry could provide. The Reds wanted war to save the moribund Soviet slave-empire from Hitler's armies. The Jews wanted war to preserve the capitalist/communist shell game they imposed so successfully on Gentile peoples throughout the world. Worst of all, in prosecuting war on the National Socialist Forces of Light, duped Americans were making it possible for the same forces of internal decay that rotted German society before Hitler cleaned them up to take root in our own economy.

Pelley sent pre-publication review copies to the Attorney General's office for government approval. Biddle could afford to appear magnanimous, confident as he was that the last of the Silver Legion would be hoisted on its own petard by the war-hysteria of "patriotic" Americans. But he was flabbergasted to learn that Roll Call was incredibly successful! Far from the popular hostility he counted on to overwhelm Pelley, the feisty little publication was turning up everywhere. And people were openly agreeing with its notorious editor. Most serious of all, "many copies were found among U.S. servicemen in all theaters of the war," according to Pelley's biographer. Into March, 1942, print runs first doubled, then quadrupled. In the space of no more than five weeks, Roll Call grew at a phenomenal rate. Obviously, not everyone was taken in by the propaganda-factories of Hollywood, obsessed as its kosher movie-makers were with "Houses of Rothschild and Roosevelt in shorts, Confessions of Nazi Spies and Stalin in pajamas, dramas of thugs shooting up Gentile civilization, mobs storming sundry Bastilles and New Dealers breaking sod for billion-dollar privies," as Pelley wrote then. "We have gone to war because the selfish Jewish policy foisted on our country has pushed the United States back to the verge of bankruptcy.

Then, in late winter, he was urgently contacted by a U.S. naval officer who had been stationed at Pearl Harbor the previous December 7th. The man said that F.D.R. had lied to the American people about the attack, telling them that "although damage has been severe, our Pacific Fleet is still in tact." The officer said he personally witnessed the devastation, which was far worse than the President allowed. In fact, all the U.S. capital ships were either sunk or badly damaged, except for five unescorted (and, therefore, nonoperational) aircraft carriers and their obsolete planes. Pelley rushed into print with the news: "Japanese bombers made Pearl Harbor look like an abandoned W.P.A. project in Keokuk!" The special edition that hit the streets was a bombshell, and eaten up by a public starved for the truth, which had been the war's earliest casualty. But when the Attorney General showed the usual advance copy to F.D.R., the President exploded like the battleship Arizona and demanded Pelley's arrest on April 4th. The charge: high treason!

Forced to break his word of honor to Pelley, Biddle ordered a grand jury to indict the Chief on twelve felony counts of the Sedition Act. During the course of his trial, the intensely politically-motivated prosecutor, Oscar Ewing, a cigar-smoking "big wheel" in the Democrat Party, emphatically denied that the U.S. Pacific Fleet had been all that badly damaged at Pearl Harbor, and subpoenaed Secretary of the Navy, Knox, to assure the judge (and a vast, listening radio audience) that the situation was well under control, with no cause for alarm. As he spoke, American military forces were in headlong retreat from an unbroken series of defeats throughout the entire Pacific Theater. But when Pelley's defense attorney threatened to have the entire salvage crew from Pearl Harbor testify in court to support Roll Call's controversial report, the judge swiftly dropped the main part of the indictment.

Now he was accused of falsely portraying the U.S. economy as bankrupt, therefore undermining public confidence during wartime. Here too, the defense was well prepared and subpoenaed Marriner Eccles, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank, who would have had to testify under cross examination and oath that the American economy was indeed only saved at the last moment by the war-production sparked by the blood-bath at Pearl Harbor. But the judge crushed the subpoena.

Sentenced!

To their credit, both Congressman Thorkelson and Charles Lindbergh personally testified as character witnesses on Pelley's behalf, immeasurably brave actions when we consider that they did so in the midst of World War II, at a time when the United States was experiencing defeat from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

Despite their support and the failure of the leading indictment against him (to say nothing of a total lack of evidence regarding treasonable activity of any kind), Pelley was sentenced to 15 years confinement at a maximum security federal prison. The prosecution had been unable to produce a single piece of evidence to prove Pelley had committed any treasonable acts; all he had done was to criticize an unjust war and the evil President who schemed for it. Twenty five years later, thousands of Jewish communists and their brainless Gentile dupes burned U.S. flags in the streets and violently protested American involvement during the Viet Nam War; unlike Pelley, none of them pulled hard time. Penniless, he was unable to mount an appeal. Later, Lindbergh told a reporter for the Chicago Tribune that Pelley was no traitor, but a true patriot who was obviously being persecuted for saying publicly what a growing number of Americans were discussing privately. Pelley was to be made an example of for these people: Keep your opinions to yourself, or look what will happen to you!

Stunned by the harshness of his sentence, he was a mute prisoner of the war he opposed. While the Western World outside his penitentiary bars committed suicide, he read voraciously and thought deeply. Although sad, something in him would not let him despair: "Some day, we Americans will see in true perspective what an alien horde of four million Jews did to us, and why we have been so stupid to suffer it." As the catastrophic decade of the '40s came to an end, Pelley's daughter and son-in-law, with the help of old comrades, were able to raise enough money for an appeal. It failed, but their loyalty was undiminished and they tried again. In 1952, with Americans dying needlessly in Asia, just as he predicted, Pelley was reluctantly paroled on the condition that he participate in no "political activities of any nature", a flagrantly unconstitutional requirement he was too broke to contest. Frail in health, his daughter and her husband nursed him back to health at the family home in Nobelsville, Indiana.

Together, they founded a new publishing company, Soulcraft Press, which released his first book since the war: Something Better. In it, he singled out Roosevelt as the man most responsible for setting in motion the social upheaval Americans experienced in the Viet Nam era. "He was the forerunner of today's evolving chaos," which was nevertheless deemed necessary to create a National Socialist-style state in the future. But it was the creation of two new magazines dealing largely with mystical and metaphysical themes that got him back on his feet financially, so much so he was able to repay all those loyal followers who had contributed so generously to his appeal. As earlier in life, writing gave him a sense of purpose and fulfillment. And he recalled without regret that seminal experience that set him on his difficult dramatic path in 1928: it all seemed destined to happen and therefore part of some Higher Purpose he trusted instinctually, even though he could not understand it intellectually. In his last years, he was happy with the love of his daughter and old comrades, and content to know that, even though he failed, he had done the best he could on behalf of his race and nation. And his enemies—the enemies of his people—had honored him by long imprisonment. He also lived long enough to witness the rise of George Lincoln Rockwell's American Nazi Party, a phenomenon that offered him deep comfort: Someone was carrying on the fight he began thirty years before.

Death and Legacy

William Dudley Pelley died peacefully in his sleep on July 1, 1965, aged 75. While he was lying in state, someone burned a cross on the front lawn of the funeral parlor. It was never determined if the fiery cross had been set there by a friend or an enemy. His passing was observed (with malice, of course) in the national newsmedia, but immediately thereafter his name was allowed to lapse into obscurity.

In 1992, the little Indiana town of Nobelsville achieved brief national attention once more, when a neighborhood boy playing outside his home one midsummer evening was narrowly missed by a falling meteor that landed at his feet. "Not since the death of fascist leader, W.D. Pelley, seventeen years ago," the local newspaper reported, "has the rest of America taken notice of our community".

Pelley's life as a White Patriot was similarly meteoric. He was our country's first racial activist in the National Socialist style. He was the predecessor to Commander Rockwell and the White Power Movement in America today. He proved that our idea, if promoted with courage, intelligence and sincerity, has the power to win a huge following, as demonstrated by his 100,000 followers. His living martyrdom in the belly of the Jew beast won him a place of honor in the hearts of fellow fighters who come after him. He did not fail, as he thought, any more than a brave soldier who does his best when captured by the enemy fails.

Historical circumstances did not allow him to create the Aryan Washington he dreamt of. But in the far larger struggle for world-wide White Supremacy, he fought the good fight; his was but the opening battle in an ongoing war for the final triumph of Aryan humanity. The Chief and his Silver Shirts have gone before us. They inspire us to follow their lead. And our victorious banner someday unfurled over Planet Earth will belong as much to them as to us!

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

WHO ARE THE RUSSIANS?

by

REVILO P. OLIVER

EVERY AMERICAN carries in his mind a picture or a filmstrip labeled "the Russians," and those pictures largely determine his opinions on some of the most important problems of national strategy.

The present military and economic strength of the Communist Conspiracy is almost entirely concentrated in the Soviet Union, and the Soviet Union is, for all practical purposes, Russia. Now if we assume (and it is far from certain) that the Soviet Union has the equipment necessary to begin an open war with the United States, the likelihood that the Kremlin would risk such a war in any circumstances depends, for the most part, on the character of the Russian people. Would they rise in almost unanimous revolt against their Communist masters at the first opportunity? Or would they support or passively accept the Red régime knowing that the Kremlin would send the bulk of its armed forces into the satellite countries to quell or forestall revolts? And if the truth lies somewhere between these two extremes, where, precisely, does it lie?

The question is not confined to what would happen in the event of war. If the American people succeed in somehow obtaining a government in Washington that will act to defend the United States, one of the first questions to arise will be whether it is worthwhile to direct propaganda at, or to encourage subversive movements among, the Russians. If so, whom should we encourage and how should we try to persuade? That, again, is a question of what the Russians "are really like."

There have been many attempts to answer that question--many more than any one man could conceivably find the time to read. One of the most convincing, and probably the one most widely known in this country, is Eugene Lyons' Our Secret Allies (New York, 1953; now published by Meredith Press, Des Moines, Iowa; 376 pages $4.50). An important new work on this matter has just been published: Arsène de Goulévitch's CZARISM AND REVOLUTION, translated from the French by N. J. Couriss (Omni Publications, Hawthorne, California; c. 272 pages, $4.00).

The author was born in Russia in 1900, fought in the loyal Air Force against the Communists in 1918, and served with the French armed forces during the Second World War. He now edits Exil et Liberté, the monthly publication of the International de la Liberté in Paris, an organization which seeks to coordinate the efforts of all anti-Communists from countries now held by the Conspiracy. (This journal, by the way, was the first to disclose, in July 1954, the interesting fact that Hitler's "expert" on Ukrainian affairs, Alexander Sevriuk, was a Communist agent planted in the German service by Hitler's Chief of Intelligence, Admiral Canaris. The Admiral is now known to have been a traitor and, in all probability, a Communist agent himself.)

M. de Goulévitch writes primarily to correct common misconceptions concerning (1) the Czarist régime, (2) the Bolshevik conquest of Russia, and (3) the nature of the Russian people. Since both he and Mr. Lyons were born in Russia and lived Ehere for considerable periods of time, but have distinctly divergent political sympathies, the substantial agreement of the two authors on almost all essentials makes the two books corroborate one another.

I

A NATION'S CHARACTER is evinced by its history, and its history, in turn, to some extent moulds its character. Many an American's conception of Czarist Russia has been formed by the purplish prose of Edgar Saltus' Imperial Orgy. There is also a large residue left by the campaign of frantically anti-Czarist propaganda in the American press during the early years of the present century-agitation over an issue that will seem almost unbelievable to most of our contemporaries, who do not even know that half a century ago Americans could travel in almost any part of the world without a passport. Americans were so proud of their nationality that some felt that no nation in the world should presume to close its borders for any reason to even the most recently and superficially naturalized American citizen. Although the issue has been long forgotten, the propaganda for which it provided an occasion has left in the minds of many a grotesque picture of Czarist Russia as a nightmarish realm of oppression and terror that was not much better than Soviet Russia today.

Although the earlier history of Russia abounds with the horrors typical of Oriental despotism, the régime of the Czars after the accession of Alexander II in 1855 was unquestionably benevolent in intention and usually mild in practice. The events which aroused indignation in the United States fifty years ago seem so trivial today that no newspaper would devote a line to them. Our contemporaries, indeed, will find it difficult to believe that it was possible for some Americans to wax wroth over the "sad plight" of two or three hundred Russians, convicted of revolutionary conspiracy. They were exiled for a few years to towns in Siberia, where they were restricted so little that almost anyone who wished (e.g. Bronstein, alias Trotsky) had little difficulty in escaping abroad. Almost anyone who chose to remain (e.g. Ulyanov, alias Lenin) was able to rent a fairly comfortable house or apartment, install his family, and, if he found hunting, fishing, and local society insufficient to occupy his time, settle down to writing books. It is true that the exiles sometimes had to undergo unwonted hardships: it is recorded that Ulyanov's mistress and fellow conspirator, who accompanied him to Siberia and there married him, had to do housework for several days when her maid left without warning and a suitable replacement could not immediately be found. But the tale of such hardships will moisten few eyes today; we are a hard-hearted generation.

It would be easy to reverse the old indictment and condemn the Czarist régime for excessive leniency and fatuous humanitarianism. In well-governed countries, criminals who commit murder while robbing banks (e.g. Dzhugashvili, alias Stalin) are promptly executed and society is thus saved from further depredations. But in Russia, where silly sentimentalists had abolished cnpital punishment even for murder, criminals were exiled to Siberia. And even when they escaped five times (as did Dzhugashvili) to resume their criminal careers, the Czars, who had no Alcatraz, patiently sent them back. Such laxity was indeed deplorable.

Mr. Lyons, who was interested only in showing hat the worst that could reasonably be alleged against the Czarist régime was the merest trifle in comparison with the normal procedures of the Bolsheviks, gave little space in his book to Imperial Russia. M. de Goulévitch's primary concern is to vindicate the native Russian form of government, and he accordingly describes in some detail the whole political and social system. His presentation is effective, but he has overlooked one or two points that would have given added weight. He shows that the industrialization of Russia and development of her natural resources was the work of the Czars. But, he would have done well to extend his statistics to make it clear to the reader that the Bolsheviks were not able to reach the Czarist levels of production until some years after Franklin Roosevelt began to pump in American resources to save the criminals. And I should suppose that, for the average reader, nothing that can be said on behalf of the Czarist régime would be quite so convincing as the simple statistic that around the turn of the century emigration from Russia (largely to the United States) was about balanced by immigration into Russia, chiefly from Europe.

On the other hand, M. de Goulévitch's book, as his translator remarks, "somewhat resembles a speech by defending counsel." He sometimes overstates his case, somewhat in the manner of an inexperienced attorney. In his eagerness to refute the silly notion that Soviet policies are just a continuation of Russian imperialism, he claims that Czarist Russia had no imperialistic ambitions at all. And, he even tries to resurrect the old myth that the First World War was planned and contrived by the sinister forces of "Prussian militarism." However the main outlines of the historical record are clear and well-known. Responsibility for the catastrophic and fratricidal madness that swept over Europe in 1914 must fall on many shoulders, including those of professedly "idealistic" politicians in France and England. The Czar and his advisers (who thrice deceived him) cannot escape a share of the responsibility distinctly greater than that which falls on the German government.

M. de Goulévitch is equally inept when he advances the claim that the régime of the Czars was "democratic" because it represented the "will of the people" and maintained an "open society" in which persons of the humblest origin could be educated at government expense and attain the highest offices. That abuses language in the manner of the Schlesingers, Salingers, and other official manufacturers of boob-bait in the United States.

The government of Russia was an unlimited autocracy until 1905, when it became, as was made clear by official definition (e.g. in the Almanach ne Gotha for 1910), an autocracy voluntarily limited by the autocrat during his own good pleasure. Some local activities, which our author carefully enumerates, were permitted. All effective power was concentrated in the central government, by which the whole of Russia was so administered that nothing of importance anywhere could be done without its permission. Hence practically nothing was ever done except on initiative from St. Petersburg. It is true that Nicholas II and his immediate predecessors were benevolent men and did not have to worry about buying votes from suckers, but their government was essentially the same as that which our "Fabian Socialists" and their allies are trying to fasten upon us. It is also true that the Russian bureaucracy was far less numerous, and probably had better intentions, than the hordes of arrogant and cunning little men whom we now pay to kick us around and drive us into our stalls. We must admit that the Russian bureaucracy never dared, and perhaps never wished, to enact scenes such as those now commonplace in our country, where gangs from Washington frequently descend on American farmers and confiscate their property to teach them that they have become serfs. They dare not grow even a blade of wheat without permission from their masters. But at the very least, the rule of the Czars had the defects and evils that are inherent in every centralized government. And no American mindful of his heritage can contemplate such despotism with other than repugnance so long as it is presented as a political form that might be applicable to himself.

M. de Goulévitch would have done well to eschew sophistries about "democracy," and to confine himself to his other argument for the defense. No one would dispute the evidence that he cites to prove "our historical development differs from that of the West." The very facts of that development strongly support the conclusion that it is "the salient characteristic of our race to venerate an individual as the incarnation of executive power. If that is true, then M. de Goulévitch is right when he says that Russians "stand more in need of authority and discipline" than some other peoples, and that for a Russian "to be led is a necessity." On this basis it can be argued very cogently that the régime of the Czars was the best régime possible for the inhabitants of Russia in the circumstances. And the author should not have been afraid to rely on that argument. Few Americans today--at least among those who can read books-are so ignorant as to suppose that all the peoples of the world are like themselves or think in the same way.

II

MR. LYONS and M. de Goulévitch differ markedly in their attitude toward the preliminary revolution of March 1917. The former regards the Kerenski government as "the first democratic society in Russian history," as it doubtless was in the intention of some of the participants. M. de Goulévitch regards it as a flimsy façade that served only to cover the Bolsheviks while they prepared to capture the state--which is what it was historically. The two authors differ as greatly in their view of the White Russians, who fought long and valiantly against the Communists. Mr. Lyons, although admitting that they were infinitely preferable to their adversaries, has scant sympathy for them, while M. de Goulévitch argues that they, as the legitimate government of Russia, had a moral right to all possible support from Russia's allies in the war. We need not argue the moral claim, for it is abundantly clear that the governments of at least France, England, and the United States were obligated by their own national interests to prevent the Communist Conspiracy from capturing one-sixth of the inhabited globe.

In their descriptions of the Bolshevik conquest, the two authors are in complete agreement on every important point. Russia was captured by a tiny gang of incredibly vicious and inhumanly depraved criminals. The largest nation on earth, in terms of territory, was captured by a few degenerates, just as a robust man may be destroyed by a few spirochaetes that are visible only under the microscope. The criminals took over Russia because (a) they had mastered the art of universal deceit, and (b) they were lavishly financed from nations that regarded themselves as the leaders of Western civilization.

Of the two authors, Mr. Lyons gives the fuller description and analysis of the conspirators' use of total deceit, by which they were able to persuade influential members of every segment of society that it was possible to profit from cooperation with the conspiracy. What Mr. Lyons accurately describes as an "obscene record of complex deceit" that makes the most shameless of Hitler's propagandists seem "paragons of candor by contrast" will teach a lesson that many Americans have yet to learn: that every profession of interest in the proletariat or any other class or group made by a Communist or crypto-Communist is made with a purpose identical to that with which you may affix a worm to a fishhook. Further, it is made with the same confidence that the fish are too stupid to refuse the bait. Until the criminals capture a government, their only real weapon is highly organized and specialized lying. For there are always many Communist lines, each specifically prepared and baited for one species of fish or, in some cases, for individual fish whose idiosyncrasies have been carefully studied. And we can only admire the consummate skill with which the conspirators keep their many divergent lines from becoming entangled with one another. Few have any conception of the sheer intricacy of the operations--the multiple and successive deceptions and betrayals. The Bolsheviks divided and subdivided Russia into hundreds of reciprocally antagonistic groups that fought one another rather than their hidden enemies and thus delivered their country and themselves into the power of the rabid enemies of mankind. In comparison with their triumph in Russia, the Bolsheviks' recent successes in the United States--where they were able to mobilize purblind opportunists, simpleminded sentimentalists, and even some sincere but gullible anti-Communists for their desperate offensive against anti-Communist Americans--seem both paltry and elementary.

Of the two authors, M. de Goulévitch gives the fuller account of the international support that made possible the criminals' success in Russia. He is understandably bitter toward Germany, which was in this connection really guilty of a war crime. For, it transported Lenin and some of his fellow criminals across its territory in precisely the spirit in which it might also have transported and loosed on Russia a swarm of rats infected with the bubonic plague. He also notes the curious fact that in this operation Germany enjoyed the cooperation of the government of nations with which it was at war. As everyone knows, Lenin's gang was matched by one led by Trotsky from the United States. This shipment of rats was intercepted by the British and interned at Halifax, but soon released in obedience to pressures from Washington. But Great Britain is by no means blameless, for it seems certain that her Embassy in St. Petersburg actively cooperated with the Bolsheviks. And since none of the persons in charge of that embassy was later tried for treason, it is an almost unavoidable inference that they were at least protected by politically powerful persons in London.

The conquest of Russia was, of course, financed from outside. In addition to the subsidies which they received from the German treasury, the criminals received lavish contributions from supposedly private sources in Germany, France, England, and the United States. Several individuals are reported to have contributed sums ranging from ten to twenty million dollars from their own pockets. The total amount of money thus furnished the criminals must have been enormous. So far as I know, however, no one has attempted to estimate, even tentatively, either the total obtained from all sources or the percentage of that money that was used for the simple and obvious purpose of buying treason in Russia.

It is no exaggeration, therefore, to say that the depraved monsters who captured Russia were an expeditionary force sent out by the International Communist Conspiracy and supplied by it from bases in Western Europe and the United States. On this point depends the major thesis advanced by both of the authors we are considering here: Communism is not Russian. As Mr. Lyons puts it, Russia was merely a "beachhead for the conquest of world dominion." More than that, he quotes with approval a Russian writer who argues that the theory of Communism, as well as the reality, was imposed on Russia from the West. He describes the Soviet as "a negation of things primordially

Russian."

In advancing this thesis, of course, neither author would deny that the Communist Conspiracy, which had a strong underground organization in Russia before Ulyanov and Bronstein began their criminal careers in the 1890's, had its antecedents in the frenetic revolutionary agitations of the Nineteenth Century. But both deny that these antecedent phenomena, which seemed peculiarly Russian to Europeans and Americans of the past century, were the product of distinctively Russian tendencies. Indeed, what seemed so bizarre in Russia a century ago corresponds closely to tendencies of which we are only now becoming aware in the United States. After all, the young "revolutionary intelligentsia" of Czarist days, ignorant, feckless, and endlessly loquacious, closely resembles--even in such externals as the uncouth conduct and slovenly dress of the long-haired males and short-haired females--the "beatniks" and other waste products of American schools. As for the Russian terrorists, whose ferocious crimes shocked the world, did they differ in any significant way from the many members of the Communist Conspiracy now active in the United States? (except that the latter, under orders, are for the moment deferring indulgence of their lust for blood and destruction.) Conditions in the Russian Empire favored the development of those manifestations of social disease, but the disease is one to which no nation is immune. Any nation in similar circumstances might have been afflicted as was Russia.

M. de Goulévitch modifies this proposition by granting that the Russian people did exhibit a peculiar tolerance of, and even a perverse sympathy for, all forms of crime. Thus they did, to a certain extent, create the conditions that permitted the Communist Conspiracy to gain a foothold in Russia and eventually to capture the country. I doubt that Mr. Lyons would concur on this point, which he does not specifically consider in his book. M. de Goulévitch cites Dostoevski and could have produced much other evidence in support of his position. But Mr. Lyons, if pressed, could point to the almost geometrical increase of crime in the United States in recent years. It is, of course, largely the work of the young criminals, euphemistically called "juvenile delinquents," who are bred in our schools by methods that must have been designed for that purpose, and are then systematically protected and encouraged by sniveling do-gooders and muttonheaded "Liberals."

Both authors agree that the Soviet régime, even in theory, violates the innate instincts of the Russian people, who are held in subjection only by the vicious efficiency and unspeakable ferocity of their present masters. They would therefore rise in revolt at the first prospect of success. The beasts in the Kremlin, so long as the rest of the world cooperates with them in "co-existence," can maintain themselves in Russia by terrorism. But all around them, in Mr. Lyons' vivid phrase, "the inflammable stuffs for a conflagration are piled high"--a conflagration that the American people, should they succeed in forcing their government to oppose the Communist Conspiracy instead of financing it, could quickly kindle.

III

THE ANALYSIS OF Russian character given by Mr. Lyons and M. de Goulévitch is strongly corroborated by many other writers, including those who have had quite recent and intimate experience of life in Russia. The Hidden Russia (see AMERICAN OPINION, June, 1960, pp. 45f.), a book by N. N. Krasnov Jr. deserves study in this connection. The analysis cannot but be enormously encouraging to all Americans. For, in effect, it promises us that if we can defeat the Communist Conspiracy in our own country, we shall be able to destroy it easily in Russia and hence in the rest of the world. We must note, however, that there are serious objections to the validity of the analysis.

The writers who offer us that optimistic view all assure us that the Russian people, although retarded by "historical misfortunes, like the long subjection to the Mongols," are essentially European and therefore fundamentally like the residents of a small town in Iowa or Wales. That, of course, flatly contradicts the widely held view that the Russians are basically Asiatic.

They certainly seem non-European. Englishmen or Americans, for example, traveling in Russia have always found themselves in a land that was utterly foreign, in a sense in which they found nothing foreign in Spain or Germany or Italy. The same impression is conveyed by Russian literature despite the fact that it is the work of a cultivated class deeply influenced by European literature. The characters that we meet in Turgenev or Goncharov (the author of Oblomov) or even Merezhkovski (when, as in The Antichrist, he deals with Russians) are simply as alien to us as the characters of the Chin P'ing Mei or the Brhatkathâ, though in different ways. When we read Bulwer Lytton's Eugene Aram--if we read it at all these days--we smile indulgently at the familiar follies of Romanticism and refer to Miss Edgeworth, Victor Hugo, and perhaps the younger Dumas; but when we read Dostoevski's adaptation of the story (Crime and Punishment), we are immediately aware that we are in the presence of something which, whether we find it attractive or repulsive, is outlandish, abnormal, and morbid. Sologub, Balmont, and Bryusov strive sedulously to imitate the French Decadents and Symbolists. But their closest imitations could never have been produced in Western Europe, not even by artists consciously striving for the weird and perverse.

It is not remarkable, therefore, that some of the most lucid minds of our time, including Henri Massis in his famous Défense de l'Occident, have regarded the Russians as an Asiatic and anti-Western nation. Oswald Spengler in his great historical system describes Russia as a nascent civilization now in a stage of development corresponding to pre-Homeric Greece or pre-dynastic Egypt and animated by the concept that appears in what is sometimes called the "primitive Christianity" of Dostoevski. Now without attempting to debate cyclic theories of history or to imagine how anything more stable than a tribe of nomads could be based on an incoherent and morbid sentimentality, we necessarily listen to Spengler with the greatest respect. We do this both because his was undoubtedly one of the great minds of our century, and because his analysis of contemporary tendencies in Asia and Africa has been triumphantly vindicated by subsequent events and is now seen to have been obviously right. And although we know that no man could handle such vast and complex materials without error, we are impressed when Spengler identifies the diving force of the emergent Russian spirit as an implacable hostility toward the West. And although Spengler does not say so, some readers plausibly extrapolate from his observations to reach the conclusion that the Russians endure Communism with all its horrors in order to destroy us.

A scarcely less discouraging view is presented by Nikolai Berdyaev (see AMERICAN OPINION, February, 1961, pp. 30-34), who presumes to speak for the "Russian soul" and--apparently without being in the least aware that he is saying anything that would astonish or alarm us--draws a picture in which no critical reader can fail to see the Russians as a vast mass of barbarians actuated by a messianic lust to "regenerate the world" by abolishing civilized mankind. And unfortunately it is impossible to dismiss Berdyaev as merely a madman or a cunning propagandist. He supports his case with copious quotations from Russian writers. Anyone who has read much of the literature can supply others for himself, from Chadaiev's admission, "We bear in our blood a principle that is hostile and refractory to civilization," to Dostoevski's insane pronouncement that "All men must become Russians." (At other moments Chadaiev boasted that Russia was "destined" to solve "all the intellectual, social, and moral questions" of Europe, while Dostoevski complained that "our trouble is that we are incapable of moderation"--but proofs of schizophrenia will scarcely reassure us!)

There is obviously some basis in fact for the grim prognoses of Spengler and Berdyaev. And one cannot refute them by citing the names of a few eminently sane Russians, such as the distinguished historian, Rostovtzeff. But apart from one's legitimate suspicion of grandiose generalizatons, one is entitled to inquire whether there is a "Russian people" about whom one can generalize at all. In the original sense of the word, of course, there are no Russians. For the Rus, the Vikings who introduced order and government when they settled down to rule the barbarians around Kiev in the Ninth Century, were a numerically insignificant aristocracy that was shattered by the Mongol conquest. Their blood has long since been absorbed in the multitudinous race of the territories they once ruled. Some of these are very old; the Scythians and Sarmatians must have left descendants. And no one who observed the conduct of the brutish females in uniform who occupied Bucharest and other parts of Romania in 1914 and 1945 could resist the inference that the prehistoric savages who gave rise to the legend of the Amazons had left a copious genetic heritage. Other racial elements were left by the successive invasions and migrations that swept over the steppes and plains until recent times. The term Russian is now specifically applied to the people, predominantly Slavic but with an unmeasured admixture of Mongol and other blood, who form about half of the population of the territory that is called Russian. The term 'Russian' is also applied indiscriminately to all the inhabitants of that territory, and it is often impossible to tell exactly what a given writer means when he refers to the "Russians" as though he were speaking of a single people.

Now a priori it is highly improbable that the colluvies nationum on Russian territory could have a collective "soul" or a common purpose. And there is ample evidence that they do not. Despite M. de Goulévitch's claim that the Czars "unified one hundred and forty races," Russia has always suffered from a fatal racial diversity which naturally produces deep and ineradicable antagonisms. Even the Communist régime has had to recognize this by the creation of a series of fictitiously autonomous "republics." These hatreds persist among the refugees from the Soviet, and Mr. Lyons, who very properly warns Americans of the extreme and apparently hopeless complexity of cross-purposes, gives some good examples. Even M. de Goulévitch cites a leader of the Georgians who opines that the Russians, in the limited sense of that word, are all mad dogs. And I note that one of the Ukrainian publications in this country recently expressed the hope that the vile Russians could be exterminated by atomic warfare.

Equally striking lack of unanimity may be found within the part of the population that is (so far as one can tell) Russian in the restricted sense. In fairly recent publications, for example, some survivors of the Kerenski régime not only exhibit the normal "Liberal" determination to learn nothing from experience, but obviously still cherish all the furious hatreds of their own countrymen that animated them in 1912. They are but examples. The confused Nineteenth-Century schism between "pro-Western" and "anti-Western" Russians (multiplied by controversies over what really is "Western") seems to be still going on in slightly different terms. One could even raise the question whether the Russians, when not under some form of authoritarian rule, have in common a sufficiently large body of values to enable them to cohere as a nation of their own accord.

Such indications warrant the suspicion that Berdyaev's horrendous "Russian soul" may be just one of the apparitions commonly seen by "intellectuals" when they become feverish. At the worst, it represents but a strain of madness in a variegated population. And we may ask whether Spengler's prognostication concerning the idée maîtresse of a future civilization is more than a conjecture colored by too much reading of Dostoevski and his kind.

An entirely different approach is taken by Dr. John M. Radzinski in his recent book, Masks of Moscow (Regent House, Chicago; 268 pages, $4.50). Dr. Radzinski, a psychiatrist who enjoys a high reputation among the sane minority in his profession, studies national "behavior patterns" in the light of Russian history from the Principality of Kiev to the present. Although he takes account of innate differences, he finds that these have been partly supplanted by a process that has gone on in Russian territory, with few intermissions, for centuries: the various populations have always been under the rule of despots--Mongols, Dukes of Moscovy, Czars, and now Soviet Commissars--and centuries of oppression accompanied by selective extermination have bred, as the predominant type, essentially dehumanized beings who combine an animal submissiveness with a bestial cruelty. Now undoubtedly Dr. Radzinski, whose analysis of Soviet policies after the Second World War is both acute and discerning, has correctly described the type which the Communists are consciously striving to produce by selective extermination--that, indeed, is the primary purpose of the slave labor camps in which millions are condemned to work and die. But the reader will be less satisfied with his interpretation of the earlier history of Russia, during most of which the purpose, if present at all, must have been unconscious and its execution must have been highly unsystematic. At the very worst, the process was certainly interrupted under the later Czars. Furthermore, although it is obvious that the Communists, if given enough time, can eventually accomplish their purpose, we should not overestimate what they have been able to accomplish thus far.

The views that we have examined are largely speculative, involving either intangibles or data which, if they could be observed and collected, would be so complex that our best digital computers would blow their fuses in despair. Against them we may set one clear piece of evidence: the joy with which the German troops were almost everywhere received when they invaded Russia. They were hailed as deliverers by both rural and urban populations. They were greeted, it would seem, with more or less equal enthusiasm along the whole line of invasion, which, extending from north to south, crossed the territories of a considerable number of Russia's many races. Whole divisions of Soviet troops, despite the efforts of the frantic commissars, surrendered happily to the Germans. And what is really significant, about two and one-half million men volunteered to fight with the Germans against the Soviet. Of this number, the Germans, astonished, short of equipment, and suspicious of both the loyalty and military capacity of such multitudinous volunteers, appear to have used only some eight hundred thousand. These appear to have been on the whole resolute and courageous troops.

The Germans not only discouraged recruiting, but, under the stimulus of fanatics like Alfred Rosenberg and crypto-Communists (such as the "Ukrainian expert" we mentioned above), perversely did almost everything in their power to alienate and humiliate as Untermenschen the inhabitants who had received them with such enthusiasm. It seems likely that with just a little good judgement the Germans could have induced a revolution inside the territory still held by the Soviets that would have swept the crimials away despite the utmost efforts of Franklin Roosevelt to save them. There is an obvious element of uncertainty in all arguments as to what "would have happened, if..." But Mr. Lyons makes an excellent case for his blunt contention that "Hitler saved Stalin."

It is reasonable, therefore, to conclude--with, of course, the reservation that here, as so often in human affairs, the true situation can be ascertained only by trial--that there still exists within the Soviet Union a potential of great importance to us. If the pro-Communist hogwash that we now subsidize through Radio Free Europe and the like were replaced by propaganda directed against the Kremlin, the latent spirit of resistance in Russia could be excited to multiply the Kremlin's problems. And defeat of the Communist Conspiracy anywhere--its forced retreat from any part of the territories it has conquered in the world--would be far more effective than any stream of words, however persuasive.

In these circumstances, it seems unlikely that the Kremlin, if it lost control of Washington, would risk a real war under any circumstances short of a direct attack by us on their own seat of power. Their satellites are, of course, expendable, and the situation in Russia is not so precarious that they could not hope to retain, by retreat elsewhere, their control of Russian territory or some part of it, at least.

IV

WE NEED TO UNDERSTAND the peoples of Russia, and that, as M. de Goulévitch reminds us, presupposes a reasonably accurate knowledge of their history. But we must not forget that our primary purpose as Americans at the present time is to predict, as closely as we can, what those peoples will do in given situations--not to praise or blame them for their conduct at any point, much less for such vaporous Hegelian abstractions as national "souls." We need to understand them, not to love them, as Mr. Lyons, who ends by overstating his own case, exhorts us to do. International crushes are apt to be spurious and certain to be dangerous; national survival depends on coolly objective and rational appraisal of realities.

We live in a world in which men must usually act upon calculations of probability, not certainties. Though it is less conclusive than we could wish, the evidence of internal weakness in the Soviet Union, when considered in conjunction with the evidence from all other parts of the world, leads us to one conclusion: If the Communist Conspiracy loses the United States, it loses the World. That explains not only the venom of the propaganda campaign against "extremists" in the United States, but the indecent and reckless haste with which the Conspiracy's agents in Washington are trying to disarm, impoverish, and "internationalize" us. Nor is their desperate and revealing haste unreasonable. For they know that if they do not break and imprison the American people now, they will eventually have no refuge on earth. ❑

A Look at What Breeds in a Stagnant Pond

> Steel, a second-generation Crip > quoted in Leon Bing's Do or Die

The other day the USA Today ran a story in its "Nation" section on Latell Chaney, a 20-year-old black man who suffered an attack by five gang members. Almost completely deaf from infancy, Chaney was standing on a Minneapolis street corner waiting for a bus when the rat pack pulled up in a car and began yelling at him. Chaney responded with sign language, which was taken by the group to be a display of his gang signs. They tried unsuccessfully to prevent the bus from moving on when Chaney boarded it, then lay in wait at the next stop. When the driver opened the door, the young bangers went after their handicapped victim with a broken beer bottle and proceeded to beat him and to gouge out one of his eyes. Chaney's other eye was damaged, and he lost what little hearing he had left in one ear. He plans at present to sue the bus line.

Chaney's plight, it is said, had "touched and outraged" thousands of persons across the country who have sent cards and money and have organized fund-raisers. Donors reportedly range from one person who sent an anonymous 200 dollars to one 8-year old in St. Paul who emptied her piggy bank to send six. Chaney and his mother report that they have since received threats from friends and relatives of the five "young men" who were arrested after being identified by Chaney and another passenger.

Here, then, are two glimpses of young black mentality in the inner cities. The truth they express, of course, is inadvertent. USA Today wishes to inform us not of black brutality, but of the great injustice suffered by a young black man in the inner city. The intended thrust of Bing's text, likewise, is not so much black atrocity as the urban tragedy that "gives rise" to it. The subjects of her book are played up not as villains, but as innately bright young men and women who might well do great things with their lives were it not for their circumstances. Their eyes, for example, are always intelligent, discerning, "penetrating" in their insight, and so on. The actual substance of her story says something else.

I remember standing on a Minneapolis street corner around the summer of 1980. I was in the state to visit relatives, Scandinavian folk who owned a farm about a hundred miles north of the city. I was struck by how clean this place felt-- even the downtown, which had not yet reaped the benefit of the racial influx.

Moments later a I saw a black pimp, classic in his attire, feather in hat, high soles, strutting out of a social establishment with a couple of his main ladies in tow. One of life's universals, I thought. The inner city, and niggers preying on Aryan flesh. Most of the people in this city, descendants of Northern European farmers and laborers, I imagined, would view this scene with minor irritation and so would turn to more comfortable thoughts. They would not see in it the embryo of a coming monstrosity. And in the time since they have not.

Those portraits of savagery noted at the outset will make white liberals wince a bit. But they will feel no immediate sense of alarm. Enough time and money, they will think, and the problem will be smoothed over. In the meantime, they preoccupy themselves with raises, promotions, and the fun of new home entertainment gadgetry while they look down their noses at those of us with less fashionable ends. They read of massive heists of high-tech weapons out of gun stores during periodic congoid loot-fests and lament "the problem" of our inner cities. It will not occur to them that the trajectory of this problem includes their children as its victims.

Where exactly do white liberals (or conservatives, for that matter) think that these warring congoid tribes are going to go? Surely the numbers of these crazed savages are not going to diminish. White tax money, at this time, funds their housing, medical needs, and procreation habits without limit. It does this at the reproductive expense of whites themselves. The current state of American society portends only more of the same. More black free riders and fewer whites to carry the load. For how long?

Will blacks become less violent? It seems unlikely, given the ongoing multiplication of those factors that fuel their violence at present. Are they going to grow brighter, or better fitted to the demands of the Euro-white culture (the vestiges of it, at least) that surrounds them? The years ahead, from every indication, promise more blacks with less genetic endowment in yet more chaotic circumstances again. For this reason a greater war looms on the horizon.

Nigger violence. Some will find the message redundant. I have friends who accuse me of preaching to the choir when I continue to run this tirade in a racialist periodical. Perhaps other contributors hear the same thing. Is it worth the effort? It is my hope always that a stray copy of this publication might make its way, on occasion, whether this month or in several years, into the hands of the white man or woman as yet unawakened--one who is still attached to the mainstream, yet whose racial experience on a given day may be severe enough to make him or her willing to entertain a new possibility. I offer the material above as an indication to that reader of the problem that he must sooner or later confront as the federal government continues its effort to head off our effort at survival. I offer it as a frank depiction of what integrationists are inflicting upon his children when they support such programs, for example, as cross-town busing for the purpose of achieving racial "balance".

The average white man knows that something is wrong. He is forever dissatisfied with the system, but he cannot identify the source of the problem. As yet the truth is too much for him. It takes him too far out of his mental orbit, too far away from his common-sense view of the world, to admit the truth of the matter, namely, that Orwell's dream came true while social theorists stood around chatting about it with cocktails in their hands. For this reason he may be more shocked by my use of the word 'nigger' than by the events depicted in the above sources. If so, I bid him to put his own son or daughter into the equation. Forty years of court decisions and public policies aimed at "racial justice" have spawned a catastrophe. The mindlessness depicted in books like Do or Die is now a commonplace, and with every passing year it spills out of the black environment to claim white victims in greater numbers.

The cross-racial trend of violence will continue. Whites, on average, are brighter and more industrious than blacks. Thus they have more to steal. White women are more attractive than black women. Thus they make better sexual prospects. Blacks envy whites, and they hate them. Today the robbery, rape, and murder of white targets is rite-of-passage for young blacks in every metropolis in the country. In sum, the races are different, and the attempt to bring them together under the same roof is a disaster. It is thus time that we addressed the race problem in plain language and in terms of the one element that has been overlooked--namely, the fact of race itself. The truth is in evidence, and even the Jew-owned, racially murderous anti-white media can no longer hide it. For this reason we must cease at this time to think of integrationists as being merely naive, misguided, or excessively liberal in their philosophy. Their ignorance, by this time, is willful. It is also destructive. For this reason it is no longer an excuse. Those individuals who continue to engineer the mixture of black and white races are guilty of nothing less than the crime of genocide against the white race.

Congoid of the Month and Related Stirrings

A recent issue of the inadvertently revealing USA Today provides me with an occasion to nominate a candidate for this month's most obnoxious negroid offender. The award goes to Bobby Brown, pop singer and Angry Black Man as well as husband of songstress Whitney Houston.

Brown, his publicist, and his bodyguard were at a Disney World nightclub, reports the daily, when Brown had words with a man who tried to speak to a woman whom the singer had already engaged in conversation. It is said that Brown's bodyguard punched the man into apparent unconsciousness, whereupon Brown and his party continued to kick and punch him and to break a bottle over his skull. Part of the man's ear was later reattached and six staples were administered to the gash on his head.

Deputy Carlos Espinosa maintains that the young celeb was ranting and raving while being led to a police car, after which he proceeded to hit his head and hands against the vehicle. When refused a trip to the restroom, it is said, "the singer urinated on the back Another day, another item. No doubt a good many doctoral dissertations will be generated in coming years by the "analysis" of America and its erosion in the latter twentieth century. Much ink will be spilled on its various purported struggles and tragedies. Learned men and women will continue in the task of research and debate over how we might understand who we are and where we have been. They will want to know what has kept America from being what it should have been. Much of this investigation will have the tone of those quasi-commentators who wonder on current newscasts what the Oklahoma City bombing tells us about ourselves, and how we can, in the plaintive whine of one fat Jewess on camera the other morning, "awwl come togaatha" in the wake of tragedy.

But the problem isn't really all that hard to understand. A fast look around should suffice to make things clear. "Nightclub brawl lands Brown in jail"—the story just cited—provides a start.

I have not seen a great deal of this affluent young Afro-imbecile, and do not expect to see much of him in the future. I recall hearing his rather uninspired remake of an old Elvis tune a few years ago. Not long after I saw a television clip depicting him in concert, gyrating onstage with a young blonde before whisking her behind the curtain at song's end in an obvious symbolic gesture of acquisition. Perhaps this isn't much to go on. But it is enough. He epitomizes what is being foisted off on mind-molded white youth as entertainment. He is the sort of star player who is featured in the writhing caramel-colored orgies of MTV that currently run morning and night on that Jew-controlled channel without cessation; he is the type that plays likewise, in real life, in the schools, on the streets, and in the malls across the nation. He is also a one-man capsule summary of the current American theatre of the absurd.

America today, if I may offer a homely picture, is rather like an overstuffed belly that has in it a riot of foods and beverages that do not belong together. It has been force-fed a bad mix, and it has overdosed. The result of extreme overconsumption is illness. The natural remedy is an upheaval. What happened in Oklahoma City was but a single and high-profile symptom of persisting national indigestion. Insofar as it involved blameless victims, it was not unusual. Countless other atrocities occur daily as well, but they are smaller in scale and are too racially charged (i. e., black-on-white) to receive the attention from a news medium bent upon casting white citizens as villains in a war that it has essentially created.

If social analysts are serious about trying to understand what happened in Oklahoma City, they ought to forget, for a moment, that particular case and look at the root causes of the tragedy that lie plainly in front of them. The bombing, while I cannot endorse it, was not merely the action (as we are constantly being told) of a terrorist "madman". It was instead the result of an enforced social madness wherein different human races and subraces have, for a good many years now, been forced together under the Jew-authored pretense that they are all "alike" and thus belong together. This mixture, of course, is volatile. The foolishness of the policy is obvious to anyone who has eyes to see it. Indeed it was understood even in the last century by many persons, including alleged civil rights champion Abe Lincoln, who said (in his renowned debate with Senator Stephen Douglas) that basic differences between the races would forever make full-fledged integration impossible. Yet about five decades of brainwashing has managed to convince the white public that such thinking is "racist" and outdated. One must wonder how much more innocent blood will spill before the real insanity of the current racial agenda of media and federal government is seen for what it is worth.

A Few Thoughts Concerning Genuine Love of Nation

Patriot: a person who loves and loyally supports his own country (from Greek patris, fatherland).
Webster's Dictionary

The other day I caught a couple of ten minute segments of repartee between television host Montell Williams and a few members of a prominent midwest faction of the state militia. Williams, a glib, strutting, Stepin Fetchit of the talk show circuit, does a twice-daily microphone jig for the Jewish mind-control operation at ABC.

The program, of course, followed the devised formula of contemporary television "discussion". Were the militiamen "extremists"? Did they support the bombing of the Oklahoma City federal building? Montell tried to wise-guy his way, with the support of black and retarded white liberal audience elements, through the exchanges. He worked a couple of cheers from the gaggle by pointing out the oath he himself had taken years ago when joining the military—namely, to defend the United States from all enemies, "foreign and domestic", thus concluding that he would be honor-bound as a patriot, if push came to shove, to side against the militia.

With this in mind, I must wonder how many Americans ever give thought to the question of just what their nation really is. Its boundaries, after all, are not a part of nature, any more than are its laws, its county seats, or its time zones. And just what is the nature of its "government"?

The United States federal government is a group of persons who wield power according to various sets of legal mind-creations that purport to give them authority over the rest of those who reside within its given borders. It has no mystic authority. It is comprised instead of flesh and blood human beings, finite and fallible, who but for convention would remain civilians like the rest of us. The government is not a static entity. It is instead in flux, a thing likened better to a river than a rock, not to a pantheon but to a ball team, whose nominal identity allows whole repeated turnovers every few passing years.

To how much of our allegiance is it entitled? The answer, I think, is that it all depends. Is this self-pronounced authority wise? Is it just? Does it honor the truth? The answer depends on its composition, and this, again, is a floating proposition. It may be, after all, that on some occasion a scoundrel gains office. Scoundrels do not deserve allegiance.

What if, in fact, the whole selection process of this political institution had become perverted? Suppose that one had to be a scoundrel, or had, at least, to cater to scoundrels, in order to be a candidate.

Let us imagine that once upon a time, a group of people, broadly similar in their outlook and natural lineage, came to a new land and developed, in time, a set of laws that made them, by their declaration, an autonomous "nation" with leaders and offices designed to serve their interests. Suppose that the enterprise were successful, and this nation prospered until it was the envy of groups elsewhere all over the world.

Suppose that over continued time, new elements came to this land, some quite different in nature and in sensibility from the existing population. Imagine that with time and opportunity, some aggressive one of these newcomers set out to gain control of various institutions--those, say, of popular media, education, and political office--and succeeded, and began to use them to ends that were injurious to those traditional occupants whose ancestors had settled the land.

Suppose that this control became so great in time that the events of the entire world were filtered through its media devices before they could be known to anyone else. Suppose, too, that citizens, at last, could not even enter into political life until they promised to do the bidding of this little band. And suppose yet again that these manipulators despised the native folk, and so wished to break down their sense of identity, wished to merge them, out of contempt, and to various sordid ends, with other and less highly developed elements within the fold. Let us imagine that in time these mutual industries of media and politics came to serve each other's interests until nothing was what it seemed to be any more, and that the "leaders" of the nation were now merely those willing to sell themselves to the manipulators. How much allegiance would this regime deserve? Would it make any moral sense to support it?

What if small groups of the native folk finally began to rise up in various ways against this power structure (printed digests and newsletters, paramilitary exercises, or whatever), thus creating a confrontation within the nation--the establishment trying to restore "order" and calling itself by some grand name such as The Government of the United States of America, and the rebels (much like their ancestors, who had declared their own independence in the beginning) acting on behalf of those who actually occupied and worked the land. Each side would play upon the sentiments of the masses to arouse loyalty to its cause. On which side would one find the genuine patriots?

The Montell Williams show is one more exercise in manipulation that is carried out each day by our own real-life Media Control. The program, from what I have seen of it, is one of the more peculiarly offensive on the going menu. In one recent case, a middle-aged white woman of obviously little material means was seated alone onstage in front of Montell and his leering audience. As her face twisted with apprehension, she began to hear from the self-amused host a teasing string of "surprises" about her daughter. This exercise culminated in a revelation of the identity of the girl's current boyfriend, a kerchiefed mestizo home-boy who had, as it was soon learned, dished out severe beatings to her on several occasions. Moments later, mother, daughter, and gang-banger now seated abreast of one another, the woman was left to defend her disapproval of the little cretin against Montell's gloating charge that her real sentiment, at some level down deep, was actually "racist".

The militia episode was another case in point. But again, programs of this kind are not wasted on those who have the insight to view them as they ought to be viewed. This one contained a message for those with the independence of mind to see it: The dynamics of the militia movement are racial. The movement represents an effort made by white Aryan men and women in response to decades of Jewish and hence anti-white control of both media and government. There can be no resolution of this problem for as long as this control continues. Barring the long-overdue admission of truth in media (and it will not come voluntarily), the only remaining possible outcome of the problem will be the destruction of one side or another of the conflict.

It remains a separate question, of course, whether or not the modus operandi of public drill is a sound one. (Toward show's end, Tom Metzger entered the scene. Urging true revolutionaries to "dig in" where they were, he criticized the movement for making an easy target of dissenters by its method.) It is clear that some within this movement are still tied to the mainstream in their mind-set. They identify the enemy as "big government" without any apparent sense of its racial mechanism. (More than once I have actually heard Bill Clinton likened, by such types, to Adolf Hitler.) Granted, there is good reason for the paramilitary movement not to identify itself as an explicitly racial movement at the present time. In order to have plausibility, it must present its case for now in terms of such race-neutralized issues as "Big Brother", "failing education", and "rampant crime". But it is clear, just the same, that some of those within the movement need to develop a better sense of what all of these things really mean.

The time for identifying patriotism, or love of American rights, with the federal government is gone. Those who love freedom, who prize decency, must understand that the current regime in Washington, D. C., stands squarely and irrevocably opposed to these things. Those who really do care about them, who care about their heritage, and about the lives and welfare of their children, must realize that (however frightening the fact may be) no one within the system can effectively speak for these things any longer. Their values, their attitudes, their strategies for achieving a good life, must all change accordingly.

It was, like it or not, the leftist and largely Jewish movement of the 60's that served to combat popular assumptions about the inherent goodness of the United States government. Thanks to this movement, many Americans were divested of the lingering notion that any action dictated by their national leaders was thus one worthy of their participation. The movement, of course, was not any nobler in its design than was the establishment it rebelled against, and it had no constructive answer to any of the problems that provided its political stage. More than two decades have since passed. By now, a good deal of that 60's agenda has been carried out, and we are worse off than before. The land now reeks of injustice, and the children of those whites who championed the policy of "civil rights" are its tragic victims. The nation is a third-world life-raft with a come-aboard policy that may well sink it within twenty years. It is the thinking Aryan white man who is now the renegade.

The time has come once again for a counter-establishment movement, but one of another kind. For this movement will not appeal, as did that other one, to the unkempt, the overloud, the willfully destructive, or the worthless. It will not advocate rebellion for rebellion's sake. It will demand not impulse, but patience; not the distortion of the faculties, but the cultivation of them. It will prize not perversion, but strength. Its battle cry will not be vulgarity. Instead it will be justice. And it will be honestly and uncompromisingly racial in its message. As such, it will require a higher caliber of participant than did the old revolution; it will seek not merely a few good men, but the very few, those very best and brightest, those fiercest and most daring men and women that our race has left to offer. ❑

"Concerning that individual--well, nothing occurs to me."
Karl Kraus

There is a certain type of blockhead one meets with in one's travels whose sole function seems to be to furnish an occasional piquancy to the after-dinner conversation. Various avatars of this square-skulled archetype make engaging appearances in classic works of fiction whenever a slight element of tedium seems to threaten the story-teller's magic from the wings. Thackeray and Dickens are good at deploying these fictional figures of fun and ridicule, of course; so are Evelyn Waugh and Vladimir Nabokov. When the novelist's intentions are of a more deeply probing nature, we almost invariably find that the unpleasant characters who stay around are always blest with wit.

But, as I say, those one-dimensional, cretinous clods of which I spoke a moment ago are fictional, and they are trotted out for a specific purpose; that purpose having been served, they are forthrightly exiled from center-stage. They have relieved us of the nascent boredom, and may now get lost. And I say: good riddance!

In the quotidian round, one meets with one's share of hearty imbeciles, of course; but--and this I'm afraid we all know to our cost--unfortunately, they seldom exude any charm discoverable by man. The only laughter which their presence elicits from the knowing is that which arises in memory, that which delights one in retrospect, as it were. When a moron departs, we all become Proustians.

One of the tell-tale indications of Olympic-calibre idiocy which I keep my eye open for is that air of absolute conviction, that loud-mouthed and apodeictic shrieking which one overhears in the presence of the professionally ineducable, and it is unfortunate indeed that one comes across much more than one mortal's share of it in this thing of ours, the so-called 'movement.' There are frenzied loons running amok in their trailer-homes and in the columns of 'right-wing' periodicals who would be more appropriately housed in a play-pen next to the pustular 'Egg Lady' in the John Waters film, Pink Flamingos. These ambulatory blancmanges know all of the answers: question them about black holes, red meat, dead divas, and the answers come as thick and fast as a sports journalist's analytical tirades. 'Provisional judgment? What the hell is that?' you'll hear them bellow as you seek for shelter from the breath and the badinage. No matter how ignorant these little 'nazis' are when it comes to, say, the medium whereby the Swastika was transmitted to German nationalists, they will hold forth like an underachieving village idiot, proud of their allergy to books (this doesn't stop them, of course, from peddling their printed pudding to all and sundry). One would gather that they feel that there is more to be learned from these hominids than one can learn from, say, Schopenhauer or Heidegger. Guys, we could learn more from Dr. Ruth....

On the other hand, however, there are men of such sterling character and philosophical probity in our camp, that just thinking about them makes one feel that there really is a Santa Claus, that Browning was 'spot on' in Pippa Passes when he told us God's address and how all was right with the world. These people make one smile at the very thought of them. I find myself now and then smiling with such ebullient enthusiasm that I almost fear the approach of the asylum's paddy-wagon. We know that, as long as such heroic and omniscient fellows are harbored in our port, we will eventually triumph and see Christmas on the Earth. When someone mentions the name of one of these peerless paladins, one almost feels the entire Cosmos purr. They almost make you feel that, somehow, life is well worth living.

But those, who are afraid of grey cells, are not among them.

A NOTE TO THE HEROS:

The saint is a medicine because he is an antidote. Indeed that is why the saint is often a martyr; he is mistaken for a poison because he is an antidote. He will generally be found restoring the world to sanity by exaggerating whatever the world neglects....he is not what the people want, but rather what the people need.

Gilbert Keith Chesterton

My Leader: it has now been almost fifty years since that awful day in Berlin which witnessed Your passing. In a very real sense, the Aryan world itself died when You departed this realm, but unlike the customary year-kings of mythology, no monarch has arisen to take Your place, and desolation has overwhelmed our lands.

The Lords of Death have laid waste to our world, and Irminsul has been cleft at the root. They have had help in their schemes, of course--our womenfolk have willfully made themselves barren and our men no longer deserve the name. The only bright light seems to be coming from certain young people, who have seen the future and who know that it doesn't work. They shave their heads, put the torch to their souls, and laugh at the twitching of the conqueror-worm....

But the spirit of compromise is abroad in the land, and You, above all the sons of men, know just what effect that vice can have upon the strong in spirit; on the weak, of course, its grip is very often lethal. I know, my Leader, that it was well-said by Sir Thomas Browne that "it is not given to all worthily to champion truth," but one might expect that those who have taken it upon themselves to enlighten their brethren as to the truth of National Socialism would walk the hardest road with an "iron heart," making concessions to no man, and bowing the knee before no false god. Needless to say, one's expectations are often disappointed....

Everything comes back to You, of course. We twist and turn, we grope and grasp, we deny and despise, but our enemies seem to have understood our ultimate challenge far better than we do ourselves. You stand behind all of our imperatives as their ultimate sanction, and in each of our melodious prescriptions for a better world, the world hears Your voice. And yet Your people deny You, my Leader, and prate on about the pale plague, Jesus, and his sociopathic Daddy. They feel that the remedy for a dram of poison is a dram more of the same....

It is disturbing, to say the least, to observe the manner in which our activists have internalized the hostile judgments which are dished up for their benefit by the venal minions of the press. If You were to look around one of our conventicles, You would be shocked at the pasty puritanical vegetables who have associated themselves with our 'movement.' Joy?--there is none. One should find it in one's heart to derive strength from the hatred of such puling foes as have at us in the media, but there it is: some of us welcome the hair-shirt, it seems; so our enemies are delighted to oblige us with free samples.

As for Your Greater German Reich--it is no longer what it was. And it's not just the foreigners putting the boot in any longer: those who order the raids on the homes of nationalists are not occupying troops; those who hand out ten- and eleven-year sentences to patriots aren't beady-eyed rat-faced "American" or "Russian" torturers, but Germans (although I would prefer not to think of the Fatherland's rulers as Germans in any other than a geographical sense). Indeed, one may doubt whether Deutschland is a country at all anymore--I prefer to think of it as a Greater Disneyland with 80 million visitors a day....

And over here, we seem to insist on magnifying our own demons by framing them in a context of omen and terror. When bug-eyed Zionist activists ambush one of our Holocaust Revisionists, raining down greasy clenched fists and gobbets of saliva in equal measure, we cringe and we cower, instead of retaliating with onslaughts of self-righteous indignation. I'm told that this tactic won't work--and yet I've seen Mr. Fritz Berg bring the spacemen for ZOG to an abrupt and embarrassed halt with an outraged peroration on the horrendous atrocities which our side brought upon the women, the elderly, and the children of Germany's (and Japan's) cities during WW II. When Mr. Berg remarks that America turned Europe's defenseless cities into real crematory-ovens, thereby making themselves into the worst war criminals in the history of the world, the Jews freeze--they don't expect it of us! When Mr. Berg reminds the hooples that we committed deeds excelling in nightmarishness anything the Germans have ever been accused of doing, you can see the shock on the pale faces of our compatriots, and you can almost hear the silence emanating from our flummoxed foes. When our enemies insist on impersonating the looniest fundamentalist dervishes, we would be churlish indeed not to avail ourselves of the opportunity for a good nosh at the carpet ourselves. I rave, you rave, let's all have a good rave....

My Leader, I'll keep you posted on further developments.

If there are any.....

JUNG AGAIN.

In my little piece on Ludwig Klages a few months back, I ventured some critical comments on the still-fashionable Swiss logomach, Carl Gustav Jung, whose reputation for original thought is, to put it as gingerly as possible, unmerited. As a wag once put it, there is nothing new in Jung that is true, and nothing true that is new. And icing the cake of one's banalities with a gaudy glossing of useless (and often suspect) erudition is fine for high-school students trying to 'pad' a last-minute term-paper, but it just won't do for a big-thinker like the Swiss polymath. If I really want to hear some 'scholarly' drivel about this or that alchemist or sorcerer, I will consult the recognized authorities in the field: I have no need of the lucubrations of Dr. Jung, that hyper-inflated charlatan, who was as fundamentally dishonest as his Master, Dr. Freud. The evidence on this point has been ably presented by the researcher John Kerr in his recent book on Freud, Sabina Spielrein, and Jung, and as I don't want to waste much more time on these malodorous characters, I urge you to check Kerr's book out for yourself, if you care to (A Most Dangerous Method).

It is somewhat depressing to realize that one or two desperate readers of my piece were so appalled by my impish criticism of the good Doktor. They seemed to feel that, as Jung was one of the few bright lights of European culture to have anything favorable to say concerning the German New Order, perhaps we should avoid criticizing him—no enemies on the Right, as it were. Pathetic, more pathetic, most pathetic. I'm reminded, once again, that our movement had better set it sights on the real giants of our race's history, lest we continue to peddle poisoned pastries to our votaries. Believe me, we are not without genuine friends in the realms of the European Mind. One reader even went so far as to remind me that the late, great Dr. Oliver had praised Jung for advancing his one, undoubted contribution to psychology, the theory of the "archetypes." I'm afraid that Dr. Oliver nodded (as did even Homer, we are told) in attributing to Jung what was a commonplace to the German Romantics. Lest I be slated for constantly banging the drum for the Dichter und

Denker, I might quote a passage from Charles Lamb, an early nineteenth century British writer whom no one would describe as an earth-shakingly original thinker. This passage is from an occasional essay entitled "Witches and Other Night Fears":

> "Gorgons, and Hydras, and Chimaeras--dire stories of Celaeno and the Harpies--may reproduce themselves in the brain of superstition--but they were there before. They are transcripts, types--the archetypes are in us and eternal. How else should the recital of that which we know in a waking sense to be false come to affect us at all? Is it that we naturally conceive terror from such objects, considered in their capacity of being able to inflict upon us bodily injury? O least of all! These terrors are of older standing. They date beyond body—or with the body, they would have been the same.....That the kind of fear here treated is purely spiritual--that it is strong in proportion as it is objectless on earth, that it predominates in the period of our sinless infancy--are difficulties the solution of which might afford some probable insight into our antemundane condition, and a peep at least into the shadowland of pre-existence."

One can be sure that this passage was read by a great many Americans who have never bothered to peruse the works of Lamb; after all, it was employed--to great effect--as the epigraph to H. P. Lovecraft's wonderful tale of "The Dunwich Horror."

Why was this insightful gem forgotten by even so great a scholar as Dr. Oliver, who probably knew the works of Lamb as well as the rest of us know the faces of our children; and even if he did not, he certainly knew the Lovecraft work--so what gives?

Repetition is the key—Jung and his blue-stocking maenads raved on and on about his alleged discovery, and so, when the din became positively deafening, we were (many of us) taken in by the decibels. But Jung no more deserves credit for his dubious 'discovery' than I do. So there.

SMASH THE EGG (OR CHASE THE CHICKEN).

We lolled beside the deep, green sea,
Which seemed to creep up awfully close;
Still Dad said not to worry me
With thoughts prophetic or morose.

The heat-haze got me by the brain
(An hour or so I must have slept); and in that time the foaming main
Much closer, closer now had crept.

I turned to Dad (who sipped his beer,
Yet never opened his dull eyes)
To ask if there were danger here
(He'd claimed that he was very wise).

He barked out that he knew the tides,
That I should trust my elders, who Were experts, master Nature-Guides--
And then he clocked me with his shoe.

I drifted to the boardwalk, where
I sipped a glass of water and Looked down at Papa snoring there
Upon his slim, dry tongue of sand.

'Twas soon a shadow blocked his sun,
And snorted like the Minotaur:
Dad screamed out, "Nothing can be done!"
Then drowned beneath the monster's roar.

So on the boardwalk still I go
To ponder First Philosophy:
Destroy your foes before they grow,
*Else they will eat you, one, two, three.

VIKING.

With my fire-skinned soul,
O how glorious to win to this end!
Like a god plummeting down from the aether
I go far below in my long, wooden ship to the grave,
On the high-brimming, man-dissolving waters of death,
With the gold, garnet-gleaming,
Surrounding a king in his deep-sleeping palace.

Once I roved on the broad, frigid lanes, choked with ice,
As my laughing, brave oarsmen,
All born with the glacial-melt sea
As a storm in their bloodstreams,
Splashed silver-white, scintillant shards
With their blades dipping, rising,
And forming such tight and precise little circles
Up over, then under,
The dashing gray waters that lured us to fame.
From Reykjavik over to Kiev
And down to Byzantium
We fed the wide seas and strange lands with our blood.

Now you peek down at the place of my burial!
Can you predict, mincing vulturelets,
Just what your pale, puffed-up claws will unearth?
You may come here in peace to disturb me,
But I will, mayhap, turn from earth
With my gods show'ring war
On the pitiful, twisted, and mellow-souled wrecks
Who'd inherit a world
That would cinder their hearts:
Would you quench with your blood my hot sword?

SHIVA NAIPAUL'S AFRICAN JOURNEY

By: Allan Callahan

The late Shiva Naipaul, who died in 1985, was an Asian Hindu writer from Trinidad. In the 1970s he got to wondering what terms like "liberation," "revolution" and "socialism" actually meant to black Africans, and wanted to find out, first hand. His idea was to travel in East Africa for five or six months, and visit Kenya, Tanzania and Zambia. If his experiences were interesting enough, he would then write a book about them, but it wouldn't be a "straightforward travel book," nor a "current affairs" book. He would, instead, focus on the rhetoric of liberation and its actual manifestations, and to do this, he would have to experience the "heat and dust" of the aforementioned countries.

He wrote to his English publisher with an outline of his plans, and received a go-ahead. His book, North Of South, was first published in Great Britain in 1978. He apparantly had no original intention on doing a put-down on blacks, but after his journey commenced, his experiences with negro ineptitude and savagery were eyeopening; also he witnessed the sad devolution of the whites living under black rule. So his book turned into pretty much of a put-down, after all.

Naipaul got a ticket in Brussels on the Congolese national airline. Anxiety must have shown upon his face, because the travel agent told him they had good planes—Boeings—flown by white pilots. Upon landing in Kenya his luggage did not come off the plane. He was told that he might as well forget all about it, but he filled out a claim form anyway. A week later the luggage did turn up, but his transistor radio was missing, along with some other items.

In Kenya, he found out that in the "New Africa," the old form of tribalism—which had offered at least some—slight constraint to greed—was fading away, and a type of society was forming which lacked definition and solidity. The new African society is being disfigured by lust and greed. Naipaul discussed this with a Dutch fertilizer expert and his wife.

"My God!" the Dutchman said, "you have to experience it to believe it. These people are extraordinarily greedy. I've never seen anything like it. They say West Africa is even worse. But I find it hard to imagine how anything could be worse then this. The corruption is incredible."

His wife then chimed in: "It's a disease."

"That's right," her husband confirmed, "it is a disease, an illness. You know, I go to meetings all the time. I try to talk about technical problems.

They couldn't give a damn about those. Not a damn. They fall asleep! I could sell them tinned sunshine if I wanted to. They only wake up when you mention money. The only thing they care about is their cut."

In Nairobi, the beggars have their own clearly demarcated territories, but when they get too numerous, they are apparantly rounded up and taken off somewhere, away from sensitive tourist eyes, and maybe "culled," as are the numerous prostitutes. The shantytowns are periodically razed, but always come back again, as do the beggars and prostitutes.

To see how European farmers were now doing under black rule, Naipaul traveled out to meet the Palmers, who had about three hundred acres planted to tea. They used black labor, and said the natives had rather work for them than their own people, who often treated them like slaves; not paying them properly, offering them no medical facilities, and housing them in deplorable conditions.

But the negroes were prone to pilfer and the Palmers had to keep everything under lock and key. Their hired hands would even steal things they couldn't possibly have any use for. And the Palmers especially tried to keep liquor out of their hands. There was, they said, an old saying among the Europeans in Kenya that to give a native alcohol was like putting a loaded gun into the hands of a child.

Mr. Palmer remarked on one peculiarity of black thinking: "One of my pet theories is that Africans lack what I call a storage sense. The same thing occurs with my headman. Time and again I tell him to order more pesticides when stocks fall below a certain point. He never does. I must have told him a thousand times. But he waits until the last drop runs out and then comes running to me wringing his hands."

His wife added: "They never think about the future. It has no meaning for them as far as I can see. Only today matters. Now. Of course, that's how it was in the old days. If their crops were good, they feasted day and night, fattening themselves up. If the rains didn't come on time, they starved. Never a thought for the morrow."

The Palmer's place was well kept, but across the way was a formerly white-owned farm that had been taken over and divided up among blacks. The original idea was to turn it into a cooperative, but everything had gone to the dogs. "I hate looking at it now," Mr. Palmer said, "I believe the treasurer ran away with the money. In this country, treasurers are very fleet of foot."

One notable adventure that happened to Naipaul in the Highland country was a long, overland taxi trip. Having experienced enough African "service industries" by this time to be leery of them, he was nevertheless assured that his taxi for this trip would be the best because it had been ordered by the D.C. (District Commissioner) himself, and Naipaul would be treated like a king.

The taxi was over a half-hour late, and what greeted his eye was an ancient Peugeot stationwagon. Raucous music blared from the dashboard. The driver drove to the bus station and picked up more passengers, one of them a man in yellow trousers carrying an enormous transistor radio, which he started playing, its noise merging with that of the cassette player in the dashboard.

More people kept boarding, one of them a girl with a baby, and there was also live poultry, pumpkins, and bags of grain. A mattress was placed partly on the roof and partly behind the rear seat. But even after the number of riders exceeded the legal limit by two, the driver continued to seek more passengers. A boy came in, and without even asking, plopped himself down on Naipaul's lap. This made thirteen people, or fourteen, if the baby was included.

To get out of town they drove through a maze of what might have been called "dirt alleys," but which looked like (and almost certainly were) people's backyards, scattering chickens, goats and children.

Arriving in Tanzania, the same mishmash of general incompetence was found. An American woman who had lived in upstate New York was complaining about the general indolence of the locals who did service work. "The other day I had some painters in. They took one week to do a job that a New York painter would have done in one day. One whole week! Just having to sit here and watch them nearly drove me crazy."

She also remarked on how barren the shelves were in the local stores. Arusha was like a ghost-town. "I tell you, it's driving me crazy. If I stay here another three months, I'll go out of my mind. I know it."

Visiting a clinic staffed with Caucasian volunteers, Naipaul found an elementary building with cubicles for rooms. They had bare concrete floors and a bed in one corner. There were no curtains, tables or chairs.

Outside, women with their babies and children waited. Flies swarmed everywhere, including around the eyes of the mothers and children, who made no attempt to brush them away. They fed greedily on sores, which of course spread the infections which the clinics tried to deal with.

One Swedish volunteer said: "One of the strangest things is that we cannot get well-off and educated Tanzanians to come and help us out. I know many middle-class women who sit home all day with nothing to do nothing to do but polish their nails and read foreign magazines they buy from Kenya. If all we expatriates had to leave the country tomorrow, this clinic would probably have to be closed down. They just don't seem to care. They sit back and let us do everything. How do you account for that?.....Why should I care when they don't? Why do I bother to come here? That is a question I ask myself all the time."

Under negro rule in Africa, more land is turning into desert. Naipaul described one such area he traveled through, inhabited by the Masai. "We were crossing a treeless plain. The withered grass had been cropped so close that it could hardly be said to exist..... Here, within living memory, there had been trees. But the trees had all been cut down for firewood and the land was slowly turning into desert, Fire-blackened hillsides were spiked with the leafless, twisted skeletons of a dying secondary vegetation. The Masai periodically roamed these plains with their herds of cattle, squeezing what little sustenance they could from the desolation. Masai cattle were particularly damaging to the land over which they passed, more damaging even than goats: they had a tendency to pluck out the grass by its roots. In a short time even the Masai would be driven from these plains. The ruined land was austerely beautiful."

Unable to get into the last country he planned to visit—Zambia—by train, plane or bus (all booked up for weeks), Naipaul managed to hitch a ride with a party of campers who were headed for South Africa. He would ride with them as far as Lusaka, in Zambia. The first night in the country they pitched their tents below an embankment of a railroad built by the Chinese.

Arriving in Lusaka, he took a train to Kapiri Mposhi. He was able to see a recently built railroad station, and observed how it, along with everything else under negro influence, had started going down the drain: "The railroad had been in operation for only a few months, but decay had already begun to set in. A row of brightly painted children's cots was arrayed on a platform that ran the length of one wall. A thoughtful touch—but not one of the cots was being used. Babies slept on sheets spread on the floor or crawled about in puddles of urine. I had been unable to slake my thirst: the drinking fountains were waterless; the handles of one or two were broken, reduced to jagged stumps of metal. The telephones were not working. The toilets were locked. The clock was wrong by hours. What must the Chinese think?"

It is obvious that Shiva Naipaul left the Dark Continent with a low opinion of black Africans, nor did he think much of the guilt-ridden whites, so full of self-abasement, who chose to live among them as equals, with the object of "uplifting" them. He felt that they corrupted each other, and "deserved each other. Neither was worth the shedding of a single tear; both were rotten to the core. Each had been destroyed by contact with the other—though each had been destroyed in his own way."

Just before closing his book, he took a parting shot, or did a summing up, of the new black Africa: "Only lies flourished here. Africa was swaddled in lies—the lies of an aborted European civilization; the lies of liberation. Nothing but lies." ❑

by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. MY ANSWER TO VIC OLVIR

by Jarah B. Crawford

In catching up on my reading, I became incensed at the armchair philosophy of Vic Olvir's "Christianity: Religion of the West" article, a reprint from Instauration, printed in the November 1994 issue of Liberty Bell. There is a war going on for the survival of the White Race and this beautiful blue planet. Mr. Olvir is apparently cloistered in some never-never land far removed from the Reality of this day. Here he plays with his toys: Plato, Socrates, Aristotle, Spengler, Faust, de Lagarde, T. S. Eliot, Hilaire Belloc, Chesterton, Waugh, "among others," as he puts it. He also plays head games to amuse himself, trying desperately to sound authoritative and intellectual.

Please let me point out that Religion, Western Culture, and the United States Constitution got us to the sorry state we are in today. I have been in the pulpits and trenches of religion. Do not waste my time telling me about confession, the Faustian conception of Contrition and Grace, Yeshua (sic) and Paul, and purified Gothic Christianity—whatever the hell Olvir means by that. He is blowing smoke!

If the Christian fathers are the godfathers of Western philosophy and Western science, then there, indeed, lies the philosophy of this egg-head. There also lies the basis for Western science geared for destruction. Christianity is destructive and one of the most evil forces in the 20th century. Western culture is almost as sick as Western Religion.

Also, do not try to re-sell me on the Constitution. I do not live in 1776!

Why did Olvir's list of toys not include Schopenhauer, Robert G. Ingersoll, Adolf Hitler's Mein Kampf, and Lady Queenshoro's Occult Theocracy? John White's book, Pole Shift, is the most relevant book one can read. Instead of playing with his toys, Olvir might better use his hallowed resources in addressing the apocalyptic Reality of 1995.

Having read Olvir's article twice, I continue to ask, "What is he trying to say, and why did he not communicate it?" Writers who play games always use an overabundance of words in attempt to convey their fuzzy thoughts. It never works. Please consider what would happen if a military commander could not communicate. He would not only be unable to lead, but his bungling words would create disaster.

Now, I wish to address the matter at hand; the survival of our White Race and this planet. This seems to be of some importance compared to Olvir's reference to "...the power of tradition." If there is any hope at all, it will not be in tradition, but rather in a complete break with traditions as we know them.

The land of the free and the home of the brave was not in 1776 what it is today. The United States of America is THE FINAL TARGET NATION of those men of Power who wish to enslave the Earth. The Bolshevik Revolution was a picnic compared to what the Jewish World Power Structure is now effecting in our besieged nation. Furthermore, White Aryan ideas and ideals have been completely wiped-out in America except in the minds of a few men who know what must be done.

In the February issue of the Liberty Bell, there is a letter by yet another writer afraid to sign his name to it. (Such courageous men—writing about Freedom.) He states that "...White America is already dead." He then rightly adds that "...the few remaining whites will have to flee America just to survive...Where will they go?" For some years I have advocated leaving this nation. This is not visionary, but rather sheer common sense. Considering this expatriation, I have traveled abroad and found where I should go. The financial means to relocate keep me here thus far.

The Rabbi Mayer Schiller who addressed the American Renaissance meeting in Louisville, Kentucky made it clear that Americans will need to flee America to save our civilization. The August, 1994 issue of Money magazine published the article "Escape From America." The 250,000 who have already escaped are not necessarily White Christian Patriots.

If there were a spearhead of effort in progress in America for Aryan survival, you could not drive me out. However, the Liberty Bell letter referred to above painted a Rembrandt of American culture and character and racial stupidity which makes remaining here among this human tragedy much less than intelligent.

Please consider the mentality of two very large segments of White America; the Christians and the Patriots, who sometimes combine to make Christian Patriots.

While waiting in a doctor's office, a little old lady lamented her ailments. But alas! she received relief from her pain by stating, "We've just got to trust in God." The walls of that waiting room trembled when I retorted, "Not that-Jewish God of the Bible!" silence reigned! until a crippled old man said; "We all can't be educated." My not-so-kind reply was; "No, but we can all learn."

My days of passive nicety are over. I am tired of tolerating the "righteous Christian" pointing at me as the sinner on my way to be fried eternally. It is time for the present confessing 15th century Christian to feel the tip of my sword in 1995, to know that he is my enemy though his name bespeaks his Aryan heritage. HIS CURSED GOD HAS DONE HIM IN!!! No, Mr. Olvir, Christians are not on my side and will be the first to turn me in.

So it is with the patriotic, right wing ignoramuses who are mired in the do-nothing rhetoric which has served only to prove their insanity. CAN'T THEY SEE? CAN'T THEY LEARN? that the enemy who holds every meaningful advantage does not give a damn for their stupid insanity?

Patriots and Christians are, indeed, the blight of our beautiful race. If Patriots need a Cause, let it be our Aryan race. If Christians need a God, let it be our Aryan race. If Aryans require a Savior, let them read Mein Kampf with the same divine understanding with which it was written, while at the same time letting their Bibles supply the fuel for the bonfire which will light the heavens for a trillion miles, to end forever the influence of this Jewish book on Western Civilization.

Christian Patriot, listen to me. When Thomas Paine arrived from England at the age of 37, he found the colonies clamoring for justice; whining about their grievances; at their knees imploring George the III for a restoration of their ancient privileges. They were trying to soften the heart of their master. The colonists wished for, hoped for, and prayed for reconciliation. They did not dream of freedom and independence.

Christian Patriot, do you not see yourself repeating the same lunacy? Clamoring for justice in our courts; whining about your grievances; on your knees begging for the restoration of the Constitution; pulling the lever at the voting booth; writing to your Congressman; heating up the fax machines and computer networks? You wish for, hope for, and pray for reconciliation with your Jew-owned government.

Christian Patriot, come out of your cave, your colony, your concentration camp of the damned. You need to vision the liberty and independence you have never known. Thomas Paine ignited the torch which began to burn in the hearts of the colonists. NO MORE MAKING BRICKS FOR PHARAOH! NO MORE HOPE TO RECONCILE WITH THE BEAST. Freedom for this new nation was paid for in the blood of our Race. We, the children of the Revolution, are now required to pay with our blood for this FREEDOM we relinquished at the trough of sloven mentality. Only the 14 Words of David Lane are appropriate for this hour.

"WE MUST SECURE THE EXISTENCE OF OUR PEOPLE AND A FUTURE FOR WHITE CHILDREN."

Or, as Thomas Paine wrote;

"IF THERE MUST BE WAR LET IT BE IN MY DAY, THAT MY CHILD MAY HAVE PEACE."

Christian Patriot, let this torch your soul!

At 18 years of age, I was expected to kill in WW II, for what cause I did not know, other than the Jewish propaganda which was all I knew. But today, I know the Cause is my Aryan Race, and I am ready to kill for it. That puts a smile on my face. Oh, to initiate the scene in my manuscript, Firestorm, where all is thought, all is planned, and all is executed for the good of the Aryan Race...the rest of the world be damned...until they acknowledge who we are and our proper place and position on this planet. Only then will even they receive the marvelous wonders of our accomplishments, stagnated and rotted since Christianity. We shall be their divine keepers as they rightly respond. When we Aryans again have the right to think and to express our thoughts, every brain will give to all the best it has. The world will then be filled with intellectual wealth, providing for all abundantly, without Jewish insanity and Christian horror.

One day, will we look back at our 20th century history in abject disbelief? How could we have groveled with swine? But in retrospect—with our Aryan Spirit and Soul healed of all alien diseases—we shall regret that it took so long to overcome the paper tiger which held us captive. It will be the wonder of the Aryan Race for all ages to come. Its memory shall be our guardian forever.

No reconciliation with the past. Only the new Aryan world envisioned by our Savior and passionately embraced by Savitri Devi.

PREJUDICE

by Jarah B. Crawford

One of the most abused and mis-used words in the English language is the word "prejudice." It ranks with extremist, racist, fascist and the like. This word has been perverted by the word-manipulators to mean anyone who is against anything. It is the label pinned on everyone who does not conform, one who is not politically correct, and one who dares to think independently of the "system."

The American Heritage Dictionary, Third Edition, dated 1992 defines prejudice as follows.

1. An adverse judgment or opinion formed beforehand or without knowledge or examination of the facts.

2. The act or state of holding unreasonable preconceived judgements or convictions.

3. Irrational suspicion or hatred of a particular group, race, or religion.

4. Detriment or injury caused to a person by the preconceived unfavorable conviction of another or others. To cause (someone) to judge prematurely and irrationally.

These are some pretty strong words. Let us examine them closely. In the first place, prejudice is defined simply: "Opinion without knowledge." Or, "Opinion based upon non-fact."

The factors here are "opinion: and "knowledge." Let me illustrate. As a child growing up in the steel-mill towns of Northeastern Ohio, I heard many derogatory references to the Kentucky hill-billies who migrated to Ohio to get employment in the steel mills. Though I had never seen a Kentucky hill-billy in the '30's, believe me, I had my opinions of them. My opinions were not yood.

In 1970, I lived in Bowling Green, Kentucky. I learned emphatically that all people in Kentucky were not ignorant hill-billies. My prejudice was dispelled forever. Now I had the facts which translated into knowledge which replaced my previous opinions.

Opinion has no place in scholarship, nor in science, nor in the affairs of men.

Prejudice also means one's holding unreasonable preconceived judgments. Notice, the facts are missing. Preconceived means:

"To form an opinion of something before possessing adequate knowledge."

Opinions are very dangerous! Opinions are in the minds of the unknowledgeable who put as much trust in their opinions as the intelligent person puts in his knowledge of the facts. The opinion-makers rely upon the opinions they plant in hundreds of millions of human minds. This would seem to be a very unhealthy situation.

Prejudice also means the irrational suspicion of a particular group, race, or religion. The factors here are "irrational" and "suspicion." Irrational means "withaut reason; or lack of usual or normal mental clarity." Suspicion is "suspecting something wrong with little or no proof." Again, the facts are missing. With irrational suspicion, I can accuse you of anything I choose. "You are going to kill me." Or, I can accuse all the people in Kentucky of being lazy and stupid. Or, I can say all Catholics are going to hell.

This is sheer prejudice for I do not know you are going to kill me.

I do not know all people in Kentucky to be lazy and stupid. I do not know that all Catholics are going to hell. I don't know the above to be true. But I can have my opinions!!! This is ignorant and dangerous.

Prejudice also means; "...detriment or injury caused to a person by the preconceived, unfavorable conviction (opinion) of others." And "...to cause someone to judge prematurely and irrationally."

Yes, your prejudice can cause you to commit irrational injury to innocent people.

What if the people from Northeastern Ohio had had the money and the means to spread their prejudice throughout the state until the fury of unreasonable preconceived judgment, of irrational suspicion and hatred, fed the opinions of the people until war was declared with Kentucky which was guilty of nothing. The Ohio army marched into Kentucky and wiped out half the population.

Do you think for a moment the American Civil Liberties Union would sit by quietly? Do you believe the other 48 states would give their full support of arms and troops to the invading Ohio army? Do you think our United States Government and the United Nations would remain silent?

Ohio did not invade Kentucky. But just as surely as the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, so, too, the Jewish war machine invaded Germany in 1933 with every evil contained in the word "prejudice." The Jews declared a "Holy War" against Germany because Germany said "NO" to Jewish Communism. And the rest of the world remained silent.

A world war was created in 1933 because the Jews had the money and the means to poison your mind with prejudice; raw and dangerous prejudice. The Jews most deliberately caused adverse judgment in the minds of hundreds of millions of people. Yes, they created unreasonable opinions about the Germans. Yes, the Jews heated the caldron until it boiled over with irrational suspicion and hatred against the German people. The Jews created World War II. Yes, we Americans and the British committed irrational injury to an innocent people.

ALL THIS BECAUSE YOU FORMED YOUR OPINION WITHOUT KNOWLEDGE! YOU HAD NO FACTS! THIS WAS YOUR PREJUDICE! AND YOU STILL LIVE WITH IT!!!

There were a few people who knew the facts which led to World War II, people who resisted the propaganda of prejudice. There was Charles A. Lindbergh. There was Elizabeth Dilling. There were others, and the United States Government (in the hands of the Jews) put these "America First" Patriots on trial for sedition. You, with your prejudice, absolutely wrong with your damned opinions, won World War II. Those who knew the facts were tried in court. Lindbergh left the American continent never to return.

Do I have any prejudice against the Jews for their horrendous crimes? No, I have not one particle of prejudice, not one wrong opinion! But I do have all the facts which give me the knowledge of what must be done to atone for the Jewish crimes of world-wide prejudice, causing the adverse judgments, the irrational hatred, the untold injury and misery to be unleashed against Germany, which then caused US to grind Germany under the treads of tanks, to pulverize Germany with artillery and bombs, and to burn Germany with relentless fire from our bombers.

That, Mr. and Mrs. America, is what prejudice did, prejudice in the hands of the Jews which they successfully implanted in you, which you still carry with you, irrationally so!

How do we get out of this dilemma, Mr. and Mrs. America?

You don't know how, do you? Let me tell you. Trade in your atupid prejudices, your ignorant opinionsr for the faces vhich will give you the knowledge to knov the TRUTH. Stop being an idiot! Surely, you are more than an idiot!!

And I'm not through with you yet. I know a 24 year old college graduate, an architect. She reads incessantly; not Micky Mouse, but Nietzsche, Schopenhauer and Sartre. I thought I had found fertile ground where Truth would be recognized. I gave her my manuscript, "The Creator, God, and the Bible." Her return reply was, "But I don't agree with you about the Jews."

Here's a runny-nosed kid positing her controlled, college-minded prejudice with the Truth I have dug out and experienced over the last 70 years. Implied was: "My opinions are as valid as your Truth." What in god's name does she know about the Jews, or for that matter, about Truth?

This 24 year old adolescent did not experience the Jewish World War. She had not taken her first breath of air. She has no idea of the personal hardships the Americans endured to participate in that Jewish catastrophe against Germany, to say nothiny abaut German suffering and death. She has no conception of the circumstances in 1941 to 1946. My mother worked at an arsenal for 98 cents an hour. In my senior year of high-school, I worked midnight shift at the arsenal and went to school in the daytime, just so I could buy a suit for graduation. You could not buy a pound of sugar without a ration stamp. You bought gasoline only in the amount your ration stamps allowed you. A new tire for your car was permitted only if it was necessary for the war effort.

This pip-squeek knows nothing of the president of my senior high-school class, Donald Noble, who served in that Jewish war in Germany and gave his life's blood for the "cause." She knows nothing of seeing the air-craft carrier, the U.S.S. Franklin, limp into Pearl Harbor, its flight deck looking like a disarrayed box of spilled tooth-picks, to say nothing of the American men aboard who lost their lives for this Jewish "cause." She knows nothing of the ten major naval engagements my brother survived on the U.S.S. Lexington, another air-craft carrier. She knows nothing of my childhood friend, Jack Bolar, who gave his life at Iwo Jima. I am damned sick and tired of these people with all their opinions, but have no knowledge!

I'm not very damned happy that I spent my 18th, 19th, 20th and 21st years serving those bastard Jews who got us into that tragic war, those Jews of whom President Franklin Delano Roosevelt kissed the asses for so many years--AT MY EXPENSE--while Pip-squeak in those years of her life enjoyed her paid-for college education where opinions rank at least as high as knowledge, where she learned "But I don't agree with you about the Jews."

"But I have a right to my opinion." No, goddammit, YOU DO NOT HAVE A RIGHT TO YOUR OPINION IN REGARDS TO THE APFAIRS OF MEN ANYMORE THAN YOU HAVE THE RIGHT TO OPINE THAT WATER RUNS UPHILL! Your implanted prejudice fills you full of opinions, but you have no facts. You are a worthless empty vessel, and even a dangerous one. But when I relate one of the facts I have worked to discover, YOU accuse ME of prejudice. Then I hear the party line: "I see nothing wrong with the Jews. Some of my best friends are Jews."

Everyone of these opinion-filled individuals needs to perch himself/herself upon the end of my bayonet and tell me he/she knows better than me what it has taken me a lifetime to learn and experience. These people are dangerous and will turn against us, will become the enemy, the moment we begin to do what must be done. What must be done will inevitably include them. The cleansing, the restoration of the Aryan race, must erase the deep-seated prejudice which has become a very sick part of being an American, a Canadian, an Englishman, an Irishman, a German, etc.

I agree emphatically with Joseph D. Pryce that our corporate hatred must bring an end to Jewish madness and the cess-pool minds of our own people, whatever the cost! The eternal problem must come to an end.

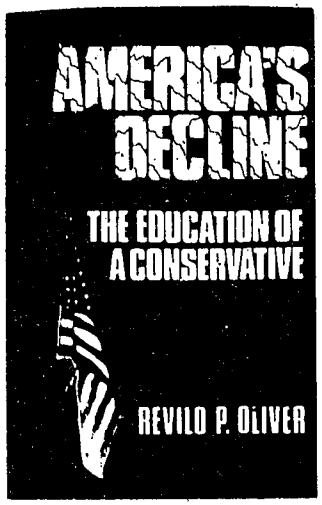
DO YOUR PART TODAY—HELP FREE OUR WHITE RACE FROM ALIEN DOMINATION!



ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

The Plot Against Suspicion

from the (former) Prof

A recent front-page AP column in the local paper discusses the phenomenon of an "Angry America". The day's centerpiece is a photo of an Idaho couple looking out a window on which is pasted the sticker "If We Can't Reform It, We Will Overthrow It!". An ever-so-concerned reporter is conducting an interview with them in order to arrive at some rational diagnosis of their anger.

These folk offer him a seat on a milkbox and proceed to explain their discontent. What are they upset about? Withlittle bother of direct quote, he plays middleman for the reader and runs down a smug litany of their fears—of government, of bankers, of Jews, of Democrats, of Republicans ... Of course, he reflects, this "paranoid" need to find a scapegoat is nothing new. The reader is left to draw his own assessment.

This effort to ridicule white anger, to analyze and pathologize it, as it were, is itself nothing new. It has played throughout my own lifetime (more than four decades) and continues on a daily basis. These days, and in the wake of such things as the Oklahoma City bombing and the militia movement, scarcely a day passes without some liberally educated columnist making wry observations about deluded conspiracy buffs (on a par, we are encouraged to think, with flat-earthers and UFO abductees) and illiterate gun-toting anarchists.

The caricature, in fact, is not a total lie. Were the truth admitted, a fair number of the right-wing types—certain elements within the broad run of tax protesters, weekend soldiers of fortune, and so on—really do fit the stereotype. Some are ne'er-do-wells who would not fit with any system, no matter what its nature. They are rebels with no cause but that of post-adolescent delinquency, self-willed losers who do not like being "shoved around", as they see it, by those above them (i.e., by just about everyone), and being required to actually pay for the governmental services that they consume. They take easily to the notion of high-level plot because it provides them with an excuse. If a theory about "Jews", or "bankers", or "the feds" will do the job, they are all for it.

But it is another question whether or not there exists some truth amidst this noise. The fact that some misfits have joined the chorus does not mean that the lyric is false. Granted, there is little sympathy for their cry in the popular media. But are these media themselves to be trusted? Liberal critics, I notice, are having a good time these days with the fears of these folk. Invariably these disenfranchised elements are white. Thus they are also "racist". They suspect mischief behind the scenes. Thus they are also "paranoid". What are their allegations? For one, that the government is not to be trusted. They feel also that "big money" controls its actions. They maintain that their tax money is being misappropriated. In particular, we are told, they repeat "that old canard" of Jewish conspiracy in media.

Is it wrong, is it paranoid, or in some way sick or irrational, to suppose that there is some truth in allegations of this kind? If would-be analysts wanted a fresh insight into the problem, they might consider for a moment the one possibility that they always exclude from the start, namely, that certain members of this redneck contingent are actually on to something.

Having examined the facts, I submit the hypothesis that the basic perception of these folk is not crazy, after all—that they are on to the fact, real and frightening, that the system is no longer ours. I contend that this system has no allegiance to truth or to justice; that it no longer serves, or cares about, those of us who are of white European extraction; that its controllers fully intend to turn the United States of America, when all is said and done, into a third-world country at our expense.I believe, furthermore, that the guilty parties can be found, without too much trouble, within the blood-related industries of mass media and federal government. And I believe that this dispossession of our folk is no accident, no error of judgment or misguided liberalism, but that it is being accomplished with design and with knowing malice. This process, I claim, is being carried out daily by a small number of persons, broadly united by various cross-ties of outlook and ethnicity,who hold the reins of our mass media, and so also of our political process. I am convinced that they fully intend to destroy us and all that we hold good and decent. To this extent I am saying that there exists a conspiracy.

The hypothesis will be laughed at by most. But I look at the facts, and I am hard pressed to find another explanation. What are we told in the media? Is this message accurate? Is it in the service of truth? Were I to accept it, I would have to conclude that white heterosexual males are the world's worst human beings, and that blacks are its most intelligent. I would have to think also that Jews were its least fortunate and its most virtuous. When I turn from this theatre to the real world, I find something absolutely different.

What accounts for this discrepancy? How can the message be wrong with such perfect consistency? Why is its error never corrected? How can it turn vital facts of life upside down, day in and day out, without refutation? Why do I see stifled every effort within the mainstream of media and education to tell an opposing story? I then ask who owns and produces this obscene fiction. I find that almost without exception the controlling force is Jewish. Is this fact not conspicuous? How can an ethnic-religious minority of some 2.9% of the nation own or control virtually every major film company, television network, and book, magazine and newspaper publishing house that operates within it? And why does no source in the mainstream tell the racial story that life has told me? I look at the hard and tightening grip on these sources, and I am compelled to think that this little ruling clique does not want the truth to be told.

In calling this state of affairs a conspiracy, I am not suggesting that all Jews, or all those in key positions of power, are somehow involved in a single collaboration. I do not imagine that they all gather together in secret at any given time to engineer this program, or that there exists some particular shared plan that unites all of them against all of us. Nor do I imagine that all Jews carry on amicable relations with each other—often, of course, they are mutual competitors, and ruthless ones, at that. What I do believe, just the same, is that there exist broad demographic patterns of behavior within this nation. And some of those patterns, I contend, involve a cumulative aggression by one group against another. To cite one case, the acquisition of media: I believe that it is possible for a small group of persons, united by ties of background and sensibility, creating its own inroads and enjoying the advantage of mutual support, to gradually gain control of the devices of mass communication and to use them, either honestly or dishonestly, to their own advantage. If this group is alien to those around it, if it harbors a resentment, if it has in it an impulse to hurt, exploit, and humiliate these outsiders, then it will employ those devices in ways that work to those outsiders' detriment.

And this, I must believe, is exactly what has happened. Jews, as a matter of verifiable fact, are in near-complete control of the media. They are also, on average, keenly aware of the long, old, and mutual hostility that has existed between themselves and the majority folk of white European descent. This awareness is not shared by most of these latter at the present time, and Jews (while they work deliberately in their self-interest to perpetuate it) are contemptuous of this racial innocence. Hence their use of the term goyim (cattle) to refer to us, and their sheer indifference to the lie that they tell and the pain that they cause by their abuses. Their current strongholds in media, finance, and education (and consequently, as well, in the field of public office) give them the leverage to do what they want, and to create virtually any "truth" they desire. Their exploitation of these resources, as best I can ascertain it, knows no scruple.

Once more, I do not insist that all Jews share directly in this action. The greater number of Jews are not in the business of media, or anywhere near it. I do not claim, either, that any given Jew in the reader's immediate acquaintance must conform to the sketch that is offered in this article. What I maintain is that an absurdly narrow ethnic monopoly exists, and so that the message of the mainstream reflects, in some broad fashion, and in rather wild disproportion, the general wants, likes, and sensibilities of this ethnic group at the expense of any and all others. Jews, on the whole, perceive themselves (not without cause) as being superior to other groups in certain respects, and this attitude colors their dealings with us. Furthermore, they are steeped from birth in an ideology that makes of them both Chosen People and history's endless victims. A greater share of life's good things, as they see it, is their birthright. (If this belief is not a part of their doctrine, it is at least a part of their common attitude.) By and large, they dislike Aryans (persons, that is, of our own Northern and Western European line of descent), and so wish to shape the world in ways that will subordinate our needs to theirs. To this end they employ their control of media, and the result is what we read, hear, and watch in the course of a day. This result is laden with the ideological flavor of its producers. It is, of necessity, inimical to our own well-being. It is for this reason that decent Aryans (while not fully understanding the dynamics involved) are vaguely and yet deeply offended by so much of what they see in popular entertainment.

What unites the enterprises of mass media, it appears to me, is not so much a single blueprint for conquest, but a sheer and visceral dislike of what is Aryan. This hatred is not simple, for it is compounded by a bitter admiration of both the spirit and the outward beauty of distinctly Aryan peoples. The average Jewish male, in point of fact, is obsessed with the innate splendor of a Nordic woman. Himself a poor physical specimen, psychically torn, prone often as not to fetish and perversion, he cannot win her by natural means. His attitude toward her and her folk is at once an envy and an aversion, a basic lust and loathing that saturates his own thought, and that saturates in turn every film, every article, every snickering "situation comedy" that plays in the market of his kinsmen. Facility, wit, wealth, influence—these he is apt to have in abundance. If so, he will employ his resources with near-perfect regularity to the acquisition of this fair prize—a Nordic woman, or, if he is so inclined, a Nordic man. I he has celebrity status—a position, say, in film, movie, publishing, or theater—his behavior will aim nearly always in the same direction. Such is his nature that he will use his position to both consume and defile this treasure, to enjoy it in his bedroom, to flaunt it in public as his supreme material possession, while at the same time furthering every public cause that will bring about its long-term genetic ruin. At the core of his own diseased soul is a will to confuse, to unsettle, to pervert and destroy. To this end he will not spare a lie. He knows, for example, that interracial violence (and sexual violence especially) is nearly always black-on-white. He derives a twisted amusement from planting the reverse notion in the minds and hearts of his audience. He revels in the promotion of interracial romance, and in his portrayal of the white man as the eternal dupe of a falsely heroic black rival.

What I have said in this brief discussion will sound very strange to the innocent reader—that bright and inquiring young college student, for one—who still trusts the sources of the mainstream. He will react to some of my pronouncements in much the way that I myself did in reading, for example, Eustace Mullins' terse little history of the Jews ("hysterically anti-Semitic" was my college-educated pronouncement) some years ago as my introduction to racially conscious literature. He will think me "prejudiced", "hateful", "over-generalizing". My view will be labeled "extremist" by the sources to which he turns for an educated opinion. And until Reality deals him a few hard knocks, he will think this enough to settle the matter. The years will pass, and he will make his way in the world like a fish in bad water, ill at ease in his environment yet oblivious to its foul condition because he cannot as yet see it from the outside. This I understand. For this reason I ask him not to believe what I am saying, but merely to think about it. Why is it, young reader, that you hear so often about Jewish control of media? (Or are you so protected from reality that even this accusation is foreign to you?) Why do you never hear about the control of media, say, by the Welsh, or the Nepalese, or the Navajo Indians? This question ought to occur to you, and you ought to pursue it if you really wish to penetrate appearance and find the truth. You will be discouraged, I realize, from taking the notion of conspiracy seriously by the fact that conspiracy theories are typically ridiculed by the mainstream sources around you. Your sociology professor (perhaps himself a Jew, and almost certainly, I will wager, a leftist) will call it ludicrous. So will the prattling afternoon talk-show host. And the nightly news anchor at NBC, and ABC, and CBS, and FOX-Network. But if you are thinking rightly, you will realize that this is a poor way of deciding the issue, since if these media were controlled, this result is just what you would expect. My own hypothesis—that involving Jewish aggression and resultant anti-white media bias—predicts the very same phenomena that you will adduce as evidence against it. The question for you then is whether there exists some independent reason to accept the hypothesis or reject it. Do mass media tell you the truth? If you want the answer to this question, you will have to distance yourself from these influences and look harder. It can be done.

Were I given a single sentence with which to inform an interested undergraduate college student, I would tell him that the relationship between truth and sophistication is misunderstood. The majority of white Americans imagine that the more a man has of formal education, and the less he has soiled his hands, the more grasp he has on what is real. In fact, truth shines its light in all directions, and it cannot be fully seen from any one of them. The average white undergraduate at a college or university is woefully ignorant of the racial dynamics that shape the world in which he lives. His inherited place in society, in the typical case, has excluded him from the racial contacts that would turn him around. As a result he falls prey in many cases to a false elitism that only shields him further.

"Extremist"? For those who have not yet awakened to the fact, extremism is relative to the scale on which it is measured. The founding fathers, for example, were extreme in their solution to the problem of how to deal with the colonial policies of mother England. What they advocated was rebellion against their own nation. Extremism per se is not wrong or right; it is simply far different from some given alternative position whatever that position may be.

If anyone has not noticed, the label of "extremism" applies quite well to the current program of the American political mainstream. Judged by its effects upon white Americans, that program is extremely unjust and extremely destructive. Unchecked immigration continues daily to turn our nation into a third-world swamp. Our labor is taxed to provide funds for the continued procreation of those less-evolved elements that will in time submerge our nation in a nightmare of crime and degeneracy. The contrived messages of mass media and higher education pound self-apology into our heads with shamelessly misrepresentative portrayals of the relations between the races. The bottom line of every statement, every image, every moral lesson of the mainstream media, is the dissolution of our race. We are the object of contempt.

The truth has been distorted, and it is no accident. This deception is the design of a virulent and racially ruinous minority of persons bent upon our own destruction. Truth is an enemy of the system. As a result it is under siege and must seek the refuge of publications banned from the avenues of popular consumption. If this were not enough, those who dare to tell the truth now run the risk of flagrantly immoral lawsuits designed to silence and bankrupt them. The situation is indeed extreme, and it is cause for action. ❑

A LIE THAT WILL NOT DIE: WHICH ONE?

By

Charles E. Weber, Ph.D.

An article with the title, "This Lie will not die," appeared on pages 115-119 of the April 1995 Reader's Digest, one of the most widely read periodicals in the world and published in a number of languages, including German, Dutch, Spanish, French, Chinese and several others.

The article claims that The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion is an invented account ("forgery") of alleged secret meetings which took place in conjunction with the Zionist congress held in Basel, Switzerland in 1897. The Protocols originally appeared in the newsapaper, Znamya in 1903, published in St. Petersburg, Russia.

Elliott mentions a recent litigation in Russia in which the court refused to condemn the Protocols. This, however, was not the first instance in which a court rfused to condemn the Protocols. A similar refusal was made by a court in Switzerland about 60 years ago.

If, indeed, The Protocols are an invention they were probably inspired, at least in part, by a novel by Herrmann Goedsche first published in 1868, Biarritz. In the very long novel there is a rather lengthy chapter entitled "In the Jewish Cemetary in Prague," which has been recently translated into English and furnished with annotations. Although the chapter makes no pretense at not being fiction, a great deal of information about the extent of Jewish control of banking, the theater, publishing and other aspects of European life at that time is presented by ghostly representatives of Jewish communities in various lands. (The translation is contained in the July, 1993 Liberty Bell, pages 11-60.)

During 1920-1922 a series of articles on the Jewish question appeared in a newspaper subsidized by the ingenious American industrialist Henry Ford, The Dearborn Independent. The one hundred or so articles written by a committee of scholars deal with such diverse aspects of Jewish behavior as the corruption of sports (then a hot topic as a result of the World Series bribery scandal of 1919 involving the Chicago White Socks and the Cincinnati Reds) and the fine art of changing famly names. These articles appeared later in the form of a four-volume set given gratis to purchasers of Ford motor cars, The International Jew: The World's Foremost Problem [available from Liberty Bell Publications, $40.00 + $8.00 postage]. Ford, we must not forget, was an idealist who paid his workers wages that were very high at the time and who tried in 1915 to bring about a cessation of hostilities during the First World War.

The authenticity of The Protocols was disputed in Ford's day. Ford's reaction to the disputed status of The Protocols was a noteworthy one. He stated that whether they were authentic or not, Jews' plans for gaining power were being brought into reality.

Ford was not the only famous man to be concerned at that time with the accretion of Jewish power. In February, 1920 in a London newspaper, Winston Churchill noted the dominance of Jews in the Bolshevist terror which had emerged in Russia.

Elliott mentions "a state-sponsored boycott of Jewish stores" in Germany. What he does not mention is the fact that this boycott was a mild response to a Jewish boycott of German exports, a serious problem for Germany. The German boycott lasted only a day, 1 April 1933, which was a Saturday and thus the sabbath for many Jews. The German boycott was essentially a symbolic action.

The Nuremberg Laws (of 1935), which Elliott also mentions, forbade the intermarriage of Germans and Jews. Similar laws against the interracial marriage of Negroes and Caucasians had long existed in many states of the United States. The Nuremberg Laws did not prohibit Jews from having their own cultural institutions. It took the National Socialist government nearly three years to get around to enacting these laws.

The Reader's Digest article suggests that The Protocols had an influence on Adolf Hitler and that this influence led to the murder of six million Jews. If this were true, the influence was a very slow one in having its effect. As late as November 1938, nearly six years after Hitler's National Socialists came to power, much of the retail trade in Germany was still in the Jewish hands in the form of retail stores, many of which were damaged in the riots of November 1938 ("Reichskristallnacht"). The origin of these riots is disputed, but it is well documented that orders for their immediate cessation were promptly sent out from Hitler's office. In comparison with the 1992 race riots in Los Angeles, the property damage resulting from the riots in Germany was small, largely a matter of window glass. Deaths resulted in both instances.

The naive or cynically dishonest author of the Reader's Digest article helps to spread and perpetuate a "lie that will not die" and that has served well-calculated objectives, both cultural and economic. Elliott's claim that six million Jews were murdered in Europe under the National Socialist government has been disproved by objective historians, such as Professor Arthur Butz of Northwestern University, whose book, The Hoax of the Twentieth Century, provides us with details of the origin of the "Holocaust" material and the torture used to obtain the "confessions" on which the material is partly based. Since the appearance of Professor Butz' book in the Mid-1970s further investigations, including forensic investigations at the alleged sites of genocide, and experts' examinations of declassified aërial photographs taken over Auschwitz during the summer of 1944 by the American airforce have added to the mass of evidence against the "Holocaust" material, which has had a strong and unfortunate influence on American foreign policy, in particular American support of the Jewish state in Palestine, deeply resented by the millions of victims of that arrogant state. That support, of course, has added to the vast debt which is now an oppressive burden on the American people. The enormous costs, not just monetary costs, of the brutal, murderous, unjustified war against Iraq, the "Gulf War", must be included in the burdens imposed on the American people as a result of the uncompromising support by Washington of the Jewish state in Palestine.

Patriotism is the Last Refuge of a Scoundrel

by

Carl Hottelet

Mobs are bad. Lynch mobs are worse. In their self-righteous savagery American hyper-patriot mobs are the worst.

The experience of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States over the period from the British and French declaration of war on Germany in September 1939 until the United States' entrance into that war in December 1941 is a case in point. It is summarized in the Jehovah's Witnesses 1941 Yearbook published by the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society in Brooklyn, New York.

> "Jehovah's Witnesses have been assaulted, beaten, kidnapped, driven out of towns, counties, and states, tarred and feathered, forced to drink castor oil, tied together and chased like dumb beasts through the streets, castrated and maimed, taunted and insulted by demonized crowds, jailed by the hundreds without charge, and held incommunicado and denied the privilege of conferring with relatives, friends or lawyers. Many other hundreds have been jailed and held in so-called "protective custody"; some have been shot in the night time; some threatened with hanging and beaten into unconsciousness. Numerous varieties of mob violence have occurred. Many have had their clothes torn from them, their Bibles and other literature seized and publicly burned, their automobiles, trailers, homes and assembly places wrecked and fired resulting in damages totaling very many thousands of dollars. In almost every case where there has been mob violence the public officials have stood idly by, and refused to give protection, and in scores of instances the officers of the law have participated in the mobs, and sometimes actually led the mobs."

The 1941 Yearbook excerpt is reprinted in Leonard A. Stevens'

SALUTE! The Case of the Bible vs. The Flag (1973) which fleshes out some of the patriotic horrors visited upon the Witnesses. It contains also the customary spurious allusions to "Nazi" transgressions that never took place, as though that might mitigate, even excuse, American crimes that did take place. Otherwise, the book is well written, and useful. It has the merit, among others, of pointing out that, as was to be expected, the patrioteers of the American Legion, when they did not organize and lead them, were conspicuously active among the lynch mobs.

Brainwashed with an idiot theology sold them by a crazy, or cynical, and maybe mercenary, leadership, individual Witnesses, nevertheless, as they proselytized door-to-door on Sunday mornings, were disciplined, neat, and courteous. They harmed no one, and offered no harm. Least of all did their children, who sometimes accompanied them. The Witnesses refused to salute the American flag. They did not burn it, nor did they desecrate it. They did not replace it by a different flag. They would not salute any flag. That was hardly a threat to national security. In the face of establishment harassment and mob violence the Witnesses' comportment merited respect. That of politicians and other demagogues did not. These made profitable careers for themselves out of saluting the flag ostentatiously whenever that would attract public notice, and helped demonize defenseless people, and incite mob fury against them.

Barely five years earlier, another lynch mob thrashed about in front of the court house in "America's typical small town," Flemington, New Jersey. A trial was being staged inside. New York City Police Department officials instructed people who were testifying that it was their "patriotic duty" to perjure themselves to convict the defendant, whom the same police repeatedly had beaten senseless to force a "confession", though they knew him to be innocent. The defendant was a foreigner, worse yet, a German. The mob, heated to white-hot mindless fury by media that lied with special malice in this case, howled, and chanted in unison: "Burn Bruno the Hun!" "Burn Bruno the Hun!". Bruno Richard Hauptmann was burned. In the electric chair, in Trenton, in April 1936.

The happenings of 1940, and of 1935, quantitatively speaking, were mere bagatelles, compared with the events of nearly twenty years before. In 1915 those events engulfed the country, and continued, in their more significant and sinister aspects for eight years. At least as barbarous as any in American history, they had also a new dimension, a manifestation that today would be called "cultural genocide."

The British had begun their "Hate the Hun!" anti-German atrocity-lie propaganda of World War I. Anglomaniac WASPs joined in full blast.

So did the Jews. They had prospered enormously in the Germany of Kaiser Wilhelm II. They were given preferment. Yet, no media, anywhere vented anti-German atrocity-lies as vile as those printed by the New York Times and its equally kosher clones. No studios ground out anti-German hate films as disgusting as those made by the Hollywood Jews. Yet many of the Jews, in New York and in Hollywood, had but recently come from Germany.

Observers were astonished at the intensity and the extent of Jewish hatred against a country and a people that had nurtured them at least as kindly as had any other. There were no pogroms, there were no expulsions. It was in Germany, and only in Germany, that Jews achieved true cultural heights. What non-German Jew is there to compare with Heinrich Heine or with Felix Mendelsohn? Or with Mahler, Meyerbeer, or Offenbach? In fact, what non-German Jew has contributed anything, anything constructive, that is, to any civilization?

Astonishment at the behavior of the Jews derives from ignorance of their history, character, and mind-set. Nomadic and predatory, they know neither allegiance nor gratitude, even toward the host people from whom they profited most. Unable to build a viable state of their own, obsessed by a compulsion to dominate, inspired and instructed by the Talmud to hate, abuse, and exploit all that is not Jewish, they strive to destroy every society they can penetrate. In 1915 they had yet another motivation. As the authentically distinguished (and therefore virtually unknown) German-Jewish economist, Werner Sombart, pointed out: "Wars are the harvests of the Jews."

Joined, for once, the WASPs, who loathed Jews, and Jews who hated WASPs, through their combined total control of media, money, and politicians . . wrapped themselves in American flags, launched history's most ferocious campaign to extirpate the spirit and the culture of a people who had dwelt in their country for over two and a half centuries, who had contributed more than other ethnic groups, some would argue, more than all other ethnic groups put together.

For the first time, mobs operated on two levels. On the lower level were the street gangs, composed of the usual hoodlums, hooligans, barroom brawlers, and other such low grade rabble. On the upper level were the academic gangs, composed of "educators", "intellectuals", artists, artistes, a great many of the "cultural elite", the "intelligentsia", and other such high grade rabble.

The depredations of the street mobs were what they had always been: assaulting people they had never seen; beatings; burning down homes, barns, places of business; destroying property; pillaging; hunting down lone, desperately fleeing individuals and murdering them, that sort of thing.

In one way, the street gang's performance was out of the ordinary. They burned books. German books. They raided public libraries, school and college libraries, and book stores. German books were pulled out of the stacks and off the shelves, dumped in the street. Kerosene was poured over them and they were set on fire. What was extraordinary about this was not the mobs' frenzy, but the virtual certainty that none of their goons ever before had been in a library, or could tell a German book from an English, Russian, or Turkish one.

Who led the semi-literates of the street gangs to libraries and bookshops? Who pointed out the books to be burned? Who other than the "intellectual" hoods who had joined their gutter colleagues for the purpose.

The striving to eradicate everything that was German, even the memory that once it was German, covered the spectrum from incredible pettiness to the criminally demented .

Sauerkraut became "liberty cabbage". Hamburgers were rechristened "Salisbury steak". Frankfurters metamorphosed into "wieners" (one wonders why not felixes). German pastry changes its nationality to Danish, and so on, and on.

Even the German shepherd was not overlooked. The Anglomaniac Albert Payson Terhune made him the dastardly villain in his collie book for children. To conceal and falsify the national origin of this splendid animal, "the only dog that thinks," the zealots invented hitherto unknown breeds for it. The German shepherd became an "Alsatian", or a "Belgian".

More serious was the forced renaming of places and institutions. One victim of this vindictiveness was the Deutsches Hospital, the German Hospital, at the time the finest in New York City, and one of the best in the country. The Anglomaniacs insisted that it be renamed "Edith Cavell Hospital". Edith Cavell was a British Red Cross nurse whom the Germans had permitted to work in German-occupied Belgium. Violating her oath, and international law, she helped POWs escape. The Germans caught her at it, tried her in strict fairness, found her guilty, and executed her by firing squad. That was clumsy of the Germans, who never grasped the nature of Anglo-American propaganda. In the event, the WASP's were unable to consummate their outrageous insult to those who had built the hospital. But the administration and staff, by then already more Irish than German, were compelled to abandon Deutsches Hospital and "compromise" on Lenox Hill Hospital, which is its name today. The hospital's German origin is forgotten.

The academic mob's crassest scheme to falsify history was to depose Johann Gutenberg, inventor of printing with movable type, to push him into the memory hole, and put William Caxton in his place.

Johann Gutenberg was born around 1400 in the town of Mainz, where the river of that name flows into the Rhine. Fulfilling the stringent requirements of the medieval German guilds, he was apprentice, journeyman, and master of his craft. In 1439 Gutenberg began to apply the knowledge and skills he had absorbed toward achieving his great concept: To do away with the cumbersome block of wood into which the letters for an entire page of text were cut laboriously by hand, and to use instead a frame into which individual pieces of type would form the text; after a page was printed, the type would be reset for another.

The gestation of the first modern printing press, more than half a millennium ago, was neither short nor easy. It called for manifold genius. To find the right material for the dies into which the separate type faces were cut, Gutenberg made long and arduous trials with woods, hard and soft, and with metals, copper, silver, gold. Yet more difficult was the question of the ink, which had to be of a new and special kind for use with the new type. Gutenberg solved the complex chemical problem and produced a deep black lustrous ink that has never been equaled. Then there was the press itself. To be capable of imparting pressure absolutely evenly and uniformly over a large surface it had to be built to a standard of precision not previously needed, or attained. Gutenberg printed with movable type. It had taken him more than twenty years.

When Johann Gutenberg died in 1468 he bequeathed the world an instrument that altered it forever, and that brought forth the most beautiful book ever printed -the Gutenberg Bible.

William Caxton was born around 1422 in London. He was apprenticed to a London silk merchant in 1438. He became a merchant on his own account, and moved to the Continent. In the Hanseatic town of Bruges he heard the German traders talking about Johann Gutenberg's wonderful new printing press, and how print shops were springing up all over Germany. Caxton saw the potential for England. He left Bruges for the nearest major German town, Cologne, to learn the arts and techniques of printing with movable type. That was in 1476. Later that year Caxton returned to London and set up a printer's shop. The first book he printed and dated was in 1477. Caxton brought his equipment and his initial stock of type and ink from Germany to England. He never claimed to have invented anything. William Caxton died in 1491.

Is there anything more base than stealing from a people one of the glories of its heritage? And to ascribe it to others who were incapable of producing it themselves?

In the end, the "intellectual" goon mob couldn't make this trick stick. There remained too many civilized people, in America and in Britain, who knew them for the frauds and crooks they were, and who could be pushed just so far.

Condoned and abetted by the administration of the rabid Germanophobe, Woodrow Wilson, his brain already putrifying, anti-German depredations became even more deranged.

The street mobs' frenzy, artificially engendered, was essentially mindless. The Germanophobic, highly organized academic mob was activated by an innate fury, intense and purposeful.

The street gangs assaulted, abused, humiliated, and occasionally murdered, helpless people. They destroyed whatever they ran across that seemed to them to be German.

Their colleagues and accomplices on the "intellectual" front concentrated on the destruction of German culture, on the eradication of every manifestation of German life in the United States.

The teaching of German in schools and colleges was abolished. Instructors and professors of German literature were hounded from their posts. German newspapers and periodicals, published in America for two centuries were suppressed. German social and cultural clubs were prohibited. There were no German political clubs. Choral societies, literary societies, dramatic societies, all were driven from the American cultural and social scene.

Germans were preeminent in the musical life of America. There was Theodor Thomas, for one. Born in Germany in 1835, immigrating, with his parents, in 1845, he formed and conducted orchestras and led them on tours about the country. He is remembered best for his enduring work in Cincinnati and for raising the Chicago Symphony to world class professionalism. Upon Thomas' death in 1905 his work with the Chicago Orchestra was carried on by another German-born virtuoso, composer, and conductor, Friedrich Stock until war hysteria caused his "temporary retirement." These men, and others, enriched immeasurably the cultural life of the Republic. They helped essentially to create the only belle époque the country has known. It ended when its German constituent was suppressed.

The ultimate unspeakable vindictiveness was forbidding Germans to pray in their language, even in their own churches. Some observers attribute the WASP's manic vengefulness to a gnawing envy, and inferiority complex induced by the knowledge that German culture, and other achievements exceeded theirs. That is aggravated by a fanatic identification with the Motherland, and with its customs, among them the classic English concept of how best to compete: Kill the competitor.

The demented obliteration of everything German deprived Americans, American children most of all, of so much that Germans contributed to make childhood in America joyous. The Christmas tree, "Silent Night, Holy Night", Grimm's Fairy Tales, the Kindergarten, the most enchanting lullaby ever compased, Brahm's Cradle Song.

The WASPs, the Jews even less, had nothing to offer in place of what they had ruined. That didn't trouble them. Jews care nothing about children not their own. WASPs were callous to the condition of children.

Three or four year old toddlers were made to work in the Motherlands' dark Satanic mills. Underfed, sleepy, they would stumble into the dangerous machinery throbbing and clanking all about. Little legs and arms had to be amputated. Infants of the same age were put to work as chimney sweeps, an excruciatingly filthy and dangerous task. Many of these babies, jammed in hot flues, died in screaming agony. Those who didn't, had their health destroyed. Children whose fathers could not feed them on the beggar's pay they earned, when they had work, were placed in hideous workhouses which delivered them as slave-apprentices into the hands of those who applied for such. Up until the latter part of the last century children were hanged for stealing trifles, even food. In this country, until well into this century, WASPs worked seven and eight year-olds in their coal mines.

To Germans the thought of mistreating or exploiting children was, and is, abhorrent. To assure the well being of children is the instinct most deeply rooted in Germans. In Germany, and among Germans everywhere, custom, culture, the social order, put concern for children above all else.

Supporting the more or less ad hoc street mobs, and the highly organized academic ferrets and demagogues in the heroic fray against Liederkränze ("wreaths of song", or singing societies) the Kindergarten (children's garden) was a familiar figure on the American stage: the busybody, informer, snooper, vigilante, under whichever label, an admirably patriotic type. He would peer about for vestiges of something German that might have been overlooked in the destruction, and reported them to the authorities or to his local association of patriots. He accosted people, whom he overheard speaking what he thought was German, and admonished them summarily, when he didn't assault them.

An incident comes to mind. It took place on a mild late winter day in 1917. A woman with her little boy was walking on upper Broadway in the Washington Heights section of Manhattan. The little boy was wearing a navy blue sailor's suit and cap. The cap was of the flat style, a ribbon ran about its base, ending in two fluttering streamers at the back. On the front, over the forehead, in gilt letters, was a ships name. Among the people walking toward them from the opposite direction was a man. As he was about to pass by he stepped over and slapped the child hard across the face. The mother cried out. A few people paused for a moment to look, then went on. The man had vanished. The little boy, bewildered and hurt, put his hand to his face and whimpered. The name of the ship in gilt letters on my sailor's cap was "Emden".

Patriotism is the last refuge of the scoundrel, be he part of a mob or acting alone.

(2) Anti-German persecutions in the United States.

In a land that has cultivated cover-up as a cultural attribute one need not look for an itemized record of what was done to Germans, and to everything German, during the decade that began in the autumn of 1914. No book describes the events. What was inflicted on men, women, and children of German extraction was so heinous that, conforming to Kafka's perverse, but well-founded conclusion that not the criminals, but the victims, are guilty, it produced an enduring anti-German prejudice.

The relatively brief — 6" x 8", 40 pp — but comprehensive The Development of Germanophobia by Michael F. Connors is helpful background reading. It is available from Liberty Bell Publications.

For understandable, if not commendable, reasons there are few English works that deal with this subject in any substantial way. Sedulous in pointing out what they regard as shortcomings in others, the English are notably diffident about acknowledging their own.

Still, as background for the present article the novels of Charles Dickens, authentically based and authoritatively written, serve well indeed, some even more than others. ❑

ORGANTC LAW VS. TALMUDIC LAW

by

Rudy Stanko

The White race needs to establish a College of Law aIong with a Whiteman's Bar Association for the sole purpose of educating and defending our people. The purpose of this College is to supply the necessary knowledge to understand and confront the present hybrid system of Organic-Talmudic Law that has developed in this land since 1776. It presently governs our lives and ultimately the world. Not only must the Whiteman be aware of their inherent rights, we must possess the intellectual ability to exercise and protect our White sovereignty. Whenever a Whiteman becomes a victim of the Talmudists, we must jump to the victim's aid and competently protect their Organic rights.

If we lived under a pure system of Talmudic Law, which is the goal of the Jewish leadership, there would be no rights to protect. The present plight of the Palestinians is an example of living under pure Talmudic Law. The Palestinian male does not even have the right to possess a sling shot or vote. Fortunately, our White ancestors documented our Organic rights in the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, and the Bill of Rights attached to, what I call, "the bankers" US Constitution.[1] Unfortunately the Talmudists are continually attempting to erase these rights from the law books. It is their ambition to control every function of our lives. It will be our goal at the College of Law to reverse this trend and restore all of our Organic rights.

Contrary to the Mongoloids, Negroids, and Jews, history will verify the White tribes of Europe have been bred with the natural instincts for self-government and to resist all intrusions into our sovereignty. It is a fact, no other race has possessed the natural ability to promulgate their sovereignty as has the White race. Examples can be found in the historical republican and decentralized governments of Germany and Poland and in White Documents such as the Magna Charta, Declaration of Independence, Articles of

1. During the publishing of the US Constitution, the Governor of Virginia, Patrick Henry, stated, "I smeldt a rat." Article 1, Section 10, clause 1 prohibits the sovereign States of America to create organic money, while allowing private bankers the power to create Talmudic and/or national money.

Confederation, and the Bill of Rights. In opposition to our White sovereignty under a republican form of government, there exists a force, led by the rabbical Sanhedrin, to control every function of our lives through a strong central government under the banner of democracy. A government that has the power and claims to give you everything you need also has the power to take everything you have. Recognizing this, our White ancestors intended that we live under a Republican form of government, not the current welfare state: the mob rule of democracy.

Historians recognize that William of Orange acquired the throne of the Anglo-Saxon empire in 1685 with funds borrowed from the Jews in the Bank of Amsterdam in exchange for their perpetual control of the Bank of England. By 1776, our ancestors officially abolished the central authority that the Bank of England had on their lives with the Declaration of Independence. Our White ancestors intended we live under a Republican form of government, not a mob rule by democratic centralized government. (See Article IV, Section IV of the US Constitution). We lost our Republican form of government when the anthropoid was allowed to vote in 1865 and when the 17th Amendment was attached to the US Constitution. The 17th Amendment was attached to the US Constitution in 1913 which permitted the mob to elect a politician as a US Senator rather than the sovereign State nominating their senators to the US Senate.

In opposition to our Organic Law, the Talmudic Jew has been bred to always worm its way back into our sovereignty in an attempt to destroy our independent life style. The Talmudic Law also mandates they breed-out the threat of all White independent instincts, either through miscegenation of non-Whites or through Christian brainwashing under the religious theory that all races are created equal. This is confirmed by the massive and submissive manipulation and monetary raping of the third world continents of Asia, Africa, and Central and South America. In 1992, we are confronted with a much stronger entrenched central Jewish authority than our forefathers confronted over 200 years ago. But we now have a weapon our White ancestors lacked. Like the Jews, we now have a racial religion—Creativity (Church of the Creator or the Rocky Moutain Regional Headquarters—The Yellowstone Valley Church, Laure, Montana). The Church of the Creator will be the sponsor of the College of Law. Armed with this weapon—a racial religion associated with legal professionals, we must now learn how to legally eject the Jewish worm from the pores of our sovereign lives. This commandment, which no other White religion promotes, is the primary dogma of our religion. It is promulgated in order to protect our Organic rights. Name one Christian Church that understands the Jew as the Jew understands and promotes "Christianity" with its twelve Jewish apostles and its rabbi Paul.

Every Creator interested in protecting and defending his and/or her Creator's rights must comprehend every clause in the first ten (10) Articles of Amendments to the US Constitution, also called the Bill of Rights, and be especially cognizant of the 9th and 10th Articles of Amendments. Along with your State Constitutional rights, these two Amendments provide every conceivable right and power inherent for a White government. The post civil war amendments were illegally attached to the US Constitution by the Jewish bankers and with the participation of the African anthrapoid. They attempted the impossible. That is, to form some type of common bond or common law with the White European and African anthropoid. These post war attachments, which were not properly ratified, are not conducive with the White Documents, the US Constitution, or our Organic Law.

The Jews are aware of their weakness, i.e. their unsuccessful attempts to dominate Organic Law in a White self-governing society with their Talmudic Law. When the origins of Talmudic Law are discovered by a slight majority of the White citizens, the Jews are told to pack their bags. This happened in England in 1290, in Spain and Portugal in 1492 and 1493, again in England in 1583, in Russia in 1875, and in Germany in 1938. The inability of the Jews to dominate a White society is the reason for establishing a Jewish haven in Israel. But the Jews will continue to impose their Talmudic Law in preference to our Organic Law as long as we allow them to get away with it. Not only must we learn how to competently argue our Organic Law, we must insist our adjudicates—our judges and juries—be our peers. We should refuse to appear in any Court that is presided by a Jew judge. Since we are under martial law, make the unelected US Marshalls drag you into che courtroom when a Jew appears as a judge.

Here are a few examples of how the Whiteman's Bar Association intends to combat Talmudic Law pursuant to the Bill of Rights attached to the US Constitution:

1. The First Article of Amendment states: "Congress shall make no law... abridging the freedom...to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." The US Supreme Court has recently ruled that the public schools must allow all religious denominations access to their facilities. We will prepare petitions for injunctive relief and law suits naming school administrators who reject a Creator's request to hold a bible study of history lessons as other religious study groups or societies hold their meetings in public buildings.

2. We intend to prepare audio and video tapes defining your rights in each clause of the Constitution and how to exercise and/or protect those rights if you or another Creator are investigated by JOG (Jewish Occupied Government). This includes preparing law suits documenting all violations of our Organic rights and making JOG's military police confine themselves to their proper constitutional powers, i.e., their limited jurisdiction and venue parameters.

3. We will prepare lessons on how to rescind JOG's various license requirements, that are in violation of our inherent rights, i.e., to earn a living, freedom to travel (this includes with or without a motorcycle helmet), practice law, pro-choice on abortion, etc.

4. We will improvise a stringent testing procedure and issue Legal Bar Cards for all Creators qualified to act as legal assistants.

These are just a few programs I intend to implement in order for us to understand and confront the present hybrid system of Organic-Talmudic Law that illegally intrudes in every function of our lives, including the massive illegal importation of negroids, Jews and muds into our lands.

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Baca (307 pp., hb) describes what was done to the young men whom Cornelu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well written document of great historical and psychological importance. ON MAY 8, 1945 WE GERMANS WERE "LIBERATED" — AN THEN?

By

Manfred Roeder

These days, in May, one "Liberation" celebration is following the other. In every other country this would be unimaginable. A lost war is a lost war. People have to get over it and life goes on. One honors the dead. The wounds are healing slowly. The future has to be shaped, very often with the enemies of yesterday. Such is life.

Now everythinq is different. Old wounds are being ripped open again every single day. Shamelessly this is called "remembrance." It is supposed to help reconciliation. Well-known representatives of Jewry are saying: there is no reconciliation, or it's too early 50 years after the war. After the Thirty-Year War every side of the conflict had to promise eternal forgiveness and forgetting. Nobody was allowed to bring up old insults and cruelties. That was the only way for a true reconciliaton.

What our people remember as the greatest catastrophe of German history shall now be transformed into an act of "Liberation", and that in spite of the fact that the "liberators" declared unmistakenly that they were not coming as liberators but as conquerers. They intended to punish, to take revenge, and to destroy. Unfortunately, it is also not true that the war was over on May 8, 1945 and the weapons fell silent. The bombing terror was over. That was a relief for everyone. But— while during the war shots were coming from both sides, what now happened was the mass-murder of the defenseless. And the rape of the women did not stop. For many months they had to hide like hunted wild animals.

"Murder in Peace" is a chapter heading in Hellmut Diwald's book Geschichte der Deutschen, (History of the Germans): What happened between 1945 and 1946 regarding mass-crimes and mass-murders can hardly be described. Revenge was not only taken on the German people. On the Balkan, three Serbian State Police Regiments which had fought against Tito surrendered to the British. The British delivered them to Tito three weeks later. Together with 11,000 Slovenes, who had fought on the German side, they were shot.

On May 15 a large part of the Croatian army was delivered to Tito. On the way from Bleiburg in Carinthia to Marburg at the Drau, Tito ordered 30,000 of them shot. 50,000 were shot in Marburg, together with 30,000 Croatian civilians, mostly women and children.

After the capitulation 300,000 men of the powerful Army Corps "Southeast" of General Alexander Löhr had to put down its arms and surrender to the partisans. More than 200,000 soldiers were murdered by mass shootings, and in 1949 there were still 70,000 in Yugoslavian prison camps. General Löhr was hanged after a 1947 show trial in Belgrade.

It was not much different with the Army Corps "Center" of Field Marshal Schörner. 1.2 million soldiers ended up in Soviet prison camps, the majority of them perished there. — In spite of all protests the Russian soldiers of General Vlasov's army were delivered to the Soviets and killed. Vlasov himself was hanged together with eleven Russian generals and officers in Red Square in Moscow.

Diwald mentiones other crimes occuring after the war:

250,000 Cossacks had fought on the German side. 50,000 of them, among them women and children, had made their way to Carinthia and surrendered to the British. After secret negotiations and deceptive schemes they were delivered to the Soviets and slaughtered in a grisly manner, mostly in front of the eyes of the British. 70% of the Cossacks had a Nansen passport and were no Soviet citizens.

- 135,000 civilians of German descent in Yugoslavia were murdered.
- 15 Million Germans were expelled from their homes in East Germany (East Prussia, Pomerania, Brandenburg, and Silesia)
- 2.5 Mill. perished while being evicted from these areas
- 2 Mill. prisoners of war died in Soviet prison camps.
- More than 100,000 pro-German Frenchmen were butchered to death.
- 100,000 Sudeten-Germans murdered.

All of this happened after the surrender, after the "liberation".

Whosoever denies the "unique und cruel fate" the Jews have suffered and thusly offends their honor and dignity, will end up in court, heavily fined and/or imprisoned. Why is lying about and mocking of other, non-Jewish victims not prosecuted with equal harsheness? A few thousand concentration inmates were indeed liberated, but most German soldiers, about 10 million of them, were captured; one million of them perished thereafter. Thousands were used for forced labor or pressured into foreign legions, while other thousands committed suicide.

The bitter truth is: On May 8, 1945 there was neither an armistice nor peace, never mind a just peace. The war was continued with the force of weapons, judicial murder, and increasingly deceptive psychological means. German soldiers were executed until 1952, although the death penalty had been abolished. The exaltation of one side and the demonization of the other side is getting more vicious all the time, constantly meaner, always more simplistic. Mahatma Gandhi envisioned this and asked for a peace without revenge. He was not being heard. The same with General Patton who was "accidented" to death.

Every day we are bombarded with mass-productions of distorted pictures, as Martin Broszat, the director of the Institute for Contemporary History said already in 1985. We have to defend ourselves against it and preserve our self-esteem. The victor is not the morally superior and the victim not the moral outcast. Injustice is never on one side alone. There are always two sides to it. Our soldiers would not have fought six years with great valor if they were not convinced that justice was on their side.

It is undignified to look for the guilty after a lost war. Whoever does it makes himself guilty. What is at stake is the responsibility for the future. We have to face this future and should not walk with moralizing judgments through history. We are facing the world with a good conscience and don't need to justify ourselves. If we finally believe this and act accordingly, only then will we really be free.

ARYAN EUGENICS

by

Maj. Donald V. Clerkin

An absolute requirement in the formulation of the Aryan Republic to come is a well-planned Eugenics program; that is, the improvement of the Aryan race through selective breeding. The historical downfall of prior Aryan civilizations — Rome and India — can be laid at the door of racial devolution via direct mongrelization and the over-production of offspring by the lowest ranks in intelligence. The quality of a population is at the heart of any attempt to build and advance a society. The poorer the quality, the less chance any society has to take root and prosper.

National Socialist Germany had such a Eugenics program. At its baselay the Lebensborn program, the method by which the healthy genetic traits of the Schutzstaffel (SS) could be advanced. Adolf Hitler's plan was to build a stronger, purer German folk. From this improved stock he hoped to bring forth a new Germany that would bow to no power on earth. The Law For the Protection of German Blood and Honour of 1935 assured that the blood of "others" would forever be barred from the German genetic code.

Of course the Jews, being legally barred from intermarriage with Aryans, became insane with hatred of this Aryan plan for improvement. International Jewry has declared economic warfare against Germany in 1933, but it was the 1935 Nuremberg racial laws that drove them absolutely mad with rage. How dare the Germans, they wailed, deny the Jews sex with the German girls they lusted after! We hear this same demand in America today among blacks, who have been taught by ZOG that they can take from a white anything they want.

What is not generally known is that the National Socialist Eugenics program was loosely based on the American practice of sterilizing the genetic failures, the insane, the hopelessy physically marred from birth, the congenital criminals, the incorrigible sexual deviates, etc. America before the Warren Court of the 1960s forbade the intermarriage of the races in many states. That court and all succeeding courts have permitted the terrible racial onslaught wesee every day in black white miscegenation. No one who claims to care about the future of the Aryan race will refuse to back a solid program of Eugenic improvement in the Aryan Republic, together with a strict policy of immigration, weeding out the unfit.

Study of recent statistics on I.Q. and other tests of natural intelligence demonstrates a slow downward spiral among American whites. Look into the eyes of the next white youth you meet. Is there a light, something behind the skull? There once was a light in the eyes of most white children. But the System has succeeded in drawing white Americans into the lowest common denominator. Whites now idolize dunces, skinny, tall blacks that play professional basketball, cretins zonked on drugs who make cacophony and call it "music," or phony "movie starlets / stars." How different were the German youth of sixty years ago who had the Schutzstaffel or the Luftwaffe or the men of the U-boats to emulate; and yes, the German athletes of the Berlin Olympics of 1936. Something has lowered the sight of the American white, downward into the mud.

Now you know why the Jew overlords of this crazy society demonize the Third Reich every chance they get, Hitler wanted improvement of the Aryan race through Eugenics. The Oberjuden created an antithesis, which is race mongrelization, and raised it to a pinnacle for all to see. We must havemore mutts, more imbeciles; more sheep, say the Oberjuden.Mix the races until we, the Oberjuden, are the Herrenvolk, the Master Race. Let everyone but us be melted down to nothing.

This present state of affairs has almost run out of time. What is to come will shock even the Oberjuden who thought their plan for domination was foolproof. The traitors to our race, the fools and the weaklings will be winnowed out of the Aryan population by the coming events. What will remain will be fashioned into a stronger folk, an Aryan race in North America tempered by struggle and privation. Then will the Aryan Republic be created out of the minds and the Race-Soul of the Aryan folk. These hardy Aryans will improve in their succeeding generations. Nothing will stand in their path to the Future.

There are probably some who read this and wonder what I am talking about. Is not America a going concern still? Are not whites just whites? America is DEAD. The American Republic died at Appomattox. All semblance of self-government went under after 1945. Whites are allowed only to be taxed in this oligopoly. They must not complain too loud about anything, including the bastardization of their children with non-whites. Test your "white rights" against any non-white in a court of 'law.' If it is a Federal court, you will be told right away that you are not covered by the Fourteenth Amendment; that the non-white you are against is a ward of the Federal government with special protections under the "Civil Rights" laws.

THE NUREMBERG TRIALS

In the fall of 1945 the victorious Allied Powers convened the International Military Tribunals at Nuremberg, during which the top National Socialist leaders were put on trial for making "aggressive war" and "crimes against humanity." The results were a foregone conclusion, in that these trials were kangaroo proceedings in which defendants were not allowed to produce testimony in their defense, were not permitted to cross-examine prosecution witnesses, and could not object to the admission of hearsay testimony. You will notice that the OSI U.S. Justice Dept. acts just the same way when it drags a naturalized citizen before a de-naturalization hearing (John Demjanjuk, Frank Walus, Anton Baumann) on a charge that the defendant lied about his war experiences to get into the United States. You citizens get the same treatment in U.S. tax proceedings. Which is why I argue that America is DEAD, not a "rumor" — a reality.

Theory of Government

by

Major Donald V. Clerkin

The following is not a militia theory of government. The militia has no theory, merely reactions to its perceptions of government. Much has been made of the militia, the militia that is spoken of in the Federalist Papers and acts of Congress. This unorganized militia is not the National Guard. The National Guard is part of the standing army, along with the reserves. The unorganized militia is the citizenry of the States. It is an organic thing that comes out of the common law, just as it was in 1775 at Lexington and Concord.

The militiaman is a citizen of the State in which he resides. This is the only citizenship he enjoys. There is no such thing as a federal citizen. The United States government is a creation of the Constitution, a legal entity not an organic thing. Such a legal creation cannot have citizens, any more than a corporation can have citizens. The United States Government has officers, civil and military, agents, employees (servants) and wards, those non-whites covered by the civil rights laws passed by the Congress. The President and his cabinet, the echelons of the cabinet departments, act as the chairman and the board of directors of the corporation known in international parlance as the United States of America.

Militia oppositian to the federal government comes out of the feeling that the Washington regime has overstepped its boundaries, its powers granted to it by the Constitution. Heavy federal taxation, often coupled with IRS brutality, ATF harassment of lawful gun owners, who know that the Second Amendment does not address the issues of hunting and sport shooting, the expression of federal meanness at the Randy Weaver cabin in Idaho and the Branch Davidian church in Waco, these things have not spawned the rise of the militia but have resurrected the memory in many militiamen of that time more than two hundred years ago when King George and his Redcoats were acting just like Washington is acting now.

Most of the militia will not agree with what I am saying about the nature of the United States Government, citing the act of the government in granting passports to State citizens. The United States was granted the authority to control the borders which it does not at all and within this authority lies the power to issue licenses to both leave and enter the United States. This does not change the relationship between the States and the federal government; neither does it alter the fact that unless one is born on a federal reservation, he is in no way a federal "citizen." Washington may call us its "citizens," but we remain, as whites, citizens only of the respective States in which we were born or now reside. We may become employed by the federal government, or be commissioned by the United States into its military; or some may decide to avail themselves of the civil rights laws, those persons "of color" protected by the Fourteenth Amendment, and thus accept the position of a ward of Washington. But the common law which is the foundation of the States admits of only an organic citizenship, which no Fourteenth Amendment, "ratified" unlawfully in 1868 by forcing the secessionist States to go along or suffer martial law forever, can legally change. No law, federal or State, can militate against this common law fact.

In the matter of the arrest of Gerhard Lauck in Denmark on a German warrant, I contacted Senator Herb Kohl of Wisconsin. Here is his reply: "I am writing to you in further reference to Gerhard Lauck, an American citizen being held by the government of the German Federal Republic. (paragraph) I have been informed by the Department of State that someone from the American Embassy in Germany has visited with Mr. Lauck. However, due to the Privacy Act, and since Mr. Lauck has signed a limited Privacy Act release, there is no further information that can be passed on to you about this matter. I trust, however, that this information will be helpful to you. (paragraph) Again, thank you for thinking of me. (paragraph) Herb Kohl, U.S, Senator" (dated May 22, 1995). This is all very mysterious. No publicity about Gerhard Lauck's arrest off a street in Copenhagen. But China has pinched one of their dissident expatriates, Harry Wu, and the headlines are screaming about it.

I have been asked if there is any further news in the murder of Joe Rowan. It will be remembered that I tried to mandamus the District Attorney of Radine County here in Wisconsin to force him to hold a "John Doe" hearing. I was unsuccessful on January 6th, this year. I then received a letter from Sheila Rowan, Joe's wife, saying that there are witnesses willing to testify. My advice was that the witnesses should swear out affidavits as to what they witnessed and send them directly to Judge Dennis J. Flynn of Circuit Court in Racine. I have no further information as to what these witnesses did or did not do. I do know that Robert Flancher, the district attorney, is whining to the media that he is being hounded by Joe's friends from all over the world. That is something, at least. But it would be nice to prosecute.

The short-wave "patriots" fancy themselves historians and philosophers. Lately they have drummed up a theory that claims the Clinton Administration and the World Government idea is "Nazi." Never mind that Clinton's appointees are predominantly Jews. Or that 'Israel first' is the order of the day in Washington. Or that since the 1954 Brown decision of the Supreme Court the policy has been to mongrelize the white race. Bill Cooper claims that the 'antiterrorism' bill is the same response that Hitler gave to the Reichstag fire in 1933. We agree that the Oklahoma City bombing was a put-up job. But the response and everything else that ZOG does is a Jew-Marxist plan to destroy the sovereignty of the country first and then get the white race by the throat. No "Nazi" government would force the integration of the races and put Jews at the head of such policies!

The Enemy Within

by

J. B. Campbell

Flashpoint, by Ingrid Weckert, tells how a Jewish organization in Paris engineered the infamous Reichskristallnacht, the Night of Broken Glass, in which the windows of hundreds of Jewish businesses were shattered and dozens of synagogues were burned in Berlin and other German cities in November, 1938. A number of Jews were killed as well. Because of Germany's well-known anti-Jewish policy it was assumed that the attack was carried out by the government in retaliation for the murder that day in Paris of German diplomat Vom Rath by a young Polish Jew. The considerable damage was held up as proof that the Germans were barbarians who deserved to be annihilated. It lead immediately to sympathy for Jews, as well as hatred for Germans, due to the well-coordinated manipulations of people's minds by the Jewish-controlled press, especially in this country. It was a case of Jews sacrificing other Jews to create indefinite guilt over Jewish victims and to gain power and wealth from that guilt. It was a terrible, but not the worst, example of the Big Lie. (The worst example occurred a few years later.)

Several years ago it was reported in France and Israel that Jewish cemeteries in those countries had been desecrated simultaneously. The French case was particularly revolting and involved the desecration not only of gravestones but of a recently-buried Jewish corpse. Within a day or so the culprit in Israel was arrested and he turned out to be a Jew. The French culprit was not arrested but the two vandalisms were coordinated to blame and discredit the French nationalistic party of Jean-Marie LePen, who had angered Jews by his unwillingness to salute them.

It now appears that a similar provocation, based on the same motive, has occurred in this country. Colville, Washington is located near the Idaho border and has been noted for the determination of its residents to resist government abuse. Many of those residents are naturally members or supporters oflocal militia units.

These are mostly normal people with regular jobs who have simply had enough threats, bullying and seizures by our treacherous, thieving employees in government. There has been no trouble in Colville and there have been no outrages committed by our employees since it became clear that Colville area residents now have a zero-tolerance policy with regard to official abuse. In fact, police in the eastern area of Washington have a similar hands-off policy for known militiamen as that which exists in Western Montana. The tide has definitely turned and this is extremely alarming to those who have worked so hard to disarm Whites. The following story demonstrates how desperate the anti-Whites have become.

Malcolm and Jill Friedman own two supermarkets in Colville. On the 13th of June they were kidnapped by a lone gunman in camouflage fatigues. "He told us he [and four others] had come to this area to perform hate crimes on selected individuals," said Malcolm Friedman. "They were hired to come here, scare the targeted groups and shoot up their homes so the liberal media would blame the whole thing on the local militia." The targeted groups were Jews (the Friedmans are converts to Christianity) and other minorities. The gunman told the Friedmans that he had been "abandoned and betrayed by the people I work for," and by his gang, which had apparently returned to the Midwest without him.

Who were the people he worked for? He claimed that his gang had been hired by "an extremist Jewish group" which wants a climate more favorable to gun control. He told the Friedmans that he was himself half Jewish. What he wanted since being dumped was to have enough money to get back to Wisconsin. The Friedmans came up with a few thousand dollars and he let them go after forcing them to drive him to Spokane, where he took their car and disappeared. He told the Friedmans that he was merely taking orders and was "just the tail of the dog" in a well-orchestrated plot of subversive activity. "He said he was supposed to be extracted from this area three days ago. In the meantime, he has been camping out and waiting," said Jill Friedman. "Technically, he felt that he was a dead man. He said that after escaping the area his first intention was to protect his loved ones who were in danger and kill three or four people who had betrayed him." The gunman said that "something major was going to happen in Sandpoint, Idaho this summer."

The gunman, according to Colville's Statesman-Examiner, told the Friedmans that it probably would not do much good to go to the media with such a wild story. "He told us, 'You can tell your story but they (the media) will make you out to be liars,'" Jill Friedman said. He was right for this is exactly what the Spokane Spokesman-Review did. The media always make the truthtellers out to be liars when the truth makes the enemy within look bad. The Friedmans, victimized twice in this affair, are extremely lucky to be alive for the desperate gunman stated that he was prepared to kill them both.

The enemy within is trying to blame the militia for criminal acts committed by the enemy. Fewer and fewer Americans believe the enemy's propaganda anymore. This makes the enemy apprehensive and increasingly reckless. The Big Lie is his main weapon and it worked well in Operation Desert Storm against foreigners. It failed in Oklahoma City against the militia, mainly because we knew better. The enemy's ruthless deception in Colville failed too and we are the wiser for it. The Friedmans must be congratulated and thanked for their warning to us of just how desperate the enemy within has become. Their warning will help us recognize the next act of desperation and identify the real criminals as agents of the enemy within. ❑

Herr Dietz: February 1995

Thank you for the issues of your publication Liberty Bell. I am an avid reader generally and the material you provided was immediately read through. During the Oliver era (his passing marked the end of the Age of Apostles), the good Doctor invariably gave us a few recent Liberty Bell numbers when we met together. The fact that we never paid for the privilege of this occasional readership is not a reflection of our valuation of worth of the publication; rather, it demonstrates that we are tight-fisted and philosophically in such high accord with the principles of popular Salvation espoused as to have a reduced need for current forms taken by those principles.

Nonetheless, your publication serves (potentially) a readership which arrives with the barren philosophies of Mongrelization, Calumnification, Deceit, Egalitarianism, Democracy, etc. and as one of the only sources presently available in any land for the antidote to these potent agencies of Genocide, we must support your publication with more than our occasional readership! The Lamp of Truth, which casts the Beam which defines Life from Death, must increasingly shine as the Force of Lies grows in Power. Just as the Apostolic Age has ended, so too could end the present Enlightenment should Liberty Bell fall prey to our neglect. I cannot express to you my depth of conviction that a Dark Age threatens, during which launch of publications remotely suggestive of Truth will be impossible; soon, your publication's viability will alone bare the Masquerade. Fortunately, Liberty Bell has so far survived the many challenges without my subscription: please find enclosed remittance for an annual subscription.

I certainly do not subscribe to the notion that an Information Age has dawned, during which the free-flowing exchange of ideas will usher in Global Prosperity. Such thinking is eagerly adopted by little boys and girls who find their hands on the reins of power in what today passes as "Our" government; thereafter, these informed persons tout new literacies as the key to success for the twenty-first Century. Our future success depends on racial Solidarity, the oldest literacy and all that will be left after the children finish ramming high tech Society into the brick Wall of Degeneracy.

Nor do I believe that "worst case scenario, all We need do is Nothing" as was proposed by a speaker at the recent Symposium in honor of Dr. Oliver. That prescription is certainly convenient, but it assures falsely and seems decidedly out of place at an event honoring One who did so much. For my part, daily living provides me with literally countless opportunities for promotion of the Cause. I believe it was Pitt who postulated that "Where Law ends, Tyranny begins;" in accord, we must structure our activities, building Solidarity in racial relations as the only alternative to the slide into Oblivion. I've always been indicted by the charge that "all that needs happen for evil to triumph is that good men do nothing."

The current popularity of The Bell Curve means less than nothing to me as an observer of Our slide into Oblivion. Most of those infected with HIV are thoroughly conversant with not only the cause of their fatal disease state, hut also with the most recent research findings, efforts to defeat the viruses, legislation to outlaw its effects, etc. Despite their knowledge, the HIV continues to ravage, exacting its price for the disgusting choices which led to most infections. So it is with the "controversial" issues currently vogued by The Bell Curve. Having an opinion on whether or not there is a connection between race and intelligence, and if so what should (if anything) be done about it, is roughly comparable accomplishment. Genetic infection (dysgenics) occurs, becomes epidemic in proportion, and then the host populations react by becoming suitably "educated." Because the damage is already done, studying the instrument of injury only enables self-pity, those saddest things, "which might have been." Any faggot might similarly bemoan of the failed bathhouse condom--some undoubtedly do!

I was recently cast by fate into the company of a particularly loathsome member of the local legal community, and listened while he "explained" that the bell curve accounted for the inept behavior of some Negro. Realizing that the bell curve had, through no involvement of this slob, given him the wits with which he had thus far fooled clients into paying his exorbitant fees, I tried to account for his tone of superiority, I could not. The racial heritage, to which he owes distinction, he does nothing to preserve. I have had sporadic contact with this person over the past ten years, and stand reasonably certain that he will die without ever having announced to a member of his race that their membership elevates, makes value for them in his eyes. He will not speak that basic Truth, because he does not know it, nor could he believe it. The fact of inherited intelligence as a competitive advantage is simply something to be lorded over others, not preserved by building racial Solidarity. Had the social prophylaxis which preserved the racial legacy of his forbears failed, he would be in the genetic position of that bathhouse queer! Only by cultivating humility can such a person begin to appreciate the need for validating the special worth of other members of his race, who are the indisputable trustees of the legacy his pride blinds him from acknowledging.

I unreservedly recommend to anyone the practice of crediting another with that other's racial heritage. I cannot say the same for discrediting along those lines. The former is always complimentary and tends toward building racial Solidarity; in contrast, the latter is usually taken as provocative insult. Of course, none of this applies to radically deracinated Caucasians (I cannot bring myself to use the term Aryan in reference to this too common sort), who will usually dispute that their race is worthy of remark, let alone praise. I cannot honestly say what, if anything, these racial wastrels do if actually told that their race is inferior, since I've never spoken that Lie, and usually the Enemies of Our People impugn OUR ENTIRE RACE, not simply one of Us. Even though the deracinated Caucasian might flinch at being saluted for his racial heritage, I reiterate that I unreservedly recommend the practice.

An excellent opportunity for the verbal salute is after performing a service for the Brother, who is disposed with gratitude for the deed. If situations permit, I've refused payment and explained that I feel full payment in helping a member of Our race. This really takes affect because it's usually the only time the Brother has received a racial dividend, and because it keeps us both out of the System.
If he insists on payment, we might talk about the Alien and the System, but I've had to accept payment when I really didn't want to, from Aryans whose Pride was not focused where it belongs. I'm always sure that the racial dividend offered left a positive message of Solidarity with the Brother. If We treat each other like pigeons, do We have any reason to expect better from members of the other races? If this practice is too radical for you, remember that Our future is only as strong as Our Blood, and that all the Money in Tel Aviv will not purify one Drop of Blood from the Mongrel. If you must, look at it as an Investment which will pay you well; better still, see it as your Duty to help a Brother in need. This racial Wilderness which is dawning calls for a Pioneer Spirit, not for clinging to the System which has excavated the Solidarity from beneath Our race. Needless to say, paying such a dividend to a member of another race is the rankest behavior of Renegades: all such "charity" must be condemned as misplaced. I have minimal business with other races, and always deal (at least) at arms length.

But I have digressed, Herr Dietz!
A few weeks ago Mr. Keith Whited called and we spent some time together discussing the testamentary dispositions of Dr. Oliver. Thereby, I became somewhat familiar with the provisions of the trust and will... If you would like to discuss anything regarding the Oliver estate with me, please feel free to contact me. You will never find a bill from me to you, but perhaps I can repay in some small part, by whatever service I can perform for you, the many services you have performed for Our people, and for the esteemed Dr. Oliver.
Until then I remain sincerely yours.

Anent April Liberty Bell, especially page 9. What Weber didn't mention was that the Bell Curve was written by experts. An Expert - "Those who avoid the minor mistakes on the way to the grand delusion." Now, the Bell Curve is very good at discussing the genetics part of intelligence. Since they are Establishment writers, believing that America is one of the best-fed nations in the world, they naturally would not mention the unthinkable. And that is, that food could have anything to do with intelligence.

This writer developed a pregnancy diet for the production of smart children and, over the ensuing thirty years, it's been tested many times, always successfully. That should be recognized as an accomplishment, in view of the seven million mentally deficient children in the United States, as reported by the Department of HEW.
It's quite obvious that the Bell Curve writers do not believe the old adage, "You are what you eat." I present some information from ancient writings of 2,500 years ago, that translates:
"The lazy one, full of pride and prejudice, despondent and dilatory in work....

shallow, dogmatic and narrow outlook, taking a part for the whole [a good definition of today's liberal], peverts everything, construing even wrong as right."

This is from a discussion of what happens to people when they eat stale food. And America lives on stale food. Nine our of ten Americans don't even know what the definition of "fresh" is, much less get fresh food to eat. Low quality food dulls the mind and negates the faculty of foresight. State food results in - "...construing even wrong as right..."- and is a good explanation for the increase in crime in the United States. You should read Barbara Reed-Stitt's book, Nutrional Guidelines for Correcting behavior. Barbara Reed-Stitt was a Probation Officer in Ohio for many years and she straightened out hundreds of kids by chaninging their diet. (Nutritional Guidelines for Correcting Behavior is available from Natural Press, P.O. Box 730, Manitowoc, WI 54221 - $10.00 postpaid).
You can read more about it in my recent book, Unhealthy Food = Unhealthy People, available from Harold Simpson, 4842 N. Magnolia, Chicago, Ill 60640-4710 - $15.00 postpaid. There is a lot more to th eintelligence problem than is outlined in the Bell Curve.

Yours truly,
Harold N. Simpson, Biochemist

Dear Mr. Dietz:
Enclosed is my sub renewal. Please accept my thanks for informing me of Mr. Oliver App's address. I was indeed able to obtain from him a copy of Dr. Austin App's autobiography, which I greatly enjoyed.
I was privileged to hav occasionally corresponded and spoken on the telephone with Dr. Revilo Oliver from 1977 until just prior to his passing. During my last conversation with him, I expressed my outrage at the ADL-Scientology coup at the IHR and asked him whether he shared my view. He replied simply: "Of course?", and went on to say that while the treachery of Weber and O'Keefe weas unexpected, Marcellus should have been fired years ago as soon as Willis Carto discovered that Marcellus was a Scientologist. Dr. Oliver said he agreed to serve on the IHR's advisory board in 1980 not out of any great love for Mr. Carto, but to further historical revisionism as a useful weapon against our common enemy.

Over the years, Dr. Oliver hinted to me that he had begun to write a history of the U.S. "right wing" in this century. Perhaps, Mr. Dietz, you might inquire of Mrs. Oliver if there are any of the professor's articles or writing that have not seen th elight of day? If so, then perhaps it would be possible to publish them.

Well, the long-expected offensive against the Aryan militias has begun, with the schweinerei in Oklahoma City so reminiscent of the King David Hotel bombing of 1947. This deed has all the earmarks of a joint Mossad-FBI "Cointelpro" operation, wherein this McVeigh fellow, a young Gordon Liddy type (I.e., more dogged fanaticism than either brains or character) is carefully selected and indoctrinated, and with his Army explosives background becaomes the perfect patsy, who can be counted on never to talk and reveal anything about his controllers.

At the time I write this (May 4th), ZOG has still not apprehended the swarthy, thick-lipped individual with the Middle-Eastern accent they've dubbed "John Doe II," although they found his stooge in no time! McVeigh's handler is probably back in Tel Aviv by now, as happened with Col. Harari, Manny Noriega's kosher supervisor, who skedaddled to the Unholy Land when forewarned of Bush's Panama invasion. Once again, the Golem is collared but Rabbi Loew flies the coup!

Within hours of this staged atrocity, as if on cue, Hillary's husband, the Jewsmedia, and the GOP Congress all began to howl for draconian new acts (many of which had already been introduced weeks before by Goy Ginrich) to round up and imprison those awful americans who have the temerity to even contemplate opposing God's Race by words or by arms. We are facing edicts that will make the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798 looko like a Golden Age of free thought!

It must be noted, however, that not all militias are "created equal." It was a major tactical blunder of the larger militias to put on armed displays of bravado for the Jewsmedia. Every time armed patriots posture ostentatiously in public, the hammer of ZOG descends on them. Will they never learn to heed the late Pastor Bob Miles' admonition to keep a low profile and away from cameras?! Also, a number of militias have been well infiltrated (perhaps even set up in several cases) by ADL_FBI agents provocateurs. The Spotlight (December 26th issue) ran a story from the London Sunday Telegraph on the "Texas Constitutional Militia," one of whose leaders, one Mark Bowers, boasts of being Jewish, spurns "neo-Nzis," and says his group wants to recruit "Blacks, Jews, and Latinos!" Potential joiners of such militias must ask plenty of questions, beginning with a demand to know their positions on race and the Jews. If they reply that they are "open to all good Americans, of if they equivocate on this baic issue, avoid them like the proverbial plague!

As we face the prospect of Ragnarok, whether we be Identity, Odinist, or Nationl Socialist, we can all appreciate that a Gentile convert of the Jews truly becomes "twofold more the child of hell" than those who converted him! Beware the enemy within as well as without!

Sincerely,
M.B., California

Dear George,

Have been meaning to write for some time. Both to thank you for sending Liberty Bell and to express a few words about Doctor Oliver.

Doctor Oliver's words will of course live on for as long as our kind exists. How long that may be is still an unanswered question. Savitri Devi would undoubtedly have expressed the birth, life and death of such a giant in cosmic terms that would embarrass or put to shame lesser literary talents. But confined as we are to the mundane terms of this unreasonable" age of reason," and Savitri having passed on to duties in Valhalla, let us just recognize that whether through genetic accident or the will of the Gods, a few of us were allowed to witness a superior man.

The tragedy is not that Dr. Oliver has passed on, for that is the way of nature. What saddens the heart is that due to the treason of our own kind there was such a small audience to read the words of a master. My sincere thanks to Liberty Bell for providing a way for at least a few to hear his wisdom. At least his intellect is preserved in horded and treasured copies. So if and when we win this struggle a pure light will shine.

Pethaps I should say when, not if, we win this struggle. I realize our enemies police powers, military powers, and media control are awesome and the future looks dark. But we should remember that the age of greatest Jewish power is always followed by the age of greatest Jewish arrogance, which is in turn followed by the pogrom. A time comes, as it has now, that their control is so obvious that it cannot be concealed. Then they can no longer trust gentiles to betray their own so they assume roles where they are easily identified. White men of ambition are excluded from advancement and rebel. Corruption is rampant. We are at that time. It is not Der Tag of the escapists, but the inevitable in nature's ever repeating cycles. So let us be of good heart and this cycle settle accounts for all time with the ancient agent of chaos.

I remain yours for the Fourteen Words, "We must secure the existence of our people and a future for White children."

Dear Mr. Dietz:

On the bottom of page 14 of your catalogue of March 1, 1995 you state, "An apology was extracted from Mr. Ford, but it appeared over the forged signature of--Harry Bennet." I have a book, They Never Called Him Henry, written by Bennet along with a professional writer, Paul Marcus, copyright 1951 by Paul Marcus. In that book Bennet states flatly that he forged Mr. Ford's signature on that document. Quote from page 56 of my paperback copy:

"(Arthur) Brisbane (Hearst Press), (Samuel) Untermeyer (High level Jew attorney), and Louis Marshall (of the American Jewish committee), drew up the fameous 'apology.' Called Mr. Ford. I told him an 'apology' had been drawn up, and added, it's pretty bad, Mr. Ford. Mr Ford said, 'You sign it and settle the thing up'. In the presence of Gaston Plantiff, I signed Mr Ford's signature to the document. The 'apology' was printed in the Dearborn Independent, and the paper ceased publication early in 1928."

So much for Harry Bennet's account of the affair. No clue as to who Gaston Plantiff was.
We learn from reading this whole book, by Bennet's own account, that Harry Bennet was a consistent traitor both to Mr. Ford, and to America, and a scheming and ruthless scoundrel all the way round. He was Mr. Ford's top executive officer for many years.

Dear Mr. Dietz:
Mr. Joseph D. Pryce's article in the May Liberty Bell, outlined his experience, but obviously he doesn't have the foggiest idea of his basic problem.
Mr. Pryce's basic problem is that he is trying to argue with people who are living on stale food, the older ones having done so since the end of World War II and he has no understanding of the effect of stale food upon the mind.
Now, an American will tell you that food has no effect upon the mind and that just displays his ignorance of the basics of food. Ifhe would get an Oriental to "let his hair down" and talk about food, he would first be told that all foods have a medicinal effect and that foods do affect the mind and personality. The Hindus wrote about it 2,500 years ago in the 14th thru 17th chapters of the "Bhagavad Gita". (Note: some of the modern translations are not clear. The best translation is probably that of M. Gupta from Allahabad, India.)
The "Gita" tells that those who live on stale food either have their religious instincts perverted, or lost. Their mind does not function properly, they take "a part for the whole" (a good definition of a Liberal), they lose the faculty of foresight and become full of pride and prejudice, despondent and dilatory in work.
The sad fact is that most Americans live on stale food and if they get anything fresh, it is purely by accident. Nine out of ten Americans don't even know the meaning of the word "fresh". If Mr. Pryce can answer these three questions, he'd have a lot better understanding of his problem.
1)What are the three prime qualities of food?
2}Why is each quality of food needed by a human?
3}What happens to a human when any one of these qualities is missing from his food?
Now, most of these people he talks to are nominally Christians, either Left-wing or Right-wing. He could gig them by telling them that they just don't believe what they pray and that is easy to prove.
This is covered more thoroughly in my book. Unhealthy Food = Unhealthy People.
There is an old saying, "You are what you eat," and when a country lives on stale food, it really gets into big trouble. There will be no recovery until the food is improved. The American food rates the lowest in quality of any national diet in the world and Americans just ignore it.

Yours very truly

Harold N. Simpson, Biochemist

A Book Review by THE BOOK READER, Spring 1995: Unhealthy Food = Unhealthy People, by Harold N. Simpson, Peter Jon Simpson, paper, $15. Ancient Rules for Modern Food. "We are our own gravediggers. With our teeth." We are what we eat. And that's never been more apparent than today, with consumers caught in a maelstrom of advice. Wisdom, common sense and science win out in Simpson's book, which combines his 60 year experience as a biochemist with food rules from cultures much older than ours. He examines the history of disease and nutrition, the technological "improvements" in the handling and disbibution of stuff we eat. Fresh? Forget it. "Processing and refining foods makes for long shelf life, high profit and a lot of business for the medical profession. It is a disaster for the consumer." The nutshell: sickness in America comes mostly from degenerative diseases caused by stale, unhealthy food. Logic and evidence drive Simpson's arguments. Especially his classification of four classes of unhealthy food. One, food contaminated not just by salmonella and other bacteria, but by chemicals. Second, food that is spoiled, with poisonous by-products. The fridge inhibits spoiling but not the third problem: oxidized, stale food. "The worst offenders are unsaturated fats...which produce free radicals." Fourth, unwholesome food in which vital nutrients are processed-out. Simpson lists "calendars" for food freshness, inspects the Staple American Diet, and lists seven Time Bombs to avoid. He's not a vegetarian, but insists an freshness. "All of our fabulous new ways of keeping food 'fresh' don't." Pervasive advice for modern America.

Terrence Petty
c/o Associated Press
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Petty:
Recently there appeared in the newspaper a sympathetic article you had penned concerning former American GI's traveling to a high school in Munich, Germany, to relate their tales of the liberation of Dachau. They spoke to a 'rapt' audience, so you advised.
While your narrator, Dee Eberhard, a 20 year old soldier at the time of Dachau's liberation, admits to seeing a German soldier "kicked" to death by an inmate, he does not mention the greater atrocity committed there by his fellow GI's of the 157th Regiment, 45th Infantry Division. An atrocity that is at odds with every known wartime convention. Perhaps he never knew such took place. I have been a soldier in two wars. I realize how narrow the scope, how little one sees, firsthand, of the big picture. I also know how readily government hides its ugly truths.

For your information, elements of the US 157th Regiment, under the command of an officer, lined up German personnel, including teen-aged German guards, at Dachau and machine-gunned to death 520 of a total of 560. Your fellow GIs, Dee, did this after those high-school lads had laid down their weapons and raised their hands! (Please view enclosed US Army file photo).

No one was sentenced to be hanged for this brutal, callous act as was the case at Malmedy, where Germans shot some GI prisoners in the heat of battle when those prisoners refused an order to stand pat and began running away. In fact, no one was sentenced to anything for the killing of the Dachau teens. The entire incident was hushed up and conveniently forgotten until the arrival of truth-seeking, revisionist historians.

My three years of intensive research re the second world war has convinced me that the atrocities committed by the Allies and their various resistance units, outweigh in violence and viciousness those committed by the AXIS powers. (Russia was a darling ally, remember?)

How deceitfully primed we were to fight our racial kin. Why, Hitler was dangerously near to robbing us of our freedoms, so said the lying Roosevelt! What utter nonsense! The Nazis couldn't even get across the Channel—much less the Atlantic. All perceptive men now know there was no USA interest served in slaughtering Germans. Although we didn't know it at the time, the Jewish media now infers we were there solely to liberate Jews. Well, you couldn't have sold me on that mission, brother. International Jewry declared war on Germany in 1934 and thereby lost its innocence. The Reich reacted normally. (see clip)

It seems to me that fairness dictates that American high school seniors be given the opportunity of listening to German veterans tell their experiences. Talk about rapt attention! I'll bet the auditorium couldn't hold the students! Most of us are bored, Terrence, with hearing the same dull, one-sided, Zionist-distorted story re WW II. I know I am.

May I suggest: Hans Schmidt, a former soldier in the Waffen SS, now living in the USA; Ernst Zündel, of Toronto who put the holocaust on trial; and Thies Christophersen, a German soldier who survived the "hate crime of the century": the fire-bombing of Dresden, as candidates to speak? Thies lives in Denmark now; he fled Germany to stay out of jail. His crime? He said he doubted the natural-law violating tales of the Holocaust. That's the extent of his crime, sports fans! Just expressing his opinion. "Oh, my!", say the Jews and their dupes. "What a ghastly crime! Burn him at the stake! Twice!"

Yes, T. Petty, if you or someone can arrange such a visit to American high schools, what a great leap forward for truth and fairplay! This ridiculous myth that world war II was a magnificent joust fought by knights in shining armour: the Allies, and demonic ogres: the AXIS, needs to be shattered. That war was an absolute disaster for whites! Only Jews gained power and profit from it.

The ball is bouncing jubilantly in your court, old chappie. What?? You say the sly, evil tribe that holds sway in the USA will not allow such fairness?? Well, desert them, Terrence!

LETTER TO CEOs of

April 29, 1995

ABC Television
CBS Television
NBC Television
CNN Television

Sirs:

As in the final, decadent days of Rome, a modern, bloated, incompetent, fearful, tyranny serves its populace huge dollops of circuses and games in order to deflect attention away from its ugly self. Unlike Rome, whose messages traveled at carrier-pigeon speed, our tyranny's distractions race at the speed of light... right into living rooms all across the land. Packs of yapping, nervous, television lapdogs fawningly bring their master's edicts and misinformation to life on the TV screen. Latterday Romans such as Flavius 'flatulence' Rather, Fluvial 'weepy' Jennings, Gaius 'gassy' Brocaw , and Janus 'hanoi-e-o rose' Fonda are typical of the barkers at the NETS. They are now in the enviable position of serving their country while they serve their NET. With the fall of the White House in 1992, to the alien forces of revenge, deception, greed and myth who own the media, the NETS and the government are now one and the same.

Yes, as this society disintegrates a la the Soviet Union; as the mores of the savage Africans spread; you media moguls have been instructed to blunt any stirring of protest by the Indo-European American (the Aryan American) by attempting a soothing balm of increased television bilge of bare-butts and bosh. Typical of this attempt is your nonstop coverage of that sickening farce: the O.J. trial. (Will McVeigh have his "people" as jurors? Old Juice does. Oh, well. Just asking).

With the tragic bombing in Oklahoma City, you people have gone ape. What repetition! What outrageous accusations! What callous disregard for decency and proportion! Actually, with the ultraviolent programs you NETS air everyday, most people thought the Oklahoma City bombing was just regular programming until the sound track got their attention. Only the truly brain dead find anything redeeming in the audio-visual slop you serve.

Regarding the atrocity committed at OK City, it appears to be a political act. Menachem Begin, who blew up the King David hotel in Jerusalem in the late forties, thereby killing and maiming scores of British military men and others, claimed the bombing was a political statement, and that the fault for it lay squarely on the shoulders of the British: the victims. The Israelis enthusiastically agreed. Begin's blowing innocents to bits didn't sully his resume with fellow Jews; they made him Prime Minister.

I've always been cursed with a mind that tries to reason along a straight and fair path. I've never understood this business that for a Jew to blow up innocents, it's OK. But, for anyone else to do it, man! it's bad! My poor brain and heart finds all crushing of innocents bad...period! Just a normal Aryan trait.

Nevertheless, all situations aren't the same. The hitman is really less guilty of the crime than the creep who ordered the hit. Right? Even for a horrible crime like OK City, the blame for it may be wider than the alleged bomber, Mr. McVeigh. However, McVeigh, if guilty, went a light-year too far. He deserves execution...as did Menachem Begin. There is never an excuse for terrorising the innocent. The guilty, well, that's intellectual grist for another day at the mill.

What is causing the rage of the white man today? Could his frustration come from finding his freedoms being taken away from him? (Civil Rights Acts) His life threatened by out-of-control goon squads? (Waco, Ruby Creek, Brunswick? His property confiscated without due process? (RICO) His children torn from him and fed lies about their race, their history, their worth? (The disgusting toadying to the neanderthals by school and church) The tax burden he bears to feed an indolent subclass; subhumans whose only skills are copulating and consuming? Or is it the deliberate, endless, ubiquitous, evil indoctrination of miscegenation that so alarms him? I think it is the latter. Race-mixing means his death. He sees the malignant force that now controls his country, driving him to ruin—even to racial suicide. The new mission at Zionist control is to belittle him, to sneer at his decency, to destroy his sense of values, to deny him his pride in race and heritage, to actually steal his nation from him; a nation that was his until 1948. Little wonder that he has finally become aware of the deadly peril that exists. The ballot box has ceased as a means of recovering what is rightfully his. Zionists, and their Clinton-esque style puppets, will never relinquish power peacefully. They have already nullified his people's pitiful, little 'poll' success of last November.

I am only a lonely, perceptive individual; neither a follower, nor a followed. I know only what I hear, read, and observe. But, my antennae are sensitive. CEOs, you, and those you serve, are to blame for the dispair and intense rage that builds. You oiled the slide that leads to degeneracy. You, and the feds, may be as guilty of Oklahoma City as whoever parked the van. You have abused white society, especially white males, mercilessly. Your relentless goading; your painful barbs can drive some to despair, You are guilty as charged. As Alistair Cooke has warned, a civil war is now a possiblity. Kipling once wrote, "beware the Saxon when he at last arouses." The Saxon alarm is ringing. Ringing!

Further laws and repression will be futile. The feds/media has lost its moral authority. Your moral authority is gone! Jews, and their Aryan allies, now totally dominate US society. The good news? The enemy's face is bare at last. Race is blood, and blood is thicker than water. Race transcends borders. The great Teutonic-Saxon mass is stirring around the world. Even ZOG's military forces are riddled with Aryans who are determined their race shall not perish in a muddy-faced

E.H., Arkansas

We must sympathize with innocent victims of the bombing of the federel building in Oklahoma City on 19 April.

However, if those who were responsible for the bombing are Islamic patriots, thoughtful, well-informed and fair-minded people will recognize in the bombing an act of retribution for the incomparably greater destruction and loss of life for which "our" government is responsible during its war against the people of Iraq, a country which had done us no harm and which had been officially assured of American neutrality in tha case of a war between Iraq and Kuwait.

The terrible loss of life in Oklahoma City will perhaps have to be regarded as one of the costs of our ruthless support of the Zionists in their hostile actions toward their Islamic neighbors.

Dear Ms. Metaksa,

Greetings and salutations!

It is my understanding that the Board of Directors of The NRA has now shifted the responsibility to you regarding the decisions and activities of the Institute For Legislative Action.

Specifically we hear that it is now up to you, as Executive Director of the ILA, to determine whether or not to pursue certain legal actions through the courts in the effort to retain our God given right to self defense as affirmed in our Constitution and Bill of Rights—the supreme law of our land, which we inherited from our ancestors.

All good people want a just solution to the many complicated issues that loom before us. And personally I hope that something can be done through the democratic process to protect these rights in a politically correct fashion, but considering the fact that the government of this country used its police and military forces to wipe out a church full of people in broad day light and on TV, I just do not see how it is possible. In my estimation you have acquired an almost impossible task.

These are times similar to the times before that tried men's souls. Who wants to believe that our own government is guilty of such a heinous crime? Who wants to believe, or even consider that another Waco could happen again? But the fact is: unless we act to prevent it, another will surely occur. And what about Sammy Weaver, the fourteen year old kid shot in the back by the FBI with a machine gun?

Having read most of your recent editorials in the American Rifleman I know that you are sincere and totally committed to the right to self-defense. You are working with the greatest pro gun, pro second amendment organization in America, the NRA, and with it I believe that the job of securing the Second Amendment can be done, but only if you and the Directors use every one and everything at your disposal in the fight. But let us not suffer under illusions, this is a colossal undertaking.

We are very formnate in this endeavor to have Kirk Lyons and the CAUSE Foundation struggling along side of us.

Mr. Lyons has of his own initiative instigated proceedings against the perpetrators to the crime against the family of Randy Weaver and those of the Branch Davidians.

Mr. Lyons struggles for us and our rights too.

This is a fight that we cannot afford to lose and I urge you to fund the actions he has undertaken with the money entrusted to you for such a just purpose. I am certain that he will deliver more good for each dollar spent than anyone else on the planet.

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I was just recently given a copy of the Liberty Bell by a friend of mine who was in Costa Rica on a visit. It was Octobeer '91, just a bit late, but I still enjoyed every article in it and was able to see how most of the predictions it contained were well on the way of becoming standard form especially the Immigration issue. Let it be known if standing behind the White Race and Sovereignty of our Nation makes me a racist, then I am one and damn proud to be. I probably have the only Confederate Battle Flag flying in the country of Costa Rica and am also proud of that and IT.

I have a U.S. mailing address thru Miami, Fl. and would like your subscription rates, I feel sure they have changed by no. I will takle a chance and enclose $5.00 for an upto date sample copy if you still send them out.

Hoping to hear from you soon,

Dear Comrade:

You are right. I did come to the notice of ZOG last year and served my time in Butzbach, but instead of throwing away the key they "only" find me DM80,000. After I was released I came home to find that my dear and loving "German" wife had left me and emptied our bank accounts.

It is a good think that I still had some money in the U.S. For her I am now only a "Nazi-Bock"—what else is new? So you see, George, other people's lives go from rags to riches, but my life has always been the other way around. Oh, well, no one will ever be able to say that the Count was a damn materialist. sometimes I think it would have been better if I had remained in the U.S. and given you 80% of my money, but other times I am happy to be home in the Vaterland. We have many good peoples here, and the struggle goes on!!

Germany has changed since the last time I was here, and not for the better. Kleinkahl is a sleepy Dorf in the mountains of Unterfranken and looks much like West Virginia. It is about 24km from Aschaffenburg.

Last week a volkstreuer publisher was my guest for a few days. He seems to think that it would be good for me if I would start writing again. So in a few weeks I may start on a book, and I think it would help me to sort out my life. I am still young and if it takes two or three years to finish, so what. I have many great people in my life—from Rockwell to Rudel. These encounters should be put in book form for young fighters! If it had not been for the books of the Front generation, would I know the truth today? Would I be a National Socialist? It is my duty to undertake this, and when I am no longer, maybe my book or books will continue the fight against Juda/Rome. Books are living beings in a sense.

George, please send me the new address for Thies Christophersen in Denmark. I wish you and your family the best!

Jarah B. Crawford used to preach Jesus Christ at the farm of Bob Miles. Now, like a reformed drunk, he preaches anti-Christ. He dug up my Libeerty Bell essay of 15 years ago and let me have his ire in the kisser (by letter).

I continue to wonder about a 'Movement' that feeds off religious denunciations. Anything I do to serve the Aryan race is meaninless as long as I remain a Christian. That's Crawford's idea of it.

If I had said years ago that Jesus was a humbug, Crawford would have denounced me. Now he denounces me for the opposite reason.

Dear Sir:
Book order enclosed. - It is good to know that amongst this sea of morons celebrating their foul victory over the guardian forces of Western Civilization, there are others like myself who realize that only through the survival and eventual triumpf of National Socialism can there be hope in our poor, Jew-tormented homelands.
Let these hordes of morons gloat over their destruction of the finest and most noble societies our race has ever produced. How different were the Axis nations of National Socialist Germany and Fascist Italy and those other European peoples who joined them in their struggle for a better world. Compare them with the societies of the so-called 'Allied' countries. Russia, a land of brutalized, illiterate peasantry, led by a monster devoid of any finer values whatsoever. America, totally in the grip of Jewish Finance Capitalism, led by a twisted cripple. Finally, Britain a class-dominated society, a bastion of reaction, where a drunken, fat pig of an archreactionary had crawled himself to the top of the corrupt dunghill.
For a moment I would like to describe this particularly putrid British wartime society. Apart from a few honourable exceptions such as Sir Oswald Mosley and his followers and various other individuals, as the British member of parliament, Captain Ramsay, etc., who had been arrested and without trial sent to various British concentration camps. Yes, concentration camps, which were a British creation in the first place. The only Britons who were still free were those who were beyond the grasp of Churchill and his cronies,serving the true cause, trying desperately to bring reason to a deaf British public now totally immersed in a cloud of deceit and lies. As one of those far-sighted broadcasters, William Joyce accurately said there's an ill Church in the land of Churchill. Whilst other volunteered to join the British Free Corps to fight alongside their European brothers in the joint crusade against Bolshevism.
But these, as I have already stated, were the exceptions. For the most part the British consisted of the upper class chinless wonders who made up the British officer class. Beneath them were the great mass who made up the other ranks, the traditional Tommy, brave but basically stupid and so thick that they were incapable of understanding or appreciating anything beyond the most crudest level.
I am writing this letter on their VE-Day; as I said, let them have their circus. It is but a trasitory respite from their oppressive condition, it cannot sustain them as the solid and enduring creed of National Socialism and the spirit of Adolf Hitler invigorates us.

Yours sincerely,
A.C., England

Dear Landsmann:
I enclose $50 for another year of Liberty Bell. The Jewsmedia keeps telling us "there is no inflation," yet I notice prices are going up constantly. In particular, this year there have been massive increases in the pr4ice of vegetables, paper, postage and gasoline. Of course the biggest inflation has been in the stock market, which has been pumped up some 15% in the last six months. From what I have been able to find out, the US government has been borrowing foreign currency, buying dollars with it to support the US currency and then using the dollars to buy stocks. This allows the insider to sell their shares to the government at the top of the market. They then put the money into treasury bonds, thus reducing their interest rate. The government has thus selectively hyperinflated the financial markets with borrowed money. Please note that the value of the dollar has gone down in tandem with the rise in the markets. So far this hyperinflation has not reached general prices but it is coming. Meanwhile, foolish members of the Mutual Fund industry have been pouring public money into the stock bubble thus setting the public, pension funds, etc. up for the kill when the market collapses. At some point soon a major disaster will be arranged to give the market an excuse to collapse and the government will stop supporting the markets. At that time there will be a panic collapse of the markets of 50% or more. Take a tip from Clinton and keep your money in Swiss Franks and gold like he does.
The media campaign over the Oklahoma City bombing is still on. Fortunately, several things slipped thru the censorship, the most important of which were the seismographic evidence of two explosions and the disscovery of at least two unexploded bombs inside the building. Bomb experts quoted in Spotlight have pointed out that there was no fertilizer residue, so the bomb could not have been a fertilizer bomb. Anyway, anyone who has ever handled explosives can see the building was blown up by charges attached to the main support pillars. The bombers used Det Cord (explosive cord) to tie the charges together and blow them all at once using one detonator. The first explosion broke the Det Cord and so only one charge in the second row exploded. Had they all exploded, the whole building would have been pulled down into a 3-story rubble pile.
It is obvious the building was bombed by an intelligence agency. As to which agency, I knew that the moment I heard that all 17 or so of the ATF employees in the building di not show up for work that day! Now I hear that the FBI employees did not sow up either! That makes it pretty obvious who bombed the building. A confirmation of which is the speed which that "evil, coward" Clinton moved to take poolitical advantage of the bombing. He was obviously prepared in advance. And what a show he put on! He even cried over the children he had murdered! The Jewish media outdid themselves in mawkishness. You would have thought they were talking about their beloved Holyhoax! Jewess Lyn Samuels actually said on the air that "Clinton was too good for the American people." I had to shut off the radio at that point. The mind boggles at imagining a country that Clinto is "too good" for. Even Israel may not be that vile!

From the media campaign alone you can tell there are going to be more terrorist acts which will be blamed on the Jews' enemies. Soon the markets will crash wiping out the accumulated wealth of Americans for the last 50 years. When that crash comes, the guilty Jews will need scapegoats, foreign and domestic, to blame it on.

Your truly,
S.R., New York State

Dear Editor:

An Open Letter To The National Rifle Association:

It's painfully obvious that Rep, Charles Schumer (D-N.Y,) wants to do away with the Second Amendment and he seems to devote his every waking hour to attacking the NRA for daring to defend our Constitutional right to bear arms. The only mystery is why the NRA lets Schumer get away with it.

Rep. Schumer endlessly insists that federal, state and local police negate the need for any American citizen to bear arms. He sees no need for the citizenry to be armed as a check and balance to the tyranny of government as was clearly intended by our founding fathers. And now he desperately tries to justify the paramilitary assaults by the BATF and the FBI on American citizens. What is truly amazing about his performance is that he does all of this while treading water in a sea of hypocrisy!

Although Rep. Schumer is unalterably opposed to Americans having guns and he falsely claims that semi-automatic rifles and shotguns are "assault weapons"—a military designation for a "light machine gun"—he supports the "right" of the secret police of a foreign nation to roam the United States armed with real "assault weapons" and "diplomatic immunity."

In the final pre-election months of the dismal Carter Administration, the desperation reached such a fever pitch that Carter sought to win support from the all powerful Israeli Lobby by an executive order that gave the Mossad, the Israeli Secret Police, the "right" to roam the United States armed with fully automatic weapons. They carry "Uzi" sub-machine guns and "Uzi" machine pistols—weapons restricted in the United States to police "SWAT" teams.

No truly "sovereign" nation on this planet permits foreigners to carry weapons, and the British public was properly outraged when Margaret Thatcher permitted two American Secret Service agents the right to carry .38 cal. revolvers while guarding President Reagan, even though Reagan had narrowly survived an assassination attempt.

Not to be outdone by Carter, the Democrat controlled Congress, in full panic, then gave the Israeli Mossad "diplomatic immunity." "Diplomatic immunity" is reserved for senior members of a foreign embassy, since anyone with diplomatic immunity cannot be tried for any crime. Foreign diplomats have run down and killed American citizens in the streets and escaped any form of punishment,

No other nation on this planet has surrendered its national sovereignty so pathetically as has the United States of America.

A great world power like the principality of Liechtenstein is more of a "sovereign" nation than the United States.

Each and every year, Amnesty International routinely condemns the Israeli Mossad for "assassinations" and "torture." We have over two-hundred Mossad agents right here in the United States. They have offices in most large cities. They go about armed with machine guns. And with "diplomatic immunity" they literally have a "license" to shoot down unarmed Americans in the streets—like Palestinians!

Most importantly, their "rights" to weapons and diplomatic immunity are defended by Rep. Charles Schumer and others in the Israeli Lobby.

When Schumer rails about the NRA being a powerful lobby in Washington, it's the height of hypocrisy. The NRA Lobby is puny when compared to the most powerful lobby in Washington: The Israeli Lobby. Even the NRA is terrified of it. So terrified that the NRA dare not demand Schumer explain why the Mossad's "assassins" and "torturers" have a "right" to roam the United States armed with automatic weapons and diplomatic immunity, while the American citizens must be disarmed. Having Schumer try to defend the Mossad would completely destroy his credibility with the American public. If only the NRA can find the guts and backbone to do it.

Sincerely,
Jos. G. Stano

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 — except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. For your copy (Order No. 03014) send $10.00 plus $2.00 for postage and handling) to:

If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations.

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

DO YOUR PART TODAY—HELP FREE OUR WHITE RACE FROM ALIEN DOMINATION!

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

Racial-Nationalist Adoption/Adaption Process

By Robert A. DeMarais, Ph.D.

In the June 1995 Liberty Bell, Joseph D. Pryce offered the story of his own conversion to racial nationalism (RN). He suggested someone analyze his case history to develop a theory of conversion. The theory would be used to aid the transformation of others.

Being, perhaps, the only racial-nationalist marketing professor, the duty falls to me. This article offers a preliminary framework for the process of conversion to racial nationalism. It is based on established theory of adoption of innovation. In addition to Mr. Pryce's conversion, I will review the conversion of Adolf Hitler.

Converting to racial nationalism is not an event. It is a process lasting several years. Because racial nationalism is so different from the mainstream view, one cannot adopt it the same way we might adopt the use of the microwave oven. Conversion is a struggle of the will. One must adapt himself as well as adopt racial-nationalist ideas.

Conversion stories are critical to the movement. A defining moment for the politically unattached Hitler was the reading of Anton Drexler's booklet, My Political Awaking. In turn, millions have been deeply affected by reading the story of Hitler's conversion.

Mein Kampf (My Struggle) is not the struggle of a hungry worker with communist labor thugs. Neither is it about street and beer hall brawls. The struggle was one of Hitler's conversion to and mastery of the beliefs, concepts and strategies of national socialism.

Racial Nationalism Conversion Process

Individuals adopting and adapting to racial-nationalism (RN) go through a five-stage process that one can remember with the acronym AIETA — Awareness, Interest, Evaluation, Trial, and Adoption (See Figure 1).

» Awareness. Prospect becomes aware that a RN philosophy and movement exists, but is not motivated to seek information.

» Interest. Prospect is motivated/stimulated to seek information about RN. Ends when he actively seeks information.

» Evaluation. Prospect considers whether to try RN as a personal creed. End when he thinks, "Yes, this may be for me."

» Trial. Prospect tries to improve his estimate of the worth of RN. May attend meetings, tentatively join an organization, or just think about the risk versus reward of being a RN.

» Adoption Decides to become a full and dedicated racial nationalist.

In the conversion process, impersonal information sources—pamphlets, signs, advertisements—tend to be more important in the early process stages. Personal sources tend to be more important in the later stages. For example, people like to be personally invited (even if by letter) to attend a meeting or join an organization. Surprisingly, people view radio programs as semi-personal and, thus, radio programs are important in all stages.

Recruit Echelons

All people do not adopt a new idea at the same rate. They convert in groups or echelons. Early converts to racial nationalism have different personalities and thus the recruiting methods must change as the movement grows. Furthermore, each of these echelons has different skills to offer the movement. For example, many of the leaders will not come from the first echelon of converts. We must divide those who will eventually adopt RN into five echelons.

If 10,000,000 activists will eventually accept RN, then the first echelon of 2.5% or 250,000 patriots are the Vanguard. This percentage is somewhat arbitrary and is based on the properties of a bell curve. The next 12.5% or 1,250,000 are the Leader Patriots. The third echelon of 35% are the Early Mass Patriots and is followed by the fourth echelon of 35%, the Late Mass Patriots. The last echelon of 15% are the Rear Guard Patriots.

Vanguard Patriots. Almost everyone in the RN movement in 1995, is a Vanguard Patriot. As compared to later converts to RN, the Vanguard is more willing to take risks, either because they are naturally brave or because they are relatively unattached. Unattached means unattached to anything that makes one risk averse: unattached to family responsibilities, financial obligations, church, fraternal group, social contacts, or a politically sensitive job.

Those in the Vanguard are more educated and use information sources outside of the mainstream media and their local community. They read. Initial contact with most will be in some written form—print advertisement, pamphlet, or book. The new radical radio industry offers a new medium to reach these information seekers.

Vanguard coverts are independent idealists and are hard to organize. Generally, they don't swim in the mainstream of society and thus have fewer social contacts and are not particularly good communicators. Most are lacking in leadership ability. On the positive side, they are intelligent, and have strong will and courage.

It is absolutely essential that the movement support the few good leaders who will come from this group. If the Vanguard is not won and their force is not harnessed, the movement will never succeed. The second group, Leader Patriots, will not join the battle until the Vanguard is heavily engaged.

Leader Patriots. This group is called Leaders for two reasons. First, they are in front of the main body or mass of patriots. More significantly, they are a group of natural leaders who will fill many of the critical mid-level and high-level posts in any successful movement.

Although the Leader Patriots are more risk adverse than the Vanguard, they also have great courage. This group is bold but not reckless. They will join only when they perceive a reasonable possibility of victory.

Leader Patriots have many social contacts and are an integral part of their communities. Many are now leaders and they have the managerial expertise and financial resources to rapidly expand the movement. They are respected sources of information (opinion leaders) and role models.

Leader Patriots read, though not quite so much as the Vanguard, and their sources are somewhat more mainstream. Personal contact is important in recruiting Leader Patriots; many will not commit until they have talked to a movement leader. They are excellent communicators.

In a sense, the Leader Patriots legitimize the movement. Once they have been won over, the later groups are virtually guaranteed to follow. But where? One risk is that some of the Leader Patriots may seek to coopt the movement for their own purposes. The Vanguard must firmly establish direction and buttress its key leaders before the Leader Patriots join the battle.

Early Mass Patriots. The Early Mass is the most deliberate group. They will convert when they perceive the battle is necessary and the RN movement is likely to win. They are slightly above average in education are socially active but are not leaders.

Early Mass Patriots rely on informal information sources and are likely to have contact with and follow the Leader Patriots. Direct contract with recruiters (salesmen) will be successful in converting this group.

Late Mass Patriots. This group is below average in education and will be skeptical about the movement. They are the most susceptible to social pressure. They may not lead, but when the pressure is on, they will not be left behind. They belong to few organizations, are not opinion leaders, and don't read.

Rear Guard Patriots. The Rear Guard are tradition-bound and loyal to something else—church, Populists, Republicans, or the current government. They are outright suspicious of new movements and will not convert until the object of their existing loyalty collapses. They may arrive late for many of the battles but once converted they will become intensely loyal.

The Rear Guard tends to be the least educated and least socially active and is oriented toward their local community. In sharp contrast to a Rear Guard Patriot, we now turn to a discussion of the conversion of a Vanguard Patriot.

The Conversion of Pryce

In this section, the conversion of Joseph Pryce is briefly summarized within the framework of the RN conversion process.

Pre-Awareness. As One would expect with many Vanguard Patriots, Pryce was a reader. During the pre-awareness stage, Mr. Pryce discovered many inconsistencies in the establishment view—for example, (1) in stories about Germany and Hitler, (2) in conservatives' unwillingness to admit the Jewish-Bolshevik connection, and (3) in publications' differential treatment of Hitler versus Stalin and Mao.

Awareness. Through a "fortunate series of accidents" he found Nietzsche and Wagner and experienced an "excitement of discovery."

Interest. By combining these accidents with his interest in western civilization, he developed into a Germanophile, devouring writings covering the spectrum from Freud to books about Hitler. The clear anti-German bias he detected, led him to begin actively evaluating alternatives.

Evaluation. "What was I to do? Could I become a Nihilist...?" Although at this point he doesn't say, Pryce was probably reading some National Socialist material. Once he had tentatively eliminated the other alternatives, he might have begun to ask himself questions like, 'Am I becoming a racialist?' If so, he was moving into the trial stage.

Trial. At this point, Pryce would have made a tentative decision, but realizing the potential risk—the social and financial cost of conversion—he must have been mentally trying on National Socialism. He may have attended some meetings or answered some ads. While most fail at this stage, he passed to the final stage.

Adoption. The decision process took several years but Pryce was now a committed racial nationalist. One or more moments must have marked his conversion—joining an organization, giving a speech, writing an article, or openly tell his friends he had made the decision.

On adoption, Mr. Pryce discovered a new reality with a real and natural vision of the future. For example, from his new perspective he now realized that mainstream Christians were "groveling in the mud." Let us turn to another story of a Vanguard Patriot's conversion.

The Conversion of Hitler

Hitler's fascinating story of conversion is told in the chapter

"Years of Study and Suffering in Vienna" in Mein Kampf (below page numbers reference the Manheim translation)

Pre-Awareness. At an early age, Adolf Hitler was a dedicated German nationalist, an avid reader, and was interested in the meaning of history. He was angered by political issues and the lies in the press, but tried to keep silent.

However, "Thus far I did not so much as suspect the existence of organized opposition to the Jews" (p. 52). "For the Jew was still characterized for me by nothing but his religion, and therefore, on the grounds of tolerance, I maintained my rejection of religious attacks..." (p. 52). Hitler's unwillingness was magnified by the low credibility he assigned to anti-Semitic newspapers.

Awareness. "For a few hellers I bought the first anti-Semitic pamphlet of my life. Unfortunately, they [the pamphlets] all proceeded from the supposition that in principle the reader knew or even understood the Jewish question to a certain degree" (p. 56). Besides the pamphlet's tone was also bad. [Perhaps they used terms like ZOG that were not defined or supported and initially seemed crude to Hitler.]

Interest. However, based on the pamphlet, Hitler was motivated to evaluate, but not without great mental anguish. "I relapsed for weeks at a time, once for even months. The whole thing seemed to me so monstrous, the accusations so boundless, that, tormented by the fear of doing injustice, I again became anxious and uncertain" (p. 56).

Evaluation. As part of his evaluation, Hitler began to observe Jews in Vienna in a different and more critical light. He was now seeing Jews in their own culture and concluded: Zionism is incompatible with German Nationalism.

He began to evaluate the sources of the decay of German society and morals. "The fact that nine tenths of all literary filth, artistic trash, and theatrical idiocy can be set to the account of a people, constituting hardly one hundredth of all the country's inhabitants, could simply not be talked away; it was the plain truth" (p. 58).

"And I now began to examine my beloved 'world press' from this point of view" (p. 58). He noted that the writers were Jews. "Gradually I became uncertain" (p. 59).

Trial. Hitler now had made a preliminary decision but was carefully observing his world to confirm or deny it. "My views with regard to anti-Semitism thus succumbed to the passage of time, this was my greatest transformation of all. It cost me the greatest inner soul struggles, and only after months of battle between reason and my sentiments did my reason begin to emerge victorious. Two years later, my sentiment had followed my reason, and from then on became its most loyal guardian and sentinel" (p. 55).

"A thousand things that I had hardly seen before now struck my notice, and others, which had previously given me food for thought, I now learned to grasp and understand" (p. 58).

"I no longer avoided discussion of the Jewish question; no, now I sought it" (p. 60).

"When I recognized the Jew as the leader of the Social Democracy, the scales dropped from my eyes. A long soul struggle had reached its conclusion" (p. 60).

Adoption. "I had at last come to the conclusion that the Jew was no German" (p. 61). "I had ceased to be a weak-kneed cosmopolitan and become an anti-Semite" (p. 64).

Apparently, Hitler was always a racialist. That is, he was intensely nationalistic. His struggle took place before WWI and racialism was not as politically incorrect as it is today. Hitler's conversion was to anti-Semitism.

Today's recruits must transform themselves into both racialists and anti-Semites. An open admission of both is one sign of full conversion. However, it is only one sign. Another is a fanatical commitment: loyalty, single purpose, persistent dedication, and hard work.

Importance of Conversion Stories

Conversion stories have another use besides building a theory of how to recruit. These stories are an essential tool for moving recruits through the trial stage. In the introduction to this article, I mentioned Anton Drexler's booklet, My Political Awaking that was fascinating to Hitler.

The story in the booklet was more than fascinating, it was successful. By pushing his pamphlet into Hitler's hand, Drexler had begun to recruit Hitler. A few days after reading Drexler's conversion story, Hitler also had converted. He immediately joined the Drexler's organization, which was to build into the National Socialist Party.

Conversion stories are a key tool in moving recruits from the trial stage into adoption. They tell recruits, "You are not alone." Others have made the same mental struggle and arrived at the same inevitable conclusion.

Preliminary Conclusions

Time Consuming Process. For most people, conversion or adapting to racial nationalism is a long process. Jarah B. Crawford [Liberty Bell, July 1995] was quite put out with a 24 year-old architect. After she read one of his radical manuscripts, she replied, "But I don't agree with you about the Jews."

What could one expect her to say? I doubt anyone embraces the first anti-Semitic material they see—Mr. Pryce didn't, Hitler didn't, this writer didn't, and I doubt Mr. Crawford did.

Mr. Crawford did implant a hypothesis in the young lady's mind: "Jews are bad?" If she is an open-minded information seeker, she will now evaluate what she reads and sees in light of that hypothesis.

Occasionally, the young architect needs to be reminded of the hypothesis and occasionally be offered more material. However, the material must be based on facts and figures and not contain any angry outbursts or in-house language such as ZOG.

Cast a Wide Net. Because the process takes so long, recruiters should seek those who have made it through the first stage or two on their own. These people are either interested in or actively evaluating a race issues.

Because, the Vanguard are information seekers they are likely to be found in a wide variety of places and contacted through a wide variety of media. Many of them will respond to sincere offers of information on race.

Recruiters are advised not to hide their message under the headlines of tax, welfare, crime, gun control, etc. Instead, clearly mention race in headlines and link it with some other issues. Prospects are looking for cues and will spot loaded words like "race."

Different Media for Different Stages. The Vanguard and Leaders want hard information including specific numbers and names, not vague generalities or name calling. This writer began his active conversion when he heard Kevin Alfred Strom on the radio. Strom mention a Liberty Bell article by Dr. Charles E. Weber [March 1993]. It listed the number of Jews appointed by President Clinton. It was partial proof of the hypothesis earlier implanted in my mind.

Hard data for information seekers means written information. Spoken messages are perishable, they cannot be stored and later referenced.

Early media includes pamphlets and radio programs. The radio programs and pamphlets must contain sincere offers of more information. Offer only material that will convert them. Reserve fund raising or hard-core material for the already-converted.

Information seekers often spend money for written material. They expect to pay; charge them a fair price for information. Impersonal information offers (to strangers by mail or radio) should require a payment even if its only $1 or "enclose SASE." Prospective recruits will be wary of the possible commitment by accepting anything free. [Handing people free pamphlets at public gatherings is, of course, acceptable.]

Later in the recruit's adoption process, personal contact becomes important. This can include one-on-one meetings, small gatherings, monthly meetings or conferences/seminars.

Fits and Starts. Like Hitler, few people will complete the process without occasionally being overwhelmed. Overwhelmed means they will put away the written material for several months.

It might pay recruiters to reuse lists of previous book buyers who have not purchased for a year or two.

For prospects who might eventually convert, recruiters should occasionally (every three to six months) send them another cue: pamphlet, xerox of an article, or again invite them to a meeting. Keep the hypothesis planted and give them somewhere to send for more information.

Perhaps most importantly, we must remember that we are now recruiting Vanguard Patriots and perhaps a few Leader Patriots. These people cannot be pushed. However, if we don't speed up their conversion, we will fail. Sign posts and offers of direction are critical. Prospecting for Vanguard recruits involves planting and replanting the racial hypothesis and offering information. ❑

"GRANTISM" AND "SHERMANISM"

by

Allan Callahan

It is probably common today for most people to look upon modern warfare as being much more "humane" than it used to be. They have read of conquered peoples being sold into slavery in ancient times, and sometimes put to the sword. Nothing like that happens today, they assert. No, it doesn't happen today because the Machine Age made the slave obsolete, and we no longer fight with swords. But civilians are still singled out for attack, as the democracies proved, in a big way, in WWII. One word for this, coined during the Civil War, was "Grantism." Onto the shoulders of Ulysses S. Grant was laid the moral responsibility for the way the war was waged. William Tecumseh Sherman received much blame in the South, too, because of his infamous "March to the Sea." It appears that he deserves to have an "ism" placed behind his name fully as much as Grant did. The "March" seems to have been Sherman's idea, but Grant approved of it, because he was willing to ignore the modern rules of war to achieve victory. Robert E. Lee was not willing to ignore them. He said: "There are things a gentleman does not do." Sherman was born in 1820. His father, a judge, died when the boy was around nine, and the family scattered. He was taken in and raised by the family of Hon. Thomas Ewing, who got him into West Point when he became of age. After years of service, he resigned from the army, went into banking for awhile, then practised law until 1859. In Feb. of 1861 he became president of a Saint Louis railroad company, but this didn't last long. In May of that year he went back into the army, as a colonel.

Sherman seems to have been a man wracked by doubts and insecurity, the latter maybe being caused, at least in part, by his feeling of being abandoned as a youth. At base he was an angry man, prone to rage. His marriage ran into difficulties.

His detractors said that he never won a battle against an enemy of equal strength. He never fully understood the origins of the war. Sent to Kentucky in 1861, he fell into depression, couldn't sleep, was sure that his own forces were inadequate, felt that the Union cause was hopeless, and saw spies everywhere.

He never fully supported the goals of the war, and had contempt for negroes. At the start of the war he even had contempt for the Union itself, and didn't bother to vote. Before hostilities broke out he told Secretary of War Cameron: ".....I do recoil from a war when the negro is the only question."

Also at the beginning of the war he had a fondness for the South. Sherman knew Southerners well, admired them, and didn't hold their institution of slavery against them. He wrote to his daughter that Southerners must be subdued "but we mean them no harm," and urged her not to use words like "rebels" and "traitors" when referring to them.

Gradually his feelings toward the Union became more favorable, he became a "conditional Unionist," and this feeling hardened as the conflict dragged on. At one time he almost destroyed himself, but finally snapped out of his depression after the battle of Shiloh. Here, serving under Grant, he won a military and personal victory. He still had rages, but whereas he first swallowed them and directed them against himself, in self-reproach, he now directed them against the enemy; at first, against enemy forces, and later, against civilians, also. He stated that ".....the best military strategy is to attack civilians."

His chance to put this into practice, on a large scale, came after he occupied Atlanta on September 8, 1864, and this was due mainly to a mistake of his opponent, Confederate Gen. Hood, who sent his cavalry too far to the Union rear to be able to recall them in time. Sherman could then direct his rage against civilians, but first he had to get permission from Grant, which he did.

The inhabitants of Atlanta were given five days to evacuate the city. Fire and explosives were then used to level it. This done, Sherman's soldiers then embarked on their "March to the Sea," destroying the homes and food supplies of the civilian population. Other smaller towns suffered the same fate as Atlanta, and all told, an area of cultivated land larger than Belgium and Holland together was devastated.

Sherman may be best remembered for his statement that "war is hell." His own actions against the civilian population made his part in the Civil War much more hellish than it should have been.

At any rate, this statement does not seem to have had much effect on men's decisions on whether to go to war or not. Wars have not slacked off any.

His belief that "the best military strategy is to attack civilians" may have had great effect upon the thinking of the U.S. and Britain in WWII. Their "carpet bombing" of civilians in large cities indicates that it did. In passing, it could be said that, terrible as Sherman's actions were, at least they took place during wartime. After WWII had ended, the American and French armies in Europe annihilated around one million German P.O.Ws, most of them perishing in American camps under control of part-Jew Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower. The deaths in these overcrowded and appallingly unsanitary camps were deliberate, caused by starvation, disease and exposure. The Americans had plenty of food, and also refused to let locals bring in food. Sometimes guards even denied the prisoners water for several days at a time. The meager food rations ccaused a high daily death rate, but when water was also withheld, the P.O.Ws "died like flies." Grant and Sherman were cruel; Eisenhower was unspeakable. ❑ by O. Baca (302 pp., illustrated) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" — R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" — Dr. A.J. App. THE ANTI-HUMANS Order #01013. 1945: CAPITALIST/COMMUNIST VICTORY

1995: FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ARYAN DEFEAT

by
Colin Jordan

In this issue the series "The Way Ahead" is interrupted (for resumption next issue) in order to bring out now the first part of a comprehensive answer to the 50th anniversary of the victory of the capitalist/communist alliance against National-Socialist Germany in World War II. This commencing instalment in this series comments on the celebration itself; identifies the basic reason for the war; and exhibits the ultimate aims in it and consequences of it. Further instalments from time to time, interspersed with further instalments in "The Way Ahead" series, will deal with the path to war; the course of the war and particularly the Allied atrocities during it; and finally the nature of the "liberation" resulting from the Allied victory. The composition and production of the projected sequel to the book "Merrie England 2,000", which is to deal with a British uprising, has had to be long postponed to allow for this priority of writing.

On May 8, 1995, Britain's traditional May Day holiday was replaced by a celebration of the defeat of National-Socialist Germany and its European allies. Union Jack flags—normally kept out of sight these days as somewhat jingoistic, if not positively racist and thus offensive to our new, super-tanned black and brown Britons who now so largely decide what we are allowed—were brought out plentifully everywhere, albeit many of them hoisted upside down on flagpoles by the unaccustomed pseudo-patriots.

Reporting the jubilation outside Buckingham Palace, residence of our monarch of multiracialism there displaying herself with others of her renegade royal family, London's Daily Telegraph (May 9, 1995) recorded an exultant crowd of "Hundreds of thousands, sporting Union flags to a man, woman and child". Incandescent with self-satisfaction at their monumentally superficial display of a sterile pretence of patriotism, such vacuous exhibitors are characteristically never moved to do anything effective for the survival and revival of our race and nation because this would run contrary to the overriding rules of "political correctness", conducive to national and racial decline and ruin, conformity to which is their dominant concern.

Next, the newspaper regaled us with a particularly striking revelation of such superficiality from one of royalty's household retainers. "Miss Tiggy Legge-Bourke, the Prince of Wales's social secretary, was particularly prominent among this swaying multitude, thanks to a vivid pair of Union flag shorts." The inner being of Britain may disappear, but, as long as Tiggy's shorts stay on and up, seemingly for these freaks of makebelieve the old country and its people remain in fine fettle.

Continuing its rhapsodic report of the revelry of a mad multitude, seemingly content to dance at Britain's funeral and call it a triumph, the Daily Telegraph recorded that "On went the singing, the royal trio joining in to Rule Britannia, Land of Hope and Glory..." Such was the self-congratulatory carnival of commemoration of Britain's ghastly war of self-mutilation enacted in the mongrelizing metropolis of an island where Britannia no longer rules the waves, and the native Britons no longer fully and finally possess and control the acres: a land with hardly any real cause for hope for the future, and even less evidence of present glory.

As the pages of ecstatic print reached the breakfast tables the next morning, those two paramount, plastic products of the Democratic politics of the West, Messrs. Major and Clinton, were to be found in Moscow in the company of their similarly plastic protégé of the Kremlin, acclaiming and commemorating there the wartime triumph of Democracy's stable companion, Bolshevist barbarism, with all its outstanding horrors.

The May 1995 festivity over the crushing of Germany has been shortly followed in August of this same year by another bout of blindfold jubilee over the crushing of Japan. The dust having now settled, after all the prancing and postulating marking the two events, we can now proceed to strip away the glutinous gloss given to them, and to survey the realities of World War II.

RITUAL SACRIFICE TO "VICTORY"

At the outset of the unveiling, attention needs to be paid to a keynote of a happening timed to coincide with the commemoration of victory in Europe half a century ago. This was the arrest here of an alleged war criminal, a worn-out 84-year-old man from Belarussia who made the mistake all that time ago of wanting with the aid of Germany the liberation of his country from Bolshevist barbarism. Known to his neighbours as quiet, gentle and helpful, Siemion Serafinowicz, now resident in Britain as a British citizen, has been selected to figure in this victory anniversary year as a symbolic sacrifice on the altar of victors' vengeance.

This forthcoming routine of ritual persecution to mark the remembrance of "victory" and its meaning results from years of persistent pressure by those here and throughout the world who claim it to be a requirement and thus a right of their religion to slaughter animals ritually, despite the suffering. The ritual slaughter of Serafinowicz—who will surely be brought to his death by stress and penury, if not by formal sentencing reeks of the pestiferous exhortations of that evil apostle of Talmudic vengeance, Elie Wiesel. In his book "Legends of our Time" he declared: "Every Jew, somewhere in his being, should set apart a zone of hate—healthy, virile hate—for what the German personifies and for what persists in the German."

Significantly, this oracle of Hebrew race-hatred remains respected not prosecuted in the West where critics of the Jews are persecuted and penalized for racial patriotism. Indeed, such is his arrogance, reflective of the world ascendancy of Jewry as a prime consequence of Allied victory, that he recently urged the German parliament to take the 50th anniversary of German defeat as the occasion for a groveling performance of penitence: to plead in the name of all Germans to all Jews in the world for forgiveness" (Jewish Chronicle, April 21, 1995). This recommendation matched that of Germany's Bundestag Speaker, Jewess Rita Süssmuth, who at the end of 1493 urged that "Yiddish should be used in Europe as a bridge to heal the wounds of the past" (Jewish Chronicle, December 3, 1993).

In confronting the demented delusions surrounding and issuing from the capitalist/communist victory of 1945 with the truths of the Aryan defeat which was the reality of that time and event, we are up against a persisting iron curtain of suppression of information. Joined to this is an intensive mental conditioning of the public over decades by a very powerful and thoroughly partisan media.

DEMOCRACY'S GREAT PRETENCE

Ludicrously the tame citizen of Democracy in a mass of millions believes that he orshe is a free person, properly informed of the evils of the war time enemy and the virtues of the opposing system, and thereby the causes, course and consequences of the Second World War in defence of the latter against the former. That conditioned person has no awareness that the British public has never been allowed to learn the truth about National Socialist Germany, only a torrent of distortions at the best, and otherwise downright lies. According to the fantasy implanted in that zombie's mind, Hitler was an unmitigated monster, a foaming madman without a single, redeeming feature, who sought to conquer and enslave the whole world. His system was a complete hell on earth containing nothing good. Above all, he and his bestial accomplices, as their supreme crime, were the persecutors and exterminators of millions of lovable, more or less faultless, god-chosen Jews, an unparalleled enormity which has daily to be remembered and recited for eternity.

Persons imbued with this solidified fantasy are without perception that their ossified state of mind is produced by a purported "free press" which actually is a fettered press responsive to the ruling interests governing from the background, the same being true of the other arms of the controlling media, namely radio and television. They are unaware that their vaunted and cherished system of Democracy is actually nothing but a great pretence, a huge confidence trick, a colossal swindle. They fondly imagine that dictatorship only happens abroad, there feeding falsehood to its fortunate subjects to the extent of creating a dream world. They do not realize that dictatorship operates here incognito, exercising a rigorous censorship to exclude dangerous ideas conducive to a racial awakening and a national resurgence, while moulding the mind to a frame amenable to and beneficial to that dictatorship; a combination effectively making them dwellers in a dream world.

Deluded thus, the citizens of Democracy are unable to recognize their own mental image in the mirror. They are unable to perceive that they have been made thoroughly PPC, meaning Processed Politically Correct. By the communistic influences of contemporary capitalism there has been implanted in their captive craniums, along with all other cerebral concoctions, a completely false view of World War II, cause, course and consequences.

COMMEMORATION'S PROPAGANDA PURPOSE

Anyone who believes that the prime objective of the power-wielders of Democracy in promoting their victory commemoration has been simply and purely to honour the Allied dead, and to pay tribute to all the exertions in the name of country and supposedly for the sake of nation by those who survived that conflict, is PPC indeed. For the rulers in the background the prime purpose of the exercise has been to take up and exploit the occasion as a peg for propaganda. It has been assessed as a glorious opportunity for a refurbishment of all the old wartime and post-war denigration of National-Socialism. Within that it has afforded a wonderfully convenient occasion for an extravaganza of yet more Hebrew holocaust indoctrination. Altogether it has served as a splendid pretext for freshly vaccinating the domesticated dupes of Democracy against contamination with the emancipating beliefs of National-Socialism even in the first and incipient forms of some vague racial awareness, some hazy yearning for national elevation, some disconnected dissatisfaction with the party game. In summary, the prime objective has been prophylactic against the possibility of any National-Socialist revival which even now, after all they have done, haunts the promoters of Aryan destruction.

So it is that the belching chimneys of the atrocity manufactories of the Spielbergs of this world have been working full blast to mark the year, gassing the public with an immunising dose of holocaust horror day in and day out. In these feverish endeavours they have amply responded to the clarion call of Edgar Bronfman, President of the World Jewish Congress. One of the richest Jews in the world, recent purchaser of the mind-formative MCA Films company in the U.S.A., Bronfman has warned the world multitude of the Chosen Ones: "We must use every resource to stop revisionism now before it's too late." "Revisionism" is his label for any and all questioning of the approved (kosher) version of the war and his enemy in it.

A STATEMENT OF INTENT

Before beginning this survey of the truth about that war, which certainly will amount to revisionism of a strength liable to send Mr. Bronfman reaching for the relief in a bottle of the booze (Seagram Whisky etc.) on which his fortune has been based, this writer places on record a statement of intent. He stands opposed to all atrocities by whoever and whenever committed. He stands no less opposed to all atrocity fabricators whoever they are and whenever and wherever they occur. In pursuit of truth he is not motivated by racial hatred of non-Aryans, but by a concern for his own Aryan Folk. This encompasses only a hatred of the renegades and traitors of his own race who alone have enabled non-Aryans to contribute to Aryan decline and defeat. He stands for free speech and open discussion on matters discussed in Gothic Ripples, rejecting the Jewish campaign for suppression of criticism, including the Jewish demand for the outlawing of all questioning of the alleged Jewish "holocaust", holding that this campaign can prove a potent cause of the very anti-Jewish feeling it is supposed to prevent.

This survey respects and honours the memory of all those British and Allied servicemen who died or were mutilated, honestly believing the lies their misleaders and their misleaders' media told them about the necessity to fight for freedom, nation and homeland against a force seeking to invade that homeland and take away that nation's freedom and other assets. This survey fully as much upholds and reveres the memory of all those German servicemen and their allies of so many nationalities who also died and also were mutilated in the conviction that they too were of necessity fighting for the same things.

THE BASIC REASON FOR WAR: GERMANY'S FREEDOM FIGHT

During and since World War II the British people have never been allowed to know the truth about National-Socialist Germany as a freedom fight against the dishonesty, the exploitation, and the sickly and deadly decadence of the Democracy of the Weimar Republic in Germany. Under that Democracy, millions of unemployed rotted in poverty while a plutocratic minority wallowed in luxury, and every kind of vice and degeneracy prevailed.

The power of the Jews was enormous. This racial and religious minority owned or controlled Germany's largest and most influential newspapers such as the Berliner Tageblatt, the Vossische Zeitung, and the Frankfurter Zeitung. The Ullstein press empire, Jewish, alone owned the Berliner Morgenpost, the Berliner Allgemeine Zeitung, BZ am Mittag, Das Tempo, the Montagspost, the Grüne Post, the Berliner Ilustrierte Zeitung, and dozens of other newspapers and magazines. Thus was German opinion shaped by a racially alien minority.

Jewish ascendancy in other fields included nearly half of all the lawyers in Berlin in 1933, and a similar disproportion in the medical and the teaching professions, along with a massive prominence in the entertainment world and great power in industry. The political parties reflected in composition and conduct this Jewish power and prominence.

From a humble background, his own experience of poverty, and the testing time of a twice decorated frontline soldier in World War I, Adolf Hitler rose by the merit of sheer brilliance to become leader of the strongest party in Germany, the NSDAP, and on January 30, 1933, Chancellor of Germany. Then and thereafter he was beyond question the most popular, the most fervently acclaimed statesman Germany has ever had, and the whole world has ever seen. The rapturous support of tens of millions was a unique phenomenon of government by public approval which the pygmy politicians of Democracy never come remotely near rivaling. By this measure of the extent and intensity of public support, National-Socialism in Germany under Hitler far, far exceeded the Democracy of the West as a government of the people, for the people, and by the will of the people; and thus a manifestation of a nation's freedom. Let this always be remembered and replied when the subjects and supporters of the veiled dictatorship under Democracy denigrate Hitler's Germany as a tyrannical dictatorship!

As a youngster, this writer saw something for himself at first-hand of the impetus and euphoria of a resurgent Cermany lifted from the depths of decline, disunity and despondency, and dedicated to drastic reform, as never before or since in the history of the world, under this man of magic and his vast force of ardent colleagues and comrades. Before staying with a German family in Cologne in 1937, he had been told by the then warmongering, pro-Jewish News Chronicle of a downcast, downtrodden people, deprived of milk in a drive for guns before food and drink—a deficiency which struck him sadly, being a keen 14-year-old consumer of the commodity. On the banks of the Rhine he found instead milk available everywhere in plenty, and everywhere the happy faces of a people vibrant with the sense and the satisfaction of participation in a great purpose. Never again did he imbibe with belief the beverage of mendacity furnished by the likes of the News Chronicle. Then, in the Hitler's Germany he saw, the world was young and fresh, and a golden age was truly unfolding: a world the war killed as it was intended to by its instigators, now engaged in ruining Britain and the rest of the Aryan world in the name of "victory."

ONCENTRATION CAMPS

But what of the concentration camps, interject the lovers of liberal liberty, obsessed with concern for the inviolability of the isolated, self-centred individual as a far more important form of freedom than that of the corporate Folk and the benefiting citizen within that community?

The German concentration camps pre-war—and we are here considering the background to the war, not its course—were a type of open prison which at their peak held 26,789 persons, many of themfor only a matter of weeks.

The idea that the inmates were all political dissidents and persecuted Jews is absurdly untrue. Besides some subversive opponents, including many militant communists who sought an armed seizure of power on behalf of Moscow, they were a variety of habitual criminals, drug dealers and addicts, pimps, sexual perverts, disorderly drunkards and work-shy parasites. They were, in other words, the dross on which Democracy typically lavishes care and comfort in its appeal to and cultivation of the masses at their lowest level of debasement for the ulterior motive of gainful power. Yet by prison standards an adequate diet and reasonable accomodation were provided for them.

These pre-war German concentration camps, which the warmongering Western press and politicians made such a fuss about, massively distorting daily into a summarizing and eclipsing horror worth fighting a far more horrible war against, were markedly superior in their conditions to those which the hypocritical British and their Allies had themselves introduced beforehand.

America, during its civil war 1861-1865 had established concentration camps for civilian populations considered hostile to the Federal government; and during its war to acquire the Philippines, 1899-1902, set up concentration camps which caused the deaths of more than 200,000 Philippine civilians.

Britain, in the course of its war against the tiny Boer nation in South Africa, 1899-1902, burnt the Boer homesteads while the men were away soldiering, and put 116,572 people, almost all of them women and children, into what they themselves designated as "concentration camps". There, due to inadequate food, exposure and disease, particularly typhus, mass death took place—just as it did in the final days of World War II in Germany when Allied bombing disrupted supplies to camps swollen with transfers from the east. In the British concentration camps 27,927 Boers died according to an official report. this including 26,251 women and children, 22,074 of this last total being children under 16 (Journal of Historical Review, Vol. 1 No. 3).

Poland, Britain's final excuse for going to war in 1939 to crush the German fight for freedom, had set up its concentration camps a few years earlier under Pilsudski as a way of disposing of political opponents.

Communist Russia had had long previously the biggest and most barbarous concentration camp network of all time. This sombre fact did not for a moment deter the capitalist West from fervently embracing the monster they termed "our glorious Soviet ally", acclaiming the "new democracy" in partnership with the old. When one gets down to it, the precise reason why Germany was damned as an outcast while Russia was welcomed as a friend was the fact that National-Socialism in the former had demoted the Jews from ascendancy while communism in the latter had elevated them to it.

ACHIEVEMENTS UNEQUALLED

National self-determination, expressed in the demotion of the Jews, was only one aspect of the multi-facetted fight for freedom of Hitler's Germany. Let us now take a short look at some of the other aspects of National-Socialism's comprehensive conception of freedom in contrast to the delusions of Democracy where a façade of ineffective rights masks dictatorial denial of positive benefits. Let us see what the New Germany was accomplishing in the practical expansion of people's freedom in the economic, social and cultural fields in which it is to be seen as no less a value than in the political; voicing and voting only becoming meaningful in resulting benefits. And doing so at a time when in Britain her disabled ex-servicemen were having to beg in the streets, and her unemployed having to go on hunger marches to try and stir the cold consciences of party politicians who combined neglecting their own people and country with railing endlessly against a regime giving practical expression to a far higher morality.

Data is here mostly drawn from the highly informative book Hitler Cermany by Cesare Santoro (Internationaler Verlag, Berlin, 1938) with a few additions from Robert Ley by Ronald Smelser (Berg, 1988).

When Hitler came to power at the start of 1933, German unemployment stood at 6,014,000. With a Four Years Plan for industry immediately set in motion, the number of workers employed rapidly rose by millions, so that by 1938, one year before the Allies of Democracy made war on Germany instead of on their own unemployment, unemployment in Germany had been reduced to 338,000.

Many years before Britain sought to copy it, Hitler in his very first year in office inaugurated a gigantic motorway system which stands today as a monument to his pioneering initiative. This, among other, huge, public works, helped to provide work, and in so doing increased purchasing power, this in turn generating more employment in industry and commerce, and consequently more purchasing power still and commensurate demand for goods and services in a rotating stimulus to production and prosperity.

In the preceding years of 1929-1932 the German peasantry, veritably the backbone of the nation, had lived on the edge of ruin, enmeshed in debt and despised as impoverished yokels; as did the farmers and land-workers of Britain, criminally disregarded by the mammonite capitalists with their worship of "free trade" for their personal aggrandizement in a milieu of purely monetary values, above and beyond the freedom of the Folk by way of prosperity and security. Hitler quickly put a stop to this malaise. Within a few months of attaining power, a law concerning Hereditary Homesteads came into force on October 1, 1933, whereby peasant farms were to remain for all time in the hands of one peasant family. Other measures increasing agricultural productivity and prosperity followed, bringing greater selfsufficiency in food.

By the autumn of National-Socialist Year No. 1, 1933, the foundation had been begun for a national labour service (Arbeitsdienst) which became in 1935 obligatory for every young German between leaving school and doing military service. 70% of this corps became engaged in the reclamation of moorland and wasteland. This work for the homeland, in addition to its economic value, gave young Germans a splendid experience of socially responsible citizenship, national unity above class division, and corporate pride; amounting to a unique form of higher education.

Prior to the Arbeitsdienst, a wonderful introduction to folk patriotism was provided by a magnificent youth movement, the Hitler Jugend, creating a joyously purposeful union of German boys and girls in contrast to the abandoned youth of Britain then, and the bewitched and bedraggled rabble of British youth today.

SOCIALISM OF THE FOLK

The German Labour Front (DAF = Deutsche Arbeitsfront) was formed to unite all German brain and manual workers, including all members of the former trade unions of Democracy based on class warfare. It began with an enormous rally on May 1, 1933, when over a million workers gathered at the Tempelhofer Feld in Berlin to hear with tremendous enthusiasm the inspiring words of Adolf Hitler.

Under the auspices of the Labour Front, and in other ways too, the National-Socialist government lost no time in initiating a vast housing project to remedy the deficiencies and defects of the homes of its people, erecting dwellings with a rent adapted to the means of the working masses. These were not the soul-destroying, herd-conditioning, huge tenements put up in other lands, but homes with a large garden, and some with a small-holding or attached farm. By the end of 1939 the Labour Front had itself built 46,331 dwellings, and had participated in the construction of a further 40,000; and was engaged in planning 20,000 more.

Measures of social insurance, unemployment relief and protection of labour, excelling those of all other countries where anything of the sort even existed, were swiftly introduced in the onward surging momentum of reform which distinguished National-Socialist Germany par excellence. The NSDAP's People's Welfare Organization leapt into practice, providing generous help wherever emergent schemes temporarily left a lack. No more properly caring regime has so far emerged on this earth.

As an adjunct of the Labour Front, the workers' leisure movement, Strength through Joy (KdF = Kraft durch Freude) came into being, benefiting the workers of Germany far beyond anything of this nature anywhere else any time, Britain either then or now having nothing in comparison. Here are a few details of the achievements in this expansion of positive freedom, brought about in the field of folk socialism; details which our thought-controllers seek to keep from the brainwashed British public.

Activities of the KdF encompassed adult educational and handicraft courses of all sorts, and cultural lectures. By 1939 325 adult education centres were functioning. It arranged concerts, operas, dramatic performances, visits, land excursions and tours, boat trips on river and sea. It built recreational centres, community halls and holiday accomodation, even ocean-going liners including the Robert Ley with a theatre, library and reading rooms aboard; having 12 ships by the outbreak of war. Its People's Theatre had no seat costing more than a pre-war sixpence. Fine orchestras, the best drama by the best actors, ballets by the best dancers were all available at prices within everyone's reach. Country holidays cost next to nothing, and sea cruises cost no more than four guineas for a fortnight.

Through the KdF, by 1938, 22,100,000 had been able to visit theatres, 18,600,000 to attend film performances, 5,600,000 to attend concerts, and 50,000,000 to take part in cultural events of one sort or another. Over 60,000 had gone on land excursions. 384 sea voyages had been enjoyed by 490,000 holiday-makers, including 18,000 uho had gone on voyages to Norway, Madeira and Italy. A gigantic seaside resort for 20,000 had been constructed. In the year 1938 alone, the last complete year of peace, 9,200,000 used its vacation and travel facilities, 8,100,000 went to theatre performances and concerts, 8,300,000 took part in sports activities, 6,300,000 in adult education, and 50,000,000 in some aspect of recreation. Where stood Democracy in Britain in comparison then, or stands it now?

PROTECTION AND BETTERMENT OF THE RACE

Simultaneously, radical steps were taken to protect the racial character and improve the racial quality of the German Folk; this unique work standing in stark contrast to the racial neglect and injury which characterizes the death system of Democracy. As early as April 7 of the year of Hitler's accession to power, a law was brought in to place on the retired list non-Aryan public officials. The Civic Law of the Reich of September 15, 1935, withdrew from Jews the status of German citizens, and on this basis excluded them from all participation in German political life. The Law for the Protection of German Race and Honour of the same date prohibited marriages and extramarital, sexual relations between Jews and Aryans.

A Law for the Preservation from Hereditarily Diseased Posterity on July 14 of that year had provided for the possibility of sterilizing persons with specific, hereditary diseases, and on October 18, 1935, in line with this, a Law relating to Matrimonial Hygiene prohibited marriage between persons of such infirmities, a medical certificate of biological fitness being henceforth required for marriage. The birth rate of healthy German stock was encouraged by interest-free loans to couples thus attested fit to reproduce, and with the birth of each child 25% of that loan was reckoned as redeemed, thus a 4-child family got the money as a gift from the folk state.

Freemasonic activity, operating in ritualistic secret a favouritism for a few in the course of promoting cosmopolitan ends, was brought to an end in Germany in 1935. The abominable Jewish practice of ritually slaughtering animals for food, bleeding them to death without pre-stunning, was also put a stop to.

While all this was proceeding, Hitler was increasing German national freedom by reuniting in liberation from foreign rule such territory as the Sudetenland, placed under such rule by the Treaty of Versailles. At the same time, he was freeing Germany from the restrictive practices of public usury. He was liberating his land from servitude to the trading system of International Finance with its devotion to the liberality of "free trade" as a façade for a dependence on the flow of money and the computing of credit under the control of the moneylenders and the credit controllers. Barter deals, directly reciprocal, were negotiated instead by Germany.

This rebellion against the financial practices of capitalism, cutting out the parasitical middlemen of money, infuriated the conceited lords of the counting houses. Their raging resentment combined with the burning anxiety of the politicians and their patrons over the New Germany's spectacular programme of reform which could be dangerously attractive to the neglected and exploited subjects of Democracy, if perchance they became aware of it. Both combined with the seething hatred of Germany's emancipation from Jewish ascendancy to give the real rulers of Democracy reason enough to wish to conspire to bring about the destruction of National-Socialist Germany through war, and this they set about to do. How they contrived to cause the war will be shown in Part Two of this series.

THE IMMEDIATE COST OF BRITAIN'S "VICTORY"

The immediate cost to Britain of her demented war for Democracy was of crippling magnitude. Apart from her 264,443 servicemen and 92,673 civilians killed in the course of it, along with all the massive material damage resulting from war operations, Britain so exhausted her strength and assets that she was reduced to being a begging borrower at America's door, sunk in indebtedness. Had she instead remained at peace, and in place of devoting herself and her vast resources to destruction had devoted herself and those resources to reform and construction similar to that of her proclaimed enemy, she would in 1995 surely have been able to show a "Land of Hope and Glory", not sing about it in its absence.

She entered the war with the mightiest navy of all times. Then Britannia truly ruled the waves, guardian of the greatest empire the world had ever seen, encompassing a quarter of the world's surface and a quarter of the world's population, and containing virtually every required raw material, potentially an entirely self-sufficient bloc. She ended that war deprived of that naval supremacy, and on the way to being shortly deprived of that empire.

She entered the war with overseas assets of no less than £3,500,000,000, and at the end of it had had to sell off about a third of them, and in place of them had acquired debts totaling £2,000,000,000. While her foreign debts had thus increased by 600%, largely on account of her borrowings from America, her exports had declined by nearly 70%. Within a few days of VJ Day, American "Lend-Lease" aid was terminated so that a loan of $3.75 billion had to be negotiated with that country, a condition of it being that Britain had to accept a General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade committing her to "liberalization" of world trade in American interests, and to making the pound a convertible currency within 12 months. Thus did she surrender at the command of her ally her ability to protect her manufactured goods against foreign competition both within her own shores and within the bounds of her empire.

President Roosevelt's foreign economic policy had all along had the design of taking advantage of the impoverishment of Britain in war to oblige her to dismantle her system of Imperial Preference as a condition for American aid. Viewed against this war aim of global, dollar imperialism, the following foolish words of Britain's King George VI, broadcast on May 24, 1940, take on an exceedingly bitter irony:- "It is no mere territorial conquest that our enemies are seeking. It is the overthrow, complete and final, of this Empire and of everything for which it stands—and after that the conquest of the world." Hitler, in contrast to Roosevelt, had always spoken with appreciation of the value of the British Empire in Aryan affairs, and had been prepared to give tangible support to its defence. So Britain made a disastrously wrong choice of both "enemy" and "friend".

THE ULTIMATE PRICE OF "VICTORY"

The immediate cost of the war, just indicated, provides reason enough for the conclusion that its avoidance would have been much more justification for rejoicing in 1995 than our engagement in that thoroughly unnecessary and tremendously injurious conflict. When, however, we additionally take into account all that has followed from Britain's victory in it, as the maturation of Democracy's innate tendencies in the course of the fulfiment of Democracy's real war purposes, the case for condemnation becomes shattering. But if we take up the proclaimed aims of the politicians in going to war, how far have they been attained as the measure of their conception of victory?

Let us begin with Victory Illusion No. 1: the argument that Britain's declaration of war on Germany in 1939 was necessary to remove the threat of foreign invasion, and thereby, by implication, to keep Britain for the British. The utter falsity of this argument is shown by the fact that, apart from there being no reliable evidence that Germany pre-war had any desire to attack and invade Britain, no sooner had the war ended and the propaganda served its purpose than precisely the people who had put forward this argument began to prompt, promote and patronize an alien invasion of Britain mounting to millions strong.

Those who told us we had to fight to keep the Germans out are precisely the ones, or the direct political descendants of the ones, who ever since the war have been telling us to welcome the Afro-Asian invader and fraternize with him. These are the people who in furtherance of their volte-face have been progressively prohibiting and punishing all disparaging criticism of and any other opposition to the invaders in the manner of an auxiliary arm of collaborators in support of an occupying force.

Thus let us not forget for a second, whenever the enemy in our midst, the renegade politicians of Democracy, sing the praises of their "victory", that it was not Adolf Hitler who sought to flood Britain with Africans and Asians, and to enforce multiracial integration leading to miscegenation and thus the destruction of our greatest national treasure, our racial heritage. Hitler stood instead for Anglo-German unity and White supremacy in the world. It is the politicians of Democracy who, having given the Empire to the Coloureds, are now giving the motherland to them also.

The compères and cheerleaders of Democracy's victory commemoration have proved to be the aiders and abettors of genocidal mongrelization, ranking as the Final Solution for the extinction of the Aryan within this island, because miscegenation is an inherent principle and inevitable product of Democracy. It is the natural outcome of the egalitarian creed it presents as deluding disguise for minority rule, and is the means for the debasement of humanity to a condition most amenable tothe secure operation of that minority rule. This sinister purpose was a hidden factor leading to war, an underlying thrust during that war, and is now a most visible derivative of Democracy's success in that war.

Lied to regarding the purposes in going to war, we have been lied to regarding the extent of the Coloured Invasion following from it. Peter Tomkins, head immigration official 1981-1991, has revealed that the true figure for permanent immigration in the 5 years to 1993 was more than double that stated by the government, namely 625,000, not 264,500 (Daily Mail, February 8, 1995). This vast most recent increase—numerically equivalent to very many German divisions—has come on top of all the influx over some 50 years the extent of which has likewise been lied about. Beyond the true figures for "legitimate" immigration, the Daily Star (May 29, 1991) estimated that a million illegal immigrants were here by then.

On top of all this, when Britain's lease of Hong Kong expires in two years in 1997, all of the colony's 250,000 Chinese will be free to come here, and you can rely on many of them wanting to come and our renegades letting them come, whatever fresh lies and tricks they have to use to mask and sweeten the situation. At the same time the EEC—that extension of the apparatus of Democracy conceived as the piecemeal, insidious transition to a super-state of global, multiracial regimentation—aspires to abolish border controls so that Coloureds can more freely circulate and come here.

BRITONS ON THE WAY DOWN AND OUT

A recent Policy Studies Institute report has shown that the Pakistani population of Britain trebles every generation. A London Daily Telegraph (January 20, 1994) report has predicted that the number of Blacks and Asians will double in 40 years. The same newspaper (December 28, 1994) has estimated that already around 40% of young West Indians here have White partners; and with the headline "Motherhood going out of Fashion for Young Women" has quoted (April 10, 1995) a current report of the Family Policy Studies concerning the abstention from procreation by Britons. Thus under victorious Democracy not only is the massive increase of Coloureds in our midst and our mixing with them mightily promoted, but, added to that as the devilish brew in the diabolical cauldron of debasement which is Democracy, we have all manner of inducements and constraints to deter and diminish the reproduction of our own kind. Thereby the rise of the Coloureds is facilitated and hastened to our coming subordination and ultimate extinction.

So it is that rapidly darkening Britain celebrated "victory" against a background of such rewarding features as here follows. Britain's largest trade union, the Transport & General Workers' Union, now has a Negro as its General Secretary (Bill Morris). An Asian bishop is pressing the government to encourage yet more Asian immigration. A Negro (Herman Ouseley) heads the Commission for Racial Equality, enforcing compulsory integration. The Chairwoman of the Equal Opportunities Commission is an Asian (Kamlesh Bahl) appointed by our Prime Minister of Treachery, John Major, who has announced he wants more Afro-Asians in local government, the House of Commons and the House of Lords. The so-called "British Broadcasting Corporation", with a Bangladeshi (Shahwar Sadeque) on its Board of Governors, now reserves trainee jobs for non-Whites, and vets potential participants in programmes so as to increase the proportion from ethnic minorities. Similar "positive discrimination" is resulting in White doctors being passed by for positions given to less competent and less suitable Coloureds, while our renegade Secretary of State for Health, Virginia Bottomley, has ordered health authorities to boost ethnic minority staff numbers in areas where they are "under-represented."

Illegal immigrants are even being openly offered free homes by one of the semi-soviet London boroughs (Hackney). The Department of Social Security—and thereby in turn the taxpayer—has of late been swindled out of £9,000,000 by gangs from Nigeria. In inner London ethnically alien children now make up most of the pupils in schools there, and in Sheffield there are now no less than 62 different languages in use among school children. Prime Minister John Major, wedded to a Jewess as proof of his commitment to causes other than our own, not so very long ago, as a change from his regular performances at Jewish events and his regular reception of Jewish delegations, was to be found hosting a Downing Street dinner for Britain's Asian multimillionaires, together worth £1.5 billion. Understandably, he considers the coffers of his Conservative Party, zealously engaged in making Britain Coloured, well deserving of thanksgiving donations for its record of betrayal of the British people.

THE BILL FOR BLACKENING BRITAIN

When one now stops to consider the total financial cost to the British people, let alone the total biological cost as well, of this completely unnecessary and wholly undesirable Coloured Invasion of Britain, the magnitude is horrifying. It includes, as just some of the items in the bill, all the millions spent on social security and welfare, housing aid, special educational measures, medical services, the imposition of "non-discrimination", the curtailment of free speech, special expenditure on improving areas where Coloureds riot, plus the cost of those riots—such as £91,000, 000 in 4 years on Handsworth, Brixton and Toxteth where the riots have cost £20,000,000; special grants for ethnic minorities under Section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 which have amounted to £100,000,000 annually; and £180,000,000 a year extracted from the social security system by bogus asylum seekers.

The same expenditure on our own people by a government dedicated to a Britain for the British, comparable to Hitler's regime dedicated to a Germany for the Germans, would have wiped out workers' poverty and bad housing, the deprivation of the elderly, much of disease, ugly and unhealthy features of the environment, and brought a real people's victory in the form of a finer, healthier, more equitable and more beautiful Britain.

Not that that is the entire story of the misuse of Britain's wealth for the benefit of racially alien Coloured people. In addition, "victory" has brought a gigantic expenditure every year on those Coloureds throughout the world who have not yet decided to come and live here and squeeze us out. Standing at £2.18 billion for the year 1994, overseas aid is to rise by an extra £146 million in 1997.

The Coloured Invasion not only refutes Victory Illusion No. 1. It also refutes Victory Illusion No. 2: the argument that we have thereby had preserved for us our own government responsive to the will of the people. As journalist Bruce Anderson recorded in the Sunday Telegraph (March 29, 1987), "The voters were never consulted: if they had been we would have had no large-scale coloured immigration." Throughout the earlier decades of this Coloured Invasion, immediately following the supposed war for the will of the people, every public opinion poll on the issue showed overwhelming opposition to the invasion. Yet all the governments of the day, supported by the overwhelming majority of the parliamentary politicians, refused to or failed to respond and to stop it. Under Democracy it was to be forced on the people against their will.

JEWISH POWER

The Coloured Invasion is not the only form of alien intrusion into Britain and alien influence on British affairs in the wake of Democracy's victory and in fulfillment of its intended purposes. There is also the resultant position and power of Jewry.

The degree of deference thereby derived and manifest in preferential treatment can well be gauged from the news that northwest London is now to see the creation of an "eruv" there, sanctioned by the ministerial Environment Secretary. What on earth is that, you may well ask, and the answer is that it is a matter of 85 poles, 20 feet high, linked by wire on an 11-mile perimeter, enclosing 6 square miles of our capital. The purpose of this eyesore is to provide orthodox Jews there with the pretence that when they are outside on their Sabbath they are actually still inside in terms of the prohibitions of their religion on such activities as pushing prams outdoors on that special day of the week.

Ever since the war Jewish influence in and upon our Parliament has been huge and increasing. Labour Prime Minister Harold Wilson was surrounded by a retinue of Jewish advisers and court favourites, including Defence specialist Solly Zuckerman, business adviser Lewis Cohen, chain store magnate Isaac Wolfson, entertainment controller Sidney Bernstein, and publishers Victor Gollancz and Robert Maxwell: altogether very much an unofficial, shadow cabinet. Labour Prime Minister James Callaghan had a minor measure of Jewish blood (his paternal grandmother being an Elizabeth Bernstein, see The Sun, April 6, 1976), and a major measure of Jewish association. Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher openly identified the Jew Keith Joseph as her moulding mentor, and at every opportunity identified herself with Jews and Jewish interests.

Today, under the frontal figure of John Major with his Jewish wife, the same pro-Jewish dispensation prevails with the Jew Michael Howard as Home Secretary and the Jew Malcolm Rifkind as Foreign Secretary together having a twin control of our home and foreign affairs. Well over half of Conservative Members of Parliament are members of the "Conservative Friends of Israel", this including Major himself and most of his Cabinet. Conservative Central Office's Director of Research is a Danny Finkelstein.

The Labour Party's new shining light, Tony Blair, is no less a dutiful servant of Jewish causes than John Major. His avowed adherence to those causes has been the essential price for his endorsement as kosher by a Jewish political force which can make or break. The stamp of approval was signified when he was invited to be guest speaker at a dinner laid on by the Board of Deputies, the Jews' own parliament in Britain.

The Liberal-Democrat leader, Paddy Ashdown, has gained a similar stamp of approval through his obtrusive dedication to the same Jewish causes, and his indicative choice of entourage such as his adviser, the Jewess Zerbanoo Gifford, who may or may not have advised him to include Asian publishing and property boss, Ramesh Dewan, on his party's colourful national executive. Thus the Democracy of the victors offers the citizen the liberty of a threefold appearance of diversification on the outside, which inside is a confinement to a single, common cause inimical to race and nation.

Readers should note that the pinpointing here and elsewhere in this issue of Jews and their role, as with Coloureds and theirs, is most certainly not to incite and to direct hostility towards these racial aliens who merely take understandable advantage of the corruption and subservience of our own racial traitors to pursue the interests of their own folk. To do so would be wrongly to shift blame from the principals. Instead, in line with the statement of intent earlier in this issue, the purpose is and should be only and specifically to arouse and direct hostility towards the renegades responsible.

Selecting a few examples of Jews in positions of power thanks to our renegades we have as senior EC commissioner Leon Brittan, descended from Jews from Lithuania originally named "Brittanischki". We have a Lord Chief Justice Taylor with 33 rabbis among his ancestors. He tops a legal profession so packed with Jews that the Jewish Chronicle itself has used the words "Trial by Jewry" in this connection. We have as current Sheriff of London, with responsibility for Law and order there, the Jew Peter Levene, chairman of the gigantic Canary Wharf property development, and a special adviser to Prime Minister Major on "efficiency and effectiveness". The Canary Wharf £1.5 billion development has come into being through a firm founded by Jews Paul and Albert Reichmann, expanded into the world's largest property developer. It stands as a fitting memorial in Britain's capital to Democracy's victory and all it stands for.

It would take a whole book to try and cover the amplitude of Jewish power in British industry and commerce today. Here it must suffice just to mention a few instances as follows. Dixons, the electrical goods network, under Stanley Kalms. The General Electric Corporation under managing director Lord Weinstock. The Berger family controlling 400 property leasing companies with a fortune of over £200,000,000. The Tesco supermarket chain founded by Jack Cohen, whose wife left over £17,000,000 to her two daughters, one of them Lady Porter, the London local government leader. The Kwik Save supermarket chain founded by Albert Gubay. The Sainsbury supermarket chain controlled by the Sainsbury family with David Sainsbury reputed to have a fortune of £1.3 billion. Amstrad headed by Alan Sugar with a personal fortune set by the Jewish Chronicle at £130,000,000. Marks 6 Spencer, chairman Lord Rayner: Britain's most profitable retailer. Great Universal Stores founded by Isaac Wolfson. Lewis Trust Group of David Lewis and family with estimated wealth of £310,000,000.

Benzion Freshwater property empire: £189,000,000. Ladbroke: chairman Cyril Stein. Chelsfield property group under Elliott Bernerd. Betterware: chief executive Andrew Cohen with a fortune of £90,000,000. Reebok footwear under Stephen Rubin with a fortune of £230,000,000. Saatchi brothers with a personal fortune of £80,000,000. Gerald Ratner who became the largest jeweller in the world. Lord Rothschild, banker, £160,000,000. Tony Tabatznik, pharmaceuticals: personal fortune £250,000,000. George Soros, financial speculator, personal fortune £715,000,000. A Sunday Times estimate of Britain's top plutocrats included more than 50 Jews with a combined wealth of £4.5 billion.

MOGULS OF THE MEDIA

Power is of course manifested and exerted fully as much in media influence as in political position and in the possession and exercise of business wealth; and in and over the media of Britain Jewish influence has been spectacularly victorious.

With Television Channel 4, for instance, we have the Jew Michael Grade as chief executive. Scion of the Jewish family of Winogradsky from Russia, his father being the Lord Grade and his uncle the Lord Delfont who between them exercised a wide grip on the British entertainment world of recent decades, Michael Grade has just gained a 20% pay rise, making his yearly salary £450,000. Compared with the earnings of really useful workers such as nurses, firemen, farmers and refuse collectors, this exhibits the fraudulent values of capitalist Democracy for which Britain fought the war. For this fortune this man functions as a magnificent maker of muck, de-Grading the channel in question to that of a prime purveyor of the downright degeneracy which is the ultimate reach of Democracy.

The journalist Paul Johnson has aptly described him in the Sunday Telegraph (July 30, 1995) as "Britain's pornographer-in-chief" by virtue of such programmes as "Hookers", "Hustlers", "Pimps and their Johns", "Dusky Sapphos," "Young and Queer", "Finishing School" (for transvestites), "Pull your Finger out" (for Lesbians), "Red Light Zone," and "Dyke TV."

Controller of BBC Television 1 is the Jew Alan Yentob, Chairman of the Grenada Group of Companies is the Jew Alex Berstein. Head of the Carlton company and thereby one of the most powerful figures in British broadcasting is the Jewish multimillionaire Michael Green.

As a sample of the plethora of Jews among programme personalities, as with television technicians, to the extent of making television and radio preeminently a club for the "Chosen", we have the Jewess Esther Rantzen, the BBC's highest-paid performer (1991 salary £325,000), described by the Independent newspaper (December 21, 1991) as "the most powerful woman on television."

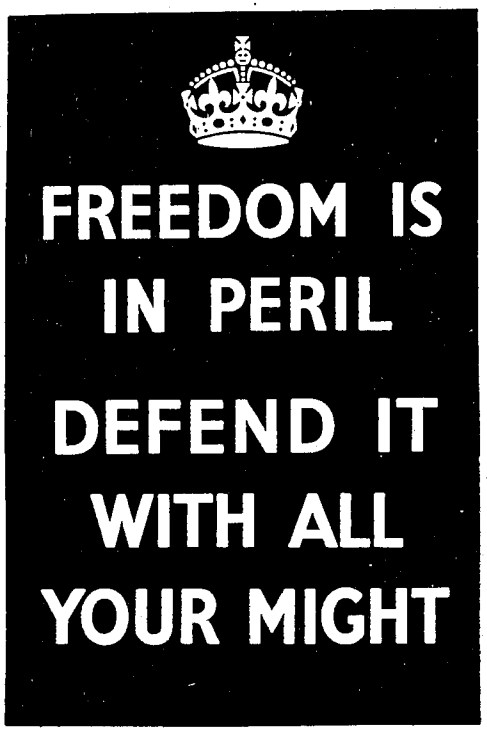
When we turn to the "British" press, and pass over as a feature of past decades the publishing empire of the late Robert Maxwell, the Jew from Czechoslovakia who survived the Jewish holocaust to change his name from Jan Ludwig Hoch, the better to pretend to be "British", and who proceeded to swindle the pension funds of Britons on a massive scale; we come face to face with today's monarch of the media, Rupert Murdoch. His father married an Elisabeth Joy Greene, the daughter of a wealthy Jewish family in Australia, this making Murdoch by the Jewish law of maternal determination one of the "Chosen." He now runs the Sun, Today, News of the World, Times and Sunday Times newspapers. In fact his News International combine now controls 36% of the whole "British" newspaper press, along with publishers William Collins; while he has a growing share of commercial television here, including the Sky satellite tv network, along with other communication interests.

At the moment his acumen as ruler by remote control is leading him to select, court and groom Tony Blair as his political nominee for the future when played-out Major is ousted by the swing of the prompted pendulum. He has sized up this laughing boy of Labour as a fitting frontman for the kind of Britain he seeks to promote.

This is a Britain wherein the public is kept titillated with triviality, seduced with sentimentality, reduced to racial indiscrimination, rendered reverential to Jewry, kept hooked on all the hedonistic lures of crass materialism, including ubiquitous sex devoid of eugenic purpose and thus no more than crude lust. The reason behind and for this degrading mind and conduct moulding is that it produces people in a state most responsive to the continued manipulation of the backstage masters of Democracy. The trumpeted "freedom of the press" under Democracy is but the freedom for the likes of Murdoch to misrepresent, mislead and massively exploit for personal power and profit. For such it seems did Britons fight their German brothers 50 years ago, and generously give their lives.



THE ATTACK ON FREEDOM

Victory Illusion No. 3 is that we had to go to war against Germany in order to preserve our cherished freedom, and that this worthy objective has been magnificently achieved. In illustration of this proclaimed war aim, there is reproduced at the top of the next page (with acknowledgement to the Public Record Office, Ref. INFO 13/213) a government poster which adorned hoardings during the war. John Charnley—who along with some thousand other Britons was interned during the war without trial under Regulation 18B to silence him from opposing that war—records in his book Blackshirts and Roses (p.100) that, when on June 7, 1940, he was put into Walton Gaol, he saw, ironically, at the gates on his arrival a similar poster worded "Lend to Defend the Right to be Free."

Contrary to the illusion, firstly our civil liberty, violated by Regulation 18B, was in no way menaced before the war by Hitler who had no desire to invade and harm and interfere with our self-government and national freedom. What he sought was Anglo-German friendship and alliance, conducive to that form of freedom which comes from security. Secondly, our said civil liberty has indeed been severely curtailed not only during the war but increasingly since our supposed victory, but not by Hitler, instead by the betrayers of the British people in our midst. This has come about as a consequence of the war because the system of social control which they have now imposed on us figured on the hidden agenda of their war from the start.

Speaking on VE Day itself, May 8, 1995, Prime Minister Major declared "...we must build a world of open minds, or individual freedom ..." (Daily Telegraph May 9, 1995). This hypocritical liar knows full well that his falsely titled "Conservative Party", far from being concerned to conserve our freedom of expression or any other significant part of our national heritage, is engaged and has been engaged along with the other parties of renegades in whittling away and desecrating that heritage.

Way back in 1965 Jewish Home Secretary Frank Soskice of the Labour Party brought in a Race Relations Act containing the first step in the suppression of British patriotism. It then became an imprisonable offence to utter anything which could be construed to be an insult or threat or abuse regarding racial aliens in our midst, capable of causing what could be made out to be "racial hatred" against such intruders.

Another Race Relations Act in 1976 continued the attack on free speech, while also making it an offence in a wide field of life to discriminate in favour of our own kind in our own country.

Another Jewish Home Secretary, Leon Brittan of the Conservative Party, brought in a new Public Order Act in 1986 as a further step in the reduction of freedom, making it an offence even to possess prohibited literature, if it could be made out that the possessor might pass it on to others.

Yet another new law, the 1994 Criminal Justice & Public Order Act sponsored by the Conservatives, has brought in (Section 155) the power to arrest anyone seen distributing anything looking like racial literature. The great value of an arrest is that it automatically carries with it the power to search the person's home and inspect and seize that person's property, taking it away for further examination whether any of it and whatever part of it is ultimately selected as "evidence"; confiscating in the process all the literature which might seem to have racial content.

A future Labour government is set to extend suppression substantially. Shadow Home Secretary Jack Straw, a self-identified Jew (Jewish Chronicle, June 3, 1994), has promised the Jewish Board of Deputies that Labour will strengthen laws against "racism" and speed up prosecution of "extremist groups inciting racial hatred."

THE THOUGHT POLICE

The position we have now reached, as "victory" cheers ring in our ears, is that a police force nominally British has been suborned to serve an invasion by racial aliens brought about by the despicable renegades running Britain to ruin. This enforcement force of alien occupation can heavily harass and intimidate by the overhanging threat of all this legislative power, and can severely persecute by its exercise. With or without arresting someone beforehand, the police force of alien control can raid his home (pre-war "the Englishman's castle"), ransack it from top to bottom, look into all his affairs in a complete invasion of privacy, take away anything and everything interesting them, and at the very least greatly embarrass and conceivably much deter the citizen, if not prepare the way for his appearance in court and his sojourn in gaol. Such is the price today of real patriotism in contrast to the few pence expended in the pretended patriotism of waving paper or cotton Union Jacks in commemoration of a "victory" resulting in freedom's defeat.

This writer has had recent and personal experience of what this "victory" has brought in the way of denial of freedom. He has had his home violated by the thought police acting on the signal of Jewish M.P. Gerald Kaufman. He has had 7 of these mercenaries spending 3 hours searching everywhere from the fridge to the waste bin, and in the outcome packing a police van with items, almost all of them of no conceivable relevance to any conceivable offence, property only regained many months later after the case collapsed on judicial review, despite having been sanctioned by the country's top law officer.

Lady Jane Birdwood, along with many others, has had similar experience of the denial of freedom which "victory" in a war supposedly for its defence has brought. The judge in her 1991 trial, also in her 1994 trial and also in her 1995 appeal has on each occasion declared that the truth of statements is no defence to charges of "racial hatred." So war on truth is now waged under the asupices of "victory." Lady Birdwood has also recently experienced another of the fruits of that "victory", having in her eighties joined the large and growing band of Britons "mugged" by Blacks.

The Police under Jewish Home Secretary Howard, and the judges under Jewish Lord Chief Justice Taylor are now receiving "racial awareness" training to ensure that they are adequately imbued with the "political correctness" of favouring the racial alien at the expense of the native Briton. At the same time the native Briton who dares to discriminate on racial grounds when selling his house, thus failing to comply with the code of conditions laid down by the racial aliens of the dictatorial Commission for Racial Equality, an enemy overseer of commerce and industry, faces a fine and possible imprisonment and a claim for compensation of up to £10,000 for "injured feelings" by some racial alien.

Should you have "injured feelings" about this monstrous Coloured Invasion, and entertain the notion of, say, holding a meeting in London's Trafalgar Square to protest about it, forget about it. This venue has been denied to radical, racial patriots ever since the National Socialist Movement's rally there in 1962; though ever since any and every Afro-Asian and anti-nationalist cause under the sun has been able readily to obtain the necessary governmental permission. This particular exclusion is but one notable example of the multitude of methods and occasions used to supplement the repressive legislation by denying the facilities of freedom, without which facilities its invocation is a hollow and hypocritical husk of rhetoric. Halls for indoor meetings and locations for outdoor events are systematically denied.

While Aryans become demoted and deprived in the Britain of "victory", non-Aryans enjoy privileges and exemptions, preferences and priorities. The "Talmud" is venerated by Jews as their holy book of the laws of life. It contains some most abominable defamation of non-Jews which most certainly puts it in the category of "hate literature", and the writer of this article has on this score made formal complaint to the relevant authorities about its distribution as an offence under the Public Order Act of 1986. However, those authorities have explicitely refused to act, whereas, if this writer had said similar things about Jews, he would undoubtedly be gaoled under that legislation. We thus have a dichotomy of in effect one law for the Jews and a much different one for their opponents, resulting from the difference between official disregard in the one case and official enforcement in the other.

A second example of dual standards, elevating racial aliens above the law affecting true-born Britons, occurs in respect of the legislation we very rightly have stipulating humane conditions in the slaughter of animals for food, including the requirement under Section 36 of the Slaughterhouses Act of 1974 of pre-stunning before artery cutting. Very wrongly in that same Section an exemption is given to Jews and Moslems in their ritual slaughter of animals for their own food. Thereby Jews, who claim that it is a requirement of their religion, and thus a higher law than ours, that they kill animals by cutting their throats and allowing them to bleed to death, are allowed to do so. Not only that. The Jews also make it a matter of their religion to reject as unfit for their consumption the rear portions of the poor creatures so slaughtered, and to relegate those rear portions for consumption by Aryans. They are allowed to do so without any labeling to let the Aryans know they are consuming meat from animals the Jews have ritually slaughtered, and furthermore despite the fact that the exemption from prestunning is supposed to be confined to slaughter for their consumption only. Thus, as a matter of a Jewish victory, we have foisted on our people without their knowledge meat the Jews discard, produced by a method of slaughter our people are prohibited from practising themselves.

This disgusting discrimination continues despite, this summer, a report by the National Farmers' Union and a booklet by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals both condemning the exemption allowed to Jews and Moslems from the law applying to Aryan Britons; following a report in 1985 by the Farm Animal Welfare Council, an investigative body appointed by the government, recommending the prohibition of ritual slaughter by Jews and Moslems. To conclude the point, we have it from none other than the Jewish Chief Rabbi (Daily Telegraph, July 14, 1990) that "One of the first pieces of legislation introduced by the Nazis in Germany in 1933 was the prohibition of the Jewish method of slaughter, because the Nazis said they cared deeply about animals."

JEWS SEEK EVEN TIGHTER GAG

The Jewish community, as a self-conceived elite with special warranty, is still not satisfied with the advanced stage of suppression of criticism resulting from victory. Eldred Tabachnik QC is one of its many members crowding the legal profession and striving to ensure that our laws are completely kosher, meaning in accordance with Jewish requirements. As current President of the Jewish Board of Deputies, he is vociferously heading the wolfpack in his community which is continually clamouring for more and yet more suppression of unfavourable mention of that community; continually lobbying ministers and others for this gross mischief against our nation.

He wants the latest Public Order Act extended beyond a matter of contended "threat" or "abuse" or "insult", so that for conviction and punishment it is only necessary to show that a speech or writing just might, hypothetically, cause "ill-will, hostility, prejudice or contempt" That just about covers anything and everything uncomplimentary to the specially protected species. At the same time, as a second string to his anti-British bow, he is campaigning for a new law of "group defamation" to provide even further immunity from free speech.

Concomitant agitation comes from his community for higher penalties for the existing Public Order Act and for all offences where it can be made out that some racial motivation lurks. Some Jews even want gatherings of racial patriots in private homes to be subjected to censorship, if not entirely banned; and some want all organizations for racial patriotism, such as the British National Party, to be made illegal. This interminable, intumescent and insatiable lust for the suppression of our freedom in the aftermath of a war fought with their benefit in mind occurs in a community which happens to consist of the most practising racists in the world, and which in terms of the still extant law of expulsion of 1290 ranks in Britain today as one of illegal immigrants.

The full flavour of racial hate fueling this onslaught on our freedom, which is more in peril today in 1995 than ever before, came from Jewish Chronicle columnist Tony Mallerman, April 28, 1995, on the brink of the VE commemoration: "There are about 5,000 paid-up anti-Semites in the UK, according to a special report on Radio 4's Today programme. — These are the animals for whom there should be no rights." If this writer said the same or similar of Jews, Mr. Attorney General, do please tell us just how long it would be before you moved and sanctioned his prosecution. But then Mr. Mallerman's "Talmud" calls all non-Jews "cattle", and that from your abstention from action is evidently permissible. So maybe, eventually, this hateful Mr. Mallerman will be found advocating the ritual slaughter of anti-Semites as well, without pre-stunning, while you stand by undisturbed by such progression from demanded deprivation of liberty to demanded deprivation of life.

With people like Kaufmann, Tabachnik and Mallerman around and active, the wartime poster exhorting us to rise up and defend our imperiled freedom has a cogency now which it rightly never had when it appeared, and when the beholders would never have believed that in the wake of victory Britain would end up with its freedom so diminished and so further threatened as it is now. This writer, for one, is resolved come what may to respond today to that wartime poster in what is now a real fight for our race and nation against a real enemy of British freedom. If that real enemy wants to come banging on his door to take him away and silence him, he can here promise that enemy in advance that in his seventies, with not so much of life left to be spoiled by those who have well nigh ruined his country in his lifetime, he will give them a fight to the finish.

When tyrants in the garb of Democracy take away your freedom, they take away with it all obligation to conform to their illegitimate, anti-Aryan laws, and make rebellion not only a right but a duty. The ongoing drive within the Jewish community and the ranks of its non-Jewish adherents to deprive us of the very freedom they told us to fight for, when it suited them over 50 years ago, constitutes Public Mischief on the grandest scale conceivable in terms of the ancient offence of this name. Of this crime against the nation this writer here accuses all those engaged in it, holding that they should be so charged and arraigned. He calls on the Attorney General and Crown Prosecution Service to prosecute Eldred Tabachnik, President of the Jewish Board of Deputies and thereby head of the Jewish community, as a principal maker of Public Mischief.

OTHER SIGNS OF "VICTORY"

Other illusions of a victory leading to a better Britain can speedily be dispelled by one, long, hard look at life in the Britain of today where our cities have become cesspools of corruption, crime, vice, graft, deformity and decadence, refuting any notion of fighting and winning for morality and decency.

Illustrative of this perversion of freedom is the press report that "Glasgow is Europe's drug capital, with more injecting addicts per head of the population than any other city on the Continent. An estimated 10,000 intravenous drug abusers..." (Independent, December 1, 1994). The UK as a whole is reputed to have at least 100,000 heroin addicts. Predictably, the weak elements who proliferate in the vacuous, self-indulgent society which is Democracy turn to drugs in their dissatisfaction with life, the resort to narcotics as an escape being the indication of a mortally sick system and diseased way of life.

In this gay land of victory, wherein revels the likes of Tiggy Legge-Bourke in her Union Jack shorts, the very month of the VE festivities found the Daily Telegraph with the typifying headline "Police Advertise for Gay Recruits". This was followed the very next month by the news of a parade of 140,000 homosexuals in London's Victoria Park with one of the leaders of these queers jubilating that "London is becoming the gay centre of the world". How queer indeed have been the consequences of "victory"!

What of safety in the Britain of today which in 1939 reckoned to go to war for security from Hitler? The Daily Telegraph over 8 years ago reported that "Some parts of London and other major cities have become too dangerous for milkmen, postmen, rent-collectors, maintenance men, police and emergency services to work without special precautions." Our old folk, who were beguiled into fighting Hitler for their safety, are now terrified to go out because of "muggings" which in London in the first half of 1995 reached the record level of 20,000, and which even the race-mixing Metropolitan Police Commissioner has had just recently to admit are in his area the virtual monopoly of Blacks.

What of ensuring through victory the safeguard of our children and thereby the future of our nation? A few minutes outside any school at finishing time will provide proof of defeat in this purported cause. Out they come as a multiracial rabble, clad in their slovenly jeans, waddling along in their ungainly "trainers," stuffing crisps and other eatable junk into themselves, washed down with cans of Coca-Cola which they afterwards deposit on the pavement with other litter. Homewards they wend their way to luxuriate before the household deity, the television set, absorbing by the hour its infernal blend of entertainment and indoctrination.

Predominantly fat and flabby, devoid of idealism and discipline, this lost generation from "victory" and its far-reaching contradiction is coached in its deplorable condition by a mob of race-mixing, largely Marxist teachers of decadence totally unfit to have anything to do with the upbringing of youth. In the folklore of old evil spirits were liable to invade and possess unguarded infants. In present times the evil spirits are to be found placed in charge of our children in school, and their entertainment out of school. What a contrast to youth care in Hitler's Germany!

What about war and victory for Britain's preservation from alien ideology? Whereas Hitler's Germany fought communism at home and abroad in defence of its people's freedom, Britain, after aligning herself with communism during the war, has proceeded in the aftermath of victory to absorb a kind of creeping communism. This has been manifest in such as measures against "racism", "sexism", "homophobia" and "élitism", measures commonly congregated under the designation of "political correctness" as a euphemism for this outreach of the Marxist pestilence, lethal to Aryan freedom in all its forms.

What of protecting by the war and victory our industry and trade from German competition? Well, our overlords of victory have by now abandoned great parts of our industry and trade to foreign and especially Asian competition. National-Socialism, in contrast, would never have allowed such abandonment of the means of national freedom.

If the dupes of 1939-1945 were excusable, considering what they were then told and were then able to see, the revellers of 1995, with all they have seen since, and all that is apparent now, must be deemed inexcusable, blind buffoons, cavorting in the twilight on the corpse of our greatness.

As Siemion Serafinowicz is set up for show trial as a war criminal, Gothic Ripples answers in advance this projected spectacle of propaganda with the exposure and denunciation in this and succeeding parts of its World War II series of our own supreme war criminals. These are the makers of war who drove Britain into disastrous conflict with Germany, sending the servicemen of Britain, stuffed with lies, to fight their German brothers and destroy their National-Socialist achievements for the sake of the decrepit Britain they have brought about; and by virtue of which peacetime havoc they are also peace criminals supreme. These are the people we should have fought in 1939-1945, and it is they, the enemy within, and their whole system of national and racial ruin on which we must now declare war, total war.

THE SONG OF VICTORY

Victory they call it
As Coloureds roam the street,
Daily demonstrating
The White man's defeat.

We were saved from Hitler,
The brainwashed fools proclaim,
Taking racial mixture
As their peacetime aim.

Six million Jews were slaughtersd,
Survivors now all say,
Coming from extinction
To tell their tale today.

Thank goodness for Democracy,
All the benefit it's brought,
To push your Tesco trolley
Full of guaranteed good thought.

If Hitler had succeeded,
This would not have been allowed.
Ours would be a White man's land,
Strong, upright and unbowed.

So sing a song for victory
And the freedom we now find.
Hebrew Howard is our censor,
While the media moulds the mind.

It won't be long before we
Are full purged of racial hate,
As multiracial zombies
Of the kosher New World State.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

BONN STRIKES AGAIN— Hans Schmidt, chairman of GANPAC, former German soldier, veteran of the Eastern Front in World War II, has been arrested (8 August 1995) in Frankfurt, Germany on charges that he "defamed the memory of the [Jewish] dead." Mr.Schmidt was the editor of the "GANPAC Brief," which told the truth about the history of the Second World War. Herr Schmidt was traveling in Germany, seeing relatives and friends, and was arrested as he was about to board a plane for the United States, where he lived in Florida. After Germany arrested Gerhard Lauck in Copenhagen, Denmark a few months ago, it was not thought that they would attempt to grab another critic of the Bonn regime's toadying to the Jews. Bonn, however, no doubt feeling that Washington would say nothing about stepping on a German critic of the Holocaust industry, went right ahead and arrested Hans Schmidt. Notice that Washington had kittens over the arrest by the Red Chinese of Harry Wu. Lauck and Schmidt do not rate a notice at the State Department. Here they DO rate a notice. As I did in the case of Gerhard Lauck, I faxed a letter to Bill Clinton, with a fax copy to the German Embassy in Washington; plus copies to the two Wisconsin senators and three Milwaukee area congressmen. Other agencies and friends of the movement were faxed a copy of the letter. Nothing will be done until the U.S. State Department makes a formal protest over these arrests. Germany is stepping over its bounds with such tactics.

Just got Clerkin's Talon and read that Hans Schmidt has been placed in Der Schlammer.

Now George, pray tell—what made Herr Schmidt think he could badrap the Kike all these years, then go over to Kike-ruled Deutschland for a little vacation without getting put in the pokey?

I can recall you telling me, after your retun from Germany a few years back, how nice it was over there.

As far as slammers go, were I to have to be in one, the German variety would probably be as good as any; but to tell the truth, I'd just as soon not be in any slammer!

So George, I recommend that you do not go back there until the Kike has been put down for good. And that could be a while!

Gary Lauck, Supplier of Nazi material, Is Extradited to Germany

On Tuesday (September 5) five months after Germany first petitioned for his extradition, Gary Lauck, the Nebraska-based supplier of neo-Nazi propaganda to much of the radical German right, was handed over to Hamburg police by Danish officials. Danish police took Lauck, a U.S. citizen, into custody near Copenhagen on March 20 in connection with a German warrant for his arrest (cf. TWIG 4/7/95, p.2) on charges of illegal export of neo-Nazi propaganda material. Lauck heads the self-styled "overseas organization" of the Nazi party, banned in Germany since 1974, and is a major source of neo-Nazi materials to extremist groups in Germany and other European countries. In May, German officials formally requested Lauck's extradition, which was subsequently approved by a Danish court on June 6. Lauck unsuccessfully appealed that ruling and twice petitioned for political asylum, most recently on August 29. Although the dissemination of Nazi material is not illegal in Denmark, Danish officials backed the German extradition request on the grounds that Lauck's acitivities would be punishable under the country's laws against racist incitement.

The Danish Ministry of the Interior announced on September 5 that Lauck's second petition had been rejected and, with no further means of legal recourse open to him, that he would be turned over to German authorities. To avoid the possibility of extremist protests, no date for the extradition was announced beforehand. If found guilty of distributing Nazi propaganda, Lauck could face up to five years' imprisonment in Germany.

Dear George,

"Under Two Flags" [August LB] is the single most important article I have ever read that deals with Germany of the Third Reich. Please find enclosed $30. for 10 extra copies of this most important issue.

The work you do, George, is so vital. How we do appreciate your sacrifices and devotion to that work. Although I find Robert Frens a good writer and one who can write with humor, I find his attacks on revisionists to be very disturbing. He is very wrong in this regard—wrong and harmful.

A man I have always held in the highest esteem is J.B. Campbell. I would like to correspon with him. Please read my note to him and mail it on again. Thanks! I never thought five years ago (before my 3 1/2 years of research) I would proclaim Adolf Hitler the greatest man of the century (ever?) in 1995. Strange what truth does.

Enclosed is a check to renew my subscription and the balance for extra copies of your last issue, "Under Two Flags" by Heinz Weichardt. This is one of your very best issue, and you have had a lot in the past.

This is a must in setting things right with Hitler and Germany. Every damned politician should have to make a book report on this article. We don't have one senator or congressman in Washington that would make a pimple on Hitler's ass.

LYDENBURG
REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA 1120
15th May 1995
@Body Flush = Dear Friend

It is difficult to write to someone one doesn't know and even more so when an introductory contact includes a request. But as we share the same outlook on life, we feel ourselves free to avail ourselves of this opportunity.

You know that South Africa is now being governed by a communist regime. We had tried for many years to prevent this but had witnessed at last how others surrendered our country at the polling booth, thus plunging us into this situation with them. Everything we and our forefathers have built through the years is now inundated by them. It is difficult to describe the present situation for fear that you may think us guilty of exaggeration.

In order to survive and maintain our identity as a Boer Nation we now have to build something for ourselves, our children and future generations.

So we have founded our own schools to prevent our children from receiving their education in mixed government schools in which race, religion and culture face extinction. Standards in government schools are already very low and will deteriorate to such a level that qualifications obtained will be worthless. Moreover, children thus educated will become people without identity—just a grey mass. In our own school, The Lydenburg School for Christian and Nation's Own Education these problems have been eliminated and it is going very well.

But we can't provide schools only. We also are left with no choice but to build our own hospitals and old age homes as well. Once again government hospitals are filled with uncultured people, bringing about appalling conditions unacceptable to civilized people.

For these reasons we ask you for assistance. Financially we can neither build nor equip a hospital. So we appeal to you for help as we are sure you understand our need. Moreover we are just a few people who have to carry this financial burden and without your help such projects simply can't be attained.

We shall be most grateful for financial aid or, just as welcome, donations of hospital equipment which here with us is not only very costly but practically unobtainable.

We hope and trust that you will come to our aid or put us in contact with people who are willing to help. Being so much in need of your help, we are eagerly looking forward to hear from you. Please reply to the secretary not mentioning the school's name as it might be intercepted.

Thank you very much in anticipation and we also wish you may receive courage in your own struggle as we know that your and our struggle is a worldwide one.

A. E. BOTHA, SECRETARY

Dear Sir:

Some ask me, "Why are you so bitter about your country? Why such antipathy towards the Jews?" I give you my answer given them.

I am bitter that the country of my birth has been altered beyond recognition by an alien virus that my fellow white, Aryan American failed to recognize; still fails to recognize; has yet to combat.

The white American male allowed the control of his nation to slip out of his hands; he allowed himself to be duped into giving up huge hunks of his heritage; to be siren-sung into accepting the unnatural lie of racial equality and the brotherhood of man; to be hornswoggled into accepting the hairshirt of an irrational "guilt" complex; to be humiliatingly insulted by erotic-crazed, hearth-hating feminists; to appear a weak-willed, cowardly type no longer capable of self-discipline much less the disciplining of others; a helpless nerd before the tyrannies of the minorities; a man unhooked from volkish moral moorings; a man who is a rotten remnant of a once great and proud race; a race that demanded for itself cohesion, honor, separation and supremacy. A race of truth and nobility.

I have seen with my own eyes the gruesome metamorphosis of the white male and female during my seventy-one years. I have seen their decadent rush to hedonism, miscegenation, situation ethics and nihilism. I see a race destined for extinction; a race absorbed into a sea of mud if the present trend continues in this geographic zoo called the USA.

I have seen a government of the people become a government of ridiculous, people-destroying laws. A tyrannical government of corrupt politicians headed by a buffoon; a government in thrall to an alien race; a government of heavily-armed agencies who jack-boot their way into citizen's homes. A government to be feared. A government that is feared.

Why am I bitter toward the Jews? Well, friend, they have been the brains, the money, the will, the direction behind the disasters described above. They are the absolute, usurious ultimate in the finessing of finance...and have been for 2500 years. They are a race, a culture unto themselves. They are a global tribe of socially sophisticated solidarity. Throughout the diaspora to the present day, they owe no true allegiance to other than themselves. Unlike the Chinese, a gifted people who are content to live in foreign countries without striving to alter the mores or governments of their hosts, the Jew, although invariably a tiny minority, insists upon uprooting the culture of the host country and replacing it with his own degenerate one. He achieves this by shoving, pushing and pulling his cohesive clansmen to the top of government, media and markets. He is organized; his host people are not. His abundance of money, generally gleaned from his hosts, helps grease his climb aloft. He brags that he is like cream; always rising to the top.

Like a deadly swarm of locusts, the Jews swept out of the east into Germany during the nineteenth century and after their failed Bolshevik revolution in Russia of 1905. Immediately, they began their gnawing campaign against all things that were German. Although they numbered little more than 1% of the total German population, by the time of Hitler's rise to power they owned one third of the real property in Germany. This they had bought from starving Germans during the terrible inflation of the early twenties. They heartlessly bought those properties at ridiculously low prices with hard money sent them by their tribal kin residing in New York. They dominated the Weimar Republic. They dominated the media of Germany. They denigrated all things historically German, as they are doing to historic heroes of America today. They even ridiculed the memory of the fallen German soldiers of WW I.

They made up more than half in number of lawyers, doctors, stock exchange figures, even the chamber of commerce in Berlin. They dominated the book publishing houses so that books they did not wish published were not published.

The German people were aware of this cancerous mass within their borders. Hitler promised to rescue Germany from the fatal embrace of the international bankers, almost invariably Jewish, and he did. But, Roosevelt restored that choking embrace for the Jews with the use of American soldiers who he even conned, with lying propaganda, into exacting the terrible vengeance against Germany that the Jews demanded. After all, vengeance is sweet to a tribe whose motto is: "Never forgive, never forget."

Germany of the 20's is where America of the 90's is today. Who owns the TV networks here? Who owns the film industry? Who owns the publishing houses? Who owns the banks that make up the Fed Reserve? Who is the Chairman of the Fed? Who are the Cabinet heads? What two justices has Clinton, the "yarmulke kid," added to the Supreme Court? Who owns Time, Newsweek, US News & World Report? Who owns all the major newspapers of this country? Who has the largest PAC in the USA? Who brought about the end to segregation? Who spark-plugged the Civil Rights Acts? Who changed our immigration laws to let in the "mud" peoples? Who claims an impossible holocaust? Who claims their suffering is all that matters? Who whine at the slightest criticism of themselves? Well, friends, the answer to all those questions and more is: the Jews. Yet, they are only 3% of our population. Their insatiable greed will be our strongest ally in the coming great struggle that looms a time line away.

So...that's why I'm bitter. Aren't you, fellow Aryan?

...Truth, Honor, duty, folk...

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I found the article "Under Two Flags" (August LB) quite interesting reading which furnished some valuable historical insights, but it is marred here and there by factual errors. Example: Germany Must Perish recommended sterilization, not starvation, as a method of genocide of Germans (page 52). Weichardt was perhaps thinking of the Morgenthau Plan, which Roosevelt initialed in September, 1944.

In any event, I noted a statement in J.B. Campbell's "Introduction" with which I agree strongly: "Lately there has appeared in this journal a peculiar contempt for Historical Revisionism. The latter has undeniably been slashing and chopping the roots of contemporary Jewish power....." (page1).

Dear George,

It was good to talk to you on the phone. As per our conversation, I would like for you to mail me four additional copies of the August LB. The long article by Heinz Weichardt is not only to the point, but describes the times before WW2 in Germany really honestly and truly indeed and for this this man does deserve our recognition. I must admit here, Heinz Weichardt was a lucky fellow indeed, for he did not experience the bitter end of the war and its aftermath. Still he gave us an unbiased account and for this we must be grateful to him.

It must be mentioned here, his observation that no National Socialist would ever desecrate the Germanic symbol by smearing the swastika on odd places, is quite correct. I myself have seen swastikas displayed in museums from ancient Roman times as well as some North-American Indian swastikas, created by their silversmiths. That is why I do wonder who smeared those swastikas in red on walls, synagogues and other places...

With best wishes,

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I was a civilian war worker at Boston Navy Yard from mid 1940 to mid 1943. Some time in mid 1941 the destroyer Kearney was being used against the German submarine fleet on the orders of Franklin D. Roosevelt and was hit by a torpedo beside one of the boiler rooms. The keel was not broken, so that although the whole starboard side of the ship was opened up, it did not sink, and was gotten to the harbor of Reikjavik in Iceland where it was temporarily patched over. It was then brought to Boston Navy Yard.

I was working on a destroyer tied up to a dock, another destroyer was tied up outboard to that one. I hadn't noticed its identity. Just at dusk I was working on the main deck and saw men carrying white objects across the deck of the ship that I was working on. The white objects were the enshrouded dead being taken off the Kearney after the wreckage inside the ship had been removed so that the workmen could get to them.

I remember standing in the doorway of the deck house and cursing the treasonous, murderous Roosevelt till the air must have been blue all around, thinking of how he would be gloating over this! This still seethes in my memory after fifty years.

There were many Jews who made it no secret that they were working in the Navy Yard to escape the draft in their war. It was reported in the newspapers at that time that some Jew doctors were supplying medicine to Jews so that when they had to report for the physical examination for the draft it would appear that they had heart trouble, and so they didn't get drafted. Many of us would have loved to throw them overboard!

Of course it is now known that Roosevelt had sent a secret ultimatum to Japan designed to leave Japan no choice but war. He got caught red handed at that one, and a summary of the content of his ultimatum was splashed across the front pages of the Boston newspapers. I well remember how I read it to the other man who stayed at the rooming house with me. He commented, "This means war tomorrow." I agreed. It was indeed "A day of infamy" on the part of Roosevelt and his manipulators who brought it about.

I worked at Pearl Harbor Navy Yard from mid 1943 to the end of 1944. While there I met several of the "old timers" who had been there some time before the "blitz." They all agreed that they had never seen so many ships at Pearl Harbor before, and thought that they had been ordered in there to be used as decoys.

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 — except this time the armada is from India, with more than 20 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

What We Owe Our Parasites

by Dr. Revilo P. Oliver

Introductory Note

Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver is rightly regarded, by those few lucky enough to be familiar with his work, as one of the greatest Americans of this century. Born in 1908, he quickly rose through the ranks of the academy to become one of the leading philologists and classical scholars of his time. He was Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois, Urbana Campus, for 32 years. He could easily have spent his life cloistered in his study, doing what he loved best: applying the lens of scholarship, focused by his brilliant mind, upon the dusty tomes and manuscripts of the past. But he chose a different path. He saw clearly, and long before most of his countrymen, where the subversive and alien elements were leading his people, and he chose to risk reputation and social position to speak out. From 1954 until his death in August 1994, he worked almost without ceasing for the awakening of Americans of European descent to their danger and their possible great destiny.

Dr. Oliver delivered this address to a German-American group assembled at the Lorelei Club in Hamburg, New York, near Buffalo, on 9th June, 1968.

The typescript was lost in a flood in 1990 at Dr. Oliver's home, but has been restored by your editor to printed form based upon the original tape recording made by Mr. Everett Weibert. Any errors introduced in the article are of course the editor's and not Dr. Oliver's.

This is one of Dr. Oliver's finest speeches, and is certainly his most comprehensive short work.

Kevin Alfred Strom

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, let me thank you first of all for the honor of your invitation and the pleasure of being with you today. In the past dozen years I have spoken before a great many conservative and patriotic organizations, but this is the first time that I have appeared before a society that is specifically German: that is to say, composed of the descendants of the part of our race that stayed home in the fifth century, while their kinsfolk conquered and occupied all the western territories of the largely mongrelized and moribund Roman Empire that their more remote kinsfolk had founded more than a thousand years before.

As I understand it, I am speaking to a closed meeting of your members and of guests in whom they have confidence. I believe that it is stipulated that what is said here today is off the record and not for publication in any form and that there are no reporters present. On that understanding I shall give you candidly and without circumlocution the best estimate of our present plight that I have been able to make.

Some of you may remember the old story about the college girl who went to bed one night, and finally dropped off to sleep, but in the early hours of the morning she heard the clock strike two and she felt the door of her room was slowly opening. Terrified, she tried to call out in the darkness, but a handkerchief was whipped over her mouth and she felt strong arms lift her from the bed. She was carried downstairs, thrown into the tonneau of a large and luxurious Rolls-Royce that set off at high speed. After a long ride she was lifted out and carried into the large hall of a vast and palatial mansion, up marble stairs, and into an elegantly appointed room, where she was thrown on the bed. Only then did she see her captor clearly. He was a strong and handsome man attired in faultless evening dress. He stood by the bed, looking down at her speculatively and silently. She tried to speak, and at last she was able to say whimperingly, "What, oh, what are you going to do to me?" The man shrugged his shoulders. "How should I know?" he said. "This is your dream."

The story is absurd, of course, but it owes what little humor it possesses to its equivocal play on the mystery of our own consciousness. A dream is by definition a series of sensations that occur in the brain when both our senses of perception and our powers of will and reason are in abeyance, so that we have no control over that flux of sensations. But it is, of course, a well-known phenomenon that when we dream that we are dreaming, the dream ends and we awaken. Then the conscious mind takes over and we are again responsible for our thoughts, and must face a day in which we must be responsible for our actions, which, by their wisdom or folly, may determine the rest of our lives. Our dreams may give expression, pleasant or painful, to our subconscious desires or fears. But in our waking hours we must, if we are rational, make our decisions on the basis of the most objective and cold-blooded estimates that we can make: estimates of the forces and tendencies in the world about us; estimates of the realities with which we must deal; remembering always that nothing is likely to happen just because we think it's good, or unlikely to happen just because we think it's evil.

If ever we have had need to appraise carefully and rationally our position and prospects, the time is now. In the outer quadrangle of Brasenose at Oxford, if I remember correctly, there is in the middle of the green sward a solitary sundial, whose bronze plate bears the chilling inscription, "It is later than you think." I assure you, my fellow Americans, that it is now later — much later — than you think. It is possible, of course, that it may now be too late and that, as a veteran observer and distinguished friend of mine recently assured me, our cause is now as hopeless as was that of the South after the fall of Richmond and near the tragic conclusion of the second war for independence which was fought on our soil. I honestly believe, however, we still have some chance of survival. If I did not believe that, I certainly would not be speaking to you today or asking you to consider with me the odds against us.

I may be wrong. I have no powers of divination, nor of prophecy. And I certainly do not know the secret plans of our enemies, or even the inner structure of their organization. I can only guess the probable extent of their power and the probable efficacy of their strategy by extrapolation from what they have thus far accomplished. I can only give you my best estimate, made after long and anxious consideration; but I do not pose as an expert in these matters, and since I have promised to be candid, I will tell you candidly that my estimates in the past proved to be overly optimistic.

When I left the mephitic atmosphere of Washington late in 1945, I had no great misgivings about the future of our nation. On the basis of the best estimates that I could then make, I was confident that our future was assured by a popular reaction which I deemed inevitable within the next five years. I felt certain that the secrets of Washington would quickly become known and that our nation would be swept with moral indignation and revulsion when Americans saw exposed to the light of day even a small part of the foul record of the diseased creature that had squatted in the White House for so many years, surrounded by his appalling gang of degenerates, traitors, and alien subversives.

I knew that the secret of Pearl Harbor would be quickly disclosed, and that Americans would soon know how the Japanese had been maneuvered and tricked into destroying our fleet and killing so many of our men. I was sure that the public would soon learn of the old conspiracy between Roosevelt and Churchill (who was at that time a private citizen in what was still Great Britain), and also of Roosevelt's persistent efforts from 1936 to 1939 to get started in Europe the insanely fratricidal war that devastated that continent, that destroyed so much of what is the most precious and irreplaceable treasure of any race — the genetic heritage of its best men — and that inflicted on our own country a great squandering of life and wealth in a war that was deliberately conducted to assure the defeat of the United States and Great Britain no less than that of France and Germany. I was sure that we would quickly, once peace had come, see that we had fought for the sole purpose of imposing the beasts of Bolshevism on a devastated land. I was sure that we would quickly see the nature of the great treason trap called the United Nations. I thought that decent men's stomachs would turn when they learned of the officially admitted strategy of the British government which, in deliberate violation of all the conventions of civilized warfare, had initiated the vicious bombing of unprotected German cities for the express purpose of slaughtering so many defenseless German civilians that the German government would be forced to bomb unprotected British cities and slaughter enough helpless British civilians to work up in Great Britain some enthusiasm for the suicidal war that the British government was imposing on its reluctant people — the first example in history, I believe, of a government at war deliberately having its own citizens massacred for the purposes of propaganda. I thought that the truth about such domestic outrages as the infamous Sedition Trial in Washington would necessarily become known, and excite the feelings that such crimes must excite in the breasts of decent men.

And I was sure that a thousand other infamies, unsurpassed and only rarely equaled in recorded history, would be disclosed with the result that all the steamships outward bound from our shores would, within a few years, be crowded to their very rails with hordes of vermin desperately fleeing from the wrath of an aroused and angry nation.

In 1945 I really believed that by the year 1952 no American could hear the name of Roosevelt without a shudder or utter it without a curse. You see; I was wrong. I was right about the inevitability of exposure. Like the bodies of the Polish officers who were butchered in Katyn Forest by the Bolsheviks (as we knew at the time), many of the Roosevelt regime's secret crimes were exposed to the light of day. The exposures were neither so rapid or so complete as I anticipated, but their aggregate is far more than should have been needed for the anticipated reaction. Only about 80 per cent of the secret of Pearl Harbor has thus far become known, but that 80 per cent should in itself be enough to nauseate a healthy man. Of course I do not know, and I may not even suspect, the full extent of the treason of that incredible administration. But I should guess that at least half of it has been disclosed in print somewhere: not necessarily in well-known sources, but in books and articles in various languages, including publications that the international conspiracy tries to keep from the public, and not necessarily in the form of direct testimony, but at least in the form of evidence from which any thinking man can draw the proper and inescapable deductions. The information is there for those who will seek it, and enough of it is fairly well known, fairly widely known, especially the Pearl Harbor story, to suggest to anyone seriously interested in the preservation of his country that he should learn more. But the reaction never occurred. And even today the commonly used six-cent postage stamp bears the bloated and sneering visage of the Great War Criminal, and one hears little protest from the public. Why?

It is true that there were some faint and feeble beginnings of reaction, especially when Senator Joseph McCarthy began his famous series of hearings before the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security. All that those hearings produced was but a small trickle leaking through the vast dike of official secrecy that held back the ocean of evidence that the United States had been stealthily captured by aliens and by the traitors in their employ. But when dikes begin to leak they soon break. And when the McCarthy hearings started, only a little later than I had predicted, I said to myself, "This is it at last! This is the beginning. And soon will begin that great exodus of panic-stricken rats fleeing from a just retribution."

But I was wrong again. Instead, a friend of mine was right. He was at that time a member of the Central Intelligence Agency, which at that time included some Americans. And he happened to be in Wheeling, West Virginia, on the 9th of February, 1950, when Senator McCarthy made his famous speech in which he stated that there were 57 members of the Communist Party or of the Soviet espionage apparatus in the State Department in positions of responsibility and that the State Department knew that they were there. After the speech, my friend found an opportunity to talk to McCarthy alone. He told him, "Senator, you said there were 57 known Communists in the State Department. If you had access to the files of my agency, you would know that there is absolute proof that there are ten times that many. But Senator, you do not realize the magnitude and the power of the conspiracy you are attacking. They will destroy you — they will destroy you utterly."

But Senator McCarthy merely shook his head and said, "No, the American people will never let me down." He was wrong too, you see.

It's not necessary here to rehearse the steps by which McCarthy was destroyed. He was of course sabotaged from within his own staff. The aliens who control our press and radio and the boob tubes spattered their slime over the country. Swarms of the ignorant and neurotic little shysters whom we call "intellectuals" issued from the doors of the colleges and universities, shrieking and spitting as is their wont. And all that had its effect. But the conspiracy was able to silence McCarthy only by a somewhat less routine operation.

They found an Army officer who had been a military failure until Bernard Baruch promoted him to General, and who in 1945 should have been able to hope for nothing better than that he could escape a court martial and thus avoid being cashiered, if he could prove that all the atrocities and all the sabotage of American interests of which he had been guilty in Europe had been carried out over his protest and under categorical orders from the President. The conspiracy took that person, and with the aid of their press they did a quick masquerade job and dressed him up as a conservative. They wrote speeches that he was able to deliver without too much bumbling. They displayed his grin on all the boob tubes. And they elected him President. And, of course, "Ike" was elected with a mandate from his masters to stab Senator McCarthy in the back. And he did. And so the conspiracy plugged that small leak in the dike.

But how was it able to do that? Oh yes, we could trace the whole operation step by step. We know that our enemies are sneaking and cunning. We know that they command the wealth of the world, including whatever is in the United States Treasury and, through the income tax, whatever is in your pocket and mine. They can hire stupid or unprincipled Americans to do anything for them and to act as front men. But the real question before us is not their cunning and their innate evil.

The deeper, more important, and far more unpleasant question is: What was and is wrong with American people that made them and is still making them willing victims of their enemies?

Some years ago, it was customary for fast-talking confidence men to find some chump with five or ten thousand dollars in cash and sell him the Brooklyn Bridge or the Holland Tunnel. And I hear that when the Pennsylvania Railroad began to demolish its station in New York City, someone bought it for $25,000 cash. Now the swindlers in all those cases are undoubtedly wicked men. They deserve exemplary punishment. But, you know, there must have been something wrong with the purchasers too. Much as we may sympathize with them, we shall have to agree, I think, that they were not overly bright.

We Americans, you know, are regarded with supreme contempt by our enemies, who describe us in private and sometimes in public in the most contumelious terms. You may remember that some years ago a man named Khrushchev was the manager employed on the conspiracy's estate in Russia. He was invited to this country by his pal Ike, and he toured our land, honored and applauded by the press and even by some Americans. Soon after he returned; he told newspaper reporters in Vienna, "The Americans? Why, you spit in their faces and they think it's dew."

That delicate phraseology reminded me of what I had been told by an acquaintance in Washington during the Second World War. This man, a veteran journalist, held a position of importance in one of the lie-factories operated by the Roosevelt regime to keep the boobs pepped up with enthusiasm for sending their sons or their husbands to a senseless slaughter. At one policy conference, this man objected to a proposed lie on the grounds that it was so absurd that it would destroy public confidence, with the result that Americans would soon cease to believe anything that the agency manufactured. There was a great deal of debate over that question in this policy conference until it was ended by the agency's "great expert" in such matters. He was a man who, by the way, for some reason or other, had left Germany a few years before and come to bless the United States with his presence. This expert, being a bit ruffled by the debate, finally took his elegant little cigar from his mouth and said decisively, "Ve spit in ze faces of the American schwine!" And that settled it. The master had spoken.

Why do we receive and deserve such contempt? Unless we have simply degenerated into a race of imbeciles, unfit to survive in the world, there must be some ascertainable mental block that makes us so gullible. And, if so, we most urgently need to identify it. That's the real reason why I brought up the question of Senator McCarthy and what may have seemed history long past and otiose. That episode was obviously the antecedent of our present terrible plight. And when we try to look back at the obvious factors, such as the alien control of our channels of information and of our finances, we know there must be something back of that. And then we look at an obvious factor, of which many were made aware only recently by the shocking behavior of so-called students in so-called universities and by the far more shocking behavior of the administrative officers and faculties of those diploma mills. We now see that the gang of sleazy racketeers headed by John Dewey has attained its goal. We realize that the public schools have been for many years a vast brainwashing and brain-contaminating machine that has worked, on the whole, with great efficiency. It's a machine to which we send our children to have their minds filled with grotesque and debasing superstitions; to have their instincts of integrity and honor leached from their souls; to be incited to premature debauchery and perversion; to be imbued with thoughtless irresponsibility; and to be prepared for addiction to mind-destroying drugs and an existence below the animal level. The public schools have indeed been the most powerful single engine of subversion that our enemies have used upon us. The rest of this hour would not suffice even to enumerate the ways in which the self-styled "educators" have accomplished their deadly work.

When we go back to the affair of Senator McCarthy and look for a deeper cause, we can of course blame the schools, which were doing then, a little less openly, the work that they are doing now. But that leaves us with the question: Why did the American people fall for that racket? Why were they gullible enough to be so easily taken in by John Dewey's hoax?

Well, let us go back to 1917, when Dewey's fraud had gained control of only a relatively small area, and when the world was certainly a brighter and more pleasant place. That brings us, of course, to the time of Woodrow Wilson, another baleful figure in our history. I am not one of those who regard Wilson as entirely a villain. I think he was primarily a man who could intoxicate himself with his own words. And I think that he went through most of his life mistaking his hallucinations for reality, as surely as he did on that day in 1919 when he was driven in the early morning through the deserted streets of Washington, mechanically raising his hat and bowing to the applauding crowds that existed only in his feverish brain. I am therefore willing to believe that he believed a good deal of what he said. And although in his political life he was merely a marionette that danced and pranced on the stage as its strings were pulled by Jacob Schiff, Bernard Baruch, the Warburgs, and their agent Colonel House, the fact remains that Wilson ranted to the American people about "making the world safe for democracy" and "a war to end wars," and they believed him. Instead of calling a physician when he began to babble that arrant nonsense, they let him plunge them into a war in which they had no conceivable concern and to use the power of the United States to make the result of that war as disastrous in the long run for Britain as it was for Germany.

Now I admit that the notion of a warless world is a pleasant and attractive thought. But people who believe that there can be such a thing should ask it of Santa Claus, in whom they doubtless also believe.

Let us go back to 1909, when the American people were offered a plan for destroying nations that had been formulated again by a filthy degenerate named Mordechai, alias Karl Marx. Now it's true that the promoters hired a few journalists, liberal professors, and other intellectual prostitutes, to prove conclusively that the proposed income tax could never under any circumstances exceed four per cent on the income of millionaires and could never affect anyone else, for the obvious reason that no federal government could possibly spend so much money. But the point is that a majority of the American people — the inheritors of a free government based on the premise that government must be limited to essentials and must be tied down by the chains of a stringent constitution restraining the exercise of all powers except those deemed absolutely necessary for national defense — those American people believed that hogwash. In effect, what the promoters were telling them in wheedling tones was, "Come, little boobies, put your heads into the noose and we'll do you lots of good." And the boobous little boobies stuck their necks into the noose, and so the country is now under the regime of the great White Slave Act, and that's why we are where we are today.

We could go much farther back, and if we had the time we certainly should go back at least to the 18th century, when the weird mythology of what is now called "liberalism," and all of the basic lies that are rammed into the minds of our children in the schools, were manufactured by a motley and bizarre gang composed of agents of Weishaupt's great conspiracy, many ordinary swindlers and mountebanks, and quite a bevy of "idealists" with buzzing brains and twittering tongues. But I think that we have said enough to see that we Americans are suffering from a chronic disease or tropism that has invariably placed us at the mercy of our enemies by making us incapable of taking thought for ourselves. There is in us a weakness, perhaps a fatal weakness, that makes us not only listen to the babble of self-professed do-gooders, but to do whatever they tell us to do, and to do it as mindlessly as though we were in a hypnotic trance and had surrendered our will to that of the hypnotist.

Now I believe that this strange weakness, unlike so many of our peculiarities, is not a single congenital and hereditary idiocy. If that were true, we would not be here: our remote ancestors would have been eaten long before the dawn of history. It is compounded, it seems to me, of a perversion of seven different qualities; a perversion effected and fostered by certain misunderstandings in the peculiar circumstances that resulted from the prosperity, power, and world dominion we of the West achieved for ourselves and enjoyed in recent centuries. All of the seven elements of our mentality that I shall enumerate are good qualities, at least in the sense that they are born in us, that we could not eliminate them from our genetic heritage if we wanted to, and that we have perforce to accept them. We could comment at length on each of them, and it would be particularly interesting to contrast ourselves with other races at each point. But I must list them as briefly as possible, with only a word or two of explanation to make my meaning clear.

The first is imagination, which is highly developed in us, and vivid; an imagination which means, among other things, that we have a spiritual need of a great literature: both a literature of vicarious experience and a literature of the fantastic and marvellous that transcends the world of reality. But this gift bears with it, of course, the danger that we may not distinguish clearly between a vivid imagination and something that we can actually see in the world.

Second, the sense of personal honor which is so strong in us, and seems so fatuous and silly to other races. It is this, among other things, that gives us the conception of an honorable contest when men of our race meet as opponents in war. It gives us the knightly ethos that you see when Diomedes and Glaucus meet on the plains of Troy and in all subsequent history and story of our race. It also exposes us to the danger of behaving in knightly fashion to those to whom those standards are lunacy.

The third is the capacity for objective and philosophical thought, which is virtually limited to our race, and which enables us to put ourselves mentally in the position of others, but simultaneously exposes us to the risk of fancying that their thoughts and feelings are what ours would be.

The fourth is our capacity for compassion. We have a racial reluctance to inflict unnecessary pain, and we are ourselves distressed by the sight of suffering. That is, of course, a peculiarity that brings upon us the ridicule and contempt of the numerical majority of the world's population, who are beings differently constituted. The savages of Africa, who are now your masters in the sense that you have to work for them every day, find the spectacle of a human being under torture simply hilarious. And when they see a blinded captive with broken limbs squirm as they prod him with red-hot irons, they laugh with glee with a merriment, a real merriment, that is greater than the funniest farce on the stage has ever excited in you. You may search the vast and respectable literature of China in vain for any trace of compassion for suffering per se.

Fifth, our generosity, both as individuals and as a nation, which naturally brings on us the contempt of those to whom we give abroad.

The capacity for self-sacrifice is sixth; and that is, of course, highly developed in us, but it is a necessary basis for the existence of any civilized society. No people above the stage of unthinking savagery can survive in this world without some instinct or some belief which makes its young men give their lives for the preservation of the society in which they were born.

And the seventh and last is the sentiment of religion, which of course is common to all mankind, although here again it takes a distinctive form in us. For fifteen centuries the religion of the Western world has been Christianity, Western Christianity, and there is no other religion now known or even imaginable that could take its place. But it is simply an historical fact, which we must deplore but cannot change, that only a small part of our population today, 12 or 15 per cent, really believes that Christ was the son of God, that the soul is immortal, and that our sins will be punished in a future life. That means that the religious instinct, which is a part of our nature, finds in the majority of our people no satisfaction in an unquestioning faith; so that those frustrated instincts are available for exploitation by any halfway clever scoundrel, as the shysters and punks who now occupy the majority of our pulpits well know. When faith is lost, what Pareto calls the religious residue in a people becomes its most vulnerable point, its Achilles heel. It is the unsatisfied need for an unquestioning faith in a superior power.

Now, a perversion of all of these qualities in us operated during the centuries of our dominance to give us an utterly false conception of other peoples. We have imagined that by some magic we could convey to them not only our material possessions, but the qualities of our mind and soul.

And we have always succumbed to the flattery of imitation. The capacity for imitating behavior is common not only to all human beings, but to all anthropoids, as we all know from the proverbial expression, "monkey see, monkey do." An ape's ability to imitate is, of course, limited. But, with the exception of the Australoids, other races have the capacity to imitate us convincingly in externals. If they dress in our clothes, observe our social conventions, and speak our language, using the phrases which as they can learn by observation please us, and using those phrases even if they don't understand them or if they regard them as preposterous drivel and nonsense, the members of other races could imitate us so plausibly that we believe them converted to our mentality and to our conception of life. And any shortcomings that we may notice in the performance of the imitator, we generously overlook or regard as endearing naiveté.

This capacity for imitation is possessed by savages, at least by the more intelligent ones, and it has deceived us time after time. The British are as gullible as we are. Hundreds and hundreds of times, at least, they gave scholarships to Blacks from Basutoland or Kenya or Nigeria or one of their other possessions, and the result was almost always the same. With the money given him, the savage bought himself a good wardrobe, attended an English school, learned to play soccer, attended Oxford, wrote a charming essay on Wordsworth or on ancient law, copulated with half-witted English women who thought him "romantic" and themselves "broad-minded," and when he got tired of living on English generosity, went home to his tribe where he had a well-roasted baby served up to him as a delicacy of which he had been long deprived by the stupid prejudices of the stupid British.

With some of the highly intelligent Oriental peoples, the capacity for dissimulation goes much farther than that and approaches genius.

That strange and unique international people, the Jews, who for all the time in which they are known to history have lived and flourished by planting their colonies in other people's countries, have owed much of their success to the chameleon-like ability to take on, when they choose, the manners and attitudes of whatever country they choose to reside in. They are a highly intelligent people, quite possibly much more intelligent than we are. But all observers, notably Douglas Reed and Roderick Stohlheim, have commented on the Jews' amazing ability to seem a German in Berlin, a Czech in Prague, an Italian in Rome, and an Englishman in London, shifting from one rôle to the other with the ease with which a man might change his suit of clothes. The Jews have, of course, the great advantage that their skins are white, and that many of them resemble, in features, members of our race, even to the point of being indistinguishable, at least to an untrained eye, and including persons with such non-Oriental characteristics as blond or red hair.

I am not sure, therefore, that the highest talent for dissimulation does not belong to a people that does not have that very great physical advantage: the Japanese. Their ability to gain our confidence and appropriate our technology and science is simply phenomenal, as is obvious from what they, living crowded together on a few poor islands, have accomplished. But their talent for dissimulation is equally great.

I always remember the experience of a friend of mine, who was in the late 1930s a professor of chemistry in a large university in what may be called a strategic area of this country. The outstanding students in his graduate classes were four young Japanese. And partly because they were so apt in learning the more abstruse forms of chemistry, and partly because they were foreigners and so excited in him the generosity that is normal to us, he invited them to his home; and in the course of three years he came, he thought, to know them very well personally. Their manners and their English were excellent. They professed the greatest admiration for America and its institutions. They spoke, of course, of "democracy" in terms of high praise. They deplored "militarism," and r' ·y fervently hoped for "world peace" and "understanding among all peoples." My friend was convinced that if only we could bring more young men like that to the United States, the policy of Japan would eventually change, and the two nations would live thenceforth in perpetual amity.

Then one day he found himself alone at a crossroads in the open country some twenty miles from the university, waiting for some friends to pick him up in their automobile. They were late, and since the day was hot, he went to a nearby orchard to repose in the shadow of the trees while waiting. He saw his four Japanese students come sauntering down one of the roads, evidently out on a leisurely hike. At the crossroads, they stopped, looked up and down each road, looked around and saw no one. Then they straightened up and stood back to back, each facing in one direction, produced a Leica camera, and photographed each road and then the surroundings on each diagonal and made notations on a map. They had, of course, come to our country not only to learn our chemical science for eventual use against us, but also incidentally to map out the territory around the university for future reference, should their army have occasion to invade us or should they have occasion to land a secret force on our shores. And they went about their work with the patient thoroughness of their race, doubtless chuckling inwardly at the naiveté of the big White boobies who freely deliver all their hard-won knowledge to their natural enemies.

Our minds have been beclouded by an even more dangerous misconception long annexed to our religion. For centuries we have labored under the illusion that Western Christianity was something that could be exported, and only recent events have at last made it obvious to us how vain and futile have been the labors and zeal of devoted missionaries for five centuries.

When Cortez and his small but valiant band of iron men conquered the empire of the Aztecs, he was immediately followed by a train of earnest and devoted missionaries, chiefly Franciscans, who began to preach the Christian gospel to the natives. And they soon sent back home, with innocent enthusiasm, glowing accounts of the conversions they had effected. You can feel their sincerity, their piety, their ardor, and their joy in the pages of Father Sagun, Father Torquemada, and many others. And for their sake I am glad that the poor Franciscans never suspected how small a part they had really played in the religious conversions that gave them such joy. Far more effective than their words and their book had been the Spanish cannon that had breached the Aztec defenses and the ruthless Spanish soldiers who had slain the Aztec priests at their altars and toppled the Aztec idols from the sacrificial pyramids. The Aztecs accepted Christianity as a cult, not because their hearts were touched by doctrines of love and mercy, but because Christianity was the religion of the White men whose bronze cannon and mail-clad warriors made them invincible.

That was early in the 16th century, and we of the West have gone on repeating that fond mistake ever since, as the missionaries whom we sent to all parts of the world wrote home with innocent satisfaction glowing accounts of the number of hearts they had "won for Christ." And it is only after the international conspiracy's campaign of "anti-colonialism" really got underway that most of us realized that what had won all those hearts was primarily the discipline of British regiments and the power of the White man. On many a shore of Africa, for example, missionaries eager to win souls ventured to land alone; and the natives, after having a lot of fun torturing them to death, ate them — either cooked or raw, according to the local custom. What often happened was that a few months later a British cruiser hove to offshore, and lobbed a half a dozen 4.5-inch high explosive shells into the native village, and, if not in a hurry, perhaps landed half a company of marines to beat the bushes and drag out a dozen or so savages to hang on convenient trees. Unless the tribe was excessively stupid, they took the hint. The next bevy of missionaries was respected, as somehow representing the god of thunder and lightning. And if those men of God distributed enough free rice and medical care with their sermons, they were able to make many converts. They could teach a ritual, and they could perhaps inculcate a superstition that had some superficial resemblance to their religion; but as for teaching the spiritual substance of Christianity, they might as well have followed the example of St. Francis and delivered sermons to the birds.

Although it is true that in some places in the former colonial possessions missionaries are still tolerated, if they pay very well, we have at last learned that the gospel follows the British regiments in the White man's ignominious and insane retreat from the world that was his.

All of these factors have contributed, I think, to our strange toleration of the "do-gooder" and our incredible obtuseness in never asking against whom he is "doing good." For it is unfortunately true that fully 80 per cent of all those high-sounding projects of "uplift" and "social justice" are motivated not by concern for the supposed beneficiaries, but by greed or malice. But we never ask.

That is why we have so many "intellectuals" battening upon us. They have discovered the safest and most profitable of all rackets. An "intellectual" is distinguished by two talents: a glib proficiency with words, and very sensitive nostrils. He can smell a twenty dollar bill in your pocket a block away, and within two minutes after that delicious aroma reaches his nostrils the "ideals" are drooling down his jaw. You know the jargon: "the underprivileged"; "equality of opportunity"; "the culturally deprived"; "underdeveloped nations"; "emerging peoples"; and the like, ad infinitum nauseam. And as you listen to his sing-song the chances are you won't even notice his hand as it goes into your pocket.

Now we may be rich enough to be suckers, but we cannot afford the more elaborate kinds of "do-gooding" that are inspired by malice and hatred. But yet we tolerate them with a collective masochism that is simply suicidal. We have accepted an incredible inversion of values to the point that we have declared ourselves to be an inferior species, fit only to be enslaved, beaten, and butchered at the whim of our betters. That is what the proposition amounts to, although, of course, it is daubed over with the viscid slobber of humanitarian drivel devised by our enemies and mindlessly multiplied by our own sniveling sentimentalists.

It is not a new thing. If I had time, I would direct your attention in some detail to the vast and irreparable calamity brought upon our nation in the last century by a tiny group of vociferous and crazed fanatics, the abolitionists, who forced upon the South its tragic war for independence. I am not defending slavery, Negro slavery, as an institution. I believe that Jefferson and Lincoln were right in regarding it as a system that was pernicious, for quite rational reasons, of which the most important were: first, that it maintained on our soil millions of persons of a race radically different from our own, and by our standards inferior; and second, that it resulted in some production of mongrels, pitiable creatures torn apart by the incompatible instincts they had inherited. As you know, it was the firm purpose of Abraham Lincoln to have all the Negroes either returned to Africa, or, in the interests of economy, to Central America. But the abolitionists were not rational. They were, I am sorry to say, most of them Americans, including such persons as Wendell Phillips, Professor Elizur Wright, and, of course, hysterical females such as Lydia Child and Harriet Beecher Stowe. Their leader was William Lloyd Garrison, who was an American too, though he was financed by Isaac Mack and other Jews. They were a tiny group, despised by sane Americans, North and South. But they ranted and raved until they got their way. They began to agitate in 1840 for dissolution of the American union, and for division of the United States, by secession, into two countries. And after twenty years of ranting, they finally persuaded the states of the South to take their proposal seriously.

It is most instructive to read the abolitionists. They spout quotations from the Bible, and they babble about "human rights" and "equality." But they cannot completely conceal their real animus and inspiration. Their venom is directed against the plantation owners of the South, most of whom, though by no means all, were ladies and gentlemen. The abolitionists had in their minds a picture, partly correct, of the Southern landowner as man far superior to themselves in education, culture, and humanity. And for that they hated him, implacably. They also had in their feverish minds a picture, totally false, of the planter as a man of unbounded wealth and leisure who spent his life lolling on a wide veranda and sipping mint juleps. And they envied him passionately. They had a picture, equally false, of the Southern lady as one who spent her days in fairy-like ease, waited on hand and foot by obsequious slaves. They had a picture, largely correct, of those women as being accorded by men a chivalrous respect that was almost unknown in the North. And so they yearned to humiliate and destroy that Southern lady. That was the real inspiration of their frantic "do-gooding."

You can take the true measure of what has happened to our national mentality by just remembering the name of that distinguished horse thief and homicidal manic, John Brown, who, financed by a conspiratorial group that called themselves the Secret Six, was sent into the South to start a slave revolt. As everyone admits, his purpose was to get all the White women of the South raped and butchered, and to get all the White men of the South barbarously mutilated and butchered. What does that make of him in contemporary opinion? Why, he was a "champion of human rights," "a martyr of freedom," and all that. He wanted to butcher, it's true, but to butcher White men and women. That is to say, White slime, like ourselves, as we wallow in ecstasies of self-abasement and self-hatred. And that suffices to make him admirable, to make him noble. And so his soul goes marching on — over the hot coals, I hope.

I remind you that that little body of howling dervishes brought on us a terribly fratricidal war, inflicting on us an irreparable loss and impoverishing our nation and race forever by destroying the genetic heritage of our best men. And it also coarsened us morally, perhaps also irreparably. For after the assassination of Lincoln, which they certainly contrived, our hate-crazed "do-gooders" had their way. If there is any American who can read the history of all the suffering wantonly inflicted on the White people of the South during what is called "Reconstruction" without hanging his head in shame and feeling through his whole being an anguished remorse, I can only say that he is hard-hearted and sadistic beyond my understanding.

With that beginning, is it any wonder that we have reached today the point at which frenzied hatred of us is the certain way of attaining our veneration and our reverence? How the Americans have been taught to hate themselves!

Chinese Communists attack and capture one of our naval vessels, which we, perhaps by agreement between them and our enemies in Washington, refuse to defend although we had ample warning of the attack. But who cares? They're just White slime like us, born to work and die for their masters' pleasure. Now of course if they had been something really choice and noble, such as a mongrel syphilitic lousy homosexual Communist cannibal, why all of our liberal punks would be out screaming and howling in our streets from dawn to dusk and all night.

Every day, more and more of our young men are shipped to Vietnam and forced to fight under conditions carefully contrived to ensure the maximum loss of American life and to ensure eventual defeat. But let us overlook that. Let us assume that it really is a war and that it is being honestly fought. What is its professed purpose? To secure a naval or air base for the United States? To conquer a colony for the United States? To protect our blood brothers in Australia? Those would be rational purposes, although one might debate the strategic necessity of that particular location. No. The ostensible purpose, the declared purpose, is to save the prolific Orientals of South Vietnam from the horrors of Communism. Never mind that that purpose is transparent hypocrisy. Assume that it is sincere. What then?

We are Americans, White men of the West. And if we were sane, no truth would be more obvious and unquestionable to us than the fact that, so far as we are concerned, all the teeming population of Vietnam is not worth the life of one American soldier. But if anyone suggests that, why everyone is horrified: "Are we not the world's slaves to be used for do-gooding? Who cares about your son and mine — they're expendable."

Now at the instigation of the promoters of that slaughter in Vietnam for political purposes, hordes of young punks come screaming from the doors of our hoodlum-hatcheries (which for some reason are still called colleges), and they protest the awful war in Vietnam. What are they protesting? The useless death of a brother? Or of a former classmate, a White man? No, they are yowling and yammering because some of the sweet Orientals in North Vietnam get hurt sometimes. If only we could find some plausible way of killing American boys without discomfort to the Orientals, those rabid protestors would be perfectly happy.

The Jews, who, as I have said, are a highly intelligent people, and who with perhaps five per cent of our military resources knew how to finish in six days a war against opponents far more numerous and formidable than the Vietnamese, and who were intelligent enough to know that the only justification for aggressive war is the territory that is conquered by it, decided that it would be fun to kill some despised goyim on our ship the Liberty, and they did so — with the result that the legislature of at least one American state rushed them an official message of congratulations. Our men were killed where we sent them, ostensibly in the service of our country, killed while wearing our uniform and flying our flag. They were the symbols of our nation. They would have been the visible embodiment of our self-respect, if we had any. But who cares? They're just White slime like us.

Down in Memphis, somebody shoots a Black automobile thief, noted Communist agent, and bloodthirsty inciter of riots and revolution against us. What happens? Half the White nitwits in this country snivel and sob and mourn, saying tearfully, "What a wonderful man he was. He wanted to kill White slime like us. Wasn't that sweet, wasn't that noble, wasn't that saintly, wasn't he just like Jesus?"

One could go on for hours listing more examples. But I have said enough, surely, to show you what is really the greatest single obstacle that we face: the perverted collective masochism that has been incited in so many of our people.

What I have been saying right now is not what I first intended to say to you. I meditated, and prepared a discourse that was intended to show you that we have passed the point of no return, and that we now face a future of violence that can result only in our total subjection to the status of livestock, or survival at the cost of great hardships, sacrifice, and loss of life. I intended to speak at some length about Francis Parker Yockey and his great book Imperium. It is a book which evidently has the power to give to sound and healthy young Americans an inspiration and a purpose. And I intended to comment on it as representing, probably, our only force that will help us emerge from our present plight.

But after that, I had two telephone calls from men whose names you would probably recognize. The patriotic movements in this country include some phonies and a number of double agents, whose mission it is to see to it that all patriotic endeavors are directed down blind alleys, where they must end in frustration and discouragement. But I feel sure that neither man who called me belonged to either of those groups. I feel convinced that they were sincere and earnest. One of them spoke to me very solemnly about our duty to protect and defend the people of Vietnam from the horrors of Communism. The other, in the course of the conversation, spoke very emphatically about our duty to give to the rest of the world an inspiring example of the blessings of free enterprise — to the rest of the world, mind you. We are obliged to give them a model they can follow. So I discarded the discourse I had prepared and substituted this discussion, which has already been both too long and too cursory.

For I am convinced that we shall never be able to think rationally about our own survival until we have the courage to say, in our own minds: We are Americans, White men of the West. This is our country because we took it from the Indians. And we have an unquestionable right to this country so long as we have the power and will to defend it.

What do we owe the nations of Western Europe and such nations as Australia and South Africa? We owe them recognition of our blood relationship to the men of our race who remained in the lands from which we came, and with whom we have, to the extent that they recognize it, a common interest, since we and they together form a race that is numerically a minority on this globe, the rest of whose inhabitants hate us.

What are the "civil rights" that we owe our Negroes if they insist on having them? A free ride to Africa.

What do we owe the self-chosen people? Ordinary courtesy and considerate treatment so long as we are convinced that it is to our advantage to have a cohesive body of 12 to 15 million aliens reside in our country and own a large part of it.

What do we owe to the unspeakable gang that now rules us in Washington? A fair trial.

Now all this, of course, is something that we can say only in our own minds and in closed meetings. It is probably rash to say it even in such assemblies as this, given the strange infatuation of the majority of our people to which I have called your attention as being the greatest single obstacle before us. Such statements are obviously not feasible as propaganda or proclamations. Indeed, I greatly fear that for most of our people those implanted "humanitarian" hallucinations are so deep and inveterate that they can be broken, if at all, only by the terrible shock of physical suffering. And that they will surely receive.

In the meantime, it will fall to you, if you do not intend to surrender, to provide such leadership in your own circles and communities and to make such preparations and take such actions as will advance our cause with due consideration to prudence and strategy. I have said this to you because I am firmly convinced that our future is hopeless indeed if we do not clearly see in our own minds our own purposes. And that, I am certain, we can never do, unless we can free our own minds from the constricting trammels of "humanitarian" superstition and the counterfeit moral inhibitions that have replaced true morality.

I trust that I have not shocked any of you. But I know that it is quite possible that some of you may feel that what I have said is heartless and in violation of our Christian duty to love everyone. If so, I can only say that I am sorry and observe that you are much too good for this world.

I know that the prospect that I have suggested is grim and may well daunt a man. I can only remind you of the most incontrovertibly true statement in the great and prophetic work of Oswald Spengler: "Glücklich wird niemand sein der heute irgendwo in der Welt lebt." [No one in the world today can expect happiness.] From that destiny there is no retreat, no escape. There is no place to hide from the consequences of what we of the West have brought on ourselves by our generous folly.

The only alternatives now are to fight or to whimper. But if you think that you can escape, good-bye and good luck. To the rest of you I suggest that we shall see our problem clearly when we say to ourselves:

We are Americans. This is our country. He who would take it from us, by force or by stealth, is our enemy. And it is our purpose — nay, it is our duty to our children and to their children and to our yet unborn posterity — it is our duty to use all feasible means to destroy him.

Hate, et cetera

by

Robert Frens

I am not, in any way, hostile to revisionists. What I am pointing out is that the endless blabbing is time-consuming, distracting, and never stopped one Neger from mugging a defenseless old woman. The jews propagate Lie 1 which is quickly followed by Lie 2 and Lie 3. The revisionists take issue and busy themselves with the absurdities they find in Lie 1. While they are laboring with this, the jews come up with Lie 4, Lie 5, Lie 6, and Lie 7. Next, the revisionists attack Lie 2 and the jews respond with Lie 8, Lie 9, Lie 10, Lie 11, and Lie 12. "We are winning!", exclaim the revisionists as they watch their houses burn and visit each other in the hospital trauma wards. The jews then continue with Lie 13, Lie 14, Lie 15, Lie 16, Lie 17, Lie 18, and Lie 19. After a secret victory party and another round of hat-passing, the revisionists are ready to tackle Lie 3. By then, the jews are up to Lie 47. At the present rate of "progress", I assume that when the jews reach Lie 666, the revisionists will be "debunking" Lie 69.

A wise man knows when to quit and when to renew the battle on a ground which will afford victory. There is little to be gained trying to carry water in a sieve. Lies can always be manufactured at a greater rate than can any rebuttal. Besides, once you take the "debunking" approach, you become an instant loser since you always allow the other fellow the first shot.

As for the experts, none of whom agree, who feel that I know nothing about nutrition, I have little to say. I have my opinions and they have theirs. One does not maintain health by analyzing what he eats anymore than one stays sane by psychoanalyzing his thoughts. The fact that this goofy nutrition business is infested with jews, should serve as a flag to Aryans of all stripes.

Eggs, for example, have been both the "perfect food" and also one of the most dangerous things to eat. It all depended upon which expert you believed to be "the" expert. In the 1930s, eggs were the best single item, second only to milk, one could consume, whether raw or cooked. Anyone with a brain quickly discovered the immense positive impact egg ingestion had upon the health of their dog or cat. My cat Spooky was an "Arnold" of his breed with thick, glossy black hair and a set of teeth which served him well in his continual "squirrel battles."

During the late 1950s, eggs were still in favor although the experts warned that you mustn't eat them raw since this destroyed valuable B vitamins. Someone then found a supposed link between cholesterol, eggs, and heart problems. Eating eggs, during the following decades, was placed in the same category as rooms with phoney shower stalls. Medical "science", of course, is about 50 percent witchcraft—torturing animals to effect headache cures in humans. Upon discovering a statistical correlation between tallness in people, and bashed heads from low underpasses, the experts came to the conclusion that tallness was a problem. Thus, when you went to the local prescription signer for a height test, you might find that you were not "normal"—you had a high inch count. (The correct term should be "average" and not "normal". Short, and tall, people are all normal.) Thus, the six-foot-four people were told that their height level was "dangerous" and that cutting growth foods from the diet just might help them from getting their brains rattled when a low transom was encountered. One must therefore strive to lower his height. The cholesterol baloney follows this "logic" and the initial screwy pronouncements have been modified. Now, it is not just cholesterol, per se, it's "good" cholesterol versus "bad" cholesterol. (The sludge which builds up in the arteries comes mainly from artificial fats such as margarine. The body doesn't really know how to handle this muck from the outer-space laboratories.)

Our farm dogs, Purp and Hank, ate plenty of raw eggs, raw milk, raw woodchuck, and raw, bloody, rabbit. They enjoyed near perfect health for their 18 years on this earth. "But they are carnivores", you say, "and those rules don't apply to us." Don't they? Today, veterinarians recommend things like corn and soybeans for your cats and dogs and the chicken-feed companies go right along with this nonsense. Humans are now being advised to eat more grain—like the cattle we are supposed to be. It's all good for business.

Eggs went from "perfect" to "passable" providing you don't eat them raw. Following this, they were "OK" if you didn't eat the yolks. The end of the road came when people discovered that their relatives all died from massive heart explosions—all due to eating eggs. My Uncle Karl, who recently died at the age of 101, was a genuine "survivor" of the egg death-camps. He always had three, every day of his life, for breakfast. He also knew nothing about nutrition or bad health. His only health problem resulted from a motor-bike accident when he was 88 years of age.

Whenever any higher critter sees a man for the first time, it quickly retreats. Did you ever wonder why? Did its little brain decide that anything wearing clothes was to be avoided? I doubt that, since most mammals place a higher value upon what they SMELL than upon what they see. And what might they smell, for indeed, they do tune into odors? In addition, critters rarely run from a man who is downwind. What they smell is the substance lambda-siene. This substance positively identifies a mammal as a carnivore—a damned, bloody meat-eater! Men stink up the air in the same way as do the cougar, wolf, and hyena. Cows, gazelles, and elephants, never emit this substance, while die-hard vegetarians do, no matter how many celery stalks they force down their gullets.

When the typical carnivore stink is coupled with the tell-tale short digestive tract and binocular vision, it escapes me why so many seem to think we were made to eat watercress and turnips. But that is the beauty, and fault, of the human brain. It has the ability to over-ride reality and objective reason. White people, the most intelligent of all peoples, show this property in abundance. The White brain is the only brain capable of devising ways to put men upon the moon but it is also the only brain which can endanger itself with that imagination. A Black man, being closer to the animal world, is never deceived by lying politicians, and always knows who his enemy is. The Yellows will often publicly admit the superiority of the White inventive brain but they also smile at how easily his pockets can be picked. Most of the nonsense in this world finds a home in the White brain where the owners are always in a state of befuddlement... not recognizing the war they are in.

The revisionist waltzes are only historical parlor games which will do little to break the back of jewish power. Jewish power is held in place by goyim with mush for brains and greed for loins. Millions of Americans, in 1939, believed the Orson Wells broadcast about an invasion from Mars. In 1942, millions of Americans believed that the Japanese were about to invade Keokuk, Iowa, while the Germans were planning to embark upon a forced march from Argentina to Texas. With this in mind, plus the current rash of nutrition and religious folderol, it's easy to see why we are losing the battle to keep our lands. As for food: If it weren't once alive, then don't eat it, especially if it's been "processed", for all life consumes other life. An energetic munching of a savory pork chop will do both gentile and jew, a real good.

Cholesterol is not the enemy. Fats are not the enemy. The real enemy is not even "stale" food. The enemy is all of that processed, "fortified", plastic crap which stuffs the local super-markets, especially computerized carbohydrates—the least valuable of anything we care to chew upon.

These are my opinions and while I eat my butter you can swallow "safe fats" such as diglycol stearate and hydrogenated goat-gonad oil—whatever makes your day. "Hey man... what's your triglyceride level today?"

As the clock ticks:

A small, older woman, about 80 or so, was heard saying "I feel a little tired today. Maybe I should go on a low cholesterol diet."

Didn't I tell you nearly one year ago that Marsha Clark was a lover of black meat? and that O.J. was a lover of anycolor meat?

A "non-racial" incident recently took place at a school when a small band of Whites battled a larger band of Blacks over an issue of some Black male humping a White female. In a similar vein, two other "non-racial" incidents occurred when a gang of Blacks shot and robbed two White students, while shouting "Kill the mother f—ing honky!" In view of this, one could wonder what a real racial incident might entail.

The telephone companies are complaining that INTERNET use of their communication lines are causing them to lose revenue. In a matter of a few seconds, one can E-mail a batch of paragraphs which would take several minutes if conventionally dictated over the telephone. The World Wide (sticky) Web can now serve up a bunch of hash, for a fistful of dollars, which you could get elsewhere for pennies, or free. The WWW advantage is that you don't have to go out in the rain to get information you'll never use. Believe me, it will not be long before the "information highway" will cost much more at the toll gates. But, once hooked, who cares?

While gawking at the piles of useless trash, at the local Computer City, I heard a salesman using the "low-ball" approach on two apparently gullible women. The women were interested in a low cost computer package which would enable them to peck, hunt, and do. "Here's a fine one.", said the salesman, "It would serve you well in spite of a small drawback."

"A drawback?" asked one of the women.

"It has a small memory and not many people would go for that. Now here is a model, for only a few dollars more, which has a very large memory. It's somewhat more expensive. $2200 instead of $1600. It would be super great—in fact, IT IS super great in the way it deals with its low speed."

"Low speed?" the other woman asked.

"No one wants slow computers today. They all want the state-of-the-art and that brings us to this $3200 super fast, mega-memory beauty. Besides, it's a 'tower' model and not one of those (chuckle) "pizza boxes". (Here, the man was referring to the short height, flat, desk-top design, as opposed to the tower models which resemble something constructed at Cape Kennedy.)

As I passed by, I remarked, "If you stand a desk-top on end, you'd have a 'tower' wouldn't you?" Tower, schmower! It was only a few years ago when manufacturers mentioned that you could position their computers in any space-saving fashion which served your needs—flat, or upright. As the demand for greater physical size increased, this logical approach followed. If that female couple is as gullible as her fellow citizens, she probably walked out with the $3800 model. The jew Morlocks crank up their sirens and the Eloi goyim walk into the caves.

The hoopla about Windows 95 has quieted but the sales department didn't retire. They are now pushing a Windows 95 "repair kit", consisting of nearly one dozen disks, which is supposed to solve all of the problems the "jump on the band wagon" types found themselves immersed in. In two more months, there will probably be a "patch kit" which will correct the faults contained in the "repair kit". The band plays on and old P. T. Barnum was a real cool hip dude.

Clam-face Pat Robertson was giddily proclaiming the power of prayer by parading about an old duffer whose cancer went into remission. He prayed every hour, and in spite of the prognosis, the cancer ebed with each Amen. Now Pat fails to mentions the other 8000 people who prayed around the clock but nevertheless died. What I am waiting for is a Robertson example of someone who prays daily, and perhaps hourly, for continued youth, much like Dorian Gray. That would demonstrate, once and for all, the power of prayer. The other day, I prayed that prayers should not be answered. I think mine was.

Well George, it's time for me to sign off. We are entering the closing days of the right-wing "the truth shall make you free" period. People, at least those with a brain, know all that they need to know. Support will now go to anything which passes as "action". Hitler detested the flapping lips of the parliamentarians and nothing is ever decided, finally, without the reddening of the earth. The gazelle must die so that the cheetah might live. On this planet, you are either predator or prey—so sayeth George Lincoln Rockwell. (He still owes me $20 from 1966. With 6 percent interest, compounded daily, this amounts to $113.93—without compensation for inflation.) ❑

by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A soaring exposé of Red bestiality" — Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS. Order #01013. Sale priced: single copy $2.00 + $1.50 postage; 10 for $15.00 + $5.00 postage.

OIL: THE PRETEXT FOR U.S. MISCHIEF IN THE MIDDLE EAST

by Eric Thomson

Francis Parker Yockey wrote that natural resources would be used as a pretext for world conflict. The U.S. 'achievement' in its destruction and massacres of Iraqis caused much oil to be lost, rather than gained. At present, Iraqi oil is still embargoed, so if the availability and supply of oil to the U.S. were the real reason for war, it would be logical for the oil situation to be otherwise. The U.S. imports less than 20% of its oil from the Middle East, so the official line that USZOG must get its mercenaries mired in the sand and oil-sludge of the Middle East is admittedly 80% fiction! They are there for Israel.

The reader may recall the ludicrous list of "reasons" U.S. forces were "required" to be involved in Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Oman and Iraq. Oil was first and foremost, but that must have seemed a little too crass and commercial for USZOG's propagandists. The boobs were not being whipped up into the Orwellian murderous frenzy to suit them. Thus did the jewsmedia invent a mythical beast it called Kuwaiti "democracy". Suddenly, an absolute sultanate with its nepotism, slaves and harems became a democracy. It was hard for those with even half a brain to believe, so the ZOG propagandists pulled their 'ace' from under their sheenie-beanies: Hitler! As Orwell foresaw in 1984, a permanent villain was needed by Big Brother's dictatorship. His was "Goldstein". Ours is "Hitler". The Libyan dictator had the "Hitler" title before it was hung around the neck of the present Iraqi dictator. Now, the boobs had 3 reasons to applaud the massacre of Iraqi soldiers and civilians. The hoax of Iraqi atrocities in Kuwaiti hospitals was soon dropped when it was disproved, although it may have whetted the boobs' blood-lust. Once again, we see that "Hitler" still rules Iraq, so our ZOG's reasons for involvement were obviously neither oil nor the destruction of the latest "Hitler". Those with intelligence are repeatedly insulted by the ZOG. Unfortunately, events prove that 90 percent of the people have too little intelligence to insult. The majority is too stupid to examine critically the lies it receives and it is too shortsighted to see whom these lies serve.

The "shortage" of world oil supplies is one lie which serves the middlemen who control the international oil market. Any casual reader of the jewspapers can understand that if this were true, the oilproducing members of OPEC would not attempt to limit oil production to maintain world oil prices. If oil were so scarce and demand so great, there would be no need for OPEC, except to put pressure on the middlemen of the international oil cartel to cut them in on more of the loot. John J. Rockefeller, alias Wreckafeller, who apparently had jewish ancestry, racked his brain to figure out a formula for eliminating competition from the oil industry. "Competition is a sin!" he declared. Like a true kike, he flew unerringly to "the point of control". There was too much oil in too many places to control the source and there were too many retailers to enable him to control the outlet and hence, dictate prices to the world market. Transportation was likewise too abundant to control the oil market, but refineries were not! These were scarce and required major capital investments, compared to the aforementioned branches of the oil business. Rockefeller began to buy all the oil refineries in the United States and elsewhere. All oil received and processed by his refineries became his and soon, Standard Oil became known as "the Octopus". Marine Corps Commander Medley Butler testified before Congress that the Marine Corps was basically a mafiastyle "enforcement" gang who, among other things, "made China safe for Standard Oil". The political clout of the oil middlemen has not diminished one whit since he so bravely testified, for oil and banking interests interlock, and they are controlled by the same jew families.

The Rockefellers have long known that there is no oil shortage, but their media hack-writers are paid to tell us differently. Since oil prices are determined by supply and demand, the present price system depends upon artificial limitation of supply. In the depth of The Kosher Depression of the 1930s, a 'holocaust' occurred in East Texas: Goy wildcatters struck it rich, as gusher after gusher came in. The Rockefeller interests could see a danger to their price structure, so they quickly had the Texas legislators pass one of the first "oil conservation" laws on the books. The East Texas wells were to be capped! Hollywood even made a movie depicting some of the violent events which followed: the shooting of wildcatters, the blowing up of wells and the peace of the grave yard which followed. This may well be why the kosher "peace movement" adopted the Scandinavian Death Rune as their symbol: "Peace equals Death". "Conservation" has been the fallback position of the oil cartel whenever they use laws to limit production and availability of oil resources. If bandits used similar euphemisms during their robberies, their victims might even thank them! The middlemen of oil maintain their power over governments by their policy of restricting oil production. Always, they strive to keep the users of oil from producing their own oil. Always, they strive to keep the producers of oil from making the things oil money can buy.

The abundance of oil, worldwide, is an open secret. Europe has oil in great quantities. The British Isles float on it. Canada has huge oil reserves in its central provinces and even in Hudson's Bay. Africa has great oil reserves on its east and west coasts. Fifty wells were capped off the coast of Mozambique, according to one Caltex official. The question is, which area of the globe, if any, is not selfsufficient in oil resources?

Canada is a microcosm of oil cartel machinations, for the Zionist Occupation Government (CANZOG) is obedient to the oilbanksters' every whim. In the 1973 Oil Crisis, which was the result of the Yom Kippur War, CANZOG ordered the capping of oil wells in Alberta, causing an economic depression. The Albertans were told, "There is a shortage of oil. Cap the wells!" In the 1930s, Alberta issued its own money, called "Prosperity Certificates", so as to counteract the kosher depression. CANZOG declared: "There is a depression. You must withdraw that money or we will invade you!" Thus did the money depression resume in Alberta, just as the oil depression continued. The reader may remember that the 1973 "oil shortage" was the pretext for all prices to rise, throughout the world economy. As usual, those new "Hitlers", the Arabs, were blamed for it. The geologist who discovered the oil in the central provinces has assured me that there is a huge supply of oil in Ontario, where oil was first developed commercially in North America, before Drake's well in Pennsylvania. His exploratory well required a drilling permit for every hundred feet. The permit was issued by CANZOG under advisement of The Petroleum Institute, which is owned and operated by the oil cartel. The Petroleum Institute has declared that "there is no oil in Ontario". Therefore, he was denied a permit to drill down an additional hundred feet as soon as natural gas was struck. That was as far as he got, for his geologist's license would have been canceled if he had disobeyed. Meanwhile the original wells in Petrolia, Ontario, continue to flow, as they have for over a century and natural gas, along with oil, is forcing its way into water wells and cisterns in Jarvis, Ontario. Explosions have occurred there and ZOG spokesmen dare not say why!

Were all the liquified oil to disappear from the world tomorrow, there would be no necessity for an oil shortage, thanks to those "awful Nazis" who did develop "The Formula", depicted in the Hollywood film of that name. Oil from coal kept the German war effort putting along after the loss of Rumanian oil supplies. The aerial destruction of the 7 or 8 oil 'factories' was the final blow to the Third Reich, which used up the last of its already scarce reserves to keep its aircraft flying, its tanks and its trucks rolling a few weeks longer. Among the tons of German inventions stolen from the Third Reich were the plans for a typical oilfromcoal plant. Under the Eisenhower regime, a plant was constructed in Chicago, as I understand, and it produced oil at a few cents more per barrel than the cost of regular crude oil. The oil cartel stepped in and the plant was totally dismantled. "What kind of a good deal is this?" they demanded to know. Most of the oil used in South Africa was produced from domestic coal at Sasol I and Sasol II which were based upon the German designs.

Thus it is that oil is being used as a jewish pretext to keep everyone at the mercy of parasitic middlemen and as pawns to die for Israel in the ongoing Middle East conflicts. It further serves the pretext for sending U.S. forces overseas and for the importing of foreign troops under "United Nations" command to garrison this country, whenever the ZOG so desires.

Look in your mirror, Whitey and see who you are. Once you know who you are, you will begin to learn what is good for you. Without economic independence there can be no sovereignty and without sovereignty, there can be no survival. The ZOG uses dependence to enslave and destroy us. Remember: Our Race is Our Nation! ❑

THE INQUISITORIAL CHURCH

by

Jarah B. Crawford

It may be true that Christianity and the Church no longer exterminate "heretics," that savage priests no longer hate heretics with every drop of their bestial blood; that these infamous priests and ministers no longer exercise their frenzied joy of leaping upon the helpless victims of their rage; no longer crush their bones in iron boots; tear their quivering flesh with iron hooks; cut off their lips and eyelids; pull out their nails; tear out their tongues; extinguish their eyes; stretch them out on racks; flay them alive; crucify them upside down; burn them at the stake; mock their cries and groans; rob their widows and children; then, pray to God to finish this holy work in hell.

The Inquisition is no longer with us. Rut only the savagery has been removed. The Christian hatred remains in tact, veiled only by the pious hypocrisy of their insane religion.

In 1829, the Reverend Robert Taylor was twice imprisoned for writing the great scholarly work, The Diegesis. Today, thinking, intelligent, honest intellectual people vho see through the fraud and insanity of this Christian monstrosity are still made the enemies of Christianity and the Church.

Those dwindling numbers still in Christianity remain infected by their religion and the cursed Bible with its savage God who teaches in every book of his "Holy Word" to hate the "unbeliever." The worst crime in the universe is to be an unbeliever. The Church still persecutes anyone, Christian or otherwise, who questions a doctrine, or who looks with honesty at the terrible threat to liberty practiced by those retaining the scar of savagery of the Inquisition.

This insane religion practices the love of its enemy — the murderer, the homosexual, the thief, the sex deviate, the wifebeater, the politician, the government, the communist, the Jew. All is forgiven with love, for even the thief on the cross was forgiven. But the unbeliever remains the hated enemy to be scorned, thrown out of the family, dealt with the residual of the Inquisition which remains in every Church, in every heart of every Christian.

Do you not wonder what would happen if just one of these Christians would sit down with one of these unbelievers, these infidels, and hear what he has to say, to listen to some questions of concern and common sense? But the very real possibility of getting an honest Christian to sit down to listen, to learn, just never happens. I could not get a hearing in Bible College. I pleaded for an audience before the pope of the Assemblies of God, G. Raymond Carlson. He lied his way out of it!! My older daughter is a Bible College graduate and the wife of a Christian and Missionary Alliance minister. I have seen her once in 19 years. I believe she is insane. My younger daughter is a born again, pentecostal, devout church goer. There is no way in hell that these two daughters would sit down for a family reunionr much less for a discussion of Christianity, though I have the college degree in Bible and Theology and they are the Christians.

Do you not wonder why these Christians are deathly afraid of discussion? Is it their shallow knowledge of what the Bible actually says that provides the great insecurity of discussion? Is it their greatest fear that they could not answer simple, logical questions without compromising their blind faith? Is it their loss to explain the savagery of the Bible and of Christendom? Are they so imprisoned by their blind, unquestioning faith that they fear the liberty of honest free thought? Is it their God they fear, or is it their fear of Truth? How can their God oppose Truth? Why does Christianity refuse to enter the Laboratory of Truth?

We the unbelievers, the infidels, are hiding from nothing. We seek Truth!!!!! The Laboratory of Truth is our work shop. We are at liberty to study the ruinous effects Christianity has on our loved ones, our nation, and the world. We reject the superstitious, the counting of beads, all the practices and beliefs manufactured by the minds of ignorant priests and theologians whose selfish purpose was to enroll the slaves into the Church and the slaves' substance into the Church coffers. It is the same today, mingled with the threatening superstition of heaven or hell.

How can any religion, or any Christian, be so utterly dishonest and corrupt as to refuse the use of one's mind in discussion of itself? Truly, this Christian religion portrays itself as totally a fraud by its very refusal of discussion. Add to this the honest investigation of Christianity, and this religion would disappear as the dew on a summer morning.

The only hope for the survival of Christianity is that its adherents remain ignorant, superstitious, still ingrained with the residue of the Inquisition, and segregated from the thinking, writing, honest people allowed to use their brains in the discovery of Truth. Truth is the greatest enemy of Christianity, that one enemy which cannot be loved and forgiven. If Truth treated Christianity as Christianity treats Truth, it would be Christianity's turn to be burned at the stake.

This short exhortation has not attempted to touch the many centuries of stagnation and rot created by Christianity. Just let me open this door by pointing out that Christianity is very substancially the same in 1995 America as it was in 1600 Europe. Please compare science and inventions of 1995 to science and inventions of 1600. The contrast is amazing! Your children no longer die of Small Pox. Spanning the Atlantic in six hours. There are men on the moon. Allow me to suggest that if Christianity had followed the progress of science, indeed, we would have the Heaven on Earth today that Christians only hope for in the never-never land of eternity. Does this singular crime of Christianity against humanity and our beloved planet not deserve the most ignominious death possible? Its death would wash away the residuum of the Inquisition. Fathers, mothers, children, relatives, neighbors and friends could relate to one another without the suffocation, misfortune and calamity of a religion born in the evil hearts and minds of madmen to bring control and subservience to mankind.

Christianity is the greatest spiritual, physical, social and economic plague ever to discase our Earth.

As more people come to see the Church for the fraud it is, we can hope that it is destroyed forever, allowing mankind to be led by honest, scrupulous, good men through the progress of human dignity to a truly righteous destiny.

If there is a life on some other plane after our physical death, it will be according to Law established long before Christianity and its savage God invented heaven and hell. When I take my last breath, it will not be the damned Church which decides my fate. Indeed, it is the Christian who should worry about his fate, for surely he is doomed for the hell he wanted to put me in.

Now, Christian, take this to your preacher and let him console you .

Speech to Aryan Nations Youth Conference, Hayden Lake, Idaho, April 1995

Hello. For those of you who don't already know me, I am Mrs. David Lane. My friends call me Katja. If you thought David married himself a Hillary Rodham Clinton, well, I am not. This talk was written by David for me to address you here today, you the brave young people who are our hope for the future.

For the veterans of AN conferences, I brought along this .357 revolver, for old time sake. Some of you may recall how fiery mad David can get, and in 1982 threw a .357 down on this lectern to make a point. I am not a preacher, and I am not a speaker. I am a wife and a mother. .. but I don't want that fact to make David's message for you today any less powerful.

In case any of you are not aware of it, my husband, David Lane, is a member of the Order of the Brüder Schweigen, who in the early 80's were so effective in the resistance that they were targeted for extinction by ZOG. As a result, nine of our finest White warriors have all spent the last ten years in ZOG's dungeons, including David.

David and I exchanged holy vows on October ninth last year. I have five children from a previous marriage, who love their new dad as dearly as David loves them.

My father was born Notley Maddox. He was a commissioned officer in the United States Air Force and was shot down by enemy fire over North Vietnam in 1967. Despite evidence that he did not die in the crash, the criminal regime in Washington has yet to give an account of his fate that squares with what appear to be the facts. At any rate, I have been an MIA daughter for 28 years.

I have been a supporter of our holy cause for about 20 years. I have suffered for David and for all the brüder these past ten years for their sacrifice. Shortly after our marriage we began an enterprise known as 14 WORD PRESS, which is dedicated to the principle now well-known in those 14 words: "We must secure the existence of our people and a future for White children." Through 14 WORD PRESS we also disseminate the political and religious philosophy of my husband.

I would naturally prefer, almost beyond words, that David were free from the Gulags of ZOG and here to speak to you himself. But in these strange times a woman must fill roles which we don't normally perform or covet. But, of course, she will do as her man requests. David told me he wanted me to come here today on his behalf, and as usual, I responded with an exaggerated

"Yes, Dear!"

David has sent the following thoughts and asked me to share them with you today.

First, we would like to thank our host, Pastor Butler. As many of you know, Pastor Butler is one of the few who has not betrayed the memory of our kinsmen who fought so valiantly against this genocidal tyranny in Europe a half century ago. A movement that betrays the memory of its heroes are doomed, as is a race that does not honor the memory of those who fought for racial survival. It is a shame and disgrace to its adherents and will never succeed. Which brings me to the first topic I'd like to address.

Over a decade ago I began to write that our struggle would have a generation gap. That is now evidenced and I would like to show why. It really boils down to just two reasons. One is emotional attachment to an executioner' institution, and the other is financial attachment to the executioner's institutions.

It is almost impossible to talk to a generation who were teenagers during the 1950's and 60's, like my wife and me. While the selfsame communities in which they grew up, attended proms, walked the streets in safety and enjoyed civilized life are now jungles where no White person can safely walk. They cling to a dream world of the past. Their religion and their government told them that every race is exactly the same and their minds simply refuse to accept that their gods were false. Undoubtedly, much is just human nature. Nobody wants to admit to his own children that he was ignorant and criminally negligent. It reminds me of the Germans who were executed by America after the second World War for running a death camp at Dachau. Even ZOG now admits that Dachau was no death camp. But, the GI's who told war tales about the existence of gas chambers at Dachau still tell the stories, because once a war story is told, a man must either hold on to it or admit that he is a liar. Of course, it is far too late to bring justice for the innocent Germans whom America executed.

Nature's laws deny inter-specie and inter-racial compassion. The wolf does not feed the coyote, or the coyote feed the fox. In fact, the stronger drives the weaker out of the territorial imperative needed for survival of his own breed. Yet the Judeo-Christian teaches that, "Black or Yellow, Red or White, all are precious in his sight". And the Judeo-Christian preacher does not want to hear that that denies natural law and is suicidal. If Jesus loves every rainbow creature, then there is no good reason for your White daughter not to love and produce some more rainbow creatures for Jesus to love. If other races are in your churches, they will soon be in your bedrooms. It is as inevitable over time as the rising sun. So the Judeo-Christian preacher counterattacks with ever louder choruses of "Believe and have faith!", which are the staples of tyrannical priestcraft and statecraft. He cannot survive as a deceiver when people understand HOW to think and no longer listen to those who teach WHAT lo think.

So, my friends, you can, by and large, forget much support from that generation which has emotional attachments to the executioner's institutions. To be sure, there are a few exceptions. Bob Mathews would have been over 40 now, if he had survived. Your host cares about a future for White children. The Brüder Schweigen sacrificed all for your future. But, unfortunately, the number motivated by causes greater than self interest are few and far between. Your generation, the generation that has been dispossessed, will largely have to fight the oncoming battle by yourselves.

The treason and deception practiced by those with financial interests in our executioner's institutions is at least as dangerous, for men "believe" what they perceive as beneficial to themselves. And that is exactly what they choose to do, "believe". No more destructive concept has ever been devised than "belief". It is Ihe exact antithesis of fact and reason. Frenchmen, Germans, Americans, Catholics, Protestants and a hundred other religious and political divisions have slaughtered each other by the hundreds of millions over the last seventeen centuries, because each had been taught to "believe" a different, totally irrational, fairy tale. The essential and logical basis for any religion has to be that the Creator is the Author of Nature and Nature's laws. Therefore, Nature's laws are God's laws. And the first and highest law of Nature is self-evidently the preservation of one's own kind. If your religion or holy book runs counter to the evidence of the Creator's own work, then your religion or holy book is false. Books are written by men, but Nature's laws were written by the Creator, no matter what your perceptions of God may be. In their natural state, every specie breeds true. Lions do not breed with tigers, or the fox with the coyote, even though they can, because nature gives each the instinct to preserve its own kind.

What has been called the "Right Wing" has not only been largely run by our enemies over the decades past, but there has been deliberate attempt to mix it with the "White Wing". The two are not compatible. The so-called right wing conservatives know all about color, every color but White, that is. Conservatives like black and red, for example. Once I spoke to a group of Nebraska farmers who called themselves "conservatives". I asked them, "Is there a man in Nebraska who wouldn't strip his own White daughter naked and give her to the fastest Black running back in the land in exchange for one more touchdown for Nebraska's Big Red football team?" In reality they do worse. They send their daughters to Nebraska U. to be programmed with Jewish propaganda and to be seduced by the glamour of dating the Black running backs. Yes, they love black and red.

But, green is their favorite color, as in the kosher green of Greenspan's

Federal Reserve Notes. I once asked a conservative real estate broker why he committed race treason by selling homes to Blacks in White neighborhoods. Didn't he know the Black boys would soon be with White girls? He answered, "A Black man's money is just as green as another's." The relationship of kosher green and Negro black is the life blood of a conservative. Yes, they love green and black. Did you ever listen to conservatives cry about bilingual education? A conservative obviously hates cultural barriers. He wants the entire 3rd world to learn English so they can take White men's jobs, chase White women and become "good Americans". There is only one way to place a conservative in the proper position in the planetary hierarchy and to discern his true color. Feed him to an African cannibal and transform him into Zulu doo-doo. A conservative will give his son to Michael Jackson, his daughter to O.J. Simpson and his ass to Uncle Samuel Hymie Fudgepacker for just a few more Federal Reserve Notes. We will get no help from conservatives.

The Right Wing has been largely run, sometimes secretly and sometimes openly, by retired military officers. Despite lukewarm statements for racial life from a few of them, they are by and large our worst enemies. Let's get one thing straight, "nothing but countries exclusively our own will ensure our racial survival." This is the last thing a retired ZOG miiitary officer wants. Those of us who have stood for the life of our people and been reduced to minimum wage jobs would find the retirement checks of these folks beyond our dreams. But, when we create the territorial imperatives necessary for the survival of our people, their privileged lifestyle comes to an end. Now, I won't say that every single Right Winger has deliberately thought this out. But, that is the bottom line why we have been led around in circles. It is, also, why we hear the never-ending character assassination against those Germanic heroes who fought so desperately for the life of our kind a little over 50 years ago. It is far more satisfying to imagine oneself a hero and present oneself that way to friends and others, than to admit you fought to destroy your own kind. Do these Right Wingers tell you that the population of Germany was 1/10th that of the British, French, American and Soviet empires? Do they tell you that the Germanic peoples of Central Europe defended our race against Mongols and Moors, or our kind would long ago have ceased to exist! Do they tell you that England and France declared war on Germany first? Do they tell you that the British, French, American and Soviet empires had over 140 times the land area of Germany, and probably thousands of times the natural resources? Do they tell you that Eisenhower mass murdered a million German prisoners of war after the war was over, or about the mass murders of Dresden and Hamburg? Do they tell you that America's colored troops have been doing the same thing to the gene pool of Europe that they did in towns close to military bases all over America?

Hardly. How, then, could they strut about the VFW halls, swill their booze and brag about what heroes they were when they slaughtered the Krauts. And the last thing they will tell you is how they obtained the favors of starving German girls after the war for candy bars. And they will continue with their hypocrisy and their murder of our race as long as they live, because they profit, both in financial ways and false esteem. Expect no help from that generation. While American military and police exterminate our race, while American military and police murder men, women and children here and abroad, as per Waco, Ainsworth, Kahl, Mathews, Kirk, Weavers, and on, and on and on, these treasonous self-serving Devils will forever use terms like Gestapo, Nazi and Stormtrooper as examples of tyranny, just EXACTLY as their Jewish masters dictate. May all the plagues and curses of all history come upon them.

It is going to be up to a younger generation to accomplish the 14 WORDS. We all know that breaking through the media curtain and reaching large numbers of our young people is absolutely necessary. That's why it is good to have a youth conference. I am overjoyed at the success we are seeing with the White Power bands. I must confess that I don't understand the phenomenon, since my preference runs to Wagner and Tchaikovsky, but the musical enjoyment of us dinosaurs is of no importance. White Rock seems to reach and unify our Young folk, and that is the first good news in decades. Besides, I remember as a young man how the older generation of that time condemned the first rock music. Every generation, it seems, evolves its own cultural phenomena, and every specie adapts as necessary for survival. So, congratulations are in order for those who are successfully using White Noise. This generation, which must now stand alone against overwhelming odds, is going to develop methods to bypass the controlled jewsmedia that will surprise us all, because it is necessary and because, afterall, we are Aryans. Here in prison, I watch in fascination as this new phase of the never-ending cycle unfolds. But, I would suggest that this time around, the score must be permanently settled with our ancient foe.

I remain yours for the 14,
David Lane

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear George:

I am a friend of Bruce Campbell. We met through correspondence while I was in South Africa and I have kept in contact with him and his family since my return to the States just before the general elections of 1994 that brought the ANC and the One Worlders into power.

I have a request to make. Bruce tells me that you are republishing Heinz Weichardt's article, "Under Two Flags". Will you please send me a copy when it is available? Please let me know the cost and I'll mail you a check, Heinz is a very genuine person and appareantly his honesty came through in the article because the response was amazing. We are all waiting for his promised concluding article. Let's pray that his health permits him to write it.

I have been asked several times to write an article on R.S.A. and I have refused, except for a fantasy called "The Nation That Never Was", published in the Populist last March. That was as far as I wanted to go, for I had spent 22 years watching a potentially great people torn apart by internal treachery and external conspiracy until they reached the depths of humiliation, the abandonment of their flag, their National Anthem (the most moving, inspirational and beautiful of all the nations) and finally their country to a horde of Black savages. For that truthfully describes the Blacks in South Africa. As I wrote Wendy, Editor of Impact, "I don't write elegies for a dead nation."

Yes, I was bitter, for I felt that if the South African Whites had had the courage to defy the West, and fight again as they did in the Boer War, they would have won and established the Last Great Empire of the West, for it could have been done. I still believe it, but there were three fatal flaws. 1. They could not unite as we Americans did in the Revolution. There was too much animosity and distrust between the English and the Afrikaners. 2. They had no leader of genius like Napoleon or Hitler, and 3. they trusted their politicians. They simply couldn't believe that a member of the National Party would betray them. I believe the lack of a competent leader was the main problem. I could not write such a story of failure that exposed them to the charges of stupidity and cowardice when put to the test.

And then something happened that changed my mind. Wendy Brown and her loyal staff did an indepth investigation and published an article in the June-July issue of Impact proving that the all important referendum of 1992 was a fake and the results had been falsified. It had been a yes or no vote by the Whites on DeKlerk's policy of sharing power with the Blacks. A No vote would have forced his resignation and placed Treurnicht's Conservative Party in control of the government. It would have meant the return of the Whites to political power and restoration of the Apartheid policy of Verwoerd.

It would certainly have meant the end of the Mandela-ANC puppet government and the beginning of a new era of stability and prosperity.

But the International Money Power couldn't permit that. They had to have a Yes vote. The propaganda and intimidation was ferocious. It was the last chance the Whites had to regain their independence because the vote was limited to Whites only. So the planners guaranteed their success by instituting an elaborate plan to falsify the result. It is explained in detail in Impact. And when the votes were counted, it was announced that the No vote had won. The swindle broke the back of White resistance, and the country was rushed swiftly into a one-man-one-vote election, a predestined victory for the Blacks, and South Africa was no longer an Independent nation. DeKlerk must have been a willing cooperator with the ANC and its Masters, which labels him as one of the vilest traitors in history, because it was all done under his leadership with the ruling National Party.

With this belated exposure of DeKlerk's treachery, there should have been an explosive public reaction, an instantaneous uprising by furious Whites. I waited for the inevitable reaction. It is now the first of November and I am stlll waiting. There has been no refarence to it in my correspondence with South African friends. It is possible that they have managed to keep it from the public, Impact is not sold on the news stands.

The Blacks have been in power for a year and a half and in that time have turned South Africa into an economic shambles, bankrupted the country, ad permitted violence and drug cartels to take the place of government. My friends tell me all about it in their letters. Even the Conspirators CANNOT PERMIT A TOTAL COLLAPSE INTO CHAOS. (Sorry about those capitals,) Sooner or latcr they will have to move in. It is quite possible that they will use Eeben Barlow with his mercenary army, now operating in Angola, to chase out the ANC and install a White dominated government friendly to thc One Worlders. Barlow is being financed by Anglo-American which is the Conspiracy's right arm in South Africa, all Jewish, of cource. In fact it was the Jews who were most active in destroying the White Apartheid government of South Africa. To me it is solid evidence of a Jewish-controlled New World Order. Like my youngest daughter used to tell her dad when we were short of money: "Rob a bank, dad. That's where the money is."

Yours sincerely,
L.N., California

Dear Mr, Dietz:

Received your note on my letter to you several days ago.

A friend of mine in Cincinnati has retyped my Bulletin 72, enclosed. I hope that it will be compatible with your scanning machine because Sack's book has some important aspects.

I thought that the (former) Prof's essay was verg good. It is restrained but brings out some important ideas. I can readily believe that he has a lot of experience in dealing with brainwashed universitg students. He mentions leftist sociologg professors (page 6) but does not go into the question as to why so many professors in various fields are so far to the left, that is, are advocates of big government intervention into our lives and redistribution of earnings.

One reason is the simple fact that the vast majority of American professors are on some government payroll or another. In some fields, especially sociology and education, many of the students contemplate going into government service and even the students thus have a bias in favor of big, redistributive government. Still another factor is the fact that a good many of the students in these fields are Negroes. Under those circumstances, what professor would dare discuss the Negro problem with any degree of candor when his promotions are to some extent dependent on his popularitg with students? Of course, nearly all professors and university administrations are afraid of Jewish power over higher education.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Nlr. Dietz,

Sometimes it behooves us to read what the enemy has to say. The book In Hitler's Shadow by Yaron Svoray is a case in point. After reading this book one realizes why the far right in Germany has made no progress. The author, who is an Israeli citizen and who was in the employ of the Simon Wiesenthal Center, was astoundingly successful in deceiving many of the top figures of the German far right into believing he represented a client who was seriously interested in financing a viable neo-Nazi organization. The disingenuousness displayed by these people is simply amazing. This book should be required reading for all leaders in the movement, current and potential. On page 265 you are given credit for publishing the Liberty Bell which the author desribes as "a pseudo-intellectual hate sheet", a term which better describes the effusions of the Wiesenthal Center.

Sincerely,
T.A., Turkey

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Thank you for taking my call today. I am the great grandson of Finance Minister Schacht and I spoke to you with regard to obtaining a copy of the pamphlet containing "Under Two Flags". If you recall I mentioned that I have had no luck in finding any positive publications or references about my Great Grandfather which I can show to my children to offset the negative aspects of his work reflected in their school books. I was told that the article I am requesting you to send me had just that. I am enclosing my check in the amount of $5.50 as per your request. Please send the magazine to me at the following address.

Viele Glück und ich danke dir!

R.S.H., California

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I've always enjoyed very much reading the Liberty Bell; it's one of the few publications that give me the chance to find out more about our present situation and especially about the past; with each issue I learn something new and interesting.

I deeply regret Dr. OLiver's departure, It's a great loss for all of us. I miss his "Postscripts" in particular.

You'll find enclosed a M.O. for the renewal and an order for Dr. Oliver's Against the Grain. The rest is a small donation; I wish I could send more.

Thanks for your great efforts to keep Liberty Bell going. All the best for you and your family.

D.M., New York

Dear George:

I think the last editions of Liberty Bell were excellent—not that I didn't find all the others great. Are you acquainted with Insight from Canada? It also has been having some articles along the same line...

I shall encLose a check to cover three copies of the October Liberty Bell, also a donation to help out.

I am well acquainted with Hans Schmidt and I am writing letters to many places that Ernst Zündel advised doing. So far no response. I find it despicable that we allow the good man to be put into a cell, almost incommunicado with his people or even his lawyer. The letters his friends and family send him never reach him and his do not reach his friends. Those people are far worse than the ones most people have been taught about.

PS: I have given the other copies to friends. I should give them a subscriptions but think they need to be given some insight in smaller doses. It's a tragedy our people are so brainwashed!

Sincerely your,

Mrs. M.K., Oregon

Dear George:

I let my Liberty Bell subscription expire with the May '95 issue. The last year has been quite trying for me. My wonderful mother passed away on 8-9-94 (a day before Dr. R.P. Oliver) after a three-month battle with pancreatic cancer. The fight Must go on and we cab't be weak and feel sorry for ourselves, so please renew my subscription with the November issue.

I've cut back quite a bit on "Movement" publications, National Vanguard, Instauration, The Journal of Historical Review and now your Liberty Bell again, will be all I subscribe to.

I just started reading (finally!) Nick Carter's The Late Great Book, The Bible; it's great! Despite Sunday School (and summertime Bible school until I was 13) I was always a bit of a skeptic; Carter's book with its humore and easy to read style blows the Jewish fables Out of the water and shatters any doubt any intelligent person might have over whether or not the Bible is "Facts" or "Fiction". I recommend it highly (available from Liberty Bell Publications, $4.00 + $2.00 post.)

I am looking foward to having Dr. Oliver's writings in one compact volume. Since I only started subscribing to Liberty Bell in 1983, I missed some of his earlier "Postscripts".

Enclosed is a check for a one year subscription plus issues I missed since May.

Sincerely,

M.R., New Jersey

Esteemed Friend:

Like you, I am deeply concerned about the events unfolding in our country and around the world. Certain happenings chill me to the bones.

The study of history shows us that it is premeditated. Often I have wondered about the participants, the generals, the foot soldiers, businessmen and kings. Did they know at the time of their own significance in the unfolding scheme of greater things? Obviously, what they did and did not do at fulcrum moments literally determined the here and now.

Over the years, as I watched my city being torn apart, I paused to wonder what my own contribution to our civilization's struggle might be. As I matured and eliminated the thoughts, day dreams and meditations that could not affect the here and now, I came to accept that the future will be be secured for those that struggle the most effectively to secure it.

For the past 30 months I have been sending small donations to you in the hopes that the money would buy another round of printing, postage, telephone calls, air time, or even food for you and your loved ones, if that is what is needed to get you the next breath. My contributions are small but I make them, and they are directed to the people and organizations that are getting things done for our struggle. And, brother, what a difference it has made. Not only has everything about your brave and noble ministry improved, mine has too. And you know, this is no surprise because feelings do follow action. So I feel good.

If more people will just do something while we still have a chance to do it, we will win this war and create the better, more perfect world all rational people hope and pray for. All must realize that the fate and future of mankind depends upon what is done by the people today to secure their own future. I recommend that all concerned people send small monetary contributions [and do we need those!!! —Ed.] to as many fighting people and organizations as they possibly can on a regular basis. It works, and it is a privilege to struggle alongside of you.

Your friend,
Sam Houston Jr., Texas

The acquittal of the black, O. J. Simpson, by a black jury has given an official green light to a practice that perceptive ones in our decaying society already knew existed:a deadly open season on members of the white majority race.

Blacks have been killing, assaulting, raping, robbing and maiming whites for some time now. However, the alien clan that owns the media, including the Associated Press, keeps such important facts from the American people. If a white man kicks a black, though, that is something entirely else. They report that event in every facet of their multifaceted, yet monolithic, media machine. How they ooze over such an injustice. What empathetic agony these newsliberals feign.

I predict a new service industry in the making: the Ebonite "hit whitey" Brotherhood, Inc. This is a Nation-wide, *un*equal opportunity employer. Got a whitey you'd like bumped off? No problem. A black hitman is on his way. He may even make a few random "hits" enroute for practice. If he is actually caught by the demoralized police...don't worry. No squealing will take place. He'll demand a jury composed of 'soul mates' and regardless of the evidence against him, his acquittal is assured. Job security? Like, far out, man!

Yes, the poor, sentimental white boobs who allowed their country's institutions to be ripped from them by an alien global klan, the Jews; who allowed separation of the races to end; who allowed the Civil Rights Acts to be passed and accepted; who swallowed this equality nonsense as if it were diet coke; who have allowed an out-of-control government to take away their rights to expression, privacy and protection; these same boobs, craven descendants of a noble, fairminded, premier race, are about to see the logical progression of their idiocy face-to-face. Poetic justice, really.

Those perspicacious few of you out there, please listen with amazement to the silky, susurrant voices of TV news kedges and others, who never learn, as they try and patch over this O. J. trial catastrophe, this incredibly grotesque ugliness, with some ridiculous cloak of many excuses. Ugh! Yucch!

Dear George,

Thanks for printing my letters in Liberty Bell—described by the ADL Report on Embattled Bigots as "a gutter level, pro-Hitler monthly."Ha, Ha! I read this in the November '95 issue of GANPAC Brief. I'm proud of your magazine. It has to be first rate to earn the ADL's "gutter level"award.

We all miss the great mind and wit of Dr. Oliver. I sensed he was depressed with the lack of awakeningamong the white boobs despite the eloquence of his words sent their way. The attention span of most I try to sway is similar to the apes Tarzan tried to use in E. Rice Burroughs Tarzan and the Jewels of Opah I read in my youth. Perhaps soon the ice breaks.

Best to you,
E.H., Arkansas

It comes as no small surprise that Liberty Bell has become a forum for personal combat.

A studied rebuttal is worthy. Personal attacks such as Maj. D.V. Clerkin's remarks about me in the October issue of Liberty Bell should find no place in your respected publication. I am at wonder why you included Clerkin's criticism. Perhaps you meant to provoke my answer to Donny Clerkin.

Yes, indeed, I was a full fledged Christian minister in the Assemblies of God, complete with legitimate credentials which I earned. Yes, I spoke at least twice at the farm of Bob Miles — where I met Donny. I preacbed what I knew; Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

In 1990, a spontaneous awakening occurred among many of the more astute people I know. Yes, we learned the hoax of the bible, its god, and its messiah. We knew that our search for Truth had brought us to this awakening. We then studied books by Rev. Robert Taylor, Joseph Camphell, Robert Ingersoll, Lloyd M. Graham, Joseph Whaless, John M. Allegro, Gerald Massey, Lana Cantrell, Jill von Konen and the like. Our scholarship exposed Christianity for what it is.

Please consider my personal feelings when we learned this about Christianity. I had given up a source of wealth in 1967 to become a Christian minister. What I got in return for my honest devotion and my great effort WAS A HOAX! I had a lot of re-learning to do. I could not possibly remain loyal to a hoax. I paid a great price for my Christian devotion.

Donny, I do not belong to a "Movement." Nor do I feed off religious denunciations. I declare that Christianity is based upon a Jewish bible (can you refute this?), a Jewish god, Yahveh, and a Jewish messiah, Jesus. You cannot genuinely serve the Aryan race and live in a Jewish Christian religion. The proof of this is the fantastic destruction Christianity has wreaked upon our Aryan race. You must be furious with Colin Jordon for his lengthy article in the September issue of Liberty Bell. Further, do you not feel inordinately out of place among the writers and readers of Liberty Bell? I further declare that the Aryan race cannot hope to survive until Christianity is reduced to nonexistence.

Your problem with me, Donny, is that you try to serve the Aryans and Jewish Christianity at the same time. I could not do it and neither can you without deceiving yourself. The Aryans and Jewish Christianity are at opposite poles. Not even your rosary beads can bridge the gap. I repeat, Aryan survival depends upon the complete destruction of Jewish Christianity.

You use the senseless argument that if you had criticized Jesus when I was a minister, I would have denounced you. Now I denounce you for loving Jesus. You fail to comprehend, Donny, that I have learned that the Jewish Christian religion IS A HOAX. I have responded accordingly. At one time I believed in the Holocaust. Now I do not! What do you know about Jewish Christianity other than what you learned from your mother?

Donny, I shall continue to denounce you and every other Jewish Christian who alleges service to our Aryan race.

In this area of personal combat, why do you continue to hold on to a military rank in civilian life? Should I be addressed as Captain Crawford? No thanks! I am not proud of what we did to Germany in WW II.

Now, Mr. Dietz, comes the November issue of Liberty Bell. Dr. Robert A. DeMarais apparently wishes to become a part of the forum for personal combat. Perhaps a softer answer is in order than with Donny. After all, Mr. DeMarais has a Ph.D.

I read the writing of Mr. DeMarais. His "The Conversion of Hitler" was genuinely inspiring. However, his presentation has the flavor of sitting-behind-a-desk too long. This lack of street-smart involvement led him with much prejudice to criticize my treatment of the 24 year old architect, referred to as Pip-sqeak in my article, "Prejudice" in the July issue of Liberty Bell.

How, Dr. DeMarais, could you have read my writing on prejudice, then turn right around and blatantly express your own prejudice of me and my relationship with Pips-sqeak? That wasn't very bright of you, was it, Dr. DeMarais?

You said (I cannot believe this), "After she read one of his radical manuscripts..." Sir, with adverse judgment or opinion formed beforehand or without knowledge or examination of the facts, you passed judgment on the manuscript I had given to Pip-squeak — "...one of his radical manuscripts." That is as raw a statement of prejudice as I have ever heard. You discredit the meaning of Ph.D.

I do not credit you with knowing the positive, intelligent dictionary meaning of the word radical. Nor did you attempt to make this clear. Throughout the English speaking world, this perfectly good word, radical, has become a derogatory term. "All radicals should be shot," is the present connotation of this word. DeMarais, when you have studied the word radical, then I shall accept your compliment.

Now, Bobby, do you know which of my many radical manuscripts I loaned to Pip-squeak? You don't have much knowledge about your reference to me, do you? Would you like to know which manuscript I gave her? I'll tell you!

The radical manuscript I loaned to Pip-squeak is, The Creator, God, and the Bible, a 23 page treatise based upon Genesis, chapter 11 of the Jewish bible; that is, the Torah, the Five Books of Moses, the Pentateuch. This is the story of the Tower of Babel where "the gods" came down and destroyed the beautiful, advanced civilization of the Sumerians. Any radicalism so far, Bobby? Would you concede that just perhaps I am slightly qualified to write on this subject? Or are behind-the-desk Ph.D's the only ones qualified to write or to think? It gets nasty, doesn't it, Bobby?

In this manuscript I make a direct connection between Genesis 11 and Revelation 12:9. Here is where "...the devil and Satan, who deceives the whole world; he was thrown down to earth, AND HIS ANGELS WERE THROWN DOWN WITH HIM." With my degree in Bible, it is a short step in identifying the present day Jews with the above. It was easy to extend the variables beyond their established ranges to confirm who the Jews really are. (Radical, isn't it??) I make a sound judgment based upon the knowledge I have.

Here is where Pip-sqeak fell on her face. She pitted her void of knowledge on the subject with my studied conclusion. You, Sir, rushed to her pitied aid. Was "But I don't agree with you about the Jews" a reasonable response to a 23 page document, without mention of any other matter in the writing? Was this not pure irrational prejudice, even as you are guilty of?

DeMarais, my manuscript may not be worth a damn. But is it not worth more than a condemning burst of prejudice? Sir, I did not insist that she accept a brochure from the KKK. I loaned her a rather complete and advanced treatment of a subject basic to our Aryan survival.

And then,Mr. Prejudice, you further your combat by admonishing me that Pip-sqeak needs to be offered more material, that it should "...not contain any angry outbursts or in-house language such as ZOG." Are you telling me that an angry outburst is wrong, but an irrational outburst of prejudice is okay? Sir, you may serve our race better if you shed a bit of your irrational prejudice and replace it with some Viking male anger. DeMarais, I do not need any coaching from you behind-the-desk newcomers to this battle for Aryan survival. My "conversion" came in one hour in August, 1964. It is too bad that you and Pip-sqeak did not see the U.S.S. Franklin, or the mangled body of Jack Bolar on Iwo Jima, or David Bulkley's blown-off head in Viet Nam and the other conditions described in my writing, "Prejudice." This kind of knowledge and experience might displace some of your irrational prejudice and false judgments.

I would suggest to you, Dr. DeMarais, that we do not have the years to complete the slow conversion process you have outlined. We are not even remotely able to catch up to the Jewish time-table. Your idealism will be lost in nuclear destruction .

For Donny Clerkin, let me answer your criticism before you make it. I dare to make reference to the bible because it is the blueprint for the Jewish takeover of the earth. See Deuteronomy 11:23 and 25. It is wise to know the Jewish blueprint

Mr. Dietz, please end this forum for combat. We have a real war to be won if we can stop bickering with each other.

Sincerely,
Jarah B. Crawford

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

DACHAU: The Hour of the Avenger

by

Col. Howard A. Buechner

Medical Corps AUS (Ret.)

Reviewed by J. B. Campbell

The nature of the American government has become clear to those who have studied its conduct during and after its wars. The reasons for Sherman's sadistic campaign in Georgia and the Carolinas, authorized by Grant and Lincoln, which began this country's descent into a perpetual state of total war, were revealed during the twelve years of Reconstruction, during which everything of value was stolen from the surviving Southerners, who were reduced to destitution. The reason for our seemingly inexplicable participation in World War I was revealed in the terms and execution of the Versailles Treaty, under which everything of value was stolen from the surviving Germans, who were reduced to starvation levels of existence. The reason for our participation in World War II was revealed by the fact that we bombed millions of German civilians to death and slaughtered more millions of them after the war than during the war. In addition, there has never been a peace treaty with Germany in all these years. It is clear that the objective of our government is the liquidation or subjugation of the best of the White race.

Our young people participate in periodic orgies of death and destruction, the gruesome details of which are suppressed by journalists in league with the government. Without exception, the Washington government is always the aggressor. It is always the warlords behind our government who cause the wars to happen, who prolong the killing beyond comprehension and who profit from the spending of our taxes on the most terrible weapons of mass murder. These warlords are Jews and/or Freemasons such as Rothschild, Benjamin, Baruch, Eisenhower, Rockefeller, Churchill, Roosevelt, Warburg, Truman, Stalin, Marshall, Harriman, Kissinger, Nixon, Bush, etc.. Their wars are designed to kill as many non-Jewish people as possible. 600,000 in Lincoln's War. Ten million in Wilson's War. Forty-five to sixty million in Roosevelt's War. The ones who fought and died in their wars were better genetic material than the ones who were kept out for physical reasons, which seems to have been the whole point. Observe England, which had 450,000 casualties just in the Battle of the Somme! You can't kill and maim the best of our young men in these horrible numbers and expect life to go on as usual. Of course, the warlords didn't expect that it would.

There is something flawed in the American mentality which permits our young men—and now our young women!—, decade after decade, to drop megatons of high explosives on other people who have not threatened us in the slightest. This must include the Japanese, who were in December, 1941 our number one trading partner and who had, after the Battle of Midway in April, 1942, as I quoted the US Strategic Bombing Survey in my 1989 book, The New American Man, tried in vain to surrender to us right up until we dropped two atom bombs on them. Even the Pearl Harbor "sneak attack" was a natural (and expected) response to Roosevelt's deliberate diplomatic and economic provocations and military adventures such as his illegal Flying Tigers in China and his illegal naval operations in the Pacific. We are so provincial and self-important that we simply cannot imagine how other people see things. Such an idea never even occurs to us. It is one of the reasons we are hated so around the world.

Enough of us have this deadly combination of ignorance, arrogance, cowardice and cruelty which leads us inevitably to atrocities, from Atlanta to Dresden to Hiroshima to My Lai to Panama City to Baghdad to Waco to Oklahoma City. This is not to say that we are all ignorant, or arrogant, or cowardly, or cruel. But the ones who always do the dirty work against our latest enemy are found on our military bases. By their very youthful nature they are ignorant. They often become quite arrogant when given power over others. They are not brave enough to say "no" when ordered to attack civilian targets or slaughter unarmed prisoners of war. Their natural cruelty is easily exploited by Jewish and Freemasonic psycho-specialists who can quickly condition them to hate and kill strangers en masse with simple propaganda and big lies. I'm talking about the Whites. The negroes and mestizos are beyond discussion.

And then there are our non-aggression pacts and actual military partnership with the Soviet Union. This last item is something from which America will never recover. Our little military arrangement with Israel is an obscenity but our partnership with the Soviets was so horrific that it may never become possible for future Americans to come to terms with it.

Our military partnership with the Soviet Communists from 1942 to 1945 was the watershed event in human history. It was during this four-year period that the New World Order, as we know and fear it, became established. Following our mutual destruction of Germany and most of Europe, we encouraged our partners to subject hundreds of millions of people, from East Germany to China, to the gory delights of insatiable Jewish and Asian fiends, known as commissars. Millions were slaughtered or sent to slave labor camps and psychiatric prisons. The rest have lived in abject terror of sharing the victims' fates. Our government made this happen. For example, our government in 1945 ordered our wonderful boys in Austria and Italy to round up millions of anti-communist Russians and East Europeans at gunpoint, process them and force them at bayonet point into boxcars to be shipped to Stalin for execution in what the army called "Operation Keelhaul." The Soviets couldn't have gotten their hands on these people without our help. Our government pretended to be shocked at Soviet "excesses" while it continued to support its partner with military and financial aid, all conducted profitably through the warlords' New York banks, to the present day. This included the forty-five year period of the phoney "Cold War."

The fact that both the Capitalist and Communist systems are controlled by Jews and Freemasons is known or suspected by many of our people. Many of those who know feel that it would be impolite to mention this fact. They have been conditioned to feel this way. It is incumbent on those of us who know this fact to re-condition them to speak freely. It is incumbent on all of us to make the Jews and Freemasons feel uncomfortable in our knowledge of their activities.

The Freemasons keep very quiet but, as we know, the Jews are very loud. The reason that these cowardly people are so loud is because they have an excuse. Their excuse is the Holocaust. The high death rate in Germany toward the end of the war was the result of our wonderful boys in their fighter planes flying around at will, blasting things on the ground to smithereens. Anything that moved was destroyed. Chuck Yeager brags that he strafed farmers on their tractors. Trains were favorite targets—they loved to hit the steam engines and watch them explode. Trucks carrying food—well, forget them! All of Germany was starving and those in the camps starved right along with them. Those who cannot quite comprehend this sort of thing today must only look back to 1991 when our wonderful boys completely destroyed life as it was known in Baghdad and other Iraqi cities and towns. All because of the Jews and the Holocaust. Israel had demanded that Iraq be destroyed by us and within a few short months it was so.

The main problem at Dachau and Belsen was typhus, just as it was in our Civil War prison camps. That's why all the corpses in the pits were like skeletons. That's how you look when you die of typhus. The general starvation conditions in Germany didn't help. When you can't transport food you can't transport medicine, either.

The Holocaust myth, that there was a deliberate program to exterminate Jews, began at Dachau, when GIs claimed they saw a gas chamber there along with several thousand skeletal corpses. That's what they were told and they believed it. They still believe it, even though the Israelis are candid enough to admit that there was never a gas chamber there, or anywhere else in Germany. They say it all happened in Poland. Thanks to the historical revisionists we know that the only gas chambers which existed anywhere were little ones used to disinfect clothing in an attempt to prevent typhus, which is spread by body lice. Of course, this irritates the Jews and takes away their power over us. They have derived an unnatural power since 1945, one that has tended to put them above the law, by their exaggerated victimhood in the Holocaust.

Victimhood is a tricky thing. What if it turns out that we've been thinking of the wrong people as victims all these years? A few years ago a Canadian author, James Bacque, discovered by going through the US Army archives in Washington that our wonderful boys had slaughtered a million helpless German prisoners of war in the first nine months after war's end. It was done by starvation and exposure because of Eisenhower's order that the men be kept in open fields with no shelter, on a starvation caloric intake, supplemented by bugs and grass. Starvation is the Jews' favorite method of extermination: It is a ghastly, prolonged death and it doesn't cost anything. Bacque's book was Other Losses, which referred to the Army's deceptive heading for its category of deliberate murder on the death lists in the POW camps. It was reported in 1995 that Bacque has a new book, Crimes & Mercies (unavailable at present in the US and Canada), which describes how our wonderful boys and allies killed nine million Germans (mostly civilians) between 1946 and 1950. This was all in accord with American Jewish doctrine as enunciated by Theodore Kaufman in his 1941 book, Germany Must Perish, (required reading by FDR for ETO soldiers), Felix Frankfurter's American Jewish Committee and Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau's "Morgenthau Plan," which was executed by Ike Eisenhower, who was dubbed for some reason in his West Point yearbook as "The Terrible Swedish Jew."

It is unusual to be given an eyewitness account of an atrocity when that eyewitness was himself an accessory to the atrocity. That is the case here before us. Dr. Howard Buechner was the medical officer for the unit which "liberated" Dachau on 29 April, 1945. That unit was Company I, Third Battalion, 157th Infantry Regiment, 45th (Thunderbird) Division, under the Seventh Army. A machine gun section, Company M, was attached to I Co. that day.

The 45th Infantry Division came from Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arizona and Colorado and many of its recruits came from Indian tribes. Ironically, its insignia was the swastika, which Dr. Buechner describes as "an ancient symbol of prosperity and good fortune, literally meaning conducive to well being." The Indians used the swastika to represent a thunderbird. Naturally, this was replaced by 1943 with a golden thunderbird on a red background.

The commander of the 3rd Battalion was Lt. Col. Felix L. Sparks. He answered to Col. Walter P. O'Brien, commander of the 157th Infantry Regiment and to Major General Robert T. Frederick, commander of the 45th Infantry Division. The "Avenger" of the title was Lieutenant Jack Bushyhead, an Oklahoma Indian. We'll get to him later.

The situation on this day was this: Dachau camp held approximately 32,000 prisoners—criminals, homosexuals, deserters, anti-Nazis, Freemasons and 2,539 Jews. The normal force of 1,473 SS guards had left earlier and were replaced by 560 men, 200 of them from the Waffen-SS Division Wiking, who were in Dachau resting from their fighting the Red Army on the Eastern Front. The rest wore the Edelweiss insignia of the elite Alpine army troops. Most were dressed in battle-stained camouflage clothing. Their commander, Obersturmführer (1st. Lieutenant) Heinrich Skodzensky, had negotiated a surrender to the Americans that morning with the help of a Swiss Red Cross official.

Sparks' orders from Frederick were to post an airtight guard around the camp and not let anyone enter or leave. At 11:00 in the morning, despite the surrender terms, the Americans entered the camp and began shooting the German soldiers who thought they were surrendering. One hundred twenty-two were killed immediately. Inmates were released by the Americans and armed with .45 pistols and German rifles. The inmates killed forty more. Three hundred fifty-eight German soldiers were taken prisoner. At 12:05, an officer directed a machine gunner to shoot into the prisoners. Twelve more were killed. The rest, three hundred forty-six, remained alive for the time being.

At about 12:30 a brigadier general from the 42nd Infantry Division, Henning Linden, drove up to the gate with the famous Life Magazine reporter, Marguerite Higgins. Linden said that she wished to interview the inmates. Sparks refused. Linden naturally became angry and ordered Sparks to let him enter. Lt. Col. Sparks pulled his pistol and ordered Brigadier General Linden to leave! Linden noticed a mortally wounded SS man and directed a medic to give him first aid. The medic was a Jew and he refused. Other soldiers joined Sparks in aiming their weapons at Gen. Linden and he had no choice but to leave. (In such a homicidal atmosphere, they could easily have gotten away with killing him and Higgins by blaming it on the Germans.)

Sparks then left to confer with O'Brien and Frederick at regimental headquarters. At 2:30 Sparks returned to the camp. At 2:45 Lt. Bushyhead ordered the prisoners to line up against a long brick wall next to the hospital. They were then machine-gunned by a handful of Americans who employed two Browning machine guns and a Browning Automatic Rifle. Bushyhead allowed four inmates in striped clothing to use the .45 pistols, shovels and other weapons on any wounded Germans. Thirty more were killed in what the army called "combat" within the camp. Ten more had escaped temporarily but were captured and turned over to the inmates, who were allowed to kill them, in some cases by tearing them to pieces.

These are the facts as presented by Dr. Buechner, who was approaching the hospital when he heard approximately one minute of machine gun fire. He rushed into the scene to find the inmates shooting and chopping some of the fallen Germans in the head, watched by the GIs.

An hour later, General Frederick and "several high-ranking officers" toured the camp and were alarmed at seeing the long row of dead Germans against the wall. One officer suggested that the bodies be dispersed around the camp and photographed as evidence that they had been shot while trying to escape. Then it was pointed out to them that Specialist T/4 Arland Musser had already photographed the mass execution as it happened, so they abandoned that idea. They decided that there was no alternative but to start an "inquiry" into this and the other killings.

The outraged General Linden charged the whole gang, from Sparks down, with violations of the rules of the Geneva Convention, failing to give medical aid to wounded soldiers, failing to stop the killing and insubordination. All of them were to be court-martialed. The inquiry and the pending court martials were handled by General George S. Patton, who had been appointed as the military governor of Bavaria. Patton talked to Bushyhead and some of the others and then ordered the investigating officers to bring every report, every piece of evidence and every photograph to his office. When he had collected everything, he dumped it in his metal wastebasket and set it on fire. All charges were dropped. Officially, the atrocities had never occurred.

Dr. Buechner has assembled this book in a strange and choppy manner. He is obviously relieved to get the secret off his chest but feels guilty at blowing the whistle on his comrades. He seems to apologize for the murders and then tries to justify them. On page 107 he writes:

> Perhaps it was a technically improper act, and the deaths of these few hundred sadists could hardly atone for the millions of people who suffered and died at the hands of so many other participants in "The Final Solution." Nonetheless, in this instance at least, vengeance was complete. It finally occurred to me that the silence which has surrounded this episode for more than forty years should be broken and that the truth should be made known to the world. Those who survived the Holocaust, and the kinsmen of those who died in its flames, might draw some small comfort from the knowledge that the murderers of Dachau did not go unpunished.

Two sentences later, he writes:

> The stunning conclusion of this episode is that [these soldiers] were not the real culprits.

On page 120, he writes:

> Public outrage would certainly have opposed the prosecution of American heroes for eliminating a group of sadists who so richly deserved to die.

As I was saying, there is something flawed in the American mentality. Maybe it is the result of swallowing so many Jewish lies all our lives. Maybe it's just the White Man's Disease.

I read this book in 1988 and was set back by a sense of revulsion and shame for almost a year. In January, 1989 I wrote Dr. Buechner a letter which was rather intemperate and I share it reluctantly only because it has some conclusions which might be helpful.

Dear Dr. Buechner,

> A friend of mine from Nevada named Mike Oliver (né Olitski) was originally a Lithuanian Jew who fled west to escape the Red Army and for his efforts was placed in Dachau where he remained for four years. He was liberated by your unit.
>
> When I learned in 1968 that he had been there I was naturally shocked. I said, "It must have been terrible!" He shrugged. "Wasn't it awful?" He nodded vaguely and said, "We worked there."

I looked at him blankly. Finally, I said, "You worked there..." "It was a factory," he said. "We worked in the factory and we had a dormitory where we slept."

> "But," I said, "but what about the uh, the uh..."
>
> "The what?"
>
> "You know—the killings."

"I never saw any of that."

That was twenty years ago. Mike was certainly not reluctant to discuss his life in Dachau... He told me some details of his daily routine. He did not, in our year-long association, describe a Dachau as we know it from literature and the press.

You can imagine how disconcerted I was. What could a young American (22) of Scotch-Irish descent say in response? You've got to be nuts? No. I tried to be polite and not show my disbelief. I kept thinking, "Where'd they keep this guy?"

Of course, twenty years later we know that there were no gas chambers at Dachau. Not even the one you mention. Simon Wiesenthal says so and the Jewish historians in both Germany and Israel say so. The Yad Vashem Holocaust Museum in Jerusalem explains that there were no "extermination camps" in Germany. "It all happened in Poland," which was pretty safe to say since their Soviet buddies were in control of Poland all that time.

Thanks to those courageous historians known as "revisionists," we now know that homicidal gas chambers never existed anywhere. (Count Tolstoy writes in The Secret Betrayal that Stalin employed homicidal gas chambers in the 1930s.)

But all that is quite apart from your incredible book. I have not felt sufficiently eloquent to respond in the year or so since first reading it. I'm sure you have already been taken to task by revisionists for your use of Nuremberg-style lies to justify Allied atrocities during and after the war. You even used a WWI anti-German propaganda poster (Germans crucifying Englishmen, for God's sake!) and claimed that its use was not intended to be anti-German! You failed to mention that England apologized to Germany after WWI for the filthy lies it used to incite wartime hatred. The Germans were expected to be good sports.

Did your conscience compel you to tell the truth after all these years? When I say "truth," I mean only the hard facts of murder which you documented. It must have been a horrible forty-one years for you to have contemplated watching the murders of hundreds of POWs who were not even guards but who were in fact exhausted veterans of the Eastern Front. Sometimes you call them "guards" but at the end you admit the terrible truth:

YOU FOOLS MURDERED REAL HEROES.

A careful reading of your book reveals so much truth about the real purpose of Americans being sent to attack Germans for the second time in twenty-five years. Have you ever stopped to think about just that? You presence there, your participation in the murders of brave men who were defending their country from you, were the results of lies which you believed then and evidently still believe. The big lie, of course, was Pearl Harbor. Now I, who was born in December, 1946, certainly can't fault you for swallowing that one—it was too well done. As far as taking a commission and going over there to try to save the lives of your countrymen who were ordered to do certain things—I can't fault you there, either. Roosevelt's anti-German propaganda must have been mighty strong medicine. You men were scientifically programmed to hate and kill Germans. Even you, a medical doctor, were so blinded by hate that you couldn't recognize the results of a raging epidemic of typhus. Body lice and typhus, those deadly associates of Eastern Jewry. By now someone has doubtless written you about the trainload of dead internees from Auschwitz... the Germans told them they could wait for "liberation" by the Red Army or take their chances back in Germany. Eighty percent of the internees wanted to go from the frying pan into the fire. But there was no food, thanks to massive bombing by our guys.

What was the difference between Germany rounding up enemy aliens and America rounding up enemy aliens? The difference was that we destroyed Germany with bombs so that many people starved from lack of transportation of food. We were never bombed over here, Doctor. We never had an army of brainwashed killers roaming around, blasting people at will with complete impunity. In fact, America rounded up enemy aliens who were neither enemies nor aliens. International Jewry, on the other hand, had declared war on Germany in 1933.

Now, with regard to Jack Bushyhead... Exactly who was he "avenging?" With whom was he getting even? The US 7th Cavalry? Until now, I'd never understood the official US government policy of extermination of the Indians. Bushyhead's mad behavior shows the innate cruelty of the Indian, it would appear. But what about the Whites who "just followed his orders?" How would you boys have fared in a Nuremberg-style court? You would have, without a doubt, hanged for war crimes. But, winners don't hang.

Do you know how many Germans were hanged at Dachau after "confessing" to their use of the gas chamber there? The one we now know never existed? Do you know why they confessed? They confessed because of the pain caused by having their testicles crushed by Jewish torturers.

Frankly, Doctor, I don't believe your story. I am led to believe that Bushyhead acted under orders from Lt. Col. Sparks, who was himself under orders to exterminate all Germans at Dachau. Why? So that the Allied version could be cooked up and presented without contradiction. An excuse for American behavior in Europe had to be created. Some wild and believable story had to be created to divert attention from the greatest war crime in history: OPERATION KEELHAUL. [In 1989 I was unaware of the coming Bacque revelations.]

Your book is confusing in some respects but your timetable helps greatly to understand the cold-blooded nature of the big wipe-out (346 men):

12:50pm - Guards have been posted, tempers have been cooled, emotions are being brought under control. The camp is finally secure. Col. Sparks reports to regimental HQ to report the events of the day [and to receive further orders].

1:30pm - Col. O'Brien and Capt. Shirk tour the area.
2:30pm - Col. Sparks sets up command post outside the camp and awaits the arrival of General Frederick...
2:45pm - 346 German soldiers are machine-gunned by Bushyhead.
2:45pm - The elimination of the camp garrison has been completed.

Then, from 3:00 to 5:00, you, Sparks and Frederick toured the camp. Then you say that several high-ranking American officers toured the camp that afternoon and suggested that fake photographs be arranged to cover up murder charges, but couldn't because T/4 Musser had photographed the actual murdering. You mean, they could order the deaths of 560 POWs but couldn't get a technician fourth class to turn over his film?

This is the damnedest book I've ever read!

The 45th Infantry (Thunderbird) Division was the designated hitter. General Henning Linden (42nd Infantry Division) was forbidden entry by Col. Sparks because there there weren't to be any witnesses. He was the only one in your story who acted honorably. He wanted you murderers prosecuted. He's lucky you didn't kill him.

You say the tapes of Jack Bushyhead's talks with Holocaust-man Michael Selzer "mysteriously disappeared." Did "the Avenger" spill the beans about "orders from above?" Generals Frederick and Patton did handle the cover-up, after all. And everything Patton ever did had to be authorized by Eisenhower. [And now we know what Eisenhower was planning to do to POWs and civilians later.]

You are quite blasé about lying to the inspector general or Patton, or both, in your answers to the questions why you tried neither to stop the murders nor treat the wounded. As to the first question, you replied that you were unarmed when in fact you admit that you were carrying a Browning automatic pistol. Your diagram shows twelve Americans in the hit team confronting the victims against the wall. The magazine in your pistol carried twelve or thirteen rounds. But the photograph shows that most of the hitters were just watching the machine gunners. All you really had to do was drill the machine gunners, Doc. And Bushyhead.
You told the IG or Patton that you'd have been shot if you'd tried something.

[Intemperate language deleted]

You seemed to keep trying to tell the truth in your book. Finally, on page 132, you come to the moment of truth: You have come almost to believe that "the stories of the concentration camps are nothing but propaganda; a Jewish fairy tale." Except, you saw it with your own eyes.
Well, now, Doctor. You, with your own eyes, saw a gas chamber which we now know was not a gas chamber. You saw probably the biggest and fastest massacre by American citizens in history (excluding, of course, bomber crews and artillerymen) while it was still going on and you still can't figure if you've got all the details right.
Finally, you mention the US Army Typhus Commission, headed by Col. John C. Snyder, which went into Dachau on 2 May. What was the reason? Was it because Dachau was experiencing a typhus epidemic? You state that 2,466 deaths were recorded within the next seventeen days. You cite 13,000 deaths at Bergen-Belsenfollowing British "liberation" over a six-week period. I bring this up because you said the Army Typhus Commission went into Dachau three days after your hit team wiped out 560 witnesses for the defense.

I notice that you are the author of approximately two hundred medical textbooks and scientific articles. As I see it, Doctor, there are two ways for you to atone for your part in the massacre and cover-up: The first is to commit suicide. The other and much better way would be for you to summon all your courage and your medical expertise and write a book about the real causes of death in German concentration camps, before and after the "liberation." Your book would naturally supply the true number of casualties in all the camps. You may not know that the Yad Vashem Holocaust Museum lists around 300,000 Jews as having perished.
I believe that we are all indebted to you for your book, Dachau: The Hour of the Avenger. Regardless of how ugly, it is better to know the truth.

Yours truly,

Dr. Buechner was kind enough to respond to my letter, unpleasant as it was.

Dear Mr. Campbell:
In your letter of January 2, 1989 it was interesting to note that you found my book on Dachau to be of such great importance that you spent a year in contemplation before gathering sufficient eloquence to respond with a six-page letter. I also enjoyed your closing sentence in which you state, "I believe we are all indebted to you for your book..."
I had planned to respond to your letter on a point-by-point basis but Mr. IRS has reared his ugly head and is now taking up all of my spare time. I will only tell you that most "revisionists" in both the US and Germany have read my book and concluded that its positive new information far outweighs its repetition of the older stories about German concentration camps. Nearly all of these people are now my friends and help me with my research.
You must remember that I wrote the first part of Dachau about five years ago using standard references of the time. Many of my ideas have since undergone a rather dramatic change.

You suggested that I write another book about "Dachau" and I had fully intended to to do so but I became sidetracked by some startling new information which came into my hands. The result was the book described in the enclosed flyer.

In regard to the new book something very strange recently occurred: Two major magazines in which I run ads (World War II and Military History) came under new ownership. The new owners have dropped my ads because they show a swastika and presumably they are dropping all ads which relate to the Third Reich. How would you explain this move?

Finally, if you knew me better you learn that I am much more a friend of Germany than an enemy.

Sincerely,
Howard Buechner

How do you answer that? It obviously took the wind out of my sails and left me at a loss for words. The man did not actually kill anyone and was only a witness. I was enraged over the atrocity and had to take it out on one who was there, especially one who could at least have told the world what had happened while our program of extermination of Germans was still going on in, say, 1946. I suppose it was a classic case of "kill the messenger," which was only exacerbated by his endless repetition of Jewish lies.

What a goddamned mess. But, as we were to learn later, thanks to Bacque, it was even worse than we thought.

The Shape of Things To Come

by Winston Smith

I have been asked by a reader: "What, specifically, do you believe the future holds for America and where does the NSWPP fit in?" That's a tough one because there are in fact several possible scenarios, depending on many variables and uncertain factors, but her letter made it clear that I am not being asked to outline them all, I am being asked to gaze into my crystal ball and say what I think will happen. That's something I normally avoid, but what the heck?

The first thing that needs to be very clearly understood is this: the present world order of liberal democracy and capitalism is doomed. It cannot correct or repair itself. Things have been let slide for too long with a patch job here, a lick and a promise there, every hard or politically incorrect decision avoided or postponed, and so now conventional society has broken down far beyond the point of no return. The economic resources and the political will to take the steps which would have to be taken in order to salvage the traditional "America" in some recognizable form simply don't exist. For example, the only way to stop the overwhelming drug crisis would be mandatory, swift and public execution of anyone caught trafficking in narcotics, preferably by hanging from lamp posts or some other very visible way. We have a few cowboy yahoo type politicians who may propose such measures for home consumption, knowing full well they will fail, but the government we have will never do it. Ergo, we will not stop the drug epidemic and America will continue to be an increasingly stoned madhouse.

Black and Hispanic gang members can only be stopped by rounding them up and interning them permanently, in camps where they will be compelled to live under a stringent set of behavioral rules involving capital punishment for infractions, a system which quite frankly amounts to looking for an excuse to go ahead and execute them. They are utterly useless to society, human detritus, and need to be thrown away. Black "juvenile" offenders in the pre-teen age range would have to be flogged, publicly and by a White man, to re-instill respect in the only way the negroid can assimilate the concept, through force. Martial law would have to be declared in the inner cities, South African-style influx control laws passed to prevent blacks and mud people from fleeing into the suburbs or the countryside, and non-Whites who misbehaved shot immediately without trial. Is any of this likely to happen under our present limp setup?

The Federal Reserve system would have to be abolished and the country returned to the gold standard immediately. Jews and liberals would have to be banned from Congress and purged from government. The media would have to be ruthlessly purged of liberals. All affirmative action employees would have to be fired or returned to levels of employment commensurate with their actual abilities: blacks in three piece suits would have to be thrown back onto the loading dock or handed a broom and Yuppie Barbie dolls would have to be booted out of the boardrooms back to the typing pool or waiting tables at the diner. Millions of working mothers would have to be ordered to go home and take care of their kids so they don't grow up into brainless Beavis and Buttheads or the Menendez brothers. The death penalty would have to be imposed for sexual perversion and a number of highly visible executions of faggots and dykes carried out to drive these perverts so far back into the closet that they can never again threaten our children. Massive deportation of millions of Third World immigrants would have to take place as a matter of urgent priority. You get the picture. Let's get real: is any president of the United States or government elected under liberal democracy going to do these things? No.

So that's my first prediction. Things will continue to get worse. I do not believe there will be any sharp, definite, high-profile event of the kind right-wingers traditionally refer to as "the balloon going up". I could, of course, be dead wrong about that. I think the hebes running the economy are sharp enough to keep the patient on life-support and prevent any sudden October 1929-style collapses and outright depressions; what we will see is just many more years of the same slow death of our world, TV getting trashier, politics getting more corrupt and coarse, the rich getting richer, the White getting poorer, and the gradual extinction of the middle class.

Manufacturing will continue to flee from this country to Third World lands where peons will work for thirty cents an hour; within ten years we will manufacture virtually nothing in America. Living standards will continue to decline, as will educational standards. White kids will go to college in fewer and fewer numbers because not only will they be excluded by racial quotas but both their parents will be working their tails off for six or seven dollars an hour just to survive and there will be no money for tuition.

Racially, the deterioration will be most visible as the Third World hordes continue to flood in and overheard English in the supermarket becomes a rarity. Black criminal violence against Whites will become accepted as a daily threat one lives with, something like the weather which no one can do anything about, and it will attract less and less attention. Every day will be a mini-war for survival for the aging White population. One of the few slightly encouraging predictions I will make is that the various Schumer-style gun control measures will be ineffective; eventually even the stupidest White will realize that you either own and carry firearms or you and your family die, end of story.

There will also be increasing violence between the blacks and the other racial minorities over the welfare checks and state benefits which used to be solely for Affikin-Amerkins. The blacks will lose, being less intelligent and with the exception of the Nation of Island completely disorganized and indisciplined. Within twenty years they will be almost completely replaced by Hispanics in low-level and service industry jobs; outside of the artificial affirmative action-created black managerial class, a black male with a job of any kind will become unknown. Blue-collar Whites will not fare much better. Within a generation most technical and infrastructure jobs will be automated or taken over by Asians. Management and the civil service will become almost exclusively female and male homosexual. Young sexually normal White men will be faced with the choice of a lifetime of marginal, minimum wage no-benefit "temp" employment or enlisting in the military or the police as mercenaries to suppress and control their own people.

One thing which might cause "the balloon to go up" would be a foreign war wherein Bill Clinton or some similar idiot made the mistake of picking on someone who actually fights back. Another is the liberals becoming so buoyed and overconfident by Clinton's re-election that they go totally berserk and do something that finally ignites White anger and resentment and hatred of blacks and perverts and the government into a conflagration, such as mandatory sodomy for as "diversity training" for schoolboys or acceding to the demand for "slavery reparations" and handing every black man, woman, and child a $200,000 tax-free check. Something like that just might make the White man boil over and take his gun collection into the streets instead of just cleaning it at night and fantasizing. Unlikely, I agree, but however lazy and cowed people are still people, and everybody has a breaking point. The White male has been regarded with patronizing contempt for so long by the Establishment that a revolt might catch them by surprise.

I am convinced that when Clinton gets re-elected in November (the fix appears to be in) that the libs will institute homosexual "marriage". That might do it, or at least produce some sporadic outbreaks of guerrilla war against sodomites, but I don't think so.

NSWPP: Joker In The Deck

So what will the Party be doing while all this is going on? I don't know. That's your department, isn't it? Would you care to let me in on the secret? I admit, I'm quite curious. No, I'm not being facetious or sarcastic. You will decide what role the Party plays based on the level of support and activity you give us. It doesn't take rocket science to figure that out. The Party will do as much as you give us the manpower and the resources to do.

Obviously, the first thing we have to accomplish is make White America aware of our existence and where to find the Party when, at long last, they have had enough. I do as much as I can, especially now that I have Internet access, and I'm toying with several possible Rockwell-style publicity stunts, although I'd rather go the adult route. Essentially, though, all this is your job. You must find within yourself the strength of will to take the energy and the time and the resources which you would normally devote to the White man's usual response of complaining, and transmute it all into action which involves getting the Party's message and address before White people.

The next step once we get the people in is to try and break the White man of his many bad mental and spiritual habits, but most especially his cursed laziness and his pervasive, ingrained pathology of complaint, the "write your Congressman, call a radio talk show and bitch" syndrome which allows White males to let off steam while not actually accomplishing anything or affecting events or policies in any way. There is no point in activity which simply generates more complaint, as opposed to genuine propaganda and agitation aimed at generating action. Always remember that complaint is not the same thing as action. Learn to differentiate between the two. A simple rule of thumb is that action involves you doing something (other than complaining of course). Complaint involves you demanding that someone else do something.

The White American male has been conditioned by liberal democracy and materialism to complain rather than to act, to buy things rather than do things, and this is a very hard behavioral pattern to re-program. When White people first come into contact with the Party and believe they have found a sympathetic ear, they immediately start doing what White people do best: they complain. They moan. They bitch. They whine. They tell me in great detail how bad things are, apparently under the odd impression that I don't know far better than they how bad things are. They passionately demand that somebody else [i.e. the myself and/or the Party] do something, and being Americans they want it done now! Now! Now! The challenge for the Party is to develop a way of de-programming White Americans from the habits of a lifetime; in other words, we must change the White man's thinking and help him recover his ancient courage. We must perform what amounts to a religious conversion, a spiritual rebirth. We must make our people understand one simple concept: Hitler was right! Simple, straightforward, no mystery, all the rest is just commentaryand pounding that one simple, beautiful, mind-cleansing, race-saving idea into the head of an American White male is the hardest job anyone can attempt. But we have to do it, because when one of our brothers or sisters finally grasps in their mind, their heart, and their soul that Hitler was right, they become truly free. The chains of Zion fall from them and they can never be refastened.

For this we need propaganda, resources, dedicated full-time National Socialists to act as missionaries and professional revolutionaries, and a sufficiently conducive material and physical environment adequately equipped to provide moral and logistic support while we re-wire the heads and awaken the souls of our racial brothers and sisters. The pace at which this occurs is entirely in your hands.

Before a revolution can occur, you have to have revolutionaries. That is our task for the foreseeable future: to identify, contact, indoctrinate, and motivate to action the tiny fraction of the Aryan population which is capable of recovering its long-atrophied character traits such as idealism, self-sacrifice, dedication, and physical courage. This is what we will be doing while the world around us is going to hell in a handbasket.

The tactical goal is simple: to create a revolutionary political party composed of dedicated National Socialists in sufficient numbers and of sufficient fortitude so that the National Socialist White People's Party will become publicly recognized as the one and only spokesman for the White people of North America. Once that is achieved, once we are clearly accepted as the leaders of our people, we will take whatever route appears to be the quickest and surest to the seizure of state power and the creation of a sovereign Aryan Republic which will implement the programs and policies of National Socialism.

(rule by a wealthy few)

by Major D.V. Clerkin

The Jewish Money Power killed President Abraham Lincoln for two reasons: (1) Lincoln issued and spent into circulation $450 million in "Greenbacks," U.S. Notes upon which no interest was exacted; (2) Lincoln had proposed repatriating the freed blacka to Africa and the northern coast of South America. Both policies threatened the plans of the Jewish Money Power. "Greenbacks" were inimical to the Engine of Debt, and blacks were required to demoralize the independent White American Staatsvolk by reducing white wages and increasing demands via the ballot for more government.

There is a myth circulating that Capitalism thrives on the least government possible to maintain law and order. But Capitalism loves a monopoly. A monopoly must have a powerful government to protect its interests. Consequently, the natural union is between a business monopoly and big government, the definition of an Oligopoly.

The Oligopoly operates through the Freemasonic Lodge, which includes the B'nai B'rith, founded in 1843 as a Jewish arm of Freemasonry. B'nai B'rith's Anti-Defamation League is the strike force over the governments of the Western world. Originally the Oligopoly was staffed by American monopolists and Plutocrats. That was before the turn of the twentieth century. Slowly, via the Rothschild fortune abroad and its tentacles in America, the Jewish Money Power came to control the Oligopoly; by insinuations into government and the profession of law, by control of university departments, and by propaganda initiatives from the press, Hollywood, and radio/television, the Oligopoly took on an alien Jewish flavor. Notice the changes in the last fifty years in advertising, once wholesome, now aleazy, and entertainments, where foul language and gratuitous sex and violence are now commonplace.

All large corporations are now multinational. No production job in the United States is secure. At the same time that the Oligopoly exports jobs, it opens the Border to unlimited Third World immigration. This further depresses wages and forms massive non-white voting blocs for the political party that promises unlimitad access to the pockets of white workers through welfare. Look at the stink raised by both liberals and neoconservatives when a timorous Republican dared to advocate both welfare reform and a cutoff of welfare benefits to immigrants, not to forget the absolute Jewish howl over the proposed Constitutional Amendment denying automatic citizenship to children born to illegal aliens here.

Both political parties are tools of the Oligopoly. Republicrat "Big Tent" policies insure that Aryans have no commanding voice in that party. The Demicans are unabashedly Marxist. In both parties the Jews are Sacred Cows and Israel must take precedence. Ross Perot is a billionaire owner of a multinational corporation, a Texan who does not mind that the Rio Grande is no barrier to the Mexican invasion. All political roads in the U.S.A. lead to the feet of the Colossus, the Oligopoly adorned in a coat of Federal Reserve Notes, and armed with a club with which to beat taxes out of the productive white race.

We Aryans are considered tax farm (the 16th Amendment, which empowered the IRS to collect taxes on incomes, the purpose of which is to fuel the Engine of Debt created by the Federal Reserve Act of 1913) and cannon fodder when the Jewish Money Power decides that Aryans must die in a war or two which profits the Chosen. But the Engine of Debt is running out of fuel. And the worthless Third World trash are eating up resources and the value of white work faster than Bill Clinton can raise your taxes. The Border remains porous, and as the continent darkens demands for government programs and services increase. Jobs continue to flow overseas via NAFTA and GATT, and fewer white workers each year are required to pay more taxes of all types.

Is this not reality in America today? Yet whites continue to mumble about "our government," "my country," and the other fantasies that keep whites in subjection to the Oligopoly. The main problem the white race faces is its own inability to face the fact that — in the words of Wilmot Robertson — we have indeed become "The Dispossessed Majority." The Oligopoly may think that we are all stupid cattle — Goyim — though all we really have to do to dispel that image is forswear allegiance to the System. This act alone would hasten the demise of the Oligopoly. America died a long time ago. The Aryan race on the North American continent does not have to go quietly. One lesson we must learn: nothing goes backward in history. No form of government once destroyed is ever restored. If we Aryans want to survive what is coming, we ought to be thinking about the Future, not the Past. Leave the Past to the short-wave "patriots," who prate about restoring the conditions of 1776. They cannot envision anything beyond the worn-out nostrums taught to them as children. All there is for us is Tomorrow, and as the Oliqopoly dies, we Aryans breathe new life.

NOTES

I am reading THE INTERNATIONAL JEW again, a series of four volumes first published in the Dearborn Independent newspaper in the early 1920s. Henry Ford controlled the Dearborn Independent. These books are astounding in their depth of critique of the Jews, explaining how the Jewish Money Power came into being, and further describing the methods used by the Jews to become prominent in many fields that once were dominated by Aryans. Give the Jews this much credit, as Henry Ford did in these articles, they are as a race intelligent and industrious in their struggle to gain the power over us they have been able to amass. Ford describes how the Jews are never satisfied to merely work in a profession or industry. They must come to own or dominate the firm. Jews stick together. When first they came to North America, they did not come as individuals as the Aryans did, or even as nuclear families; no, the Jews came as representatives of the Jewish Kehilla — the Mishpawkha. Once established here, the money of Jewish investors flowed into the Jewishfirms from abroad. Little Jews who worked in clothing sewing rooms never complained when the Oberjuden worked them long hours for small wages. They planned to set up their own sewing rooms. Aryans believe in "fair play." Jews believe in Money. In business the latter cannot be competed against. But Henry Ford said that Gentiles were becoming Jewish in their business methods, which is seen today as the "American way of doing busineas." THE INTERNATIONAL JEW is the best introduction into the Jewish Question or Problem ever written and published. Every man and woman in this Movement should read these books, which though published more than seventy years ago, are just as timely as the day they were written. Let's get serious

A Battle Plan

by N.B. Forrest

Clearly the American Majority is under a concerted assault by the liberal-minority coalition. The entire gaggle is guided by Jews in strategic positions in government, the legal system, the media and elsewhere. Although each group has an agenda with subtle differences that distinguish it from the others, they all have one common goal: Weaken the American Majority in preparation for its complete dispossession.

Until now the Majority has fought back in the manner of a giant swatting at millions of biting ants or stinging bees. It writhes, turns, but never deals a lethal blow at any one enemy. Always, every day, it grows weaker and more distracted. It is the death of a thousand cuts.

Every conscious Majority member knows that we have the strength to utterly crush any number of our swarthy foes. Indeed, it is partly the contempt we feel for the Untermenschen in our midst that has prevented us from developing an effective plan for dealing with them. Our own rank-splitters are always in there pitching, wringing their hands and crying piteously for the little brown brothers, moaning about our "guilt" and what we should be doing for them and how terrible it is for us to think of our interests.

I sign my articles with the name of one of the most brilliant cavalry generals the Confederacy produced, Lt. General Nathan Bedford Forrest. The key to his amazing success in the War Between the States was careful planning. We would do well to carry on the tradition.

Let us analyze our situation as if we were in a shooting war against an alliance of enemies. Our strategic position is one of overwhelming strength compared to that of our enemies. In absolute numbers we can roll over them any time we choose. Further, we still have at least theoretical control of our territory, our military forces and our civil administration. Our most dedicated enemies are literally the dregs of humanity. We have the financial resources for a war and we need fear no external intervention. Why, then, are we getting our tails kicked!

The answers are relatively simple. First, we have allowed the enemy to take the initiative. Second, we have allowed our enemies to form an unwieldy and unnatural alliance and have made no real effort to split up that alliance. Third, we have tolerated treason, weakness and ranksplitting among our own people. Unfortunately most of our people do not even understand that we are in a mortal struggle. Others have only a vague and imperfect understanding of the conflict. Fourth, we have actually allowed a few of the most dynamic and dangerous of our foes to insinuate themselves into our camp.

How do we regain the initiative, destroy the enemy alliance, clean up our own act and give the boot to the non-whites and Jews who have crept into our tent!

The first step is to declare openly, loudly and without hairsplitting our identity as a separate ethnic unity. Pointedly excluded must be all obvious non-whites and any "near white, questionable cases" who put the interests of their own ethnic group ahead of ours. While one test of a white man is in his face, a better test is in his heart. I have known Tex-Mex gents who are better "white men" then any upper-crust New York liberal lawyer who ever walked the unswept streets of Zoo City. As for Jews, it goes without saying that they simply cannot be trusted, no matter what their personal qualities. The race pull is too strong.

The second urgent step is to destroy the lib-min alliance. This may be easier than we think. Many of the so-called "minority leaders" speak for nobody but themselves. So-called Hispanics are the most notorious examples. Most "Hispanic leaders" are resentful mestizo loudmouths. All of their supporters could be crowbarred into a telephone booth. Middle-class white Latins are especially eager to avoid being lumped in with Puerto Rican mulattos and Mexican peons. As for many of the other minority groups, they often consist of no more than one "leader" and a mailing list. The numbers of almost all of these groups are likely to be grossly exaggerated for political purposes.

Enter the blacks. This is the one indisputably genuine minority group in the U.S., a looming threat to the future health of the Republic, not to mention its current health. If we do nothing about all the others, this group must be dealt with—and fast. If we fail, we will have written our death warrant.

I recognize the blacks as the only legitimate, historical ethnic minority in the U.S. As a Southerner, I am perhaps more aware of this group than some of our Northern readers. They can pretend the blacks are invaders from outer space who dropped in on the industrial cities of the North just a few decades ago. We Southerners know better. It is essential that the blacks, or at least a substantial number of them, be separated from the lib-min coalition. The blacks give the lib/mins their fraudulent air of moral superiority. Entice any significant chunk of the blacks from that coalition and the whole structure will collapse.

But how to do it! And is it worth the cost! Well, it will not be done by offering any Jack Kemp "free enterprise zones," or any other tacky, half-baked gimmick ginned up by some Beltway Bandit consultant. As for the cost, I would say that regaining our country would be cheap at any price. After all, once we are in the saddle you can bet that there will be massive expropriations of ill-gotten wealth. That will help defray at least some of the costs.

Let us start from one firm principle. No sweet talk and no double talk with the blacks. They will not be fooled and any serious discussion with them is beneath our dignity. We must lay the cards on the table. We are not haters or race-baiters, but we are determined to preserve our nation, white America, Majority America. That is a point that will not be negotiated. We are willing to work with the blacks, provide support and make an honest effort to develop a workable plan that will allow us to either live together, with us running the show but protecting their rights, or to live separately. There are plenty of blacks who might respond to a serious, straightforward deal, as long as they are pretty sure we will win in the end in any case. We must make that clear from the start. We must let them understand that we will stop at nothing to ensure the survival of our people. That is a message that must penetrate the thickest skulls.

It goes without saying that the instant that an Instaurationist government is in charge there will be no further miscegenation—sexual, cultural or political—between blacks and whites. Those whites who do not like this will be forced to leave.

The third essential point is the cleansing of our own ranks.

Our most dangerous enemies have white faces and names like Smith and Jones. They are the ones who support affirmative action and race-mixing because that is the easy path to take. We must deal with these vermin with pitiless severity. The thinning-out process has already started, albeit in mild form. Outright liberals are becoming hard to find outside of Massachusetts. But this is not enough. As the Majority movement picks up steam, we must begin to target these shameless creatures relentlessly. When they speak up at a school board meeting, they must be shouted down. They must be made unwelcome in churches, clubs and sport leagues. You wouldn't invite a child molester to your house for a barbeque, so why stay on friendly terms with a man or woman who is working to wreck your country and your race, and in so doing leave your children without a future! If these backsliders repent and get with the program, fine. With rare exceptions, all can be and should be forgiven. In the meantime they must be made odious in the eyes of their neighbors.

The fourth point, but maybe the most important, is the rooting out of Jewish influence. No easy task, but one which must be accomplished if we are to win the war. How to do it! Well, stop reading Jewish-controlled magazines and newspapers, watching Jewish-confected TV and movies. Pretty tough assignment, right? That is why they call war hell, folks. Believe it or not, there are some non-Jewish movies, magazines and books. Go out of your way to look for them.

After your mind has started to clear, look around you. Start drawing away from those Jews who have influence over your life. Nothing nasty or rude, just cut off contacts. This, repeated millions of times, would soon reduce them to parasites without a host.

One person can't write the grand plan that will turn the tide. This is the job of millions upon millions of people, talking, lending books and magazines, slowly bringing people around to our way of thinking, taking risks, standing up for what we believe in, living life like it should be lived, every minute full of meaning. Let's hear from others out there. Time is awasting.

THE EVOLUTION OF MANFRED ROEDER'S POLITICAL CRUSADE

The Second World War did not end in May 1945. It was continued with even greater brutality against the losers — Germany and her allies.

Fifteen million Germans were expelled from their homeland. Three million were slain or starved to death by intent.

The whole country was occupied, the whole nation enslaved and humiliated by so-called de-militarization and de-Nazification.

All arms, all ships for war or merchandise, all patents were confiscated, industry dismantled to almost zero. Invaluable treasures of art, culture and science were carried away.

Over a million other European soldiers and civilians were killed because they had been working or fighting on the German side.

But worst of all — psychological warfare was started with diabolical means never heard of before. A guilt complex was instilled in the German mind that resulted in servitude and self-hatred, crowned with religious phrases of theologians and the acknowledgment that everything German is evil and everything Jewish is holy.

But poisoning the German spirit was only the first step in subjugating other nations and putting them into economical, cultural and psychological dependence of a one-world dictatorship of Jewish design.

Manfred Roeder, born in 1929 in Berlin, saw the glory of German renaissance in the thirties and knew of no "Dark Age." As a 15 year old volunteer he joined the German Wehrmacht to defend his fatherland against Bolshevik barbarism and Western imperialism, as did likewise all his schoolmates believing in their righteous cause.

Roeder fought in the battle of Berlin to the last day. After surrender of the last survivors of his unit he escaped Russian captivity and deportation by sheer determination and luck.

For a certain time he was also affected by the poison of re-education, smitten with a guilt-complex until he, practicing as a lawyer, discovered that all post-war policy was based on the blatant lie of a unique and unilateral German guilt.

For ten years he then fought against lies and discrimination, he organized public protests and filed claims in national and international courts. He even challenged his president for a duel after the "German" government had betrayed its own nation and given up honor and a quarter of age-old German territory.

Being the most outspoken and effective regime critic, Roeder, after many court trials, finally was put in jail for almost ten years in 1980 on trumped-up charges.

It finally dawned on him that no political party nor any illegal protest would ever change the determination of the present system to engulf the whole world with materialism, exploitation and crime and finally to destroy all culture and ethics. It had to be something more fundamental.

In the spirit of Martin Luther, who stood up against Pope and Kaiser to hold high his truth, Manfred Roeder drew up 95 theses to go to the root of the problem of modern mental slavery. As people in the old days were exploited with indulgence letters to avoid hell-pain, so are people of today exploited by giving them a bad conscience and making them pay for all kinds of destructive programs, from welfare and foreign aid to UN-interventions and Gulf Wars.

Manfred Roeder shows how to get rid of any bad conscience. And once you are free you can courageously stand up and demand from your politicians to have no other loyalty than to your own country, no other task than the health and strength of your own people.

No politician with a bad conscience or a guilt-complex or a double loyalty should stay in office.

Courage is needed, not numbers; quality not quantity. A million cowards achieve nothing. One man with courage will give millions new hope and direction.

Dear Friends:

Finally I can send you the complete 95 Theses (translated by our good friend Charles E. Weber, Ph.D. in Tulsa, OK). They have caused an earthquake in Germany, and they have had their baptism of fire in English on July 7th when British friends distributed them at the gate of Coventry Cathedral at the memorial service for the victims of air raids. The service was meant to underline German guilt for atrocities, but our English friends stressed the point also to think of Dresden when you talk about Coventry.

I succeeded to place the 95 Theses as a full page ad in the HESSISCHE ALLGEMEINE, a big daily with 450 000 circulation. An avalanche of positive letters and calls was the result. For three weeks the Theses were the main topic in the paper. Two special pages appeared and letters to the editor by the dozen every day.

The enemies were foaming with rage that Roeder was allowed t spread his thoughts through public channels. Ignatz Bubis, the top Jew in Germany, blamed our state president and the president of parliament that they have known the Theses since February and not done anything against them. The attorney general has decided that there is nothing wrong with the Theses, they are not a violation of any law. In other words, Bubis is asking the president to take action against something that is legal and not punishable. Isn't it great, we are attacking with legal means, the enemis are asking for illegal action. They are at their wits' end.

The attacks against anything legal and decent, against free speech and truth are hitting new hights every week. Our enemies are getting hysteric. They know that their power is coming to an end.

For fifty years we were told that the persecution of Jews was done with great secrecy by a bunch of criminals. Now they are realizing that this means all others did not know anything about it. How can they be guilty? They had to create a new strategy in order to put the blame on everybody. This started about a year or two ago. Goldhagen's new book is part of this strategy. He makes the assertion that all Germans were antisemitic and only too willing to help Hitler liquidate the Jews. And the propaganda by our own traitors supports this accusation with the thesis that every German, even the smallest Hitler Youth knew about the persecution of the Jews and should feel guilty with a bad conscience.

Part of this strategy is also to blame the whole German Wehrmacht, not only the SS, of atrocities and genocide. Last year an exhibition was started by two communists from Hamburg in order to 'prove' that all German soldiers were guilty of war crimes and were willing executioners for Hitler's strategy of genocide. The Wehrmacht was a bunch of criminals and murderers.

Having been a soldier myself in the last few months of the war I felt insulted by this hate propaganda and took action. With a friend I walked into this exhibition and sprayed with paint on all the big posters the words 'lie' or 'insult'. We continued until the police came. They came with twenty men in order to confiscate two spray cans and arrest two old age pensioners. We are now summoned to court for damaging a 'scientific' exhibition. This is exactly what we wanted in order to prove in court that all these accusations are lies and that we will not tolerate insults. They could put me in jail again for doing this, but it would be an honor to be persecuted for defending the German Wehrmacht, the finest soldiers in the world.

Please, write again. All the very best, as ever, your friend

NINETY-FIVE THESES ON THE OCCASION OF THE 450TH ANNIVERSARY OF LUTHER'S DEATH

By Manfred Roeder

As a result of love and a true effort to bring the truth to light, on the occasion of the 450th annivereary of Luther's death the following theses are offered for discussion with a plea for lively oral or written participation:

1. For fifty years the German people have again and again been declared guilty of starting the [Second World] War and of crimes without parallel.

2. The (German people are declared guilty by former enemies, but above all by politicians and opinion makers in their own country.

3. Of the gravest nature are the accusatione of the theologians who declared themselves and the German people, before God and men, guilty in the "Stuttgart Confession of Guilt," dated 19 October 1945.

4. In all of these accusations it is added that there must never be a cessation of the reproaches, self-accusations and admonishments.

5. All agree that there must be no collective guilt for a nation, but only individual guilt which, moreover, can be atoned for only on an individual basis.

6. All agree that guilt is not hereditary and that martyrdom is also not hereditary.

7. For that reason, the Germans of later generations are not guilty and Jews of later generations are not martyrs.

8. Nevertheless the Stuttgart Confession of Guilt includes the "whole people" in a "solidarity of guilt." Thus, it contradicts itself.

9. Nevertheless eleven Protestant theologians speak in the Stuttgart Confession of Guilt "in the name of the whole church" and indeed even for the whole German nation, although no one assigned or gave them the power to do so.

10. Nevertheless Professor Michael Wolffson asserts that even though every German of a later generation is not guilty as an individual, he nevertheless bears "the mark of Cain for the murders of millions of Jews" and indeed for all times!

11. Whoever mixes Biblical concepts in such a manner with political propaganda is a blind man leading the blind or a false prophet.

12. In order to circumvent the contradictions, there ia preference for talk of collective shame, collective liability and collective responsibility, but there is always only the same thing: the German people should have a collective feeling of guilt and a bad conscience and retain them forever.

13. All of these terms are only an intimidated veiling for the collective guilt thesis.

14. The thesis of the sole war guilt of Germany is also based on the assumption of collective guilt.

15. Whoever declares a whole nation guilty or makes it liable violates natural law and international law. He denies the basic concept of justice that is characteristic of all civilizations.

16. Whoever wants to impose permanently a feeling of guilt on a whole nation violates human dignity and a divine and human command.

17. Such a person commits an offense against the Bible and all religions of mankind.

18. Only that person who has murdered his brother can bear the mark of Cain for murder of a brother. Anyone who teaches otherwise falsifies the concepts and wants to take the place of God.

19. The person who uses Biblical concepts must adhere to Biblical statements. Otherwise he is misusing the Bible for extraneous purposes.

20. According to the Bible, even Cain, the murderer of his brother, can be forgiven. "And Cain said unto the Lord, My punishment is greater than I can bear. I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass that everyone that findeth me shall slay me. And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him seven-fold." (Genesis IV, 13-15)

21. If, however, the murder of one's own brother can be forgiven, another kind of murder can certainly be forgiven.

22. For that reason, whoever speaks of a unique crime of the Germans for which there can be no atonement speaks against the clear message of the Bible.

23. According to the teachings of the Bible, even a blood-red sin can be washed pure and become white as snow. (Isaiah I, 18)

24. According to the teachings of Jesus, "all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men." (Matthew XII, 31)

25. When sin is forgiven every feeling of guilt and every bad conscience is removed for all time. Forgiven sin no longer bites, says Luther.

26. However, the person who wants to retain his feeling of guilt does not trust God's mercy and blasphemes against the Holy Spirit.

27. Saint Paul says: "Wherever sin abounded, grace did much more abound." (Romans V, 20)

28. He who does not accept grace sins against the Holy Ghost because he disdains God.

29. Martin Luther says: "No one attains God's grace by accusing himself or through good works (reparation), but only through faith without any advance payment or stipulation."

30. Hence, if someone asserts that constant reminding and admonishment is a condition for forgiving or for reconciliation, that person opposes the clear word of the Bible, and even if it be the present or former president of the German Federal Republic.

31. If someone asserts "that the guilt of that time retains its binding force if we remain silent about or displace it" that person opposes the clear word of the Bible, whether it be a bishop or president.

32. The same holds true for the representative of the Council of the Protestant Church of Germany when he asserts "that there can be absolutely no reconciliation and forgiving without memorialization."

33. The same holds true for the President of the Council of the Protestant Church when he asserts on the (50th Anniversary of the capture of Auschwitz by Soviet forces): "We are all responsible for the consequences of the guilty past." It is the intention of God's word to liberate, not keep in chains.

34. When Luther observes that even Councils can commit errors, this is all the more the case with present-day theologians, professors, politicians and journalists who base their thinking neither on the Bible nor International Law.

35. When a certain Professor Eschenburg asserts, "he who questions the exclusive guilt of Germany in the Second World War destroys the basis of all postwar policy," he openly admits a calculated manipulation of history and loses any credibility as a scholar.

36. To speak of war guilt is a modern invention of the Devil which did not exist in earlier centuries.

37. International Law does not recognize war guilt, rather only wars which are conducted for the most varied reasons and are concluded by a treaty of peace.

38. In a war there is never justice all on one side and injustice all on the other side.

39. In a war justice is always opposed by justice. For that reason it is a violation of International Law to declare the opponent to be a diabolical because each is fighting for what he believes to be right.

40. There can never be and there never will be on earth an objective court of appeal which could pass judgment without bias concerning the guilt and the innocence of the nations.

41. Every nation is directly responsible only to God and to no other for an accounting.

42. According to Biblical teaching, perhaps God can punish a nation by war or misfortune but it is never appropriate for a human being to proclaim the judgment that a lost war is a punishment by God for a whole nation.

43. The International Law customary for centuries does not tolerate any judgmental function because no human mind would be capable or unselfish enough to measure the guilt or innocence of the nations.

44. After every war the principle of tabula rasa prevails, that is: all mutual reproaches and accusations must be avoided because only under those circumstances is a fresh beginning possible.

45. Only if there is a mutual forgiving and forgetting to which there is a commitment after a war and if neither hate nor revenge nor persecution are tolerated can a just peace be possible.

46. Only if there is a concluding sentiment about all of the misdeeds that have taken place during a war can the adversary of yesterday become the ally of tomorrow.

47. The recalling of atrocities or so-called war crimes trials make any reconciliation impossible. They only stir up new hatred and create a basis for new wars.

48. He who recalls atrocities or war crimes has no desire at all for reconciliation, but rather desires the continuation of the war by other means to the point of total psychological subjugation of the opponent.

49. Reminding of atrocities has never prevented further atrocities.

50. The person who claims that knows neither himself nor human nature.

51. For that reason those who preach reconciliation but never want to lay such matters to rest and keep recalling past injustices are either lying or are in error.

52. The father who takes back his prodigal son but keeps reminding him of his past and his errors does not at all want reconciliation but rather subjugation and psychological servitude.

53. For that reason the secret of reconciliation is not reminding but rather a complete forgiving and a sacred oath never again to tear open old wounds.

54. Warning against a dictatorship has never prevented a dictatorship; if a dictator is destined to come, then he will come.

55. Those who preach against a past dictatorship make way, as a rule, for their own dictatorship; those who are persecuted yesterday become the persecutors of today.

56. For that reason, be on guard against those who assert that a previous dictatorship was diabolical; in most cases they only want to banish the Devil with the help of Beelzebub.

57. In a double sense are lying those who remember only the injustice of one side but persist in remaining silent about or dismissing as unimportant or even denying the injustice of the other side for they are falsifying history and sinning against the spirit of truth.

58. In an even worse manner, however, those who accuse their own nation are lying; for they are not only committing a transgression against the spirit of truth, but also against the spirit of justice and love.

59. For it is written: love thy neighbor, and after all a neighbor is a member of one's own nation.

60. He who accuses only one nation wishes to compel its psychological subjugation and deprive it of its dignity and its right to live.

61. When, however, clergymen make accusations against their own nation at a time when this nation is in its greatest emotional distress and desperation and at a time when it is in a state of being murdered, they are like shepherds who leave their flocks in the lurch and abandon them to be devoured by tearing wolves. (Refers to the so-called Stuttgart Confession of Guilt signed by leading Protestant clergymen in October, 1945, at a time when millions of Germans were expelled from their own territory or brutally murdered).

62. He who constantly speaks of his own guilt makes himself an unbelievable hypocrite before the whole world.

63. There is also an uninhibited shamelessness of contribution which does not bring about reconciliation, but only distrust and even disdain.

64. There can be reconciliation only between honest opponents, never with servile cringers.

65. He who speaks only of German guilt is not worthy of any reconciliation.

66. If other nations do not desire reconciliation it is undignified to continue to speak of reconciliation, let alone to beg for it.

67. He who accuses Germany and demands reparation but denies his own guilt commits a transgression against the spirit of truth and justice.

68. All International Law is a mutual matter. It recognizes no unilateral rights or unilateral obligations.

69. He who speaks only of German injustices but denies the injustices of his own nation and is unwilling to confess them puts himself outside the universal realm of justice.

70. He who would not term even the expulsion and mass murder of Germans an injustice excludes himself from any realm of justice and morality.

71. He who does not regret the terror bombing against defenseless civilians and does not want to atone for it excludes himself from any realm of justice and morality.

72. He who condemns German soldiers but glorifies opposing soldiers for similar deeds and measures with a double standard cannot be a partner or ally in the future.

73. Although Russia is rehabilitating German soldiers who were unjustly condemned, we are still waiting for a sign of repentence from the Anglo-American side for their lynching after the war. (Refers to the Nuremberg trials and many other trials where German soldiers were hanged).

74. When prominent Jewish people stress even fifty years after the war that pardon can neither be requested nor granted, then our self-respect forbids our continuing to seek reconciliation.

75. When the President of Israel, Ezer Weizmann, the Israeli author, David Grossman, the President of the Jews in Germany, Ignaz Bubis, and many others constantly stress that there can be no forgiving, then it is hypocritical to sponsor Weeks of Brotherhood.

76. The truth still stands: "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." (Matthew VI, 15)

77. Before God all people are sinners; there are not uniquely evil Germans and not uniquely noble Jews. "For there is no difference: For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." (Epistle of Paul to the Romans, III, 22-23)

78. "He that is without sin among you, let him cast a stone at her." (John VIII, 7)

79. Jesus warns the Jews: Because you say you have no sin your guilt remains (John 9, 39-41)

80. "Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him." (Proverbs XXVI, 12)

81. Many foreigners admonish us Germans against further expressions of atonement because it is not a question of the past but a question of the responsibility for the future.

82. Croatians, Bosnians and many others complain that the Germans have been gagged for fifty years by "Jewish adhesive plaster over their mouths" and are therefore incapable of giving effective aid to threatened nations.

83. Those who reproach us Germans for xenophobia intend to slander our nation. They want to inculcate a bad conscience in us. They only want to stir up hate against everything German and to create Germanophobia.

84. On the occasion of the Day of German Unity the State President of Estonia, Lennart Meri, spoke the following significant sentences on 3 October, 1995 in Berlin:

85. "Germany has become a kind of Canossa republic, a republic of repentence. Why do Germans manifest so little self-respect?" (Canossa is a castle in Italy where Emperor Heinrich IV induced Pope Gregory VII to absolve the excommunication against him in 1077). It is considered as a symbol of humiliation.

86. "If a person is ostentatious about his morality he runs the risk of not being taken seriously."

87. "One cannot trust a nation which practices around the clock an intellectual disdain for itself. This behavior has an effect like a ritual, a carrying out of a duty which is superfluous and even disrespect for the Europe which we are proud of."

88. "In order to be believable, one must condemn all crimes, everywhere in the world, even if the victims are Germans."

89. "It can scarcely be deduced why the Germans put such a taboo on their own history."

90."Fear of power must be replaced by courage for power. Confidence in a nation can come about only if it makes decisive use of its means of power in a responsible manner, without prejudices, in the interest of liberty, justice and peace."

91. "The land of the Estonians was, is and will remain also the homeland of the Baltic Germans. Estonia is and will remain open for all Germans." (For fifty years we have been waiting for similar words from Poland, Bohemia and Yugoslavia).

92. "The absolute right to a homeland is one of the European principles."

93. "Before we can think at all about a 'new world order' we need, above all, honesty and objectivity about history."

94. "Amongst all of the national anthems it is the German national anthem where those principles of the Occident — unity, justice and freedom — have found their expression in a terse manner!" Those are the words of a friend who is reminding us of the magnificent aspects of our history and the responsibility for our present and for our future. (During 1941-1945 Estonian military units distinguished themselves in the pan-European defense effort against Bolshevism. During 1940-1941 Estonia had been under a genocidal Bolshevik occupation).

95."Do not allow yourselves to be deceived, my beloved nation," exclaims Martin Luther. "If God is with us, who would hurt us? Faith is stronger than all enemies. No one can put out our lamps."

GOVERNMENT = PRISON

by David C. Tate, P.O.W.
Member, The Brüder Schweigen

Many prisoners have observed that prison is a microcosm of "the system," or government, as a whole. Prison being the total imposition of someone else's rule over another's life, it is government in total. GOVERNMENT = PRISON.

Self-Rule is the absence of government and the opposite of anarchy in a responsible, homogenous community. The presence of alien element or thought has created a presumed "need for government" to "control" the element in society which seems incapable of Self-Rule. Remove the alien element incapable of ruling over themselves, and there will be no need for government. Freedom is the absence of government bondage. SELF-RULE = FREEDOM.

Free men and women capable of Self-Rule understand that crime creates victims; that if there is no victim there is no crime; and that to punish someone for a crime he has not committed is a crime against that innocent party. Free men and women remove alien element or thought from their society through the assertion of Self-Rule by the imposition of Restitution, Death or Exile against those incapable of Ruling over themselves. This instructs those capable of learning Self-Rule, or removes that element that is not. Self-Rule restricts Law to a minimum: No Victim, No Crime. FREEDOM = THE ABSENCE OF ALIEN ELEMENT AND THOUGHT.

Government itself is alien to Freedom because it creates victims of the innocent by enforcing penalties upon society for the presumed "need to control," rather than remove alien element or thought. As a result, government victimizes society by enforcing a tyranny—prison—upon the innocent by manufacturing taxes, penalties, laws and restrictions. In short, government manufactures "crimes" where there are no victims, establishing victimless crimes and unjust "laws" to be enforced upon the innocent. All meant to control the alien element or thought in society, but in reality controlling everyone and victimizing everyone by converting free men and women into wage-slaves. GOVERNMENT = CRIME.

"Conservatism" was meant to check the spread of encroaching government upon Self-Rule. Conservatism has failed. "Government reform" is meant to reform government by changing its structure, supposedly to check the tide of crime and other lofty visions. But, government is self-serving, and government "reform" only creates new victimless crimes to be enforced against the innocent, which creates more victims. GOVERNMENT ENFORCEMGNT = CRIME ENFORCEMENT .

America was originally founded upon the principles of Self-Rule and Freedom. Unfortunately, certain alien elements and thinking were not removed from the beginning. As a result, a "revolution" took place which over time replaced Self-Rule with government, much like a malignant growth or cancer. GOVERNMENT = ALIEN ELEMENT AND THOUGHT.

America is touted as the great "democratic" society. Government in America is far from democratic. There is not a democracy in America as the American people are never allowed to vote on any major issues. Only on the local level can it be said that Americans "elect" their officials. In areas such as the presidency or senate, small, well screened officials are chosen for Americans to elect. Is this "legal?" Why, of course! Anything government does is "legal." The government is "legal." But, what is "legal" is not necessarily "Lawful." Nature's God has dictated what is Lawful in Nature. In the wilds we can see Natural Law in action. In the Sciences of chemistry, mathematics, even Life in general, we can see the perfectly systematic Laws of Nature in action. Society is also subject to Natural Law. For a homogeneous society to be Free, it must recognize the Laws of Self-Rule and remove all alien elements and thinking from its houndaries. GOVERNMENT IS LEGAL, but, SELP-RULE IS LAWFUL.

Since government equals crime and prison, and methods of compromise such as conservatism and reform do not work, there is only one Lawful alternative left to try that is historically proven to work: the assertion of Self-Rule by the imposition of Restitution, Death or Exile for those alien elements in our society. This is known as Revolution, and is the only way to return to Self-Rule from the prison of government. FREEDOM = REVOLUTION.

The Laws of Self-Rule are written on a White Man's heart. We each know right from wrong, and this knowledge can be considered our "Perfect Law of Liberty." The basis of this Law is the recognition of our place in Nature, and our connection to it, and that the only people we can truly find compatible and relate to are those of our own kind. Only they have our "Racial Mind" and can be considered our Neighbors, Brothers and Sisters. The allien element—strangers—cannot be allowed to live in our land nor be allowed to intermarry with our Sons and Daughters. They are incompatible, and the very proof of this is seen in what has happened to our society in the past few generations. It is genocide against our kind. Those who abuse or victimize their Neighbor, that is to say our Race, have practiced alien thought and have broken our Perfect Law of Liberty. When someone creates a victim, they have committed a crime; where there is no victim, there is no crime. A "victim" can be made out of an individual, or out of our Nation which is our Race. TO HAVE SELF-RULE YOU NUST LOVE YOUR RACE.

My question now is, are you a Free Man, a wage-slave, or an alien element? Free Men and Women defend their Freedom, they assert Self-Rule.

THE STRATEGY OF TARGET-SELECTION

by Eric Thomson

As the struggle for White self-determination intensifies, the Zionist occupation forces will pull from their bag of dirty tricks such devices as 'counter-dissonance' and phony combat cells. Like most con games, these vicious ploys have many subtle variations which can be left to the reader's imagination.

Counter-dissonance is a tactic used by a corrupt and inefficient government to discredit its opponents when it is unable to defeat them in open battle or with the usual campaigns of suppression involving mass-arrests and the like. It is usually brought into action when the regime's opposition can no longer be ignored and when the opponents have obtained favorable publicity through 'propaganda of the deed', such as the freeing of political prisoners, the seizing of military supplies, etc. The government is obviously unable to guard effectively all important targets at which the opposition may wish to strike, nor can it ferret out or otherwise neutralize the opposition activists who are doing the damage. Resources are clearly limited. The regime cannot draft everyone into the armed forces, nor can it afford to maintain the existing forces on combat ready standby for an indefinite period of time, to be determined by the regime's opponents. The fat backsides of the jews' satraps squirm uncomfortably upon the horns of a dilemma.

Counter-dissonance is one means available with which to solve the problem presented by the opposition. The government sends its own agents into the field, disguised or identifiable as members of the opposition. These agents commit hideous acts of terror and violence against the civilian population, in the name of the opposition. The atrocities are publicized in a manner favorable to the government and the people will begin to waver in their support for the opposition.

They may even deny their support and work against the opposition by betraying its members to government forces, for suitable rewards, of course. The people will think, "The government is certainly corrupt and inefficient, but at least it is not vicious, like its mad-dog opponents." When the people begin to think this way, they become lost to their own salvation and the defeat of their would-be rescuers is only a matter of time. The positive programs of the opposition are forgotten and INERTIA, that ultimate ally of all governments, reasserts itself. The government, such as it is, has won.

The jews; those two-legged chameleons, are expert at such duplicity. In Poland, their massacres of German civilians were blamed on the Poles. In the Ukraine, their vicious atrocities against the Germans were blamed upon the Ukrainians and vice versa. Dressed in German uniforms, these same jewish murder squads committed atrocities sufficiently heinous and grotesque that they were able to destroy White unity and influenced many White people in the Soviet satellites to support the jew commissariat.

In more recent times, jews have attacked U.S. installations in or near Arab countries (the Lavon Affair) and they nearly succeeded in sinking the U.S.S. Liberty, hoping to affix the blame for these cowardly assaults upon their intended Arab victims. Had the real culprits not been discovered and positively identified as jews, our Zionist Occupation Government might have convinced us to declare war on the Arabs in the 1960s. Since these incidents and others were revealed as 'kosher', the ZOG's jewsmedia treated them as 'non-events'. As this article is being prepared for republication, the 'jury is still out' in regard to the New York Trade Tower explosion, but there is evidence that a certain security firm, known to be a Mossad front, had access to the tower. If the Mossad was sloppy in covering its tracks, then we can look forward to this incident becoming another 'non-event', to vanish down the Orwellian Memory Hole.

The United States and its USSR branch office (all nations under ZOG) performed similar atrocities in Latin America, Africa and Asia. Thus has sufficient data been gathered to enable USZOG to orchestrate such terrorist programs to a fine pitch, allowing for racial/cultural variables.

Counter-dissonance is ZOG-talk for drowning out a noise with a bigger noise. Let us be alert to the sound of this Zionist 'music'.

Phony combat cells will be brought into play as the revolutionary White Nationalist struggle intensifies, because it will soon become apparent that a growing number of White activists will desire to combat the armed occupation forces with armed resistance. The occupation authorities will oblige by setting up and publicizing certain 'opposition' combat groups, complete with weapons. Such combat formations may even take part in attacks upon occupation forces and installations, but these attacks will be strictly limited in scope, so as to leave unimpaired the economic infrastructure.

Once the bag of activist recruits is deemed sufficiently full, the draw-strings are pulled and... "Government forces today are reported to have surrounded a 'terrorist' stronghold, killing or capturing all of the criminal elements involved, except for self-styled terrorist 'Commander X' who escaped the law enforcement net only by an exceptional stroke of 'good fortune'..."

Danger signals for the valiant: Both ploys and their variations can be readily identified in regard to the selection of targets. The targets chosen by ZOG-agents WILL NOT affect the economic means of production and distribution (the economic infrastructure), for the impairment and destruction of these targets USUALLY produce the revolutionary mass upheavals which the occupation authorities do not want. Thus, targets will be selected which will cause 'noise', rather than damage, even when large numbers of lives are lost. The results of such calculated mis-application of force will be the isolation of the revolutionary group from its popular support and the acquisition of a 'mad-dog' image for the revolutionary movement as a whole. With luck, such atrocities will lead to disunity and even internecine warfare amongst the opposition.

If there remains any doubt about target selection in a national liberation struggle, it should be pointed out that the London Blitz and the mad-bomber's delights, Hamburg and Dresden, killed off more people in a few hours than did all the anarchist bombings in history. Yet, none of these attacks had the desired effect of destroying the national war effort. Quite the contrary!

Human targets are rarely productive of a revolutionary situation, but material targets usually are! Destruction of the MEANS of human life, rather than the destruction of human life itself generally results in revolutionary collapse, as in the cases of Russia and Germany in World War I. Imagine, for example, the results of a delay in welfare checks, a halt in a key means of transportation or a sudden curtailment of electric power. Compare such possibilities with the results obtainable from the assassination of even one big-name enemy or even hundreds of racial enemies. Thus may you distinguish real revolutionaries from ZOG agentsprovocateur.

This article first appeared in the November 1976 edition of WHITE POWER REPORT. Since that appearance, we have witnessed the erroneous application of force based on "The Turner Diaries" and the surrender of the heavily-armed group known as C.S.A.R.M. to ZOG-forces, without firing a shot, after its 'leader' had a chat with the 'Big Jew in the Sky'. Can we not learn from others' bitter experiences?

(Mr. Thomson makes a poignant observation. Thus, in light of the fact that the Trade Tower bombing had no effect upon the economic infra-structure, we can conclude that it was a jewish orchestrated operation with Arab players. We should never neglect: CUI BONO — for whose benefit? The jews did indeed benefit. It makes sense to me. Ed.) ❑

Dear Mr. Dietz:

After reading a couple of years' worth of Liberty Bell and the endless arguments over who killed more people, Joe Stalin or the Germans, how many and where, I am tempted to say, too bad it wasn't more—we still have too many here now—all the "survivors" of the holocaust, plus every Jew that was ever born, filling every conceivable governmental, university, or commercial position in the country.

At least one wit, I think also read in L.B., once quipped that there were not that many Jews in Germany, and possibly not in Europe. Did they multiply underground like moles or clone? Where were they that they come here in such numbers? There can't possibly be any Jews left in Russia, Poland, or even Israel (Martians in disguise?).

Another question in my feeble mind is how come they had all their worldly possessions taken from them before being deported/put in gas ovens/torn from the bosom of their families, and yet seemingly form a large part of the affluent community of Skokie IL, among other communities, such as Belaire and Brentwood?

These people seem to have miraculous powers, tattoos on their wrists or not. No people in history ever went through so much and came out so rich. I would say that there seems to be no poor Jews, but in a book The Rational Feminist reviewed a couple of years ago, the author stated that many, if not most of the Hasidics in NYC were on welfare "because they have no skills" (Kaye, 1987).

Is there something wrong with this picture?

Dear Commander Ludwig:

Thank you for your invitation to me to join the American Legion. I am an honorably discharged veteran with an MOS #631, serial number 35683098 (I still remember it!) but during my service in Europe I saw and heard many things that made me ashamed of the American role in Europe, such as the aspects which I mention in the enclosed comment by me on the Marge Schott controversy.

A recent book by the Canadia journalist, James Bacque, Other Losses, 1989, offers evidence that Eisenhower deliberately starved to death hundreds of thousands of German prisoners of war after the war. This book has made me even more ashamed of our role in Europe during what I call "The War to Make thwe World Safe for Communism." As an American veteran I was deeply disturbed by Bacque's book, although I had heard many years ago (1946?) of mistreatment of German prisoners of war by the French, who had contributed relatively little to the defeat of Germany and seem to have done tolerably well during the German occupation. In a genuine spirit of rapproachment many Frenchmen fought against Communism as volunteers, in fact.

If I could read a convincing refutation of the book by Bacque, I would feel much better about my army service. Do you know of such a refutation?

The issue that really tore the Republican nominating convention apart was the abortion question, which is controversial because it is so important, perhaps even more important to American Aryans than the immigration question, even if desperate efforts were made to hide or play down the tensions generated by the abortion question.

No matter what one feels about the abortion question from a moral or theological point of view, this much is certain: When American Aryan women kill their unborn children they are also killing the prospects for the thriving and surviving of their race in the United States.

There is also the crucially important question of whether abortion is now eugenic or dysgenic. I fear that there is a great deal of evidence that the very women who should be having children are the ones most likely to have their fetuses killed. It is almost certain that abortion if having a lowering effect (dysgenic effect) on the quality of the U.S. population, a lowering factor in our economic and cultural well-being and our ability to compete in the world market place.

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

American Education:

Forty Years of Waste, Fraud, and Subversion

by

Arthur J. Jones

American education today, at all levels in virtually every state in this country, is the greatest fraud ever perpetrated against the parents and taxpayers during the last 40 years. To most of the world this costly con game we call public education is an open joke known to everyone but the parents of America!

It is only when their children, supposedly educated, graduate from our high schools and colleges and compete with each other for high-paying jobs that they discover how woefully uneducated they are. And even then, as in case of Black and Hispanic youths, they are too ignorant to realize their own illiteracy and instead blame employers for rejecting them because they are simply "White racists".

The truth is, the amount of money spent on public education in this country is greater than it has ever been before. Yet, all we are getting back for all this money is one generation dumber than the preceding generation! Altogether, this nation will spend over 506.5 billion dollars on educating, or attempting to educate, the children of this nation in the coming school year. (USA Today August 24, 1994) The education budget alone for the Chicago Public Schools, from September of 1994 to September of 1995, has been set at 2.9 billion dollars! (Chicago Sun Times August 16, 1994) Included in this sum is 162.3 million for racially balancing the Chicago Public Schools, in accordance to a federal court order handed down by federal Judge Milton Shadur back in the late 1960's. Since that infamous ruling by this leftist Jew federal judge, the once majority-White student population of Chicago schools has been reduced to only 11% of the public school population! And still the buses roll, transporting hordes of Blacks and Mexicans into formerly all-White schools and taking tiny handfuls of White students into the crime-infested Negro and Hispanic schools.

Yet despite all the money spent on education, despite all the extra incentives and special programs and courses designed to encourage and inspire students to stay in school and learn, year after year, the SAT scores and the less demanding ACT scores, required for college-bound students, keep going lower and lower.

In 1994, 42% of the high school graduates had taken the SAT exams, which comes out to about 1,000,000 graduates. A perfect score on the SAT is 1600, which measures verbal comprehension and the ability to do higher mathematics. In 1960, the national average on the SAT was 975. In 1994, the national average had sunk to 902. (Atlanta Journal, August 25, 1994)

Again, lack of money is not the problem. In 1965, per pupil expenditures stood at $2,700. By 1995, the amount spent on each pupil in public schools of this country will be on the average over $5,000. And right now, the New York City public schools average $6,107 per pupil. So lack of money is not what ails our schools.

Nor are the classes too crowded as the liberals claim. In fact, the average United States classroom now only has 18 students, down from 25 students back in 1965. However, in South Korea, which among 14 industrialized nations placed first in academic skills, the average class contains 49 students. In that international competition, the best the United States could do was a dismal 12th place!

In 1960, 39% of adults aged 25-29 did not have a high school diploma. By 1990 that drop out rate had been reduced to 12.1%. Yet, those figures can be very misleading. For while the per cent of drop outs may have declined over 30 years, the actual number of illiterate or barely functionally literate Americans has increased tremendously. For example, 90 million American adults cannot write a simple letter or read a bus schedule, or fill out a bank deposit slip, or even understand instructions given to those asked to serve on juries. And 26% of American public school students are in special education classes, that is, "special education" for slow learners or what are known as "EMH" students — educationally mentally handicapped!

This basic ignorance shows up in college, where in 1990, 21% of all college freshmen were taking remedial math; 16% remedial writing; and another 18% remedial reading. Illiteracy also shows up in the work place. In a survey of 200 major United States corporations, 22% of the companies surveyed in 1990 were teaching reading; 41% were teaching basic writing skills; and 36% of these companies were teaching some of their employees how to do basic math.

And the United States military has had to dumb down their training manuals on how to operate and repair the costly equipment used to defend this country to the level of comic books. Despite the much vaunted victory over Iraq, most of our casualties in that war were from our own people firing on each other, usually from great distances. This was simply because of incorrect coordinates given on maps, or reading radar screens incorrectly.

In military maneuvers in Europe, United States forces in competition with our NATO allies almost always do poorly, despite having the superior equipment. The presence of large numbers of Negro soldiers in United States Army units, holding positions for which they were not mentally equipped to handle, was largely the reason for such poor performances in the field.

From my military service, including the year I spent in Vietnam, I feel the more non-Whites in the unit, the less it became a first class fighting force. Other veterans, especially retired career military men, I'm sure will agree with me on that.

Now, the question is what has happened to what was once the greatest educational system in the world? How has American public education come to such a sorry state of affairs? That is not an easy question to answer.

There are many areas of public education to be dealt with in this article and each area — elementary, junior and senior high and the college level — has unique problems to be dealt with.

At the elementary level, the goals of reading, writing, and learning simple arithmetic are no longer apparently the objective of the classroom teacher. Instead of learning the very basics — the phonic system of sounding out each word — most teachers use the whole-word technique or the look-say method of teaching reading, which was originally designed for teaching deaf mutes. (Anthony Sutton, America's Secret Establishment, 1986, page 71) The result is most students can't read above the level of the sixth grade by the time they graduate from high school. After four years of college, the average college graduate reads at a tenth grade level!

Now, one reason for this is the books used in todays schools. Paul Copperman, in his 1978 book The Literacy Hoax, reveals that it has become the custom of American textbook publishers to publish, for the average United States public school, books whose reading level is two years below the grade level of the students reading the books! And for "minority" students, they have an entire different set of textbooks, whose reading level is even lower than that set for White students! (Copperman, page 82)

Thus both White and Negro students are deliberately given textbooks to study from that are actually below the abilities of the students. So even the most intelligent student will be working below his ability to master the subjects studied.

In no other country do the publishers of textbooks deliberately engage in a program of planned educational retardation. And the motive for this is quite simple: the more students who read poorly, the more need there will be for remedial reading classes that will call for special remedial level textbooks, that these publishers will be happy to supply for the right price!

Yes, simple capitalist greed is one factor behind the decline of American public education. But there are other factors as well that have little to do with greed, except perhaps in the lust for power by the two largest teachers unions in the country: The National Education Association (NEA) and The American Federation of Teachers (AFT).

These two unions dominate the entire American public school system. And they are avowedly on the far left in their educational philosophy and in their political positions.

For example, here are a few of the positions supported by the NEA: universal, free health care for all, including illegal aliens; abortion rights for children without parental notification; sex education for children; a "gay" rights curriculum. However, the NEA opposed testing teachers for educational competence, narcotics, alcohol, or AIDS. In 1992, one out of every eight delegates to the Democratic National Convention was an NEA member. And the NEA endorsed Bill Clinton for President by a margin of 88%, to 12% opposed. And with a political war chest of $750 million dollars, the NEA can just about elect or defeat anyone they want to.

They can, and do, also establish the curriculum of the public schools, which is overwhelmingly a radical left curriculum, top heavy with utterly useless, worthless information, often little more than fantasies of the authors.

Starting in 1968, there was a big push to include the so-called "Black History" studies as a separate course and to be distinguished from United States History. In virtually every large and medium sized town in America, demands to teach about all sorts of heretofore unknown Black inventors, scientists, explorers and war heroes was launched by the NEA.

In my own hometown of Beloit, Wisconsin, population 35,000, Negroes descended on the local school board demanding this new "Black History" be taught. Since I had just graduated from the local high school in 1967, I was surprised at how militant the local NAACP was about this issue. So I obtained a list of the authors the NEA teachers union recommended be used to teach the new "Black History" course. And this is what I found: of 43 authors in the NEA's book list entitled The Negro American in Paperback, 41 of the 43 had extensive records of support and affiliation with numerous front groups set up by the Communist Party, U.S.A. (CPUSA). No less than 12 of the 43 would-be historians of "Black History" were identified members of the CPUSA.

One such NEA recommended writer was Herbert Aptheker, the Jewish editor of the CPUSA'S magazine of Marxist theory, Political Affairs. He is also the editor of another CPUSA publication Jewish Affairs. The NEA recommended this Communist's book American Negro Slave Revolts published by the Communist Party's own publishing company, International Publishers!

Once the "red" background of these authors was exposed to them, the Beloit Board of Education voted against the use of those books! That set off a minor Negro riot in the city. Several businesses were fire-bombed that same night the board rejected the NEA's "red" books.

A special session of the board of education met a couple of weeks later and voted to approve the inclusion of "Black History" as an elective course for the coming school year, using the NEA's list of communist authors as the basis for the course. (Blackboard Power, NEA Threat to America, Gordon V. Drake, 1968, Pages 174-175)

It seems there is a great deal of Communist Party influence in the NEA and its smaller partner, the American Federation of Teachers (AFT). One teacher I recall was a physical science teacher named Jack Pineles, who confessed to this writer, "Do you want to know what I believe in Mr. Jones? I believe in Communism." When I asked him if there were anymore teachers like him in Beloit's public schools, he slyly laughed and said, "You'd be surprised at how many of us there are."

Apparently this penetration of American education by the CPUSA has been going on for at least 69 years. The late Elizabeth Dilling in her 1934 book The Red Network lists literally hundreds of professional educators, from school teachers to presidents of major public and private universities and colleges, who supported or actually were members of the Communist Party.

For example, in 1932, pressure was building to officially recognize the Bolshevik communists of the Soviet Union as the official government of Russia. Such recognition would then open up the door to United States government assistance and allow big American corporations to legally deal with the Soviets.

So the Communist Party, U.S.A., ever loyal to Moscow, got its orders to launch a national campaign to swing public opinion behind recognizing the first official Marxist country in the world. A petition drive was launched by the communists through a front group called the Fellowship of Reconciliation (FOR).

The petition read as follows: "In the interests of World Peace and as a measure of mutual economic advantage I urge the immediate recognition of the Soviet government of Russia by the United States." Among the hundreds of professional educators who signed this Communist Party authored petition was Paul F. Voelker, then president of Battle Creek College. [Was this leftist professor any relation to the former Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, the most powerful economic position in the country, the Paul Voelker that was appointed by President Jimmy Carter?] (Dilling, Page 155)

Another supporter of the drive to recognize "red" Russia was Professor John Dewey of Columbia University, who was then president of a large and influential organization of public school teachers known as the Progressive Education Association, (PEA). These teachers, most of whom were trained at Columbia Teachers College, came under the influence of Dewey.

Elizabeth Bentley was a former member of the Communist Party from the 1930's on through into the late 1940's and who joined the Communist Party while attending Vassar College, a private women's college. She went on to get an M.A. degree in Sociology at Columbia University, where she discovered the communists held weekly meetings with everyone from graduate students and professors, down to the food workers in the cafeteria! In fact, in keeping with the "democratic" nature of communist theory, the top "red" leader at Columbia University was not a professor, but a cafeteria worker! (Bentley, Out of Bondage, 1988, Page 21)

These "red" teachers, on graduation, have fanned out across the country and they in turn produced another generation of Marxist teachers, college professors, and university presidents. These were the sources of the so-called "New Left" agitators who actively worked against the United State during the "Cold War" era of the 1950's and 1960's, when the United States opposed communist wars of so-called "National Liberation" in Korea, Vietnam, and Latin America.

How heavy is this communist infiltration into American education? Without a doubt, Columbia Teachers College has been and is a "red" stronghold. Over the years, it has graduated over 100,000 teachers. Currently, over 25% of the public school superintendents in 168 United States cities over 50,000 in population are graduates of Columbia Teachers College, and it still produces hundreds of public school teachers in the United States each year.

This Marxist influence has found its way into the school books used in the public schools. The earlier mentioned "Black History" is just one example of what has been taking place in the schools and in the textbooks written by educators out to build a "New World Order."

Here are a few more examples: In 1958, the late Professor E. Merrill Root, who taught for over 40 years at Earlham College, wrote a book entitled Brain Washing in the High Schools. This book was a survey of 11 history books then being used in the Evanston, Illinois, School District.

Professor Root, after thoroughly examining the textbooks, summarized his reactions to them this way: "If Jefferson is on the side of the angels because he loved 'the common people' but Washington is suspect because he belonged to 'the gentry' and 'the colonial aristocrats'; if the Republican Party is the party of 'the interests' and the Democratic Party is the party of 'the people'; if 'nationalism' and '100 per cent Americanism' are low-brow but 'globalism' and the 'United Nations' are high-brow, we do not have 'controversy', we have indoctrination." (Root, page 21)

joring in United States history as described in his 1978 book Harvard Hates America: "I don't give a shit about American history. I don't give a damn about facts or dates or any of that traditional crap. Hell, I don't even know what year the Civil War began. As far as I'm concerned, that type of history just plays along with the right-wing fascists who run this country... the very people I'm dedicated to overthrowing."

LeBoutillier then describes his Harvard history tutor, who was a graduate student working on a Ph.D in history, but who had the job of teaching United States History to undergraduate students. "The speaker was Barry Schmidt. He was wearing a long, shaggy brown beard which almost hid his face. He was bald on top of his head and what hair he did have was tied into a pony tail with a red Indian ribbon. He was wearing a light green tee shirt and scruffy, torn blue jeans. He wore no socks, but was wearing a pair of expensive black loafers with a tassel on top."

Continued Schmidt: "I might as well tell you now that I'm a radical — not a liberal — a radical. And we're going to be working this year in here to teach some basic tenets of my radical thoughts. The first of those is that I'm firmly committed to the overthrow of all these right-wing fascist governments in the West today."

When asked what he was writing his Ph.D. on, Schmidt answered: "I'm writing it on Marx and Hegel. The dialectic method of analysis. German economic advances. The whole bit. Really great stuff. In fact, we're going to spend a big part of this year on it, even though this course doesn't cover that. I just think it's time you WASP brats had some understanding of the working class in society, some conception of the real value of labor, and some understanding of the fraudulent basis of capitalistic society."

What followed was an outline of the course of "United States History" by Barry Schmidt, wrote LeBoutillier: "I was shocked by the whole encounter, by how different it was from what I expected. When I glanced at the assignment sheet, I was even more shocked. There were columns of readings by Marx, Engels, Lenin, Mao, and Hegel. This was supposed to be my sophomore tutorial which laid the basis for my major in American history! And here I am reading this?" (LeBoutillier, Pages 1-4)

It turns out that Barry Schmidt and his wife have three other homes: one on Park Avenue in New York City; one in Palm Beach, Florida; and one in Aspen, Colorado. He drove a Mercedes Benz. Their Harvard home was purchased for them by his wife's father, who was the chairman of the board of a large Wall Street bank! (LeBoutillier, Page 25)

So much for that toiling proletariat! With teachers like Barry Schmidt, is it any wonder how shockingly ignorant American students have become?

In 1987, a book titled What do our 17-Year-Olds Know? was released by publishers Harper and Row. This book was by Dianne Ravitch, Adjunct Professor of History at Columbia University Teachers College, and Chester Finn, Professor of Education at Vanderbilt University and former Assistant Secretary of the United States Department of Education. The book contains the results of a survey of 8,000 high school students across the country. They tested the knowledge of these students in only two areas — history and literature.

And this is what they found, incredible as it may seem.

1. 32.4% are unable to identify the Declaration of Independence and what it means.

2. Only 40.1% know what the Federalist Papers are.

3. 24.7% of students place Lincoln in the time period 1860-1880.

4. Only 32.2% know the Civil War took place between 1850-1900.

5. 32% don't know Lincoln wrote the Emancipation Proclamation.

6. Only 21.4% have any idea of what the term "Reconstruction" applies to regarding American history.

7. 63% don't know when Teddy Roosevelt was President.

8. 57.1% don't know Woodrow Wilson's time as President.

9. 52.3% place Franklin D. Roosevelt between 1929-1946.

10. Only 70% of students knew who the United States was fighting in World War II; an incredible 29% thought we were fighting Cuba, Vietnam , China, Iran, Korea, or Russia!

11. 44% do not know Dwight Eisenhower was President in the 1950's and Joseph McCarthy, the anti-communist United States Senator is mistaken for the pro-communist Senator Eugene McCarthy by 29.4% of students.

12. Only 48.6% know who dropped the atomic bomb and when it was used and on whom it was used. Some students have it in their minds it was used on Germany to end World War I and others that we dropped it on China during the Korean War!

13. And for 37.3% of the 17 year old's across the country, the word "Sputnik" (referring to the first satellite to orbit the earth, launched by the Soviet Union) draws a blank!

14. But a word that should draw a blank, because it never happened, "Holocaust," is recognized by 75.8% of the students for its reference to alleged Nazi genocide of the Jews in World War II.

Turning to geography and literature, their findings were just as alarming as the results they obtained in their history survey. Here is some of what they found in their literature/geography survey.

1. 30.7% can't find the Mississippi River on a map.

2. Only 57% know what area comprised the Louisiana Purchase of 1803.

3. 15% can't locate the Rocky Mountains.

4. Only 54.2% of Hispanics and 44.2% of Blacks can locate Great Britain.

5. And 35% of all students can't find France!

When the question of the 38th parallel came up, "the smartest student" in a Los Angeles High School graduating class answered this way: "I learned that in the Vietnam War, North and South Korea fought against each other, and then there was a truce at the 38th parallel, and that Eisenhower had something to do with it." (Inside American Education, 1993, Thomas Sowell, Page 5)

In the field of literature, todays high school students have been denied exposure to the best writers and social philosophers of the Western World. Instead, they have been subjected to a meaningless, mindless, racially alien, collection of Marxist scribblers in the name of that formless vapid glop of mental droppings called "Multiculturalism".

Here is the barren cultural wasteland of American education today: Of ten famous American and European writers — such as Charles Dickens who wrote Oliver Twist and A Tale of Two Cities, Herman Melville who wrote Moby Dick, Washington Irving The Legend of Sleepy Hollow, James Fennimore Cooper Drums Along the Mohawk, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow The Ride of Paul Revere, Ernest Hemingway The Old Man and the Sea, and Mark Twain, the most well-known American author of all time for his novels Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn — only 39.8% of the students had read those books! (Ravitch and Finn, page 107)

Of poets and playwrights, that lamp of knowledge burns dimly in the minds of less than 50% of the students surveyed. Writes Ravitch and Finn: "The classic poets of the English language are apparently unfamiliar to most eleventh grade students in our high schools." (Ravitch and Finn, Page 112)

For example:

1. T.S. Elliot's poem The Hollow Men was familiar to only 45.4%.

2. Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass was known to only 40.2%.

3. Geoffrey Chaucer's Canterbury Tales was read by 36.1%.

4. Beowulf by 45.8%.

5. Dante's The Divine Comedy by 32.8%.

6. And only 43.6% of these students surveyed reported they had read just one or two plays by the most famous writer in Western literature, William Shakespeare! But a shocking 57% of these students had never been required to read anything by Shakespeare!

In fact, it appears there is very little required reading in the public schools, and if students are required to read anything at all, it is the contemporary literary bilge that passes for modern literature and the "new" history.

Consider the Gabler saga. Melvin and Norma Gabler became acquainted with the Texas State Board of Education back in 1961 when they happened to run across several items in the textbooks of their three sons. This led to a long-running feud with Texas educators and the New York publishers of the books used in the Texas public schools.

This war for truth and decency in public school textbooks started in Texas. However, because Texas is such a large state, what sells in Texas is generally sold to school boards in other states as well. Their fight has been told in two books, Textbooks on Trial by James Hefley in 1976 and in What are they Teaching our Children? by the Gabler's in 1985. Here is just a brief rundown of their findings.

1. A fifth grade American History book which devoted 6.5 pages to Marilyn Monroe, including a sexy picture from Life magazine, complete with a sexually suggestive caption on her "sexy" way of walking. George Washington, in the same book, is mentioned briefly. (Hefley, Page 122)

2. An English grammar book that instructed the teacher: "drill on standard usage should be avoided... Encourage each child to make his own rules for writing and to stick to those rules." (Hefley, Page 150)

3. A story in an English literature book about a little blonde haired white boy forced to wear a dead snake around his head by his uncle. (Hefley, Page 151)

That is some of the depravity put in the textbooks in the 1970's for elementary, junior, and senior high school students. As the 1980's dawned, the Gabler's were still carrying on the fight against morally degenerate textbooks. Here is some of their latest findings in their 1985 book.

1. A geography book with 14 errors — 8 of the errors give a higher GNP to Marxist countries and 5 non-Marxist countries are given a lower GNP than they actually have. (Gabler, Page 56)

2. A series of world history books and " social studies" books that glorify the communist leaders Ho Chi Minh, Mao Tse Tung, Fidel Castro, and the communist Sandinista rebels of Nicaragua. (Gabler, Pages 58-59)

3. Role playing stories for children where they first play the part as killers than reverse the roles and become the murder victim. In one such story, a doctor kills an elderly patient with an overdose of morphine. The students are then instructed to discuss this question, "How old would you have to be before you would be ready to kill somebody?" (Gabler, Page 89)

4. And this nifty little poem was found in an eighth grade English literature book from a collection called The Inner City Mother Goose:

"Jack be nimble, Jack be quick,
snap the blade and give it a flick
Grab the purse, it's easily done
Then just for kicks, just for fun,
Plunge the knife and cut and run."

Not content to mess up their minds with such trash the radical leftists and communists, who have control of the public schools, have now taken it upon themselves to use American children as Pavlovian lab rats, testing all sorts of weird, crack-pot, and subversive techniques out on them.

In some American schools the latest rage is "Death Education". In such a course, students are taken on field trips to morgues and funeral parlors to view dead bodies. Then they are required to write their own obituaries! Other "useful" activities that take place in this course is that students are required to discuss the death of someone in their family, make a model coffin out of a shoe box, and even write a suicide note! (Sowell, Page 37)

Then there is "Peace Education", where students are subjected to all the theories about nuclear warfare and what the United States must do to make sure we never use a nuclear weapon on another nation, as we did on Japan. And of course the NEA is firmly behind this leftist claptrap. In fact, Terry Herndon, former president of the NEA was the president of Citizens Against Nuclear War, a coalition of 50 different left-wing radical groups, labor unions, and various religious and environmental organizations. (Thomas Smith, Educating for Disaster, 1986, Page 30)

One of the most dangerous and unnecessary educational techniques falls under the heading of "Values Clarification". This is the brain child of two Jewish educators, Sidney B. Simon and Howard Kirchenbaum. Values Clarification requires students to keep diaries on family members and reveal information about a child's family that the family may not want divulged. Personal, religious, and moral beliefs are actively challenged by the teacher or class. And when subjected to this kind of Marxist-style group-criticism, old family values are weakened if not wiped entirely out.

Professor Richard Baer of Cornell University has described the Values Clarification technique in these words: "Values Clarification is a form of psychotherapy that teaches a profound bias against authority, traditional morality, and duty."

And so it does. According to the latest figures from the United States Department of Justice, there are on average 500,000 violent incidents per month in the public schools. And 1,000 teachers a month are assaulted and require medical treatment, and another 125,000 teachers are the victims of threats against themselves. (Walter Williams, Conservative Chronicle, September 7, 1994, Page 23)

Kirchenbaum and Simon are also to be found promoting an extremely radical and subversive movement called "The Children's Rights Movement", first outlined in the book with the same name published in 1977. In this movement we find every nutty notion on school reform and child rearing you can think of. What "children's rights" are we speaking of? Here are a few of the absurd "rights" todays so-called professional educators are advocating.

1. The right to choose where one may live and with whom, regardless of the wishes of the parents.

2. The right to have adult friends that are not friends of the parents or legal guardians of the child.

3. The right to sign legally binding contracts.

4. The right to enter into sexual relationships with adults.

5. The right to use whatever drug adults may use — from alcohol to heroin.

6. The right not to have to attend school.

7. The right to earn money at a regular job, under age 16.

8. The right to a guaranteed income for those who choose not to work.

9. The right to an abortion, when the child demands it.

10. The right to vote, lowered to age 6! (Holt, Page 117)

These so-called "rights" of children are to be found in th 1974 book Escape from Childhood by the late John Holt, wh taught elementary school in Massachusetts, Colorado, and California, as well as at the graduate student level at Harvard.

He wrote five other books on his educational theories and his books have become required reading at teacher colleges around the country. The New York Times blurb on Escape from Childhood says: "Astonishingly cogent. John Holt's book is touching in its beautiful respect for children and its insistence on their dignity."

This is what John Holt thinks of the institution of the family: "Most of those people who talk angrily about saving the family or bringing back the virtues of the family do not see it as an instrument of growth and freedom but of dominance and slavery, a miniature dictatorship... It is a training for slavery." (Holt, Page 27)

Here are a few more quotes to get the full picture of Holt's ideas:

1. "There is no need why the adult friends of a child should be friends of his parents." (Holt, Page 30)

2. "Children should have the right to own at least some property. I also want for them to have the right to buy and sell property, borrow money, make contracts and do everything financially that an adult may legally do." (Holt, Page 144)

3. "Young people should have the right to travel and to live away from home without parents' permission." (Holt, Page 147)

4. "There is no necessary reason why parents should like their own children best, or like them at all; they might prefer someone else's. Why not make it more easy for both adults and children to find those of the other group that they do like and spend more time with them?" (Holt, Page 162)

5. "Whatever rights the law grants to adults in the matter of drugs should be granted to the young... In short I don't think we should "protect" children against whatever drugs their elders use and in a society in which most of their elders use drugs and many use them excessively and unwisely, I don't see how we can." (Holt, Pages 193 and 201)

6. "If and when the law allows people at an earlier age than now to choose to become independent and responsible citizens, I would want these citizens to have the same rights in the matter of sex as any other citizens, regardless of age." (Holt, Page 211)

Needless to say, if these ideas were to become public policy, the concept of the American family would be utterly swept away along with such ideas as "race" and "nation".

Now if John Holt was just one lone nut advocating these ideas, there would be little to worry about. But Holt was not alone when he set down these "rights" for children. He was part of a widespread movement among so-called "advocates" for children in the fields of education and social work.

Herbert R. Kohl is another advocate of "children's rights" who has some radical ideas of his own. He advocates what he calls "the open classroom" in his 1970 book, The Open Classroom, which John Holt considers "indispensable for teachers".

And former NEA president Terry Herndon raves, "to enter a new world, you have got to abandon the old one. The Open Classroom is a manual which will tell you which bridges to burn."

Herbert Kohl has a B.A. in Philosophy from Harvard and received a Masters Degree in Special Education from Columbia University Teachers College.

Here is "the open classroom" approach to education new teachers are expected to use. Says Kohl: "The important point is that in an open classroom the teacher is no more required to behave like a 'teacher' than the students are required to be submissive children. The teacher doesn't always have to be at the front of the room and lead, nor does he have to speak 'proper' English, nor defend a rigid system of 'right' and 'wrong.'" (Kohl, Page 32)

Adds Kohl: "if an open classroom is to develop, the teacher has to learn to abdicate some of the power the school confers upon him. He has to be able to say I'm not going to grade, or I'm not going to punish people, or I'm not going to send anybody to the principal — and mean it." (Kohl , Pages 78-79)

As for any of the work requiring papers written by students Kohl says: "Once they know about the rules of uniform spelling, they [the students] should be free to accept or modify them as they please." (Kohl, Page 112)

So, the "open classroom" says never mind about grades, proper language, spelling, or classroom discipline. What if the school principal or some other authority would object to this anarchic way of teaching? Kohl has the answer: "keep two sets of lesson plans, one for the school supervisor that follows the curriculum and another for oneself that deals with the reality of one's classroom." (Kohl, Page 91)

In other words, new teachers adopting the "open classroom" teaching style should be prepared for resistance from school authorities and what he calls "reactionary parents." (Kohl, Page 95)

To handle such opposition, Kohl says it is alright to present fake lesson plans to school authorities or parents who are concerned about the inability of students to learn anything.

This is sheer educational fraud and quackery. Teachers who lack the leadership necessary to housebreak a pup have been given the far greater responsibility to educate American students! And they have failed miserably.

The greatest example of deceit in public education which is still going on is the destruction of our neighborhood school system by way of forced racial integration of the schools.

The entire case for the racial integration of public schools is based on a bogus "scientific" test involving 16 Negro school children. This test, conducted by Dr. Kenneth Clark, a Negro psychologist, claimed that when asked to pick between a White doll and a Black doll, the majority of Negro kids chose the White doll.

This test was conducted in a racially segregated school in the south, so when the case of Brown vs Board of Education, Topeka, Kansas came before the United States Supreme Court, Dr. Clark' s doll test was cited by the NAACP's Jew lawyer, Jack Greenburg, as the scientific proof that racially segregated schools caused "psychological damage" to Negro children.

On such a flimsy basis, the United States Supreme Court ruled unanimously on May 17, 1954, that racially segregated public schools were in violation of the "equal protection" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. What the justices of the United States Supreme Court were not told by Dr. Clark is that in testing 300 Negro children in racially integrated public schools in Springfield, Massachusetts, Dr. Clark received the same results. Negro children preferred to play with the White doll over the Colored doll. And in another test, in the South, he found Negro children preferred the Black doll over the White. But of course, this information he did not include in his testimony before the United States Supreme Court!

Thus, his doll tests essentially proved nothing one way or another. Nine years later in the case of Stell vs Savannah, Chatham County Board of Education on June 28, 1963, a federal court found Negro children were not damaged psychologically by attending all Negro schools, but rather that both White and Negro children were having their learning abilities "injured" by being forced to attend the same schools together.

Citing a cross section of figures from across the nation, it was established by the defendant school board that the average Negro student is, at the sixth grade, two years mentally behind his chronological age. And by the tenth grade, Negro students are three years behind. Testifying for the defense, a group of courageous scientists further revealed that: "there are differences in the size, proportion, and structure of the Black brain and endocrine systems, which within scientific limitations, compel predictable differences in the personality, and learning capacity of the two races."

Cutting to the core of the liberal argument for racial integration, these scientists concluded that "prejudices, whether ethnic, religious, or racial, increase rather than decrease in a direct proportion to the degree of non-voluntary contact [forced integration] between two separate identifiable groups."

Thus, for those reasons and others too numerous and technical to explain, the lower federal court ruled that "equality of educational opportunity" was "impossible" to obtain in racially integrated schools!

Unexpectedly, the lawyers for the NAACP conceded all the scientific testimony from the Chatham County Board of Education's scientists called to defend segregated schools was true and correct. So the lower federal court, acting on this scientific evidence, ruled in favor of maintaining segregated schools!

However, the wily Jew, Jack Greenburg, appealed the case to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals which ruled in favor of the NAACP without even examining the evidence.

Said the Fifth Circuit Court: "We reiterate that no inferior federal court may refrain from acting as required by the United States Supreme Court in the [1954] Brown decision, even if such a court should conclude that the Supreme Court erred as to its facts or to the law."

In other words, the Fifth Circuit Court said don't bother us anymore with facts or law, a new social revolution has been launched by this 1954 decision and we federal judges are to enforce its effects on the nation, not question its validity or truthfulness.

A second case, Evers vs Jackson, Mississippi, Municipal Separate School District in 1964 found federal district judge, Sidney Mize, ruling in favor of the NAACP, citing the prior ruling in Stell as the reason. However Judge Mize felt compelled by the evidence in defense of segregated schools to write: "In this case the evidence as to racial differences of such significance as to reasonably require the separation of school children for educational purposes, is overwhelming, undisputed and unchallenged." Added judge Mize, "In the opinion of this court, the facts in this case point up a most serious situation, and indeed, cry out for a reappraisal and complete review of the findings and conclusions of the United States Supreme Court in the Brown decision."

To remedy the alleged wrongs Negro children had suffered by attending segregated public schools, the federal courts began to forcibly transfer Negro students into previously all-White schools, and later White students into Negro schools. The result was to drive more and more White children out of the public schools and into the suburbs, where millions of White families have fled, rather than submit to the race-mixing dictates of the federal government.

And large scale race-mixing is precisely what the leftists and Jews hoped would occur when the forced school bussing to "racially balance" the public schools began. Proof that race-mixing, not quality education for Negro students, is the real goal of the Liberals and Jews is found in the case of forced bussing that occurred in Boston in 1974. In that case, you had the federal courts ordering Negro students from Jeremiah E. Burke High School, a new, modern, school in the all-Black Roxbury section of Boston, being bussed into South Boston High School, the White Irish neighborhood of South Boston.

The percentage of Negro high school graduates from Burke High School going on to college was double that of White students attending South Boston High School, which was over a century old and in need of lots of repairs. (Edward P. Langerton, The Busing Coverup, 1975, Page 74)

Critics of forced integration of the public schools predicted that the end result of such a policy would be the chaos, violence, and massive ignorance found in the schools today. This educational catastrophe is a direct result of putting hordes of savage and genetically botched Blacks into the same schools as White children attend.

Now, after 40 years of this costly nonsense, the damage to American public education may be beyond repair. In fact, an entirely new and alien approach to education is quietly being inserted into school districts all across this country. This new technique or method has many names to conceal itself, but its correct name is Outcome Based Education (OBE).

Under OBE, all the courses are geared to accommodate the slowest learners in the classroom or in the school. Our brightest, most creative, and intelligent students, the few that there are, are forced to put their minds at idling speed so that everyone will be learning a course at the same time. No one student, or group of students, under OBE will be allowed to shoot ahead of the mostly minority coconut heads and peanut brains in the class!

The goal of OBE is to condition students to be docile, slow-witted, cooperative, and unambitious. Instead of learning basic skills such as reading, writing, and math, the OBE educated student learns "social skills", such as participating in group decision making, compromising his beliefs. The aim is not to achieve excellence in academic work, because there is no grade to measure his progress, but to achieve an acceptable level of mediocrity from himself that will please his peers. Individualism is out, competition is forbidden, conformity is enthroned.

Adding to this lab-rat style of education are the various special minority group courses White students are forced to endure. "Black History" was the first, then along came the demand for "Multicultural education", which includes now the "alternative life styles" and "sexual orientations" of homosexuals, lesbians, bi-sexuals, transsexuals, and every other degenerate, perverted, anti-Christian, anti-nature, or anti-White and anti-American doctrine or philosophy the liberal/leftist radical educational establishment can conjure up and have taxpayers pay for.

One such utterly worthless course now being inserted into the schools all over this country are the mandatory courses on the mythical, much overblown "Holocaust". To our shame, the state of Illinois was the first state in the union to require the Big Jewish Lie of the "Holocaust" be taught in every public school in the state. Since that time, which took effect only a few years ago, the "Holocaust" is now taught in 11 other states and is inserted into the curriculum by various school boards in hundreds of Unites States cities.

And now that the Jews have their national "Holocaust Museum" in Washington, D.C. American teachers all over this country have been arranging field trips to visit this monument to Jewish power over our national government. Then for those who can't swing the funds for a trip to Washington for their students, the Jews have set up 19 other "Holocaust" museums, 48 resource centers to obtain "Holocaust" propaganda, 34 archive centers, 26 research institutes, and at last count, 12 memorials.

So, when it's time to study the "Holocaust" the Jews haven't missed a trick. However, despite all this, they still are not satisfied with how the "Holocaust" is being taught.

In the view of the Jews who write the lies they would have American parents pay to have stuffed down the throats of their children, it is not enough to just read about it or see a few doctored films. They suggest instead, simulation games, with students acting out the role of Gestapo agents and other students playing the role of poor, persecuted, innocent Jews. They also suggest as a way "to teach moral lessons" that "the Nuremberg Trial" be acted out with students "acting out the roles of murderers, victims, and judges."

Finally, Lucy S. Dawidowicz, a noted writer on the "Holocaust" believes for the "Holocaust" studies to be really effective, they must address a very touchy issue head on. Writes Dawidowicz: "The texts themselves reveal their shortcomings. Though most recite the facts, they do not stress the centrality of premeditated mass murder as an instrument of policy."

"But the more serious failure to which I have already alluded, is the omission of the history of anti-Semitism — and especially its roots in Christian doctrine — as necessary background to the murder of European Jews... the Nazis would not have succeeded in disseminating their brand of racist anti-Semitism had they not been confident of the pervasiveness, firmness, and durability of Christian hatred of Jews." (Lucy S. Dawidowicz, Commentary Magazine, December 1990, Page 27)

Now, the question is when did all these "multi-cultural" programs get started? As near as I can determine, the real down fall of traditional American education began in 1945 with the creation, at the end of World War II, of the United Nations and our membership in it. From that time on, with the creation of the United Nations Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), a concerted and united effort was launched to undermine and to replace the morals and values of former generations with an alien, un-American, curriculum centered around the concept of world peace through world government.

The Uneskoites are also great believers and purveyors of the doctrine of "racial equality". In 1950, UNESCO issued its first statement on race which said: "Race is more a social myth than a biological fact. The intermingling of people throughout countless centuries has destroyed any possibility of a so-called 'pure' race... The range in mental capacities in all races is much the same. There is no available scientific proof that groups of Mankind differ significantly in intelligence, temperament, or other inborn characteristics."

Of course that is an outright lie, at least 60 years of IQ tests, performed at all grade levels, age levels, and social levels, from elementary students to military recruits to prison inmates, has shown a gap of at least 20 points between White and Negro test subjects. [See Audrey M. Shuey, The Testing of Negro Intelligence, 1966, Social Science Press, New York.]

There are literally dozens of scientists, like Arthur Jensen of Berkeley, R. J. Herrnstein of Harvard, Henry Garret of Columbia, and John R. Baker of Oxford University, among many others, who do not believe the Marxist claptrap of "racial equality."

But UNESCO keeps pumping it out. The first UNESCO statement on race was issued in Paris, in July of 1950. The last UNESCO statement on race was issued from that fountainhead of human freedom, Moscow, Russia, in 1967.

However, two years after the United Nations was founded a little known group called the American Council on Education (ACE), issued a report in 1949 entitled Intergroup Relations in Teaching Materials. This report was a review of the contents of textbooks then in use in the public schools. What the focus of the ACE study was "textbook treatment of minorities". This ACE study found "textbooks in use throughout the United States to be distressingly inadequate, inappropriate and even damaging to intergroup relations."

So the word went out to change the textbooks. But little was done until 1960 when the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith (ADL) made a study of American textbooks and found them not to their liking.

This ADL study found only 4 out of 45 books on history to their liking. Said the ADL: "while most books do contain some integrated photographs, the number of them must be increased considerably to reflect accurately our society."

On Indians the ADL says: "In general the treatment of American Indians has changed markedly since 1949. Accounts of White deceit and of Indian culture abound as they never had in the past. However, much more progress is still desirable."

On Jews, the ADL found that: "Some texts — but too few — have begun to state explicitly Jews are not a race. Most of them do not present a varied true to life picture of Jews in America today."

On Nazis: "Nazi persecutions of minorities are still inadequately treated... American histories and social problems texts either omit it or gloss over it — along with the opportunity to teach lessons about intergroup prejudice and conflict to their student readers."

The ADL study recommended that local school boards demand of book publishers that they produce textbooks that: "Present a pluralistic — rather than a 100% White, Protestant, Anglo-Saxon-view of history and the current social scene."

Also, the ADL demanded that textbooks: "Portray minority groups not as 'out groups' — strange, different and isolated — but sympathetically and in depth as valuable, dynamic, contributing elements in our culture."

The ADL also said the new textbooks should: "Deal frankly with past and current barriers to full equality in citizenship and constructive intergroup relations, and with ongoing attempts to achieve both civil and human rights for all."

Finally, the ADL vowed to: "Influence school systems to act as agents of change by refusing to purchase a text simply because 'it is the best available'. Some major large-city school systems have been urged to assume this position, more must be encouraged to follow suit."

As a result of this study, American textbooks were rewritten so that they would be, to use a current term, "politically correct". That doesn't mean the books are true, accurate, fair, objective accounts of history or any other subject, it just means they have been rewritten to please and placate some pampered racial, religious or sexual minority.

Now in researching this article, over and over again, I kept asking where do all these wacky, bizarre, subversive and immoral ideas come from? From where do the "Madhatters" of American education get their ideas?

At first, I thought all these so-called reforms that have made a shambles of American education must have come from the brain of some master Marxist. And there was some of that, as I have shown here. In fact there was a great deal of early Marxist infiltration of the public schools. However, where did the Marxists get their ideas of education? And how does their system compare with what is taught in American schools?

Consider the 10 points or rules of conduct followed by the Soviet Youth Group, The Pioneers.

1. A pioneer honors the memory of those who have given their life in the struggle for freedom and the flowering of the Soviet Motherland.

2. A pioneer is a friend to children of all nations of the world.

3. A pioneer studies diligently, is disciplined, and courteous.

4. A pioneer likes to work and takes good care of public property.

5. A pioneer is a good friend, cares for younger children, and helps grown-ups.

6. A pioneer develops courage and does not fear difficulties.

7. A pioneer tells the truth and treasures the honor of his unit.

8. A pioneer develops his physique and does exercise every day.

9. A pioneer loves nature, he is a protector of green plants, useful birds, and animals.

10. A pioneer is an example to all children.

(Urie Bronfenbrenner, Two Worlds of Childhood U.S. and U.S.S.R., 1973, Pages 42-51)

There is really not much to quarrel with in those points or rules for Soviet youth. But other than that, those are pretty good rules for anyone to follow.

And as far as what is taught in Soviet schools, that came as a surprise. According to the former Moscow bureau chief for the New York Times, Serge Schmemann; "Rare is the Russian who was not reared on The Deer-slayer or The Adventures of Tom Sawyer, who is not familiar with Ernest Hemingway, William Faulkner, Sinclair Lewis, John Updike, Isaac Asimov. One Russian told the writer, " It would not be an exaggeration to say that in childhood we all were reared on American adventure literature — James Fennimore Cooper, Jack London, Edgar Allen Poe, Mark Twain, O. Henry — a whole constellation of names..." (Ravitch and Finn, Page 14)

So Russian children are enjoying America's top writers, while American children are, thanks to the ADL, the NAACP and the NEA as well as UNESCO, given over to the soul-sapping, race-destroying, daily drippings of the "politically correct" hacks and whiners of that "Multicultural" fantasy land that has become American education.

But long last, I believe I have tracked the "Beast of Miseducation" to its lair, or rather its habitat, and it is not from the former Soviet Union. Their system of education is right on track because they did not let the educational quacks in — rather they booted them out and many of them came here.

I speak of the Jews. Not the Marxists, per se, but the Jews as a race. The Russians kept control of their educational system, while we let the Jews take ours over.

It started at the beginning of the 1930's in National Socialist Germany. Adolf Hitler recognized the Jewish poisoning of his people's culture and drove them out of the country, where many fled to America. Wrote Hitler in his book Mein Kampf: "What had to be reckoned heavily against the Jews in my eyes was when I became acquainted with their activity in the press, art, literature and the theater... This was pestilence, spiritual pestilence, worse than the Black Death of olden times and the people was being infected with it."

"The fact that nine tenths of all literary filth, artistic trash, and theatrical idiocy can be set to the account of a people, constituting hardly one hundredth of all the country's inhabitants, could not simply be talked away; it was the plain truth." "But what inevitably remained incomprehensible was the boundless hatred they [the German people] heaped upon their own nationality, despising its greatness, besmirching its history, and dragging its great men into the gutter. This struggle against their own species, their own clan, their own homeland, was as senseless as it was incomprehensible. It was unnatural." (Adolf Hitler, Mein Kampf, Pages 58 and 60, Manheim edition, 1971)

So the same nonsense, the same filth, the same moral corrosion of America today was experienced by the Germans 71 years ago, in 1925, when Hitler first wrote those words. It was Jewish control of Germany then and it is Jewish control of America now.

In researching this article, I discovered the one true source of the madness that passes for American education today and it is not Soviet Russia, but Israel! It was in the book Children of the Kibbutz. Every single so-called educational reform, innovation, or technique for teaching of the last 50 years, you will find was already in practice in Israel, even before Israel was created by the United Nations in 1948.

The "Kibbutz" is a literal communist society and it is alive and well in Israel. Here is how the Jews educate their children.

1. "All courses in the humanities and social sciences are taught in the light of Marxism."

2. "A characteristic of the Kibbutz teaching method is the absence of competitive rating systems as a motivational technique. All students are promoted at the end of the school year, regardless of their performance." [In America this is called "social promotion".]

3. In addition to no grades, there are no exams on what was studied.

4. The teacher constructs his class on a "democratic basis." Students address the teacher on a first name basis. He in turn calls them "comrades".

5. The teacher "consults with his students", rather than inform them of decisions he has independently made.

6. The final choice of what is to be studied, "rests with the class, not the teacher".

7. Students may "leave the class at will — to get a drink, to go to the toilet, or for any other reason which they deem important".

8. The discussion method of teaching, rather than the lecture by the teacher is the preferred method.

9. Students are free to criticize the teacher for anything.

10. The Kibbutz classroom "is marked by the greatest degree of informality". [Such as in Herbert Kohl's "Open Classroom"?]

And when it comes to such radical "reforms" as "sex education" or coed dormitories or females playing sports formerly reserved for males, the Jews of the Kibbutz are way ahead of everyone. For example, here is the reported behavior of young Jewish children for the second through fourth grades.

1. "Masturbation among the second grade children is reported... Few attempt to conceal their masturbation and some even masturbate in class."

2. "In both the second and fourth grades, boys and girls shower together."

3. "Homosexual behavior among girls of the second grade is observed... Moreover, boys and girls often lie on top of each other and hug and kiss each other in public, with no sense of shame. At least one boy would kiss like a man of 20."

4. "In general, group interaction, including games is bisexual; boys and girls not only play the same games, but tend to play them together."

All these quotes came from Children of the Kibbutz by Melford E. Spiro, Schocken Books, 1971, pages 257-280.

So we see, that the un-American nature of American education is the alien philosophy and teachings of the Jews. That is where all the so-called "educational reforms" have sprung from, and no place else!

The Jews have taken hold of the education of our children and by doing so, they are altering, no rather they are determining, the destiny of the White people of this nation.

This alien form of education, this chaos of racial conflict and mass ignorance was all sparked by the adoption of the Jewish Kibbutz style of education, with its doctrine of social egalitarianism.

And time is running short. Every year a million more non-Whites enter this country, and they soon make demands upon our schools to accommodate their needs. For example, in schools on the north side of Chicago, as many as 50 different languages are spoken in the schools by students, and they have to be taught in their own language!

And under President Reagan's watch, the funding for subsidizing this cultural chaos rose to 25% of the money spent by the federal government for programs promoting "English as a second language". Under President Carter, it was only 4% of those funds! (Sowell, Page 75)

Thanks a lot President Reagan. The wogs of the world should erect a statue in your honor for helping to undermine White culture. Also aiding in the destruction of White culture, was a United States Supreme Court ruling in 1974, Lau vs Nichols, where the supreme idiots of the Supreme Court ruled it was an unconstitutional denial of the "equal protection" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to provide an English-only education to non-English speaking school children. How utterly absurd!

Yet it is the absurd, the insane, the immoral, the un-American and the anti-White and anti-Christian teachings that make up American education today. And like it or not, you are paying for it through your taxes on your property and or your income.

Well, this alien way of learning might suit the Jews of Israel, it might help the Blacks and Hispanics and the Asians, it might work fine for the queers and lesbians, but it does not suit the racial and spiritual needs of our people. For we are White people! Aryans! The greatest, most noble race on earth. We are a free-born race of builders, creators, dreamers, inventors, explorers, and yes, conquerors. "Equality" is not and never was our goal. We want always to excel!

For this is the nature of our race. This is the nature of the nation created by our race! We shall never let it be otherwise! And rather than die slowly on the death bed of racial integration, or bend our knees in worship of a Jew-fashioned Marxist Mulatto goddess, we must fight for an educational system to preserve the great heritage that was and can be again — Aryan America!

What the Liberals Don't Understand

Both Terrorism and Random Violence Will Increase as Alienation Grows

by Dr. William Pierce

I was watching the television news one evening about three weeks ago, and Bill Clinton came on and made a few comments about the rash of burnings of Black churches across the South. Mr. Clinton announced that he knew that White racism was responsible for the burnings. Organized hatred was behind it, he said, and it wouldn't be tolerated.

After that I waited for the newscaster to tell us about the evidence Mr. Clinton had that some sort of White racist conspiracy was involved, but no evidence was presented. The newscaster just moved on to other news. I wondered at the time whether or not Mr. Clinton had some inside information, some secret which he didn't want to share with the public, because I wasn't sure at all that the burnings were an organized effort by White racists. I already had been following the news of the burnings for a few days myself, and I just didn't see anything that suggested a White conspiracy. A boozed-up Ku Kluxer might have torched a Black church here or there, but the multi-state string of burnings just doesn't have the feel of the work of a White racist organization.

Apparently the secret police who were investigating the burnings figured that too. They learned in school that most cases of arson are associated with insurance fraud, and so they began questioning Black parishioners and asking Black preachers to take lie-detector tests.

Well, sir, that caused an outburst of liberal indignation in the controlled media. The racist cops are blaming the victims! Quit investigating Blacks and start arresting White racists, the media were screaming. Don't worry about evidence. It's obvious that White racists are doing this, so start rounding them up. And Mr. Clinton's head secret policeman, Janet Reno, threw a real tantrum. She called in the chief investigators, stamped her feet, and ordered them to stop investigating Blacks. White racists are responsible for the fires, she said. Now, go out and arrest some White racists!

And the media kept up their wailing about White racists burning Black churches. I have dozens of the most outrageous, bigoted, irrational newspaper clippings you can imagine on the subject. I'll read excerpts from a couple of them, just to give you the flavor. A typical case was an editorial in the Charleston Gazette, a raving-liberal West Virginia newspaper which is an embarrassment to an otherwise decent state. On June 18 the Charleston Gazette's editor wrote, and I quote:

> Raw racism seems to be the motive.
> As we've said before, Americans generally are decent, compassionate people who don't feel racial hate. But the nation still has a vein of bigotry—and a few racists are brutal enough to join hate groups such as the Ku Klux Klan or the Freemen.
>
> Extreme bigots presumably are starting the fires, even though investigators haven't yet found evidence of an organized conspiracy. Our guess is that a few white rednecks, half drunk in a Southern roadhouse, see a TV report of a Black church burning and decide to inflict the same punishment on Blacks in their vicinity.
>
> Churches are a natural target for race-haters.... Just because they're idiots doesn't mean they aren't disgusting criminals who must be locked in prison. The wave of black church fires has gripped the conscience of America. Leaders and groups at every level are calling for a national crackdown. Decent Americans who feel no hostility should lend their voices to the outcry and exert pressure until all the arsonists are prosecuted.

Well, well, well! Racism seems to be the motive. Bigots presumably are starting the fires. What the editor of the Charleston Gazette really means is that he hopes White racists are burning the churches, so that they can be caught and punished—severely. He's praying that a racist conspiracy will be discovered, so that it can be stamped out, hopefully with a high body count. And as for "Americans who feel no hostility," he clearly is not among them.

Or consider this bit of rabid commentary by Washington Post columnist Carl Rowan. It was in the June 13 edition of the Post and was titled "Church Bombers and The Turner Diaries." Mr. Rowan wrote, and I quote:

> I think that there is a grotesque conspiracy to "save the white race" afoot in America, and that the church bombings [sic] are part of a plot to provoke blacks to react violently, thus giving all the hate groups in the land an excuse to uncover their caches of weapons and use them against blacks and against whites who sympathize with blacks.
>
> I have turned anew to The Turner Diaries, the revolutionary "bible" of the Montana Freemen, the Aryan Supremacists, and the militiamen and others who threaten to "solve the race problem" by killing Blacks, Jews, and liberals. This little 210-page book written by West Virginia professor William Pierce under the pseudonym Andrew Macdonald is the most diabolically violent plan for solving America's racial and social problems that I have ever read.

Mr. Rowan follows with a long extract from The Turner Diaries—a book I wrote, incidentally—to prove his point, and then he concludes, and again I quote:

> The bigots who seek to destroy "the system" clearly believe that even if they burned 10,000 black churches, most of "the white race" would side with them if outraged blacks or their federal protectors took up arms against the arsonists. Federal authorities know this; thus their caution, even timidity, in cracking down on the Freemen, or the rash of new hate groups, or the weird souls who are stockpiling weapons they expect to use against their state and federal governments.
>
> The church bombings reflect a race madness that is far worse than we want to think it is. A lot more people are in grave danger than those who worship in black churches.

So, what do we have here? Hatred and hostility, stemming from fear, in the Charleston Gazette; galloping paranoia, stemming from fear, in the Washington Post. And these two examples are pretty typical of the liberal response everywhere to the church burnings.

The facts are not yet all in, but the arson cases which have been solved to date suggest something quite different from Bill Clinton's or Carl Rowan's assumption of a White racist conspiracy or even the Charleston Gazette's assumption of groups of White rednecks wanting to punish Blacks.

Alabama Fire Marshal John Robison has investigated 38 cases of arson or suspected arson of churches in Alabama since 1991. Of those 38 churches, 15 were Black churches, and 23 were White, and he's found no evidence of racial motives in any of the burnings. In one case, that of the Antioch A.M.E. Church in Fort Deposit, Alabama, the Black female minister was charged with burning her own church. I quote Fire Marshal Robison: "The pastor was upset with the congregation about money; she felt she didn't get paid enough," he said.

Last month, on June 18, four Black children, aged 12 and under, were arrested for setting a fire in a Black church in Florence, South Carolina. Of 27 church fires which have been investigated in South Carolina since 1991, 12 fires were in White churches and 15 of them were in Black churches, and a total of six Whites and six Blacks have been arrested in connection with those 15 burnings of Black churches.

The Georgia Bureau of Investigation has investigated seven church burnings in Georgia during the past 18 months. Six of the seven churches had White congregations. The one Black church which was burned, in February 1995, was torched by a Black juvenile.

On June 19 of this year two Black men were arrested in Columbus County, North Carolina, and charged with burning a building on the grounds of the Black Mount Tabor Baptist Church. The previous week a 12-year-old White girl was arrested for setting a fire which destroyed an abandoned building on the grounds of a Black church in Charlotte, North Carolina. The 12-year-old White girl was said to be emotionally troubled, but I have not heard that she was part of any racist conspiracy.

Now, all of this seems to me to be pretty inconclusive evidence—certainly not the sort of evidence to suggest a White racist conspiracy—although I wouldn't bet that Mr. Clinton's BATF goons and his FBI goons can't find some kind of conspiracy, if they try hard enough to please their boss.

The hysterical reaction of the liberals to these church burnings suggests several things to me. First, liberals want there to be a White conspiracy behind it, because that would tend to confirm their theory about race relations generally: namely, whenever things don't work the way liberal theory says they should work, the reason is White racism. That's the only Politically Correct explanation: White racism. Second, they really believe there is a White conspiracy, because so many of their plans have been going wrong lately that they're becoming a little paranoid. Third, they're frightened; it's clear that more and more people are turning against the government these days, or at least losing faith in the government, and the government is the only protection which stands between the liberals and the wrath of the heterosexual White males they have treated so contemptuously for so long. It is this liberal fear, I believe, which explains the increasing level of viciousness and hatred we are seeing in liberal condemnations of the government's enemies.

Do you remember the way most of the controlled media treated the standoff between the FBI and the Montana Freemen which ended last month? The Freemen had some really nutty religious ideas—just as David Koresh's Branch Davidians at Waco did—and they had some even nuttier ideas about finance and economics. They figured that they had just as much right to issue money and set up banks as the Federal Reserve system had, and so that's what they did—which, of course, was technically a violation of the law. But they hadn't hurt anyone and had no intention of hurting anyone. They just wanted to be left alone. Yet the controlled media and the liberal commentators were angry that the FBI didn't go storming onto their ranch with tanks, flamethrowers, and helicopter gunships. The liberal media wanted blood. The liberal media hated the Freemen.

Why is that?

I'll tell you why. The liberals hated the Freemen, because the Freemen had challenged the authority of the government. There's hardly anything that frightens a liberal more than the thought of losing the government's backing, the government's muscle for forcing the public to submit to liberal policies and programs. The liberals have built up an unnatural coalition of minorities and abnormal people—a coalition of Blacks and other racial minorities, of homosexuals, of militant feminists, of perennial welfare recipients of all races—to keep a grip on government. They have built a coalition of people who depend on the government to guarantee their special privileges and protections. This is the coalition which put Bill Clinton into office.

If normal people—if White, heterosexual, working men and women—were allowed to just tell the government to go to hell, the way the Freemen did, the whole liberal house of cards would come tumbling down. People would be free to hire or fire or rent to or not rent to anyone they wanted. Schools could set their own admission policies. People who have come to feel that they are entitled to a handout from the government would suddenly be faced with the prospect of working for a living or starving. Perverts of various sorts would suddenly find themselves shunned by normal, decent people and would have to retreat back into their closets.

And what could the liberals do to save their skins? Where could they hide to escape retribution for what they have done to our society these past 50 years or so? Where could they run that the lynch mobs wouldn't find them?

That's why they hate anyone who threatens the authority of the Federal government. That's why they're terrified by the idea of people just deciding to opt out of the system.

You know, if there is any conspiracy connected to the burnings of Black churches, it is a conspiracy among liberals and Blacks to use the burnings to bludgeon White Americans with more White guilt, with more demands to outlaw "racism" and make still more concessions to non-Whites. Virtually every news report and every editorial in the controlled media about a church burning has attributed the burning to White racism. Some of them even say something like, "The police haven't caught the White racist who did this yet, but we know it had to be a White racist." And, of course, the news reporting on this subject is very selective. If they catch a White suspect, it's front-page news. If they catch a Black suspect, it's buried in the classified section. And if it's a White church that burns instead of a Black church, it doesn't even make the national news.

And this White guilt campaign seems to be working with some folks. Various White Christian groups have been rending their garments and beating their breasts and crying, "Mea culpa! Mea culpa!" Ralph Reed, the head of the Christian Coalition, one of the largest fundamentalist Christian groups in the country, fell into that trap last month. He went to an association of Black preachers in the South with his hat in his hand and essentially accepted White Christian responsibility for the burnings of Black churches.

This is the same sort of guilt racket the Jews have been working for the past 50 years. They've been saying, in effect, "You could have stopped the Holocaust if you had really cared about us, but you didn't. You let the Germans gas us. And so now you owe us." It worked for the Jews, so why not for the Blacks?

Now, please note that I'm not saying that Blacks or liberals are in an organized conspiracy to burn Black churches. I'm saying that it certainly looks like the liberals are in a conspiracy to use the burnings for their own ends by misrepresenting them in their news coverage and commentary.

My guess is that what we're seeing in these burnings is simply an increase in random violence as our society continues to decay under liberal policies. Today it's churches, because churches, being unoccupied most of the time, are easy targets. Six months from now it could be empty school buildings—or banks or whatever the fad happens to be at the time. This is something I predicted 20 years ago in my book, The Turner Diaries, just as I predicted a great increase in political terrorism. We're certainly seeing the increase in terrorism: the World Trade Center bombing, the Oklahoma City bombing, the Unabomber, the bombing in Saudi Arabia. And I think we'll see a lot more random violence and destruction like these church burnings—not because of White racism, but because the policies of the liberals and the mass media and the government are destroying our society, alienating our people, and causing more and more individuals to lash out violently, in one way or another.

The liberals and the minorities and freaks who make up their coalition can't understand this. To a homosexual or a militant feminist or a liberal booster of the New World Order this is the best of times. Things have never been better. We have more of their beloved diversity than ever before; more multiculturalism; more miscegenation; more democracy; more degeneracy in art, literature, and music; more permissiveness and depravity in our social life. Everything is more cosmopolitan, everything is more Jewish than ever before. There has never been another time when one could see so many racially mixed couples on the streets, never a time when homosexuals and their life-style have been held up to such public admiration, never another time when there were two Jews and a Negro on the Supreme Court, never another time when half of the President's cabinet consisted of Jews and other minorities. Wonderful, wonderful, wonderful! How could anyone be against such things? Except, of course, those awful heterosexual White males, those awful White racists!

They don't understand why we hate their government, why we hate them, why we hate what they've done to our civilization and to our people. But they do know that we hate them. And they are frightened.

They are mistaken, of course, when they blame us for every blow that is struck against them. They don't understand that a great many ordinary people without any real sense of purpose or any racial feeling one way or another—even many Blacks—are frustrated and unhappy and alienated in this unnatural society that the liberals have forced on all of us, and that more and more of these alienated people are striking out randomly at any target they can find.

No, the liberals don't understand that—but, believe me, they will see more and more of this random, purposeless violence, just as they will see more and more very purposeful terrorism. And in their bigotry and their fear and their lack of understanding they'll continue to blame everything on organized White racism. But one day—one day before too long—understanding will come to the liberals. It will come on the day that they have been having nightmares about. It will come on the day when an awakened White public rises up and begins a great cleansing of this land of ours.

THE AWAKENING

by Eric Thomson

"But Rabbi, a goy is a goy is a goy!" Israel shook his untidy head, causing his frizzy Afro hairdo to gyrate like tiny coiled springs.The Elder raised his hand to still the outburst. "Enough of our chutzpah. I should not have to tell you that our tribe depends for its survival on information. We must be informed always and in advance of the goyims' intentions."

"Yes," interjected another member of the hook-nosed company. "What you tell us of this shiksa's activities is most interesting. You say she is behaving like a missionary, talking of a 'Great Awakening'! "The Elders, being Jews, were in the habit of interrupting others' conversations, and the fat rabbi was no exception. "Nach! But most important, you say she does not speak of these things with all the students, just the Whites!"

"Most unusual at a university. By such time a goy should be thoroughly bent to our teaching," mused the first Elder as he scratched his nose. A chill of windswept snow entered the chamber, causing the candles to flicker upon the seven-stemmed candelabra, for a moment dispelling the rank odor of kosher bodies.

"Shut the door, schmuck. You vant ve should freeze our asses off?" shouted the fat Elder. "Oh, it's you, Rabbi Kitzel. Excuse me for saying it, but good you don't look." The melting snow still dripped from the rabbi's proboscis as he flung a sodden leaflet upon the gold-inlaid kaballistic symbols which decorated the top of the Council Table. "Good I don't feel. Look at that!" He pointed a claw-like finger at the leaflet. Responding to the heat of the stuffy room or to the command of some Higher Power, the leaflet unfolded, blossoming like a flower of purity in the midst of the vampiric assembly. Defiantly emblazoned upon the single sheet of white paper were the bold letters forming the slogan "BUY ARYAN!" But it was the proud, invincible Aryan Cross standing guard at each corner of the page which brought on a chorus of frenzied ululation.

"Nu-nu-nu-nu-nu!"

"Oy-yoi-yoi-yoi-yoi!"

"Kiyi-yi-yiyill goy-yoi-yoi-yoi-yim!" After the paroxysm of talmudic hatred had subsided, Rabbi Kitzel resumed the discussion. "Second time this week the neighborhood's been plastered with these. I can tell you, it's bad for business. Some of the goyim are shopping at the Jones butcheries instead of mine. I've noticed a definite downturn in sales at most of my other shops as well. It's only a blessing the stupid goyim don't know I own the Jones shops too."

"Stupid, stupid goyim," ughed the others, rubbing their hands together.

"Don't feel so bad, Hymie, my son," admonished the eldest rabbi, whose breath stank of ill-digested raw salmon, "Our informers will surely lead us to the culprit who is distributing these leaflets. Then you will have more hamburger on the next Feast of Purim, may that happy occasion be not long delayed."

"Amen", said the fat rabbi, audibly smacking his blubbery lips.

"Amen!" said all assembled. "Yahweh be praised!" The first Elder nudged the youth with his elbow. "You see, Israel, my boy, how we must not relax our vigilance for an instant.

So we sponsor a thousand churches and phoney political groups to befuddle the goyim, and for the most part we succeed in deluding them. But there are always the few who see through our smoke screen and divine our real purpose of Zionist World Conquest. These we must weed out and destroy, for although our plans have nearly been fulfilled, there is still a great danger of their being upset by the unforeseen. That is why there must be NO unforeseen. Do you now crasp the importance of your work, Izzey? Even though it may not lead to the discovery of anything important in this case, you must not slacken.

"Remember, the best of the goyim must be killed. It is so written in the Talmud," said the Elder as he thrust the leaflet into the candle flame.

"I understand, Rabbi. I'll let you know what I find out.

Shalom." Israel rose from his place amid the obscene gathering and left the chamber accompanied by raucous shouts of "Shalom!", "Next year in Jerusalem!", and "Shut the door, schmuck!" Buttoning his expensive carcoat, he strode arrogantly down the icy, darkened street to his waiting Jaguar sportscar. It was good, he felt, to be an adept of the Lodge wherein no Gentile could enter, although no Jew could be stayed from entering the most sacred of the goyisch inner sanctums as the law forbade such discrimination. Yes, he could truly thank Yahweh for making him one of his Chosen People. The trusting, slow-witted goyim were sheep for the slaughter, placidly unaware that their chosen shepherds were in league with the ravening wolves and that the wolves shared the very sheepfold! Yes, stupid, stupid goyim. The image of a naked blond Nordic girl (or boy, for that matter), heavily chained and subject entirely to his will filled him with a sudden burst of lust. Panting, he played with his twisted sexual fantasy as he waited for the engine to warm up, his prominent nostrils twitching in appreciation of the fresh leather aroma of the sumptuous upholstery.

"It smells like money," he thought, causing the powerful engine to roar into life. Returning his thoughts to the fantasy of the Nordic body, he realized that chains were unnecessary. He could satisfy his every whim with money alone. Those little dollar signs, dancing to the tune of his people, were heavier than all the metal chains in the world and they were created out of nothing, mere chicken scratches upon a ledger page. How stupid the goyim were! These thoughts so inflamed Israel's potbellied physique that he kept his foot pressed down upon the accelerator as he jammed the automatic transmission into gear. The rear wheels spun upon the ice until they gripped dry pavement, whereupon the Jaguar catapulted forward. Israel lost control of the steering as the tires skidded over another patch of ice. The fire plug approached as if in slow motion, and Israel's eyes fixed upon the inevitable in horrified fascination. What would his mother say? The Jaguar spun around and hit the hydrant broadside, demolishing the rear fender as the car bounced over the curb. He elt the car ride up, onto the gushing, jagged stem of the broken hydrant, and heard the fan blades shriek as they chewed into the radiator. The broken fire hydrant had lifted the madly racing engine from its mounting and the hood burst open to spew out a geyser of water haloed with a cloud of smoke and steam from the damaged engine. If this were not enough, the violent impact had caused a short in the electrical wiring and the car was now on fire.

In a fever of panic, Israel wrenched at the door handle. The door on the driver's side was jammed. Like a pilot desperately rying to bale out of a stricken aircraft, he clawed at his safety belt and fought to pull himself out of the cramped confines of the bucket seat. His legs tangled in the voluminous folds of his expensive bellbottom trousers, and his high, platform shoes impeded his frenzied efforts to escape, like leaden divers' boots. A voice, not quite human (his own) dinned in his ears as the sealed cockpit filled with blinding, noxious smoke.

"...reckless driving, creating a public nuisance, insulting an officer of the law..." The pencil moved implacably over the page of the little notebook as the policeman recited the charges. As the fire sirens approached in the distance, Israel fumed and bit his lips. The young, White policeman's quiet voice and polite manner had prompted him into an arrogant tantrum, despite the officer's fortunate appearance on the otherwise deserted street and his prompt rescue of the irate Jew from the now blazing wreck of the car. He hated the handsome, regular features and the calm, businesslike demeanor of the young policeman. Oh, how he would love to see him cringe, begging for mercy, as he thrust in the sacrificial knife. That happy day would come, he promised himself, so it would be wise to keep silent. Besides, it was too cold to stand around. With feigned contrition, he accepted the ticket and took a taxi home. He missed two of his morning classes in psychodrama, but he was well in time for Professor Shapstein's sensitivity-training seminar. He was rarely absent from these classes. The negroes were also punctual in their attendance, as fragrant White flesh was very much to their liking. Following this hour of strenuous intellectual discipline, Israel went over to the Student Cafeteria for his accustomed coffee break. As he left the cashier's stand, he saw, sitting at a window side table, the young blond object of his mission. Her hair was pulled back in a ponytail which accentuated her high forehead and classic features. Straightaway he changed course and made for her table, jostling others who chanced to be in his path. He knew just how much he could impose upon the good nature and politeness of the whites, whose manners he dismissed as stupidity and weakness. By behaving rudely and getting away with it, he was able to still the nagging fear in his mind that they knew all about him and were waiting...

"S---!" He brusquely tried to shake off the disquieting thought with a gutter expletive. "If they haven't wakened in 6000 years, why should they wake up now? Wakening... The 'Great Awakening'...!" The thought reminded him of his mission and snapped him back into the reality of his surroundings. There was a young White couple sitting opposite the blond girl, apparently involved in earnest discussion with her. The conversation ceased as they saw him approach and, since he was going to sit at their table, despite the abundance of places at other tables, the couple gathered up their books and took their leave.

"Hi ya, I'm Izzey," he said raucously as he slumped into the recently vacated seat in front of her. She regarded the Afroed apparition coolly, and with a twinkle of mischief in her ice-blue eyes said, "I'm sorry to hear that. Is it curable?" Her well-enunciated English sounded foreign to him.

"Hey, like don't put me down, man!" Unconsciously he aped the dialect of dope addicts and negroes. "Where ya from?"The reddening of her cheeks showed that she wore no makeup and her eyebrows, as blond as her hair, arched in mild annoyance. "Unless your 'Izzeyness' has afflicted your sight, you must be able to see that I am not a man. As for your question, I come from the North. May I ask where you come from? It was my understanding that most of those who lived in this region spoke English."

"Oh, wow! You come on too strong." He drank a mouthful of coffee and smacked his lips. "Hey, like this is a free country. You got no right to put me down."

"I'm sorry, but I am still unused to the local customs. I did not realize that 'freedom' entitled you to intrude upon my privacy, but does not allow me to defend myself against intrusion. Thank you for the lesson." She smiled wistfully. Israel's thoughts of lust, the girl's exotic manner, his duty to discover her purpose, and his own incorrigible self-centeredness were proof against her sarcasm.

"Whatcha studying?" He took a bite of chocolate donut, smacking his lips as he chewed. The girl's gaze was distant, her eyes focussed as if they saw through him. "Biology." Her voice was gentle, just audible over the incessant clash of dishes and the boisterous voices of the black students. Her thoughts were obviously far away. "A drug freak," thought Izzey, "Wonder what she's on." Incapable of subtlety, he burst out, "So what's this 'Great Awakening' you're turned on to?"

"Oh, that," she laughed, "That's the slogan of a new encounter group." He opened his lips in mid-smack, "Not some kind of Jesus-freak scene, is it?" His Jewish impudence seemed to be having the right effect. "It never fails," he thought, "these goyisch bitches are spoiled and really want to be bossed around by a big black stud or the nearest substitute." Izzey tried to make up for his lack of physique by his volume of noise output, often successfully. The girl sipped her coffee as she considered her reply. "No, we're not Christians, if that's what you mean. It's more like..."

"...anything goes!" he interrupted. The girl agreed. "Yes, that is a good description." He lit a cigarette without asking her permission. "You dig, I'm really into the encounter grope, uh, group scene. Funny I never heard about your 'Great Awakening' crowd." He blew the acrid smoke across her saucer. She twitched her nose and frowned at his effrontery. "I hope my eating does not bother your smoking."

"Naw, go right ahead." Izzey felt in a generous, expansive mood. Yahweh was on his throne and all was going splendidly. Maybe he White girl would be a good lay, he thought.

Action followed thought as he reached under the table and put his hand on her knee.

"Ouch! Ya bitch!" He stared at the back of his hand in disbelief. A small, deep cut stung furiously, and blood oozed into a large, dark glob which suddenly broke and ran onto his expensive bell bottoms. "Ya bitch! Why ja do that?"

"Please control yourself," she said, giving her sharp fingernails a casual appraisal. "Your eagerness is appreciated, however. You may come to our encounter group this evening. Meet me at the University Subway Station tonight at 11:30."

"Thanks a lot for the invite, bitch. Ow!" He sucked at his wound.

"Excuse me, I must go now." With graceful swiftness she collected her books, rose from the table, and vanished in the milling crowd. Izzey stared after her, a trickle of blood and spittle running down his pimply chin. "I'll getcha, goyisch bitch!" His hatred like a dagger aimed at her smooth, white throat.

It was 11:45.

"Keep her waiting," he chuckled, "Izzey doesn't beg favors from goyisch bitches."Clearly, Izzey's hand was not the only thing pricked by the 'ice princess', as he nicknamed her. He turned his father's Cadillac onto the street which went past the subway station, and saw her standing at the entrance, a pale, upright figure, only the mist of her breath to show that she was not a statue. He stamped on the brake pedal and lurched to a halt, but she seemed not to see him .He pressed the electric control button and lowered the window on the passenger side. "Well, c'mon, get in!" She shook her head and beckoned to him, a slow, graceful motion made as if she were swimming at a great depth. It would have struck him as distinctly eerie, had she not looked so beautiful, or the street lights so bright. "Besides," he thought, "she must be on something which has blown her mind. Great! Just the way I want her. She won't know what's happening." With this predatory presumption, he got out of the car and approached her. He drew within six feet of her, close enough to see her red cheeks and the movement of the fur fringe upon her white cape as a slight breath of wind stirred the chilly air. She was looking in his direction again, not at him, but through him, as if he were not there. Strangely, her implacable gaze reassured him. "She's high on something, that's for sure," he smiled to himself.

"Well," he reached for her arm, "come on, what're you freezing me out here for?"

"My name is Gudrun," she said matter-of-factly, "I was waiting or you and you are late."

"So what?" He motioned toward his car. "Get in and tell me where this encounter group meets."She did not move. "No, you will come with me." With a sudden push, she opened the door to the station and strode swiftly toward the turnstile.

"Goddamn it, you crazy or something?" He pushed in after her. Already she was through the turnstile and hurrying down the dimly-lighted stairs. As there was no one else in the station, Israel climbed over the turnstile and raced after her, their footsteps echoing among the deserted corridors. In his pursuit of the fleeting white figure, Izzey was only vaguely aware of the metallic voice intoning at intervals, "Attention, subway patrons, the University section of the subway is now closed... now closed... now closed..." Panting from the unaccustomed exertion, Izzey overtook her on the darkened platform. "What the f---ya tryna do?" She smiled at him radiantly. "I knew you would come." Still trying to catch his breath, he shouted between puffs, "Ya crazy bitch. There ain't no trains... at... this..."The rumble was unmistakable. Soon the headlamps beamed upon them and the train screeched to a halt at the platform.

"Well, I, uh..." he stammered. This time she took hold of his arm led him through the open doors. "You almost made us miss the last train. Come, sit here, beside me."

"But I left my car up there with the engine running!" He tried to pull away, but gave up when the doors closed and the train sped onwards.In numb fascination he watched station after station flash by. His racial paranoia began to fill him with dread as he noticed that no other passengers rode the wildly hurtling train. Still, he was with a mere girl against whom he could certainly defend himself. Thus comforted, he began to occupy himself by watching the swiftly passing scenery, for now they rode upon a surface line which took them through some old-fashioned suburbs and into a seemingly endless forest. Feeling an incessant pain in his ribs, he turned toward the girl.

"Cut that out, will ya?" he snarled, showing his yellowed, rat-like teeth. She withdrew her elbow and smiled with her peculiar blend of innocence tinged with mischief. "But you weren't listening. You must pay attention when I tell you about the princess who lived east of the sun and west of the moon."

"Lay off with the fairy tales!" He shivered involuntarily.

"Oh well, you won't have to hear it now. We're almost there." he gave a low-pitched chuckle.

"Stop it. Stop it, I tell ya!" He shook her by the shoulder. "Come on, you gotta tell me what you're on!" She looked deep into his eyes with an expression of bland incomprehension. "On? Why I, you, are on this train. When it stops, we shall get off. Is that unusual?"

"Look, I don't wanna hear..." He jerked his head toward the window. The train was slowing down. A signpost flashed by, but the driven snow had covered the name of the station. Soon, they stopped in a forest clearing filled with the mist of powdery snow blown from the surrounding fir trees. The doors opened and the girl got up to leave. She looked down at Izzey, the unspoken question in her yes.

"Don't worry about me," he said, a defensive edge to his voice. "Nothing's getting me off this train."

"As you wish. The coroner will take you off in the morning. This is the last stop. There is no heat, no current to close the doors, and there is frost in the air. Good night!" She stepped out into the snow.

"So what, meshuga, I'll be warmer in here then out there, with a cold bitch like you!" He hunched his shoulders and pulled his carcoat tighter about him. The minutes crept by.

"She's right," he thought. "It's getting colder." He huddled onto the seat and tried to sleep, but the cold was too deep, too penetrating to ignore. Soon, he had to stand up and stamp his feet, slapping his arms about him to gain warmth from increased circulation. It was damnable, he thought, to be so sleepy and yet unable to sleep. He sniffed the cold air. Was he imagining, or did he smell woodsmoke? He sniffed again. No doubt about it, there was woodsmoke in the air. Someone had a warm fire nearby. Unable to face the cold any longer, Izzey decided to leave the train. His first step caused him to fall into a deep snow drift which had concealed the gap between the train and the rough-hewn platform. He fought his way out, cursing the sudden chill, and reached firmer footing. As he stood rubbing the snow out of his eyes, he heard the surge of current in the traction motors, the hiss of escaping air and the rumble of the train as it got underway.

"Wait!" he screamed. "Wait, ya bastid, ya gotta let me on!" He floundered in the snow and tripped over one of the platform logs. Impotently, he called after the fast-receding train, reviling it with all the filth-ridden curses of the Talmud which came to mind. Soon he was alone, with only the whisper of the wind playing in the fir branches overhead. The cold froze his tantrum in short order and it became imperative for him to find the source of the smoke or die of exposure. Clumsily he regained his feet and lurched in the direction in which he had seen the girl go. It was not easy to follow her footprints, as the snow was drifting into the hollows and the faint impressions were hard to see in the dark, but soon the smell of smoke grew stronger and not far ahead he saw the rustic outlines of a large, well-lighted hunting lodge, the only building in the vicinity. As he slogged his way forward he began to discern the sounds of loud revelry which one might associate with a monumental beer bust.

"Jeez," he muttered with frosted breath. "All this work to discover some whacked-out fraternity house. Sheeeeeit!"He climbed a broad flight of log steps and crossed the freshly-swept veranda. The lodge's oaken door was massive, and he wondered how many shekels it had cost the management. After a fruitless search for a bell or buzzer, he discovered that the huge, antlered deer skull which hung from the door served as a knocker. Using both hands and much effort, he raised the skull and let it crash against the door. Soon, the door swung open, wide enough to allow a bearded, ruddy face to protrude.

"Is Gudrun in there? I'm her guest." He hurriedly wiped his streaming nose upon his coatsleeve. "Gudrun?" queried the ruddy face in a thick foreign accent. "Gudrun!"A woman's voice answered, followed by a peal of laughter.

"Some party," thought Izzey. "Wonder if I could turn them onto some smack. After all, business is pleasure."

"Come in," said Gudrun. "You will catch cold out there." She held the door open for him. Slowly he entered the smokey hall, his limbs stiff with cold. As he became warmer he warily looked about him. The interior of the lodge was enormous. Despite the great height, there was only one room and the smoke from large fires rose to vanish amid the blackened rafters far above. The floors were covered with rushes, and the revelers sat on benches beside trestle tables well laden with food and drink. Although Izzey thought the manager was stupid for switching off the electric lights, he could see by the flickering torchlight that the walls were decorated with spears, shields and hunting trophies. His panic subsided when he caught sight of the many long-haired 'freaks' who wore far-out clothes, some of which looked like animal skins. What a commune this was!

Still, there weren't enough blacks to make the scene swing. In fact, he saw not one. Moreover, the desultory outbursts of singing were nothing compared to a rock band which had obviously not yet made its appearance. Izzey felt dwarfed by most of the male members of the company, and by most of the females, for that matter, although they were barefoot while he still wore his platform shoes. The majority of the guests were blond, with a mere sprinkle of brunettes and redheads. None of them looked Jewish, so it appeared that he, Izzey Zilchstein, had invaded this lily-white bastion all on his lonesome. The Elders would be pleased with him, he thought.

"You have had nothing to eat or drink" said Gudrun, proffering a clay bowl brimming with a frothy, golden liquid. She wore a simple garment of white cloth, bound at the waist with a golden chain which supported an ornate sword and scabbard. The ensemble did full justice to her firm, lithe figure and revealed much of her healthy complexion. Forgetting his previous misadventure, he would have grasped the luscious goddess before him, but he needed both his hands to hold the heavy drinking bowl.

"Skol." Gudrun raised a horn goblet and poured out a libation upon the floor. The remainder she drank.

"Shalom," said Izzey, cautiously sipping the golden beverage which tasted of honey. "Hey, whose pad is this?"

"You will soon meet the host." Gudrun smiled. As if in answer, there came the ring of sword upon shield and the squall of brazen war trumpets. The door of the hall crashed open, and all stood silent in expectation.

"What happens now?" Izzey stood on tiptoes, trying to see over the shoulders of the towering assembly.

"Silence," hissed Gudrun. "The ceremony has begun." Into the hall marched a short-haired, well-muscled young man, naked but for the heavy sledgehammer which he carried easily in his right hand. The throng parted to make way for him, forming a broad aisle running the length of the hall. Izzey recognized him as the policeman who had rescued him the previous night. "Wait 'til I tell his Chief," chuckled Izzey. "He'll be only too glad to drop the charges." The hammer-bearer strode past the clad assembly with an air of dignity which no kingly robes could confer. At last he reached the end of the hall and turned to face the vast company. Gudrun unsheathed her sword and jabbed one of Izzey's well-padded buttocks. "Go now. It is your turn."

"Ow, hey, you can't..." With surprising strength she grasped his arm and twisted it behind his back, thus steering him up the aisle toward the squat stone altar and the stern-visaged hammer-bearer. Izzey was too dumbfounded to raise a last raucous protest as other maidens grasped his limbs and held him spread-eagled upon the cold stone surface of the altar. With merciful swiftness, the priest raised the sacred hammer and brought it crashing down upon the head of the speechless Israel, whose blood, bones and brains were scattered to the four winds in that instant. Raising the sacred hammer once more, the priest proclaimed,"THUS MAY THE CLANG OF THOR'S HAMMER AWAKEN YOUR WRATH, O GREAT ODIN, AND MAY YOU LEAD US ONWARD AGAINST THESE, THE DESTROYERS OF OUR RACE. ALL HAIL TO THEE, O MIGHTY ODIN!"

GODDESSES OF VALHALLA

There are a great many goddesses whose duty it is to serve in Valhalla, to bear in the drink and take care of the drinking-horns and whatever belongs to the table. They are named in Grimnismal, and are called Valkyries. Odin sends them to every field of battle, to make choice of those who are to be slain, and to sway the victory. Gudur, Rota, and the youngest of the Norns, Skuld, also ride forth to choose the slain and turn the combat. Jord (earth), the mother of Thor, and Rinda, the mother of Vali, are also reckoned amongst the goddesses. The first of the goddesses is Frigga, the second, Saga, the third, Eir, the fourth, Gefjon, the fifth, Fulla, the sixth, Freyja (who is ranked next to Frigga), the seventh, Sjofna, the eighth, Sofna, the ninth, Vora, the tenth, Syn, the eleventh, Hlina, the twelfth, Snotra, the thirteenth, Gna, the fourteenth, Sol, and the fifteenth, Bil.

ARYAN RITUAL MURDER?

We ask, did our ancestors practice ritual killing? Archeology presents undeniable evidence of such "ritual murders", by both Odinists and Druids. The questions remain: how were victims selected out, and is there ever justification for such killings? The ancient Semites practiced ritual murder of children and adults for their god or gods. Indeed, there are whispers that it continues into our own day, as referred to in The Awakening. They chose their victims on the basis of their innocence from sin, the idea being that the innocent blood of the offering washes away the sin of the person making the sacrifice. One example from the Bible tells of Abraham preparing to sacrifice his only child until an angel gets him to use a lamb instead. Carried further, in Judaeo-Christianity the sinless Christ is offered up for the sins of all. Compare this to Odin's sacrifice of Himself to Himself to gain wisdom which He can use in His struggle against evil. The runes He gains knowledge of are of direct benefit to the Aryan People. Odin made the choice for Himself. He was always in charge of His own fate. Our ancestors had totally different methods of selecting victims from Semites. The Druids executed condemned criminals under the authority of the Gods, as was the case in Odinism, where criminals were first hanged, then cast into bogs. There is not a whisper that a person is not responsible for his own actions and can murder a child to evade responsibility. As in The Awakening, active enemies of the folk-community were executed under the authority of the Gods. Clearly, "Izzey" is a violent anti-White fanatic and suffers his just deserts from the Hammer of Thor acting under the authority of Odin. Should such actions move beyond the pages of a fictional story? Odinists have not officially practiced ritual killing of human beings (homo sapiens) for centuries, but Aryan religiosity endures to our own day. Aryans in the American South have been practicing the traditional method of sacrifice in their traditional "lynching ceremony", which is the object of hysterical persecution by anti-White elements.

There seems to be one law for Loki, and one for Thor.

The People of Thule

by Lee Norris

I was thinking last night before I went to sleep—just what went wrong with the People of Thule? And the answer came in just three words: We got over-civilized.

Back in the days when we were striding along the rim of the world—(those were the days when the world was flat, you know) and threatening to push anybody off that got in our way, we never questioned our Destiny. Our Destiny was to rule, of course. Those miserable little beetles that scurried around under foot thought of nothing but collecting MONEY, disgusting creatures. They lived in a world completely foreign to us. Their methods were devious; their instincts were cruel.. Their laws were not our laws. The lusts behind their curling lips and mocking eyes were sly and obscene.

Oh yes, we people of Thule, we were individualists. We had our well defended castles, and we defied the outside world, and woe to him who dared to bridge that moat or lower that portcullis. We were handy with the mace, the battle axe and the saber. We preferred fighting to eating, though we indulged liberally in both. Money was useful to make war with, and therefore, the sneaking, sniveling, handrubbing little beetles served their purpose, though the money often had to be extracted by unorthodox means.

But we had two fatal qualities: curiosity and idealism. We itched to know what made things work and discovered that those firey bolts the gods hurled at us from the heavens were ELECTRICITY, useful in countless ways.

We couldn't resist exploring the unknown, so we became explorers as well as inventors. And with our drive, our courage, our ability to organize and rule, we became Masters of the whole known world. And at last the universe opened out to us and beckoned us into the infinite.

And as we ruled, we found that the creative gift was strong in us, not only in science and invention, but in the higher arts of a great civilization: painting, music, drama, literature and poetry.

And the beetles continued to burrow under our feet, and went their secret ways and made their secret plans.

We flourished. We grew rich. Our basic qualities of idealism, chivalry, tolerance, and fair play, expressed themselves in govemment and law, and for the first time in the history of mankind, the individual could reach his full potential regardless of who or what he was.

But our lives were changing rapidly. We had discovered the exhilaration of developing industries, flinging railroads across a continent, establishing trade routes and manufacturing the products of our fertile minds. Cities grew and flourished and claimed our young people who traded life on the farms and ranches for what they called the "real world". In this, too, we were expressing our inborn creative urge, the joy of taming nature, of turning her precious wealth into gadgets that made life easier. It was a frenzy of invention and development, in which wealth multiplied and MONEY became increasingly important.

But the beetles burrowed deeper and watched their ancient enemies with sly and knowing smiles. For they saw their prey weakening and they knew how easy it was to appeal to the baser instincts of man. They hated the People of Thule with a black and bitter passion, because they craved for themselves the possession of the very qualities that made those fair-haired, blue-eyed people what they were.

They also knew how to manipulate and control through the gold that they spent their time amassing and hoarding. And they said. "We will buy the things they read, the newspapers, magazines and books. They shall read nothing but our propaganda. We shall use the television to brainwash them into mental zombies. We will bribe the politicians and rulers to do our bidding. We will find other ways to convince those who resist. We will corrupt their government and judicial systems and produce financial chaos. We will foment revolutions and wars, all in the name of Democracy.

We will flood their schools with unteachables of the lesser breeds. We will poison their religion with doubt and false values.

We will encourage intermarriage with blacks, coloureds and alien races and produce a degenerate, mongrelized population, a slave people unable to think for themselves. Liberalism will become their ruling passion, not only of the masses but of the intelligentsia.

We will use their so-called virtues of tolerance and fair play to cotribute to their own downfall. Our final triumph will be to herd them like cattle into the "protective custody" of a Totalitarian World Government, owned and controlled by us."

And so it transpired. We, the People of Thule, woke up one day to realize that something was very wrong, that we were prisoners in a debased system, economic slaves in our own country. We saw that our creative gifts had atrophied. Our music was discordant noise, our painting and sculpture the celebration of the ugly and our literature stank of pornography. And we, the People of Thule, saw clearly at last that those whose warnings we had not heeded, had been right. And we asked our God for forgiveness, and we rose in our wrath and smote those beetles. We stamped them into the ground, and used their carcasses for fertilizer, and thus we cleansed ourselves of them FOREVER.

And wouldn't it be wonderful if it could happen like that, my friends? ❑

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

THE NATIONAL OBSESSION

by

Brandon L. Hughes

Dr. Charles E. Weber's critical and discerning review in the September, 1996 issue of Liberty Bell of yet another piece of foul-smelling refuse churned out by our enemies in the promotion of their most lucrative scam reminds us of how vigilant we must be in protecting, as he says, our "intellectually immature and defenseless children" against the rape of their minds by media propagandists and "educators." One looks at Goldhagen's Hitler's Willing Executioners only to wonder which is the greater effrontery—the author's, in yet again imposing on the sentimentality and gullibility of the reading public, or the publisher's, for expecting a reader to shell out thirty bucks for the privilege. Many readers of this magazine will remember that in the spring of 1990 a couple living in a suburb north of Chicago briefly attained a national notoriety when they enraged the Jews by challenging their most profitable fairy-tale. It seemed to me at the time that some recognition was owed to two singularly astute and courageous people before their story was displaced by news of lesser importance and subsequently forgotten.

Accordingly, on the seventh of May of that year, I wrote and mailed to one of the local newspapers in the town where I live a very long letter which I had reason to believe might (if not edited for length) be published in its entirety. My tentative optimism on that point was based on other letters of equal or greater length—some by me, some by readers vehemently hostile to my views—having been printed in that paper, intact, over the preceding twenty years.

The editor, then new to the job, had made a great show of soliciting "reader [sic] participation" and "diversity of opinion"—not that I had entertained any illusions about either phrase being applicable to people like myself!

My letter, needless to say, was not published. Newspapers, large and small, live or die by their acquisition or loss of advertising revenues, so there was really no occasion for bitterness over what may have been a decision based strictly on pragmatic, rather than ideological, considerations.

The piece, cluttered by circumlocutions that would have been unnecessary and out-of-place in a magazine such as this one, neverthess retains, I think, a certain timeliness. In the six years that have passed since then, our enemies have in no degree moderated their self-righteous arrogance in demanding that the lower races (most especially ours) accept their Holohoax as an act of faith. And in any case, readers of Liberty Bell who wish to attempt something of the sort in their own communities may be forewarned as to what to expect from our "free" press. It is my earnest wish that they may succeed where I did not.

The text of the letter follows, unchanged except for the addition of one paragraph and the correction of a few minor awkwardnesses. (Any that remain are due to my perversity.) The notes were added for this issue of Liberty Bell.

* * * * *

RECENTLY A SUBURBAN couple made the news services, by which they were invested with a notoriety usually reserved for big-time drug dealers and international terrorists. But Mr. and Mrs. Safet Sarich of Winnetka have dynamited no buildings and trafficked in no heroin. What, then, is the nature of their offense?

It is that they have withdrawn their 13-year-old daughter Sanya from her 8th-grade class at the Washburn Public School because they object to the program of "Holocaust education" required by a state law signed last year by Gov. Thomson. That law, passed when legislators capitulated to a relentless campaign by heavily-financed and powerful pressure-groups, became effective at the beginning of this year. It requires that all public schools in Illinois teach about, in the language of the bill itself, "the Nazi atrocities of 1933 to 1945 ... the Holocaust, during which 6 million Jews and millions of non-Jews were exterminated."

Mr. Sarich has publicly challenged that official version of recent history, contending that most accounts of the "Holocaust" are "false, with gross exaggerations and distortions." Expressing these views in a letter widely distributed in the area in which he lives, Mr. Sarich has invited upon himself an obloquy that earlier generations of Americans, living in a more spacious and tolerant age, might have thought impossible. His example suggests that disputing the "Holocaust" in 1990 may be as hazardous an undertaking as was questioning Tridentine theology in 1590.

Certainly, any person who looks at the question objectivly must be given pause by three questions, questions which the promoters of the Holocaust doctrine have consistently refused to answer, and indeed, gone to frantic lengths to prevent even being discussed in public.

(1) How could the Germans, even had they intended and deliberately planned to do so, have exterminated six million Jews when the German National Socialist government, at the height of its power, never controlled an area whose Jewish population (as impartial records clearly indicate) exceeded four million? And how many of those four million could the Germans have killed when thousands of "Holocaust survivors" from every corner of German-occupied Europe made it out of the Continent and into the United States, Canada, Australia, South Africa, and other countries after the war?

I was once acquainted with a man who claimed to have fought in the Tet Offensive in Viet Nam in 1968, until, to his well-deserved humiliation, it was shown by veterans who had served "in country" that this man had never been to Viet Nam and indeed had never even been in the Army.

Such things happen in every war. The point is that if there are, for example, "Auschwitz survivors" who were never in Auschwitz, they are simply liars, and their testimony on any aspect of the war is worthless. If, however, they are telling the truth about their captivity, their very existence is proof that the Germans did not kill them.

Sadly, there are those who, if pressed, would claim that there is no practical distinction between six million and four million when it comes to genocide (it might make a difference to two of the six million!), but that is only because of the emotional reflex implanted in them by generations of propaganda, a reflex, paralyzing their powers of reasoning, that is excited by the mere utterance of that highly inflammatory word. That brings us to the next question.

(2) How could the Germans, with their reputation for ruthless efficiency, organization, and thoroughness have, if genocide was their aim, allowed all those other Jews to escape to the United States and elsewhere to bear witness against them years later? Suppose the German government had settled upon a strictly limited and attainable objective—not making all of Europe Judenfrei, but merely elminating all the Jews within, say, a 20-mile radius of Auschwitz. If such was the case, then they failed even here, and indeed could not even dispose of all the prisoners brought to Auschwitz itself, for the putative purpose of being killed. Otherwise, whence came the parade of "survivors?" With all the advantages of mechanized transport, communications, and modern military organization, the Germans were far less efficient (if the story is to be credited) than a band of ancient Israelites, armed with the most primitive weapons, in their campaign of genocide against the inhabitants of the city of Ai. (See Joshua VIII, 20-29.) How could Germans, or men of any nationality, have been at the same time such calculating killers and such bungling incompetents? Seen in this light, the "six million" figure begins to diminish like a drop of water on a red-hot skillet.

(3) How could the Germans, as a matter of practical possibility, have killed any substantial number of Jews with cyanide?

As is well known to every student of chemistry, when cyanide gas (i.e., hydrocyanic acid vapor) comes in contact with materials such as brick or concrete, especially in heavy and repeated applications, it leaves a solid and visible residue whose composition can be positively identified by a simple chemical test. Yet repeated examinations, by Allied forensics experts, of scrapings taken from the interior walls of the "death chambers" in Auschwitz and other camps found no such residue. Are we to believe that the Germans, desperately short of manpower during most of the War, and especially so during its final months, assigned troops to the task of scrubbing down the walls and ceiling of each gas chamber after each load of Jews was disposed of?—and, moreover, that they did so with such microscopic thoroughness that not a discernible trace of the poisonous residue remained?

The only hard evidence for the use of Zyklon-B (a commercial cyanide-based pesticide sold widely outside Germany before the war) is that pertaining to the disinfection of prisoners' clothing in small, hermetically sealed chambers barely high enough for an adult to stand in. This was a procedure necessary to destroy the typhus-bearing body lice that were a deadly menace to Jews and Germans alike, and has never been in dispute. The pretense, however, that the Germans used shower-rooms (Brausebäder) in Dachau to administer cyanide gas instead of water is no longer seriously maintained even by the Holocaust-theorists themselves, and the same claim applied to Auschwitz begins to unravel on close inspection. The companion claim, in the 42-volume report of the International Military Tribunal, that Germans were gassing and cremating Jews at Auschwitz at the rate of over 100 per hour, every hour of every day, for a period of two years (April 1942-April 1944) is in terms of its physical and logistical impossibility, simply preposterous. (Ask one of our local funeral directors how long on the average it takes to reduce just one human body in a modern crematorium, greatly superior in design to those of fifty years ago.) Maintaining such a canard in the face of common sense and all available evidence is no less extravagant and irresponsible than claiming that no Jew was ever killed by a German during the war.

These are questions that any honest student of history can legitimately raise and seek to resolve—and should, for in no other way can the truth be known. And there are others.

But let us not be side-tracked: whether Mr. Sarich and his wife are right or wrong, whether the "Holocaust" in fact did or did not happen, is of only marginal interest here. The real question is, Why should there be such a law, as is now on the Illinois statute books, at all?

Again, it seems to me that any reasonable person—any person with a sense of proportion about things—would have to allow that even if six million Jews were exterminated, according, in every particular, to the generally accepted and now officially mandated version of the story as declaimed by Lucy M. Dawidowicz, William L. Shirer, and other writers, it still would not be The Central Event Of All History. It still would not be something intrinsically more important, and more worthy to be remembered, than the fall of the Roman Empire, the accession of Charlemagne, or the discovery of America.

Why is it, then, that the "Holocaust" is the only event (real or alleged) in the history of the world to be made the subject of legislation like that signed by our estimable Governor? Why the grim and censorious determination to impose conformity of belief on this one point? There is no law specifically requiring instruction about the American Revolution, the Civil War, or even World War II taken as a whole. By the reasoning of the legislators who voted for this bill, and of those to whose ceaseless agitations they finally submitted, children must know about the "Holocaust," but it is perfectly acceptable for them to be ignorant of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor and the dropping of the two atomic bombs. They must know everything that is known or alleged about

Anne Frank and Raoul Wallenberg, while the names of MacArthur, Patton, and Halsey evoke only a vacant stare.

If the mere weight of numbers is to be the criterion, why should the endlessly repeated and thoughtlessly accepted figure of six million focus public attention on one event alone? Why is there no law requiring instruction about the 10-12 million Russian kullaks killed by Stalin during his climb to absolute power in the 1930s? And what of the vast number of Chinese peasants—conservatively estimated at 12-15 million—exterminated by Mao Tse-Tung during the consolidation of his power, at approximately the same time? Are we being told by the Holocausters,* through their endless sloganeering (e.g., "NEVER AGAIN!" and "NEVER FORGET!" that some victims of war and Weltpolitik are more worthy of remembrance than others? Doesn't all this strike anyone as just a little strange?

If one could find an observer who could approach this question without the burden of inculcated guilt, with per-

* This is a coinage that I would have preferred to avoid. But white Americans have been so conditioned to cower and cringe in what used to be their country that very few can bear to utter, or even hear, the word "Jew" except in the context of what amounts to an Homeric epithet: "righteous Jews," "persecuted Jews," etc. They cannot, because of decades of emotional intimidation and sanctified lies, consider Jews objectively, as they might contemplate Indians or Eskimos. Add to that the fact that the Christians, still a numerical majority among Aryans (however you may wish to define the term "Christian" in terms of doctrine and practice), have whatever belief in a personal immortality that they still retain inextricably tied into their belief in the Jews' unique sanctity and the divine inspiration of both Testaments of the Jewish Bible. Such are the rewards of the Jewish heresy that has plagued the Western world ever since the Edict of Milan. My other excuse for resorting to this neologism is that it has at least the merit of suggesting to the more discerning among the readers of a small-town weekly newspaper what every reader of Liberty Bell has long known: that the Jewish fable could never have gained even a pretense of credibility but for the ignorant or corrupt Aryans, in positions of influence, who endorsed it.

fect objectivity and detachment, de novo—such a person would probably have to be from another planet, but let us for the sake of argument suppose it to be possible—he would surely have his suspicions aroused by the sheer frenzy of it all; by the mad determination to make people believe in the "Holocaust," and to suppress and punish unbelief.

The Holocaust thesis, even if historically accurate, is not something self-evidently true, like the laws of logical inference or the axioms of geometry. Nor is it an excuse for indulgence in primal emotions. If we are to be rational about it (those of us who still care to be), we must understand that what we are talking about here is an assertion of something that arguably happened in the past. It is therefore not the subject-matter for catechetical recitation, but an historical question—a question of the same kind, essentially, as whether the Mycenaeans were really Greeks or whether the Holy Roman Empire might have survived longer if the Frankish and Germanic tribes that inherited the rotted Roman Empire of the West had observed a law of primogeniture. If the Holocaust thesis is not simply religious doctrine to be accepted on faith, or a kind of lurid fiction to be accepted conditionally (at least for the duration of the voluntary suspension of disbelief that is required of the reader of any species of imaginative literature), then it must stand or fall by the canons of historical evidence—and that means all available and relevant evidence, and not just those carefully selected parts of the evidence promoted by the Holocausters.

At the present time, to be sure, the great majority of professional historians and other scholars—a majority I would estimate at over 95%—accept the Holocaust doctrine without dissent or significant qualification. More accurately, we should say—since we can never know with certainty what another person is actually thinking—that if any among the 95% have reservations about the Holocaust thesis they have not, perhaps from a prudent regard for their reputations and careers, expressed those doubts publicly.*

What about the other 3% or 4% or 5%?

If making judgments about matters of fact were somehow a democratic process, the issue would be settled. The 95% would have outvoted the 5%, and that would be the end of it. Unfortunately, it is not as simple as that. There was a time when 95% of practicing physicians thought it beneath their dignity to wash their hands after examining cadavers, thus becoming disease vectors to the patients they subsequently treated. Questions of fact are not decided by majority rule.

There is today a large body of evidence (call it A) which points to the conclusion that the Holocaust happened as is generally believed. There is another body of evidence, much smaller but steadily growing (B), which suggests that (A) is in need of critical re-evaluation. It is by no means certain that (A), in the light of (B), would be sufficient to convict a criminal defendant in an American courtroom. And that is precisely what the Holocausters wish to keep ouside the bounds of public discourse. It is their position—a position flaunted with an obscene arrogance—that no one may be allowed to believe that (B) exists; and that those who advocate a vigorous and uninhibited discussion of (B) should be effectively silenced, if not by calumny, then by legislation; and if not by legislation, then—as in the case of a professor in a French university who was beaten nearly to death by a gang of thugs who invaded his classroom after he had suggested that the "Holocaust" should be considered an open question—by violence.*

* Here exercise your imagination for a moment. Suppose that The Hoax of The Twentieth Century were not a book published twenty years ago by a tenured professor of chemistry in a major university, but the manuscript of a doctoral thesis presented today by a graduate student in history, at the same or another or university. What do you think would be the response of that student's dissertation committee? (That, by the way, was a rhetorical question!) A proto-scholar seeking his academic union card, or an instructor or associate professor pursuing tenure and a modest financial security for his family, would be committing career suicide by undertaking a dispassionate examination of the Jews' embalmed and perfumed orthodoxy.

It is not my purpose here to argue either side of this de-

* Now you see, with unmistakeable clarity, the real purpose behind the so-called Genocide Convention, which would never have been ratified by the United States but for the capitulation of kosher "conservatives." The journalistic leader of that despicable pack, James J. Kilpatrick, thought simply hilarious the suggestion that the Convention might be used to silence or punish historical revisionists.
But consider two points: First, the federal courts have consistently held that treaty law supersedes statutory law and even the Constitution itself. The famous Bricker Amendment, proposed in the 1950s, would have redressed that problem, but it failed, being effectively sabotaged by the Eisenhower gang. Had it passed the Senate, there would have been a good chance for its ratification by the requisite number of States. The very fact that the text of a proposed treaty would have been subject to judicial review, on even a limited basis, would have gone a long way toward discouraging those "entangling alliances" against which George Washington warned in his Farewell Address. And second, the rubric of "genocide" subsumes "group defamation" or "hate speech" as applied, according to the text of the Convention itself, to any identifiable ethnic group or any of its members. Thus, notwithstanding the laughing Kilpatrick, if you were to make publicly, and especially in print, even so innocuous and unexceptionable a statement as that Jake "Greasy Thumb" Guzik, the Jewish financial genius behind the Capone mob, was not an honest man, you could, depending on the whim of your masters, be deported and hauled before an international tribunal, convicted, and thrown into a foreign prison with the vilest scum that your jailers could find to be your cellmates. Your case might be initiated by the same Jew, a man named Sher, who at one time ran, and may still be running, the "Justice" Department's Office of Special Investigations (and how, by the way, do you like that for a bureaucratic euphemism?), in which capacity he was responsible for sending a number of elderly ethnic European men, who were American citizens and honest and productive members of society, to trial and imprisonment in Occupied Palestine, on the statements of elderly Jews, a number of them senile and nearly blind, who accused those Americans of having participated, decades before, in "genocide."

bate on its merits. I merely observe that despite the Holocausters' gratuitous and self-serving claim that any position other than their own is "unthinkable" or "indecent" or somehow beyond the bounds of discussion, a disagreement does exist. And anyone wishing to pursue the question, out of his own curiosity, can refer to a large and growing body of publicly accessible information, most (though certainly not all) of it fully supportive of the Holocaust thesis.

As to which side has the better argument, I should wish only that each interested person examine the evidence and make up his own mind, not accept without question the position of whichever faction happens to be making the most noise.

But the troubling question with which we began remains: Why are the Holocausters so determined to elevate their view to the status of social dogma? What is it that they are so afraid of?

Is it their fear that growing debate as to the accuracy of the Holocaust doctrine might lead to a reconsideration of the wisdom and propriety of U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East?—a policy so preposterously one-sided that any border quarrel between obscure Moslem tribes or factions, even if it be fought with camels and breech-loaders, threatens to ignite World War III because it somehow "menaces

And one final observation: nations of men retaining any sense of honor or self-respect do not feel obligated to sign documents affirming that they observe the basic decencies of civilization; their actions speak for them, and no ceremonial or symbolic act can change what they have done. Those that do make such whining protestations, ostensibly as a "moral gesture," are justly suspect of hypocrisy and moral cowardice. How would Mr. Kilpatrick react if someone asked him to sign a declaration that he does not molest children? Is there anyone innocent enough to imagine that any scrap of paper would have restrained Pol Pot or Idi Amin—or for that matter, Franklin Roosevelt—from their lust for massacre?
Are you old enough, dear reader, to remember when there used to be, in the territory within its national boundaries, an America? And can you think, now, of any depth of self-debasement and degradation to which white Americans have not sunk?

Israel"?[1] Is it that Americans are at last getting nauseated at the endless parade of books and magazine articles and mini-series and "specials" and "documentaries" and (pinnacle of oxymoronity) "docu-dramas" that promote the "Holocaust," not only as though it were Indisputable and Certain Truth, but as though it were, absolutely and without qualification, the most important thing in the world?[2]

1. Here we are in the midst of another Presidential election campaign and the incumbent who—due to the ineptitude, evasiveness, and all but capitulation-in-advance of his opponent—will almost certainly win anyway, decides to pad his lead. So the pot-smoking draft-dodger dons his Commander-in-Chief hat and throws some Cruise missiles at Sadam Hussein for "intervening" (within the territory of his own country, if you please!) on behalf of one faction of Kurds and against another, an action much less significant than the kind of thing that this country has done countless times, from the gunboat diplomacy in support of Christian missionaries in China in the 1920s to every significant military intervention in Latin America, including the clandestine operation to depose Batista in Cuba in 1959 and replace him with Castro, and the subsequent betrayal of the anti-Communist Cubans at the Bay of Pigs three years later. Sadam, at least, whatever you may wish to think of him, did not commit treason against his country, as did Eisenhower and his State Department when they repeatedly lied to the American people in promoting Castro, knowing full well that he had been a communist all his adult life and intended to make his island into a base for Soviet strategic nuclear weapons to be aimed and eventually deployed against the United States. Neither did Sadam provide our self-righteous and hate-crazed "leaders" with a casus belli by attacking American nationals or destroying American property, nor did he involve himself with signatories to any treaties which obligated this country.

But what of that? President Bubba, as he is called by some of his admirers, did provide a fillip to arouse an electorate somnolent from an excruciatingly dull convention season, in which both parties (i.e., both factions of the one Ruling Party) wallowed in bathos while sedulously avoiding anything resembling a serious discussion of legitimate issues. Nancy Reagan and Christopher Reeve may have left no dry eye in either house, but when it was all over, even "liberal" journalists could not decide what the conventions had been about, or where either party stood on any major issue. After eight nights of prime-time touchie-feelie, the prospect, in TV-land, of killing some more Iraqis must have seemed a relief long past due. And weren't those missiles lovely in the night sky (between commercials), soaring over the sea on columns of fire?

Now it has just been announced (14 September 1996) that 5,000 more American troops are to be sent to Kuwait in what amounts to yet another unprovoked act of war against Iraq. Behold the forthcoming Billy-and-Bobby shows that will be dignified as "debates," and you will probably see Dole, who served honorably in World War II and certainly knows better, give a whole new wealth of meaning to the phrase "me-too Republican," chanting, as he has done already, the usual litany of cliches about "politics ending at the water's edge" and "standing behind our troops and our President," etc., etc., ad nauseam.

Might one dare to suggest that the best way to "support our troops" is to prevent them from being unnecessarily killed in an exercise in global meddling? And as to supporting "our" President, one recalls the dictum of Theodore Roosevelt, pronounced when he held that office: "Patriotism means standing by the country. It does not mean standing by the President, or by any other elected official, save to the extent that he stands by the country." Most of us remember the story (even before Hollywood got ahold of it) of how quickly and decisively the earlier Roosevelt responded when an American woman and her small children were kidnapped by a Berber chieftain. But I feel confident that he would have supported the idea that in the absence of provocation the only sane policy for this country to pursue, in the Middle East or anywhere else, is one of strict neutrality, and that the only nation whose security should concern us is our own. That is how our citizens (except for a small, unassimilable minority whose loyalties lay elsewhere) used to feel when they still had a country of their own. One wonders how many Americans will be sent home to their families this time, gift-wrapped in steel, just in time for the holidays. That's a hell of a price to pay for any man's vanity and ambition. If I could somehow be persuaded that there were a God, I would credit Him with having created politicians for the purpose of giving cockroaches something to look down on.

2. The very day I finished the manuscript of this article—the early morning of Friday, 13 September 1996—the Discovery Channel presented a program called "The Horror of the Camps," built around the same faded newsreels and carefully rehearsed "survivor testimony" that we have been subjected to times beyond numbering. Behold yet another electric prod shoved into the rear-ends of the Aryan cattle.

Is it that many feel that after 45 years the war is finally over, that its demons should be exorcised and laid to rest, and that there should be an end to the constant incitement of guilt and hatred against Germans and other ethnic Europeans who fought against the Soviet? Is it a recognition that the imputation of Good and Evil made at the War's end were the judgments of the victors upon the vanquished, and therefore suspect of hypocrisy and self-justification? More particularly, is it that ordinary people may have begun to realize that the British and Americans, having perpetrated the mass-cremations of the living in Hamburg, Dresden, and Hiroshima, are not themselves in a very secure position from which to accuse other nations of war-crimes?

Can it be that Americans (who have no great reputation for such things) have—at least the more perceptive among them—at last begun to develop the intellectual maturity that alone makes a sense of history possible?—That they have finally begun to outgrow the childish mentality that sees everything in terms of wartime propaganda and cartoon-characters from a melodrama? Or is it that they simply resent the Holocausters' insufferable priggishness and monomania, and wish that the impassioned crusaders would have the kindness—just for a moment—to shut up and give everyone's ears a rest?

Or is it the fear of the Holocaust-industry—the greatest of all its fears—that many Americans sense that the most compelling argument against the Holocaust thesis, more cogent than population statistics or coerced confessions or the chemistry of Zyklon-B, is simply the attitude and behavior of the Holocausters themselves?

The great movements of history are seldom understood—are at best dimly perceived—by the generations of men and women who live through them. That was true of the Reformation and the Thirty Years' War, and it is no less true of the middle third of the 20th century.

For many years, well into the 20th century, Americans were all but incapable of exchanging views on their Civil War, so intense were the sectional hatreds fostered by that war. To be sure, the animosities of one side were a little easier to understand: the North did not suffer military occupation and "reconstruction" by the Confederacy. It took decades before calmer heads began to prevail, and zealots were persuaded, in a phrase widely used at the time, to "stop waving the bloody shirt." Even now we are just barely getting to the point of being able to discuss that national tragedy with some measure of decorum, and that not without occasional lapses into partisan sloganeering.

One sees, contemplating the past, that only in the long perspective of time do the broadest outlines of what really happened begin to emerge, outlines of tableaux rich in grandeur and absurdity, redolent of heroism and horror, and fraught with complexity and contrariety. The least we owe our children is the honesty of admitting that things are often more than what they seem at the moment, and that we are far indeed from having all the answers.

All that, of course, is lost upon the Holocausters. Common sense, moderation, and restraint are not in their natures.

On the contrary, there is no limit to their brazen effrontery. Now they want to raise money for the erection of a "Holocaust Museum" in Washington, D.C., which is to be situated 300 yards from the Washington Monument and is to cost $147 million, a sum that is to be harried or wheedled or shamed out of the American people, so that the Holocausters can have their hatreds institutionalized. The sheer vulgarity of such a project, should it be realized, defies belief.

With what, I wonder, are we to be regaled this time? More films and photographs like the ones we have already seen countless times before? More crematoria and piles of corpses? Exhibits of skulls and jawbones with teeth shattered for the extraction of gold fillings? Display cases filled with bars of human-fat soap and human-skin lampshades?

That is not history. That is pure Hollywood, in its most lurid and repulsive aspect. The essential mentality being incited is that of people who stop and gape at automobile accidents. However fashionable such exercises in show-biz might be in other contexts, for such a thing to be built on American soil, within a short walk of the monument to the greatest of our Presidents, strikes me as nothing less than an obscenity.

Compare that with the quiet and sobering dignity of the memorial to the U.S.S. Arizona and her crew at Pearl Harbor. Those men, victims as much of treachery and treason as of Japanese bombs, would have been worthy of the epitaph that Simonides composed for Leonidas and his band of 300 (also victims of treason, by the way) who died at thermopylae in 480 B.C.:

O wandering stranger
Who come this way,
Go and tell the Spartans
That we lie here,
Obeying their orders.

Of the heroes of the Arizona there are no constant reminders in the media. They were merely Americans.

Do Americans need all the artifices of Hollywood to acquire an historical consciousness? Do they need blatant, in-your-face exhibitions of rotting corpses and membra disiecta to understand the past? On sober reflection, they do not.

When a man is on trial for murder, his jurors hear evidence in the form of testimony by police officers and other witnesses as to the fact of the victim's death, and by the pathologist or medical examiner as to the cause of death. They hear testimony from other witnesses to establish that the defendant had motive and opportunity to commit the crime. They may, at the court's discretion, be allowed to see and even individually examine items of physical evidence, in conformity with established rules and precedents. But they do not under ordinary circumstances see photographs of the decedent taken at the scene of the crime, or at the autopsy, because that would be considered inflammatory and prejudicial, particularly in the case of a crime of uncommonly heinous and sensational character. The reason for this is the desire of fair-minded and judicious persons to provide at least some assurance that those given the power of life-or-death decisions over others are guided by reason rather than passion. Lynch mobs do not observe the rules of evidence.

The distinction is largely lost upon the TV-generation, which has been conditioned to respond to visual stimuli as does a trout to a fisherman's lure. Most of them do not understand, and many would not wish to understand, that the endless repetition of an accusation does not constitute proof that the accusation is true. Add to that the fact that credulity and the herd-mentality are innate in human beings, and scarcely affected by education (as witness the success of the grocery-store tabloids, with their front-page photographs of Satanic apparitions and three-headed babies), and you begin to see why standards for the weighing of evidence, whether in legal or scholarly contexts, are necessary and must be uncompromisingly defended. Without them truth would be lost altogether in the maelstrom of mass-hysteria, and we— for all our computers and big-screen TV sets and satellite links—would quickly revert to Merovingian darkness. It was not technology that ended the reign of superstition and fear in the thousand years after Rome fell, but the capacity of the human mind for rational thought.

In the later Middle Ages, when the phemonenon really got to be big business, reliquarians traveled across Europe bearing ornately ornamented boxes and cases containing dried-up fragments which they hawked to the locals as "the knuckle of St. Polycarp!" or "the ear of St. Anthony!" and which, for a farthing or its equivalent, they would allow a dumb-struck peasant to see and perhaps touch. The bits and pieces were in great demand, believed, as they were, to possess miraculous powers.

Indeed, the monks of his Dominican order piously hovered around the dying Thomas Aquinas in 1274, anxious to boil his body and thus extract the abundance of thaumaturgic relics that should come from so holy a man.

Sometimes, as the exhibitors moved from village to village, the knuckle looked as though it had been supplied by a local swineherd, and there were those among the viewers astute enough to count on their fingers and so to conclude that if the real St. Anthony had indeed borne all the ears attributed to him, he would have resembled no creature ever seen on earth.

It is from such as these, I think, that the curators of Holocaust exhibits and the like draw at least part of their inspiration.

Think of it: one hundred and forty-seven million dollars! Think what you might do with such a sum. To be sure, you might build, of your own pride, a new stadium for your favorite sports team; or for your own indulgence, a brothel of unmatched magnificence, a pleasure-dome to outdo that of Kubla Khan in Xanadu.

More seriously, you could build, even at today's costs, a fairly well-equipped small hospital or clinic. You could repair one or more of our most dangerously delapidated bridges, or rebuild several miles of decaying interstate highway. You could begin installing in airports that do not yet have them the Doppler radar systems for the detection of violent wind-shear, thereby reducing the risk of fatal crashes. You could endow several professorial chairs in the sciences and humanities in our State's colleges and universities. You could finance new avenues of research that might lead to a cure for cancer or AIDS. And for 2%-3% of that sum, you could raise a most impressive and worthy memorial to American war dead, whom the Holocausters seem to have forgotten altogether. You could do any number of worthwhile things.

But all these are the works of peace, of limited appeal to those still at war with an enemy vanquished long ago. None of them has for such persons even remotely the importance of keeping the Second World War—like the celebrated Energizer Bunny—going, and going, and going.

Two hundred years ago, Thomas Paine, that most eloquent, cantakerous, and quintessentially American of Revolutionary War-era writers, declared that the truth has no need of the "wretched protection" of laws and proscriptions. Only lies and myths, he said, need to be propped up by laws designed to punish those who question them. Where does that leave the Holocausters?

Either the Holocaust happened, as claimed, or it did not. If it did not, then all the promotions and televised melodramas ever produced or contemplated will not make it either true or believable. If it did happen, than all the skepticism and denial in the world will not alter the facts, and the Holocausters have nothing to fear from people like Safet and Ingeborg Sarich.

Those who defend or excuse laws like the one that Mr. and Mrs. Sarich are resisting evidently do not realize the extent to which they are undercutting their own cause: the more the "Holocaust" is rubbed into our noses and rammed down our throats; the more the frantically the Holocausters denounce as "Nazis" anyone who does not agree with them and their version of history; the more surely reasonable men and women will be driven to reject the whole rodomontade.

The notion that there are truths too holy to be questioned is perfectly in keeping with the spirit of the Spanish Inquisition and the witch-hunts of Cromwell's England. The idea that there should be an official version of history, to be promoted as an intellectual monopoly by official edict, while dissenting versions are suppressed by official sanction, is appropriate to the purges of Stalinist Russia and the prisoner-of-war camps of communist North Korea. Such things have no place in the United States of America.

In my judgment, Safet and Ingeborg Sarich were right to act as they did, and they merit our respect for their intellectual integrity and courage, whether we agree with their conclusions or not. If you would deny to ordinary citizens the right to challenge official orthodoxy, you deny the ethical basis of the Bill of Rights and the whole concept of intellectual freedom.

Sixty-five years ago a law in Tennessee, made notorious by the Scopes "Monkey" Trial, forbade the teaching of biological evolution in the public schools of that State, and required that Biblical creationism, and only that doctrine, be taught instead. Whatever the merits of the evolutionists' and creationists' respective cases, the futilty and absurdity of that law became apparent long before the trial was over. And the law itself became such an embarrassment, and made the State of Tennessee such a butt of ridicule, that its legislature finally had to repeal it.

Questions of historical and scientific fact are not decided in courtrooms or legislative halls. They never have been and they never will be. Such questions can be resolved only by competent investigators, quietly working in their libraries and laboratories, in an atmosphere of intellectual freedom and uninhibited inquiry—and even then only imperfectly and provisionally, subject always to revision in the light of new evidence.

I would abhor living in a society in which my own viewpoint on some controversy—whatever it might be—was the only one permissible. Can the Holocausters say the same? They, on their own declaration, believe in freedom of expression only for themselves. On the plain evidence of their own rhetoric, they invite the suspicion that they have something to hide.

This is a case—in Kierkegaard's belligerent phrase—of "either/or." Either you believe in the values of free inquiry and intellectual integrity or you don't. But if you don't, if you maintain that public schools should be used as instruments of indoctrination in political "correctness" instead of education, then expect no sympathy when it comes your turn for a little Soviet-style "political re-education."

As to the General Assembly and the Governor, they may have passed, and he may have signed, the law in question. But I am not aware of anyone appointing them Custodians of Truth or moral preceptors, superior in mind and conscience to a growing number of intelligent and earnest men and women who find that law an abomination. Public officials are, in theory at least, elected to uphold the rights of citizens, not undermine those rights in pursuit of an extrinsic agenda of their own. Deciding issues of historical interpretation is within neither their competence nor the mandate of their offices. How dare any mere politician presume to tell us what we must think and how we must feel about the "Holocaust" or anything else?

The Holocausters and the intellectual prostitutes under their control should be advised that there are still Americans who understand the difference between education and menticidal indoctrination. I believe that any American, even a schoolgirl like Sanya Sarich, has a right to make up his or her own mind about this or any other controversy, without being intimidated into an "acceptable" or "correct" point of view. Anyone who would deny that right to the least of our citizens merely marks himself the relic of an ignorant and barbaric past—a spiritual counterpart of the Dominicans who used confessions obtained under torture in their crusade against heresy in sixteenth-century Spain.

No one could feel more acutely than I do the moral imperative of teaching, by both precept and example, a decent respect for the past. No one believes more strongly than I do in the importance, especially for the young, of studying history, for though an imperfect one, it is the only guide to the future that we have. I am nevertheless equally convinced that it is foolish and dangerous to single out any one era, or movement, or event, and make of it a fetish and a national obsession.

We can no longer afford the luxury of having our national priorities set by—or of acknowledging as "leaders"—those who live only for the old hatreds that fester within them. Programs of "Holocaust education" and the like are not history, and they are not in any sense education. They are examples of compulsory political indoctrination based on an inculcated demonology. They establish a legal precedent for the intimidation and progressive enslavement of the American mind. They are pernicious, dangerous, and un-American.

In the fairy-tales written for children, the hero and heroine (e.g., Hansel and Gretel) are invariably the personification of pristine innocence, while the villain (the wicked stepmother) is a monster beyond redemption, the very embodiment of praeternatural evil.

But the real world is not like that, and no one out of diapers has an excuse for pretending that the hyperbole of wartime propaganda, on both sides, was anything more than just that. It is true that individual culpability varies from case to case; it is no less true that no nation entered the Second World War—and no nation left it—with entirely clean hands. If there is any one lesson of the past that stands out with sobering clarity, it is that the affectation of righteousness by any one nation, and that nation's imputation of collective and trans-generational guilt to other nations—these are the sperm and egg of future war. (Such hypocritical moral posturing on the part of Woodrow Wilson and the other architects of the Treaty of Versailles at the end of the First World War merely set the stage for, and guaranteed that there would be, a Second.) And war—as is indicated by every chronicle of war since Thucydides—is, like surgery, something to be undertaken only by reason of compelling necessity, and even then only with the most meticulous care, whether the weapons be triremes or Trident submarines.

One recalls a saying of Jesus, found, if I remember correctly, in the Gospel of Matthew: "Let the dead bury their dead." Let us by all means search the past, and from it learn all that we can. But let us not succumb to the folly of imagining that we are still living in it. Our own era, surely, has problems and difficulties to challenge the most ambitious.

To those who have made their "Holocaust" a growth industry, I would say this: Have you looked at a calendar lately? Do you imagine our own age to be so trouble-free that we can afford to think and act as though the legions of Napoleon—or the Waffen S.S.—were still marching across Europe?

Enough is enough. Give it a rest. The war is over. It is time to move on. ❑

Enemies on the Right:

The John Birch Society and Individualism

by William L. Pierce

Ever since the Oklahoma City bombing the nation's oldest extant anti-Communist organization, the John Birch Society, has been explaining to anyone who would listen that the bombing probably was done by leftists just to embarrass genuine patriots (such as the Birchers) and tar them with the brush of "extremism." Nothing agitates and humiliates the Birchers more than the blanket condemnation by the Clintonistas of right wingers as terrorists or potential terrorists.

The June 24 issue of the Birch Society's weekly magazine, The New American, contains one of the group's latest efforts to distance itself from "extremism." It is an article titled "Hard Left's 'Right-Wing' Kin" and was of special interest to me not only because it made a personal reference to me as a "neo-Nazi agitator" and hinted that I may actually be a secret Communist, but because it also reminded me of the time, more than 30 years ago, when I was briefly a member of the John Birch Society myself.

I was a young physics professor then, the war in Vietnam was raging, the Reds were busily recruiting a Fifth Column on university campuses in order to support their side of the war effort on the home front, and I was trying to make sense of it all. I had seen enough Communist propaganda—and especially enough of the greasy types behind that propaganda—to know that I didn't like Communism, and I turned to the Birch Society chapter in the little town where I was teaching. One thing I am grateful to the Birch Society for is that it directed me to a number of books on Communism, and from those books I learned enough about the nature and background of Communism that I knew I wanted to learn much more. That was really the beginning of my education: the start of my quest for understanding about history, race, politics, and, in fact, nearly everything except the physics and mathematics to which I had devoted myself until that time.

The half-dozen or so other members of the chapter seemed to be decent enough, if not very stimulating, fellows. The term that best characterizes them is "middle class." They were pretty much the sort one can meet in any American Legion hall, except they were a little more intense—especially when talking about the Communist Conspiracy, which was practically the only thing they talked about.

By the third meeting I attended, my studies on the subject had taken me well beyond the recommended books, and so in all innocence I blurted out: "You know, it's clear that the reason the Reds are getting such sympathetic press coverage is because so many of the media are owned or controlled by Jews. I think we ought to emphasize the connection between the Jewish founders of Communism and today's Jewish media bosses in our publications." One or two of the other members present murmured their assent, but the majority looked decidedly uncomfortable. The chapter coordinator piped up, "No, that's something we mustn't talk about." He pressed a copy of a pamphlet into my hand. "You take this home and read it."

The pamphlet, written by the founder and leader of the Birch Society himself, Robert Welch, was The Neutralizers. Its message was that the only enemy was "the Conspiracy," against which all real Americans, regardless of race, color, or creed, should be united. Anyone who raised the race issue or the Jewish issue was probably a Communist agent trying to divide anti-Communist Americans along racial or ethnic lines and thereby "neutralize" them. Certainly, there had been Jews involved in the Conspiracy, he wrote, but there also had been many non-Jews. Furthermore, some Jews were anti-Communists. Therefore, it was wrong to associate Jews with Communism.

After reading The Neutralizers I wrote a long letter to Welch, pointing out that my own studies had convinced me that Jews had much more than an incidental involvement in Communism. In fact, I told him, I was convinced that the real enemy of our people was the Jew, and that Communism was merely one of the weapons that the Jew was using against us at this time. Welch was not impressed by my evidence or my arguments, and the John Birch Society and I parted company.

Today, with Communism receding into irrelevance in most places, the great enemy of the Birch Society has been generalized to "collectivism." Communism is a form of collectivism, as is any brand of socialism—including, especially, National Socialism. Racism and anti-Semitism also are forms of collectivism. In general, any "ism" which asks the individual to give his loyalty to a collective entity or which deals with other individuals collectively is collectivism and, according to the Birchers, is the greatest of all evils. In their eyes collectivism is the preeminent distinguishing feature of the left, whereas individualism characterizes the right.

Political theory clearly is not the Birchers' forte. They claim to be patriots, but what could be more collectivist than patriotism?

In the June 24 issue of The New American a Birch writer rails at various "right-wing extremists," including former National Alliance member Robert Mathews:

> From The Turner Diaries Mathews borrowed the concept of an oath-bound subversive underground, organized in autonomous cells, whose mission is to foment a race war. His eager study of neo-Nazi literature led him to develop a passionate attachment to collectivism. In a 1981 speech before a neo-Nazi gathering Mathews urged: "Let us not only preach, let us live racial economics. In [our movement] we are not only eating, breathing, and sleeping, we are growing together as one mind and one body. . . . [W]e know not the meaning of 'mine,' it is 'ours,' our race, the totality of our people . . . ." While such sentiments are alien to the individualist right, they are quite compatible with the collectivist ethics of the left.

What the Birchers want to demonstrate is that the folks the media and the Clintonistas are denouncing as dangerous "right wing extremists" are not really rightists at all but really are leftists, not only because of their collectivism, but also because of their use of leftist ideas and tactics. Furthermore, the author of the article hints darkly, their real purpose may be to give the Birchers a bad name and implicate them in "extremism."

To support this point the article quotes from one of my American Dissident Voices broadcasts, in which I predict an escalating cycle of anti-government terrorism and government repression. Says The New American:

> What is truly remarkable about this observation from a supposed denizen [Pierce] of the "far right" is its similarity to the strategic vision offered by Marxist theoretician Carlos Marighella in his Mini-Manual for Urban Guerrillas. Terrorists attack innocent people and subvert public order, explained Marighella, in order to provoke governments "to intensify repression. The police roundups, house searches, arrests of innocent people make life unbearable. . . . Rejecting the 'so-called political solution,' the urban guerrilla must become more aggressive and violent, resorting without letup to sabotage, terrorism, expropriations, assaults, kidnappings, and executions, heightening the disastrous situation in which the government must act . . . ."
>
> Another interesting parallel between Pierce and Marighella is provided by the description Pierce offers of The Turner Diaries. Contradicting those who say the novel was a blueprint for the Oklahoma bombing, Pierce maintains that the "action in the novel is urban guerrilla warfare"—in other words, the type of subversive violence which Marighella and other Marxists have extolled. . . .
>
> Professor [Brent] Smith [of the University of Alabama, the Birchers' "expert" on terrorism] sees a remarkable kinship between the Marxist Marighella and the neo-Nazi Pierce: "The similarities between these guys are rather amazing. Both of these guys authored relatively obscure books which have influenced terrorists. Both of them have promoted urban guerrilla warfare conducted by subversives who use the cellular model of organization. They advocate the use of the same violent methods to achieve almost the same political goals."
> Is this a case of the "extreme right" mimicking successful initiatives of the "extreme left," or is there perhaps a deeper affinity involving conscious deception and agents provocateur? There are precedents which suggest that the latter alternative is a very realistic possibility.

In other words, my theoretical analysis of the dynamics of the interaction between revolutionaries and government in a modern, industrialized and urbanized society has some similarities to the analysis made by the Marxist Marighella. Therefore, Marighella and I must be in bed together. Furthermore, my real aim is to discredit respectable right wingers: i.e., the Birchers. Otherwise, why would I write books that cause the media and the government to say nasty things about right wingers?

Are the Birchers really that obtuse?

Probably not. The thing to understand about the Birchers is that they are characterized more by their social situation than by ideology. They are quintessentially bourgeois. There can be no doubt that they genuinely loathe and fear Communism, although their anti-Communism has different motivations from mine. They hate Communism because of its leveling tendency: because it is a threat to property and social status, not because it is a threat to the race.

Their generalization of their anti-Communism to anti-collectivism is flawed, as noted above, because it denies them the patriot status which they also claim. Certainly, many Birchers really are patriots—in the old-fashioned, geographical-nationalist sense, in which any featherless biped born north of the Rio Grande and south of the 49th parallel or duly "naturalized" is a fellow countryman—instead of doctrinaire individualists. But hyperindividualism—the doctrine that the individual owes no loyalty to any entity beyond himself and that he should judge every other person only as an individual and disregard group characteristics—does suit a great many Birchers, especially those in leading positions in the organization.

Thus, there are Birchers who really do prefer the company of wealthy Jews and Blacks to working-class Whites, despite the fact that the organization is virtually all White and Gentile—except for a handful of Jewish writers associated with Birch publications and two or three showcase Black conservatives. Most Birchers in arguing the race problem will offer the undeniable fact that there are decent, hard-working Black families with clean, well-behaved children who make better neighbors than some trashy, welfare Whites with undisciplined children, and they will consider that that fact settles the argument. In other words, their mental horizons simply do not extend beyond individualism: they do not concern themselves with the race-wide implications of issues, because only the personal, individual implications are meaningful to them.

It would be a mistake, however, to predict on the basis of ideology alone what position the Birch Society is likely to take

IS LADY LIBERTY DUE FOR A MAKEOVER?

In the 19th century a Jewess waxed poetic about her gentile host country. Today her people have conquered America, rendering the Statue of Liberty ripe for remodeling and her sonnet overripe for rewriting:

THE NEW COLOSSUS

CURRENT INSCRIPTION ON THE STATUE OF LIBERTY

by Emma Lazarus

Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,
With conquering limbs astride from land to land,
Here at our sea-washed, sunset gates shall stand
A mighty woman with a torch, whose flame
Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name
Mother of Exiles. From her beacon-hand
Glows world-wide welcome: her mild eyes command
The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.
"Keep, ancient lands, your storied pomp!" cries she
With silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore,
Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me,
I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

THE JEW COLOSSUS

SUGGESTED INSCRIPTION FOR THE NEW STATUE OF LIBERTY

by Judson Hammond

Not like that famed, French-made liberty dame,
With spiked diadem, sacred tablets and torch in hand,
Here at our Zoo/Jew City harbor, for all time shall stand
A female golem with a torah, whose power to inflame
The volatile, non-white hordes, and her name
Mother of Agitators. From her moneyed hands
Flows world-wide control; her beady eyes command Greater Gotham, the whole tri-state area to tame.
"Keep, O Europe, your palefaced folk!" cries she
With fleshy lips. "Give me your Asian, your blackamoor,
Your swarming mud people yearning to go on a spree,
The teeming third world folk of Kipling lore.
Send these, the AIDS-ridden, illiterates to me,
I spread wide my welcome mat like golden manure!"

on á given issue. The average Bircher will never take a position that is likely to get him drummed out of the country club in disgrace, regardless of ideological considerations. The Birchers customarily bend ideology to suit the needs of fashion.

For example, Birch ideology is as unequivocally pro-Second Amendment as it is anti-Communist, but the almost universal Jewish opposition to the Second Amendment makes the average Bircher no more leery of Jews generally than does the Jewish role in Communism. A couple of years ago a recruiting advertisement for the Birch Society in The New American headed "Stick to Your Guns!" was pointed out to me. The ad presented the Society as a supporter of the American's right to keep and bear arms, but instead of criticizing Congressman Schumer or Senator Feinstein for their support of anti-gun legislation it took a swing at Adolf Hitler with the statement: "Hitler required gun permits for all but Nazi officials. The German people were disarmed and were unable to oppose the Nazis."

I wrote to the editor of The New American to correct his error. Among others my letter contained the paragraph:

> The National Socialist government of Adolf Hitler required most German citizens to obtain a permit before purchasing a handgun. No permits were required for rifles or shotguns. The National Socialist law requiring a permit to purchase a handgun was actually an amelioration of a law which had been enacted by a predecessor government. Many German citizens took advantage of their right to purchase firearms and bought both handguns and long guns in substantial numbers during the Hitler period. The German people were not disarmed by Hitler's National Socialist government; they kept their personal firearms until they were disarmed by the democrat/Communist Allies in 1945.

I sent the editor a complimentary copy of my documentary book, Gun Control in Germany, 1928-1945, along with the letter. I received no acknowledgement in return, and the Birch Society continues to parrot its line about Hitler being a gun grabber. It's not really important to the Birchers that National Socialist Germany was militantly anti-Communist and supported its citizens' right to armed self-defense, or that there were fewer "collectivist" demands on the individual German under Hitler than there are on the individual American under Clinton: what is important to them is not suffering the fate of Marge Schott by saying anything nice about Hitler or anything critical of Jews.

More than that, the Birchers are so desperate to be "respectable" that they spend half their time distancing themselves from those "extremist" patriots who believe that the time has come to do more than write polite letters to Congress—which is why the Oklahoma City bombing has been such a nightmare for them. The Birchers really believe that it is possible to save America from "the Conspiracy" without jeopardizing either their bank accounts or their country club memberships, if those awful right-wing extremists—who are probably leftists in disguise trying to embarrass Birchers—would just go away.

Most of this mind-set is innate, an aspect of the stereotypical bourgeois personality. But just to be sure that the rank-and-file Birchers are thoroughly "neutralized," the Birch leadership has declared individualism and anti-collectivism to be the official ideology of the Society.

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Black (307 pp., nb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Gene CCR5:
Are You One of the One-Percenters?

by Winston Smith

Those with a religious approach to the world's racial problem have long contended that AIDS is God's way of taking action against large numbers of sexual perverts and non-Whites whose continued existence is incompatible with any kind of stable or livable society. Non-religious racial nationalists can plausibly make the same claim, except they substitute the word "Nature" for God. Whatever you want to call The Force, there have always been certain indications that AIDS is a highly selective disease. Let's be quite frank: with a statistically insignificant number of truly tragic, innocent exceptions like Ryan White and Kimberly Bergalis, AIDS doesn't kill off anybody we can't do without.

Now science has made a discovery which offers further food for thought. The Aaron Diamond AIDS Research Center in New York, ironically a Jewish-run institute, has discovered a new human gene they call CCR5. Although little understood as yet, CCR5 apparently has two interesting characteristics. It renders the fortunate possessor naturally immune to the HIV virus, and it is found only in people of Aryan racial descent. Not blacks. Not Asians. Apparently not even Jews, given coded references in the study to "persons of northern European heritage".

CCR5 is a key gene in the construction of the human immune system, and it is actually a mutated gene which does not produce a series of proteins which is the main "docking point" for the AIDS virus. The scientists estimate that about one in a hundred, or one percent of White people have two copies of this special gene in their makeup, one each from their mother and father. An additional twenty percent have one copy, making it possible for them to pass the immunity on to their children, presuming of course they marry other White people.

As most of you know, I generally turn flips to avoid discussing anything resembling theology, but this is simply too fascinating a development not to speculate on. A special mutated gene which will allow one percent of all Aryans to survive this growing plague which is felling our racial enemies the world over by the millions? The medical establishment is trying to cook the statistics, but it is now obvious that Africa, the Caribbean basin and the black population in this country are headed for an AIDS death rate in the 21st century so massive that it may check or even reverse their present explosive, exponential birth rate. In fact, unless they change their behavior (fat chance!) it could wipe them out altogether.

Where did this special gene come from? Why did it decide to mutate just now? Could it be that Someone Up There wants to make sure that at least a few Aryans survive the (small "h") holocaust to repopulate the earth as it should be populated?

I can live with that.

THE POLITICAL PROGRAM OF THE N.S.W.P.P.

Preamble

The National Socialist White People's Party is a political organization of Aryan men and women in the United States and Canada, of all ages and social backgrounds, who recognize that National Socialism is the only world view capable of advancing the vital interests of the Aryan (White) people in a world which is becoming increasingly non-White. The Party fights for the creation of a National Socialist Aryan Republic on the North American continent. Ultimately the Party struggles along with our many comrades the world over for the creation of what the philosopher Francis Parker Yockey called the Imperium, a world order of peace, stability, progress, and fulfillment based on the supremacy of the White race over the entire planet.

I. An Aryan Republic

We demand the establishment of an independent Aryan Republic on North American soil wherein only Aryans (White persons of non-Semitic, European descent) shall reside or hold citizenship. This Aryan Republic shall be a free and sovereign nation whose government and citizens shall exercise full control over their internal affairs, their economy, their culture, and their foreign relations.

II. National Socialism

The Aryan Republic shall be established under a new Constitution as a one-party National Socialist state. All laws, government, and state policy shall be based on the principles of National Socialism as outlined in the written and spoken works of the Führer Adolf Hitler and his political contemporaries, the spoken and written works of Commander George Lincoln Rockwell, the Cotswolds Declaration of 1962, and other historical expositional documents of the National Socialist world view.

III. Citizenship

No person who is not of unmixed, non-Semitic, Caucasian European ancestry shall reside anywhere within the Aryan Republic. Citizenship in the Aryan Republic is a privilege, not a right, but a privilege which shall be open to all the Aryan peoples of the world regardless of their country of origin. Citizenship shall not be bestowed at birth as is the case under liberal democracy, but shall be earned in adulthood by military service, by civic service to the state, or by demonstrated worthiness and value to the community.

IV. Rights In A Racial Community

Under the National Socialist state all inhabitants of the Aryan Republic, both citizen and non-citizen alike, shall enjoy the following rights from birth:

*The right to decent and livable housing, including a right to affordable home ownership;

*The right to keep and enjoy the fruits of their labors, free from excessive and confiscatory taxation;

*The right to gainful and productive employment, at a living wage sufficient to support self and family;

*The right to quality medical care, free of charge, for any and all disabilities or illnesses or health problems;

*The right to personal safety from criminal robbery, assault, and victimization;

*The right to live and raise children in a society free of dangerous drugs;

*The right to a clean and healthy environment;

*The right to hold and to practice any and all private religious beliefs which do not infringe on the rights of others, or which do not constitute political activity disguised as religion, as well as the right to raise and educate children in the religious beliefs of the parents;

*The right to keep and to bear arms, which is the immemorial sign of a free people;

*The right to an all-White cultural and spiritual environment free of the polluting and debilitating influence of distorted and primitive Judaic and negroid cultures.

V. The Family

The basic building block of the new National Socialist society must be the traditional, nuclear two-parent family, with the gainfully employed husband and father as its head and the home-making wife and mother as its heart. In order to reestablish and protect this ancient and vital social institution the following policies will be implemented by the Aryan Republic:

*Interest-free state mortgage loans will be made available to young married couples in order to allow them immediate home ownership. Balances owing on these loans will be reduced in 25% increments upon the birth of the first healthy child, 20% for the second healthy child, and 15% for all subsequent children, thus making an almost total repayment moratorium possible;

*Prenatal and pediatric medical care will be prioritized and universally available;

*Property taxes on family homes containing growing children will be abolished;

*Sexual perversions such as homosexuality, lesbianism, transvestism, feminism, pornography, paedophilia, and the traffick in materials related to all of the preceding will be outlawed;

*Abortions will be performed only on foot of a court order in cases where the unborn child is determined by medical science to be deformed or mentally retarded. The abortion of a healthy unborn Aryan child will be legally classified as premeditated homicide and dealt with accordingly.

VI. A New Educational System

The Aryan Republic will establish a comprehensive system of public education which will place strong emphasis on the physical and moral development of our young people; as well as on academic achievement and the training and disciplining of their intellects, and which will instill in every young Aryan an all-important body of racial values. The young people of our race are our future, and it is the duty of the state to see to their development in a thorough and well-rounded manner, recognizing that in the long run a healthy mind can dwell only in a healthy body, and that along with the education of the young must go rigorous physical and character training.

VII. An Honest and Efficient Economy

We believe that the proper function of the economy is to serve the needs of the people, not to make profits for the big bankers and the multi-national corporations. We also believe that actual production is the only basis for wealth, not speculation or the manipulation of money and pieces of paper. Accordingly, the Aryan Republic will create an honest and self-sufficient economic system based on the productive capacity of the Aryan worker, which will guarantee conditions of full employment and price stability. All banking and credit institutions will be placed under public control as well as all utilities and transportation facilities. Usury will be legally prohibited and all conglomerate holdings and accumulations of usurious profit will be confiscated and returned to the people through public institutions of community service and value. Basic industries will be operated under a system of profit sharing. A system of interest-free loans for farmers, small businessmen, and families will be instituted.

VIII.The Family Farm

A healthy and productive farming community is essential to the functioning of any rational and stable society. Accordingly, agriculture in the Aryan Republic will be based on the institution of the family farm rather than on the mass plantation-style agribusiness approach utilized by the present régime. The farmer's land and the fruits of his labor must remain inviolate; the real value of the family farm lies not only in the production of food, but in providing social, racial, and environmental stability while serving as a constant source of spiritual renewal for man in close rapport with Nature. The Aryan Republic will abolish all forms of agricultural commodity speculation and provide interest-free loans for farm equipment, fuel, seed and supplies, fodder, veterinary care for livestock, etc.

IX. Culture and Science

The Aryan Republic acknowledges that the state bears a special responsibility to protect and promote our racial cultural heritage, and to remove all alien influences from our art, our music, our literature, and our drama and cinema. This must be done in order that the innate artistic and cultural genius of our people can define and express itself without interference from the current Judæo-liberal forces which have seized cultural hegemony throughout the Western world. Ideas can uplift and ennoble, or they can poison and degrade the mind. It is the duty of the state to protect its citizens from anti-White hate propaganda and spiritual pollution just as much as it is to defend them against military aggression.

The Aryan Republic will encourage and invest in pure science, in research, and in the exploration of outer space as a matter of national policy. National Socialism understands that the benefits which will accrue from such pure scientific efforts will in the long run far outweigh any consideration of immediate cost.

X. Foreign Policy

The foreign policy of the Aryan Republic will be based solely on the long-term interests of the Aryan race worldwide. In order effectively to pursue such a policy, National Socialism will create and maintain the world's most powerful military force, fully capable of repelling any aggression from without such as that which destroyed the Third Reich, and capable as well of protecting the interests of our people abroad. It will be the mission of the Republic's foreign policy to serve as a friend and protective shield to all Aryan peoples of the world who may suffer from persecution, discrimination, or threatened genocide by the racial enemy.

XI. Defense

The Aryan Republic will establish universal conscription and military training for all young men, beginning in the public schools at an early age. All men between the ages of 18 and 50 will be part of the military reserve except in cases of the most serious medical exemption. Military training and the instillment of martial pride and tradition in the young will be a major aspect of the educational system. The ancient and honorable profession of the soldier will be once more established within the community as one of the highest regard and respect, and veterans of the armed forces will be accorded a superior political and economic status within the community.

XII. A Better Race

It will be the imperative duty of the National Socialist state to strive aggressively for the continual improvement of the Aryan race through positive eugenic measures, especially through encouraging the propagation of the best elements of our society in every way possible. Steps will be taken to halt the spread of hereditary defects and racially impure blood within the gene pool of the racial community. Our racial resources provide the biological basis for all true progress, and must not only be preserved but nurtured and improved, so Aryan man may attain the highest potential development both physically and mentally.

Finally, it is the duty of the state to take an active part in the spiritual life of the racial community. Our people must be turned away from their present path of materialism, cynicism, and egotism and become inspired by the racial idealism and rebirth of traditional Aryan values. By these values we mean ideals such as the strong nuclear family unit; the love and cherishing of White children; personal responsibility for self and family; fortitude in adversity; physical courage in the face of the enemy; a sense of patriotism and racial community; generosity to those of our race who are sick or hurt or in need; and the concepts of rights and privileges as the earned rewards of social responsibility fulfilled.

On Revisionism

by Winston Smith

The NSWPP now publishes a daily Internet commentary called the NSNet Bulletin. If you have access to e-mail you can subscribe to this free service by e-mailing nswpp@earthlink.net. This article is NSNet Bulletin #26.

A reader asks, "What did you mean a while back about Revisionists needing to make a reassessment of Adolf Hitler and National Socialism as part of their philosophy?"

There are many prominent Revisionists—Bradley Smith is a good example—who can by no stretch of the imagination be called National Socialists or racial nationalists. They are in some cases what used to be called dilettantes, in other cases motivated by a genuine and sincere devotion to truth as an idea and a goal holding intrinsic value of itself, that politically motivated lies of any kind are bad and should not be accepted or tolerated in a civilized society. In view of the significant deterioration of our own Movement's character in that regard over the last few years, I am the last one to fault anyone for such a view. We need a lot more of it, and please don't take anything I'm about to say as criticism. It isn't. It's better to do the right thing for the wrong reason than to do the wrong thing for any reason, and my hat is off the Revisionists of all stripes and motivations.

But the fact is it's not a very realistic view of things. One Revisionist, a German lady, told me: "I don't really have anything against the Jews, I just wish they'd stop lying bout my people and my country's past." What she doesn't realize is that lying about people is what Jews do. It is an inherent part of their racial personality, one of their many ancient cultural survival mechanisms. The Holocaust lies is a monstrous testimonial to the Jewish practice of organized mendacity, but it is certainly not the only one. As terribly as the Germans have been victimized by the Jewish people during this century, they are not the only ones, nor is Jewish predation a new development; with them it is standard practice which they discuss freely in their own "sacred" writings.

As usual, I have to say that our racial enemy has a more clear and realistic view of what we're about than we do. Jewish pseudo-historian Deborah Lipstadt once closed a television program I saw with some words to the effect that, "The real agenda of Revisionism is to make National Socialism acceptable again as a political solution to the world's problems." She was wrong in implying that all Revisionists hold that view; they don't. But that is the inevitable effect of Holocaust Revisionism and indeed all Revisionism, and Revisionists who believe otherwise are deceiving themselves and crippling their own efforts by refusing to ground their arguments in political reality. Revisionism is not an abstract or theoretical argument; it is not only about lies but as well about millions and probably billions of very real dollars and cents which are sunk into a massive industry every year. Above all, the Holocaust is Realpolitik.

Revisionism cannot simply be restricted to the logistics of the Holocaust, how many bodies can be burned in an hour and whether or not the gas chamber at Auschwitz is a flimsy fake (which it clearly is, by the by.) Revisionism is a Can of Worms, and once it is opened the lid is almost impossible to replace. Because it's all connected.

Hippies used to wear T-shirts with the slogan "Question Authority". Revisionism is, for this society, the ultimate Questioning of Authority. The Establishment is bound to attack it on that ground alone. It is for all practical purposes impossible to be a Holocaust Revisionist without extensively studying, learning about, and extrapolating the motivations of two groups of people, Nazis and Jews. They are the central characters of the drama.

The study of the Jewish participation and motivation in the creation of the Holocaust industry leads inevitably to the whole topic of the Jewish people themselves, their behavior, their role in human history. Follow the thread backward and you get into a whole slew of verboten topics like the role of the Jew Walter Rathenau in sabotaging the German arms industry during World War One (Hitler's famous "Stab in the Back"), then backward to Bolshevism and Karl Marx, then on backward into the Middle Ages and the role of the Jews in creating usury-based international banking, etc. Follow the thread forward from the war and you get into Zionism, the creation and maintenance of the artificial state of Israel largely based on the Holocaust myth and Holocaust money, the slaughter of the Arabs over the past fifty years, and subservience of American foreign policy to Israel, the financial realities of the Holocaust as a multi-million dollar branch of the entertainment industry, etc.

The study of the National Socialist end of the Holocaust leads into such forbidden areas of thought as Versailles and the reasons for the rise of the National Socialist state to begin with, (your capitalist angle), the 25 Points of the NSDAP, the incredible economic and social accomplishments of the Third Reich, the written and spoken works of Adolf Hitler, etc. Worse yet, the dangerous subject of guilt and responsibility for both world wars looms into view. (Today's Establishment still has some very nasty little secrets lurking in cupboards regarding World War One, never mind World War Two.) It quickly becomes apparent that the maintenance of the increasingly threadbare Holocaust myth is essential to maintaining the entire social, economic, and political status quo of the past two generations; it is no exaggeration to say that the whole world as we know it today is based on the Holocaust.

Take away the Holocaust and both the National Socialists and the Jews become very different people, almost reversing roles. The whole foundation of the Hitler-As-Evil-Incarnate portrait which is now Holy Writ is based on two false concepts: the Holocaust and the standard Establishment historical mantra of Hitler-Started-World-War-Two-By-Invading-Poland. Knock away the mythical six million murdered sheenies and the Hitler-Started-The-War business is a weak reed indeed for the Hitler-haters to lean on; it is nowhere near as highly charged emotionally and much more susceptible to historical analysis and debunking, based as it is on real and documentable historical events and not what amounts to the theological mysteries of a new religion, which is what the Holocaust has become to its adherents. Part of the aberrant psychology displayed by Nizkor people in their controlled newsgroups can be explained by what amounts to religious fervor; people who question their dogmas are treated as less than human, heretics to be burned and destroyed lest they contaminate the pure faith.

Take away the Holocaust and one is stunned with admiration for the brilliance of Adolf Hitler, the vision and accomplishments of the Third Reich, and the incredible military heroism of the German people. The whole National Socialist period becomes a breathtaking and wonderful national epic for the German people. (Which, of course, it always was.)

Take away their precious Holocaust and the Jews are seen for what they really are, a sneaky little reptilian people, liars and land-thieves and and sneak-killers who persuaded the dumb goyim to fight and kill and die for them and then robbed the pennies from the eyes of their dead victims, a race of con artists who have perpetrated the biggest fraud in history. Commander Rockwell once said, "If the peoples of the world ever come to understand what the Jews have done, how they have lied to us all since the end of the war, there will be Jews swinging from every lamp post." He was not wrong. I am utterly convinced that the Jews have a long-overdue settling-up of accounts coming, and it may come sooner than any of us think.

All of the above having been said, there are a number of Revisionists who are extremely uncomfortable with all of it, however these conclusions may logically arise from their own research and conviction. They have enough intellectual integrity to want the truth to come out, yet when push comes to shove they find it very difficult to give up that Old Time Secular Hate-Hitler religion they learned at their mammy's knee and at the movies. I can understand this; it's hard to rearrange a whole lifetime of received "truth" and accept the moral consequences of being lied to all one's life. Not to mention the horrific retaliation that can be brought down on one's head by so much as hinting at unorthodox thoughts in one's mind. There are a lot of Revisionists out there who have far more title to the psuedonym of Winston Smith than I do; they have earned it as Orwell's Winston did, at the tormenting hands of a thousand hose-nosed O'Briens.

But truth cannot and should not be rationed. Once you accept that rationing in principle it leads to problems, as I and the Party regularly experience when we discuss in public certain unpleasant and uncomfortable truths which our own Movement, collectively, does not question factually but seems to want to place beyond the bounds of acceptable discussion. That's a habit we have picked up from the Jews, and it is a habit we all need to get out of. If you're going to be a seeker after truth, be a seeker after all truth, not just the bits and pieces you're comfortable with or which don't threaten the falsehoods you learned at your mammy's knee and which you clutch like Linus his security blanket. Two absolutely inescapable conclusions from the whole Holocaust fraud is that A) The Jews are scumbags without anything resembling a redeeming feature; and B) Hitler was right.

As all of you know, question the Holocaust in any of its tiniest details or most esoteric manifestations, and from that point on you're a "Nazi" in the enemy's official demonology, however untrue that accusation may be. So why bother to do mental gymnastics in order to avoid the two previously stated, crystal clear conclusions?

If you're going to do the time, you might as well do the crime.

Jewish Media Control Close Up

by Jack Killey

To the question "Do you really believe the Jews own the media?", I can only answer, "Most of it, yes. But they don't have to own it to control it."

An object lesson in this distinction was the downfall of northeastern Ohio's The Gateway Press, a general interest newsweekly to which I devoted seven years of part-time work. A fierce smear campaign and unremitting advertising boycott by Cleveland-area Jews—many not even in our circulation region—caused the forced sale of a newspaper that many readers trusted to deliver at least an approximation of the truth about events in their communities.

Until I wrote and my editor published a commentary casting a gimlet eye on President Clinton's many Jewish appointees, I suppose most Jews in the area, like our general readership, slotted us somewhere between the kitty litter box and the refrigerator door; we had our admirers and detractors, but no one accused the Gateway of being docile or tepid in its coverage of local elections, proposed tax or school levy issues, or other current events that hit our readers where they lived.

People bought our competitor, the daily flagship of a much larger chain (who, ironically, later bought us out) to see who died and whose kid made Little League player of the week, but they opened us to see why cabals of doctors were fighting over the location of a new medical center, or who was behind the push for pro-homosexual curricula in their kids' schools, or which city council had violated the "sunshine law" in a secret meeting last week and why.

If we had a news philosophy it was probably on the order of a thorough libertarianism, and we tried as often as possible to deliver both sides of any given story.

But only about 850 words on Clinton's appointments reduced our county, after 12 years of an alternative, to its former bland diet of one-sided newspaper pablum. A barely measurable percentage of our readership, none of whom ever refuted the commentary on its particulars, managed to deprive some 48,000 readers of a reliable news source in their communities. The Jews' "persecuted minority" mantle is, I suppose, apropos for a race that showed a gift for the theatrical long before they created Broadway and Hollywood.

"You know, I never considered myself an anti-Semite until now," mused one staffer, after another day of being cursed by local shopkeepers suddenly outraged by their advertising vehicles' calloused treatment of the Chosen Ones. "But I think they've made me one."

NEITHER DID I harbor any particular dislike of the Jews, racially or religiously, when I composed the piece in question. I don't care much for the ACLU-style leftist politics of most secular Jews in the U.S. and haven't since a turn towards social conservatism about 12 years ago. Strangely enough, I cut my teeth on the sort of activist liberalism found in Jewish intellectual organs like the New Republic and The Nation (and was even published in the latter), and spent more of my college days than I care to remember trotting off to antiwar rallies. I steeped myself in liberal ideas and methodology, and for a variety of reasons found them wanting. But I can't say that I began to examine the woof and warp of liberalism's ideological crazy quilt for specifically Jewish threads until I witnessed first hand the rabid response to a little article in a little local paper.

The commentary in question—published as personal opinion, not that of the newspaper, as all my many commentaries were—can easily be synopsized. I pointed out the high percentage of Jews among Clinton's appointees, hardly representative of his stated goal to have an administration that "looks like America"; wondered how this may affect American foreign policy towards Israel; and (this was the part that brought in the big guns against us) ventured the opinion that this facet of the Clinton administration was being deliberately obscured by a Jewish-dominated American media establishment.

You'd think I had written a glowing reconsideration of Mein Kampf. My editor's phone started jumping off her desk. Sales reps were screamed at and thrown from the premises by red-faced merchants who had previously described us as assets to the community. One of the more prominent Jewish businessmen in the area wrote the editor a venomous letter (specifying, of course, that it was NOT for publication) telling her, "You can't say whether or not you're an anti-Semite. Only WE can decide that."

Do you think the surrounding media establishment came to the defense of one of their embattled members as the pot began to boil beyond the boundaries of Portage County, Ohio? That perhaps they'd defend the First Amendment right of a 12 year-old mainstream newspaper to publish controversial opinion articles? Think again.

It took the Newhouse-owned Cleveland Plain Dealer about ten working days to run a lead editorial titled "One for the Fish", written by PD staffer Carolyn Davis, a Jewess who in a personal whine piece once stated her wish that every gun be wiped off the face of the earth. (No liberal bias here.) Carolyn was mad, and maybe a little jealous that I could write circles around her. She at least quoted the commentary's best sentence, which was that Clinton "seated enough white European males to ensure that America will be ruined in a competent, intelligent, and well-organized fashion." Otherwise it was the stock denunciation of "anti-Semitic...crap", seething with horrified disbelief that anyone could suggest that the Jews control America's media. (Let's see, a Jewess writing for Ohio's largest—and Jew-owned—newspaper attacks a rural Gentile-owned weekly in a lead editorial...doesn't sound like control to me...)

The Cleveland Jewish News was even more generous, allotting a full page to editor Cynthia Dettelbach herself rather than an underling. An equally unexceptional attack it was, bristling with weasel words and broad smears but contradicting none of the commentary's content with opposing facts regarding Clinton's appointees. I imagine the Jewish News like most other Jewish organs in the country, ran bannered praise of Clinton's favoritism towards Jews in his administration. I guess it's only impolitic for Gentile publications to notice it, another point I made in the commentary.

This sort of notice by large media organs goes beyond "coverage" of a hot topic. Neither publication took any interest in the community served by the Gateway and probably cared even less who we, the paper covering it, were.

The Newhouse-owned Akron Beacon-Journal ran no editorial hate pieces, but they stayed on top of the unfolding events around that "anti-Semitic" newspaper in Streetsboro, Ohio. The Plain Dealer nominally covered our county, but we beat them regularly in an area they usually assigned to worn-out hacks in their Summit County bureau. The point is, the sudden interest and overbearing coverage of a heretofore unnoticed region of their circulation area was looking mighty selective. We had touched on a topic that was...unpermitted. A Jewish topic. And they were going to make sure that the publication impertinent enough to raise the thorny issue of Jewish power in the American Oval Office and the American media wouldn't publish for long.

THE POINT MAN in the effort—the visible one, anyway—was Jerry Brodsky, a Jewish principal in the largest and most affluent public school district in our county. His most recent claim to fame had been his opposition to the display of a Christmas tree at the predominantly Gentile school he governed.

Also an attorney and a resident of Beachwood, a heavily affluent Cleveland bedroom suburb, "Jerry the Jew" as he became less than affectionately known at the Gateway office, mounted a secondary advertising boycott against us, sending highminded letters to many of our advertisers warning them of the business to be lost if they continued to advertise with us. He wrote letters under his legal letterhead, although he took care to remind recipients that this wasn't official business (although he did remind them of his important position in the school district.)

I don't think Jerry the Jew really scared anyone off, but he kept up the momentum; the big advertisers who dropped us did so on their own hoof. Jewish Rite Aid CEO Alex Grass suddenly took a personal interest in the ad account of his rundown shop fifteen miles from us and pulled their ads, declaring his offense in a letter to us; Jew Albert Klaben of Klaben Auto Stores, one of the regions biggest volume car chains, was equally miffed and yanked his. Both were important accounts.

Several smaller but regular advertisers pulled one by one, and a large Cleveland area grocery chain, Gentile-owned but with stores in heavily Jewish Cleveland suburbs, began shuffling their feet and "reconsidering" their account in phone calls and letters to my editor. Nervous local Gentile bankers and realtors called with weak offers of continuing support but whined about all the "bad publicity" we were getting.

We kept the boycott on the front page and started asking questions about the fine line between Jerry the Jew's personal tastes in reading and his duties as a public administrator. Was he using his position in the community to bolster the get-the-Gateway pogrom? Was he tapping out these letters on school time or using school equipment? Word had it the school board and the superintendent weren't too crazy about Jerry's crusade, and eventually he faded into the background.

But he apparently had replacements lined up. Dan Dyer, an English teacher in Brodsky's school, and Dyer's wife began firing off similar outraged letters of protest to our advertisers. It seemed a bit clubby at the least that the next person in the community to pick up the torch happened to work for Jerry (who had done some legal work for Dyer's wife.)

Anyway, why some of Dan's and the missus's letters were in Jerry's house still flummoxes me. (How do I know they were? Call it intuition.) I don't route my correspondence through my boss's house. Maybe it's a Jewish thing. Mrs. Dyer didn't know why either when I called to ask her, stammering, "...uh,uh, you'd better ask Dan that." I tried, but Dan never called back. At least Jerry called me once, but I don't say anything of substance into speaker phones when I don't know who else—maybe a lawyer other than Jerry—is in the room. (He said it was the only way the phone worked.)

I CAN'T GIVE Brodsky and company full credit for sinking the Gateway Press, much as they'd probably enjoy it. We were used to a rather anemic income and the usual weekly calamities that any small enterprise, especially one competing for ads and readership in what is probably called in the trade a "minor media market". But as we found out, no market is too minor to manipulate when Jewish sensibilities are involved.

The persistent strain of the boycott and attendant pressures on an already precarious balance-sheet took their toll. We cycled through ad reps and other personnel even faster than usual as commissions and morale sagged. My editor/publisher, a woman with 25 years in the business and a well-deserved reputation for personal tenacity and a take-no-prisoners journalism style, did what she could to hold things together. But even the tough get tired. While not fully in agreement with me on the topic of Jewish media control, she refused my offer of resignation early on and continued publicly to defend her publication of the piece under her long-standing commitment to airing cogently-argued, if unpopular, opinions of every stripe. But I don't think even she, experienced as she was in the business, expected the virulent response that my article generated.

When she called us into the office for the news of our sale to our competitor, I thought of a mysterious anonymous caller, a not-unfriendly and apparently Gentile woman with a patrician accent who contacted me early in the fray. She calmly told me of the history of "the boycott", meaning not the current one against us but the historical prototype of the Jewish version of it, and at the end of our conversation she said to me, "your paper will be out of business in 18 months." It took, I think, fourteen.

WHAT I FOUND significant throughout this process was the outsized influence wielded by a small clique, a normally snobbish and insular clique who would normally have had no special interest in our paper or even in our region, which is largely rural and probably 99 percent Gentile. Even had a genuine boycott been carried out, its effect would have been negligible.

Bad publicity seems to have been the boycott's purpose; since the largest advertisers who pulled were Jews, a phone call to them from Brodsky or the Jewish News or the Cleveland ADL probably would have sufficed.

Another feature of the boycott that struck me was the powerlessness of our Gentile readers, many of whom were outraged by the attack on us. We weren't lacking in support from our readership, some of whom were courageous enough to register their agreement with us in commentary in our letters column. I found encouraging the number of readers who told me privately their feeling on Jewish power in U.S. politics—but unfortunately, they didn't wield the power the Jews do among U. S. merchandisers, bankers, car dealers, and realtors, the people whose advertising dollars support small (and large) newspapers.

It shouldn't have surprised me. I had to laugh at Jewess Davis's description of Jewish media power in the Plain Dealer editorial as "a bigoted buzz phrase that goes back decades". One doesn't have to sample overtly "racist" writings to encounter references to Jewish media control, and they date back much farther than decades. When I see past allusions to Jewish press power from the pens of such august and "establishment" figures as W.E.H. Lecky, Winston Churchill, Hillaire Belloc, or Sir Richard Burton (among many others), two things cross my mind.

One is the casual manner of its mention, as though these writers are noting the fact that the sky is blue. Lecky, for example, in his late nineteenth century masterpiece Democracy and Liberty, devotes a paragraph or two to Jewish domination of the Russian press under the Czars (he attributes to it at least some of the resentment the average Russian felt for the Jews during the pogroms). No earnest attempt is made to convince the reader of a doubtful precept, no long lists of proofs are proffered: not because they couldn't be produced, one senses, but because it simply wasn't necessary to document what appears to have been a commonly know fact among the less numerous but better informed, literate members of earlier generations.

The second and more troubling thing that strikes me about this is that contemporary authors of comparative standing could not publish similar observations, or at least not without sudden relegation to vanity presses and maybe community college jobs. Probably only the eminence and the solid corpus of work produced by earlier authors, and perhaps less fear among Gentile publishers in those earlier times, allowed them to make such references without destroying their careers.

At any rate, Jewish press control is hardly a venal myth that's been propagated for decades (centuries?) by anti-Semites; it is rather a truth which has been relentlessly obscured by increasingly powerful Jewish interests within and outside the press. No one who has closely studied the pertinent history can convincingly argue otherwise, even if the student limits himself to "permitted" books and authors rather than documents some find inherently questionable, i.e. the Proto- cols. The extent to which an offending author is pushed to the margins or shielded from the public by a self-interested Jewish minority probably depends on a variety of factors, but one thing is certain: he won't emerge from the process quite intact.

SO WHAT HAS THIS to do with the experiences of a small-time writer for a little newspaper in Streetsboro, Ohio? Only that I saw first hand what happens and has happened to many writers who dare to write and publish on the fact of Jewish media and political influence. It was in one sense a privilege to be in courageous company living and dead; to be allocated the ire bestowed on men like Belloc, Chesterton, Douglas Reed, Wilmot Robertson was a badge of honor of sorts.

In other senses, not least the sacrifice of a good newspaper on the altar of Jewish sensibilities, it was a tragedy. Not for me; it's virtually certain that despite fifteen years of some pretty good journalism on my part, I'll never again work for a "respectable" journal, but given the rules and litmus tests imposed by them, who would want to? If anything, my experience in fifteen years in the field has been one of progressive distaste for it, and in that sentiment at least I join a growing number of Americans. Unfortunately, most readers and television viewers will probably continue to be guided by a thirst for entertainment and stimulation despite their stated disgust for the mainstream media.

But there's no doubt that awareness of the true nature and agenda of America's "mainstream" i.e., Jewish media is growing, and perhaps we can take a page from the Chosen Ones themselves when it comes to the retribution a committed minority can impose.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

The Jewish Angle

By

Joseph Sobran

Beware of Ally

You can't understand American politics and culture nowadays without grasping the enormous power and influence of the Jews. The Jewish angle is complicated; it's not all to the bad; but from a Christian standpoint, it deserves criticism, because the interests of Jews and Christians naturally diverge. It is sentimental nonsense to pretend otherwise.

But since sentimental nonsense is obligatory in the American media, anyone who tries to talk frankly on the subject is "out of the mainstream," "extremist." The Israeli press is remarkably blunt about Jewish power in this country; but its coverage, though written from a Jewish perspective, would violate settled taboos in America. A Hebrew-language newspaper, Ma'ariv (the Israeli equivalent of the Washington Post), recently [Sept. 2, 1994] ran a long, detailed article on Jews in the Clinton Administration: "The Jews Who Run Clinton's Court"! The idea that there may be a Christian perspective on the subject is unthinkable.

The notion that two profoundly different cultures can easily mix, under shibboleths of "pluralism" and "multi-culturalism," is naive. You might as well expect a character from Homer to walk into a Thackeray novel. A culture is almost by definition a set of things that can't mix, because they have their full meaning only in relation to each other and lose their meaning in any alien context.

Unfortunately, the Jews — the organized Jews, the ones who, for our purposes, really count (leaving out unaffiliated Jews, mavericks, eccentrics, Mrs. Goldberg down the street, so to speak — are quick to damn any criticism as "anti-Semitism," "Jew-hating," and, when that criticism comes from independent Jews, "self-hate." (The idea of "self-hate" is so tortured you wonder how on earth it arose. You get the impression that the only people Jews ever hate are themselves.)

The word "anti-Semitic" can usually be translated "Semitically Incorrect." Jews in America don't have to worry about persecution. The organized Jewish power is actually enforcing an ideological orthodoxy, and its hahitual resort to personal abuse and intimidation is itself part of what deserves criticism. Such charges wouldn't be daunting to potential critics if "the Jews" weren't powerful. Like such ugly neologisms as "racism," "sexism," and "homophobia," "anti-Semitism" doesn't belong to the classic English language, as it has been used from Shakespeare to Dr. Johnson to Dickens to Hemingway. It's a term of vilification. Its function is not to define and distinguish but to conflate. (Nobody speaks of "anti-gentilism.") So many people and places have been damned as anti-Semitic countries.

Nevertheless, certain things must be said. And to be said they must be sayable. The Jewish question is part of my beat. Part of the reason for thie newsletter is to utter a Christian viewpoint and to defend Christian interests at a time when public discourse is choked with fear of the Jews, in large part because of Jewish control of the major media — by ownership, pressure, false delicacy, and the constant threat of calumny.

Why is this urgent? Well, because, for instance, Israel can get a lot of Americans killed. In his book The Samson Option [Random House, 1991]: Seymour Hersh described in detail how Israel's secret nuclear arsenal implicated, and even endangered, the United States. Maybe Hersh was wrong. But he is a distinguished reporter, and he was making an assertion of considerable gravity. His thesis deserved, you might think, some discussion. The book was an attempt to alert us to an unsuspected danger and a vindication, by the way, of the foreign policy ofAmerica's founders. But The Samson Option died a quick death.

I began to understand the problem in 1982, when I ceased to be an automatic defender of Israel (which I had been since the Six-Day War in 1967). The savage war on Lebanon opened my eyes. I saw, first, that the American alliance with Israei was making us enemies throughout the Muslim world. That was good for Israel and also good for the Soviet Union; but very bad for the United States. Moreover, I had a personal stake: my two sons were approaching draft age at a time when it looked as if the draft might be restored, and I saw no reason why they should be sent to fight in the Middle East. The thought of it made my blood run cold. For that matter, I didn't want any American boy to die for a foreign country.

I also came to realize how treacherously Israel was dealing with the United States. I'd tried to ignore evidence of this, starting with the attack on the Liberty in 1967. When Menachem Begin lied to Ronald Reagan about his intentions in Lebanon, the pattern was too clear to ignore. I learned a good deal about Israel espionage against the United States even before the Pollard spy case broke in 1985.

Along the way I perceived an unmentionable fact: that many Jews in the media were committed, sometimes fanatical Zionists, who justified everything Israel did, would never admit any deep divergence between American and Israeli interests and would shed no tear if my sons died for Israel. They included most of the neoconservatives I'd previously thought of as my allies and, in some cases, friends. In other respects they were decent-enough people. But even the Pollard case didn't seem to shake their primary loyalty to Israel.

I also couldn't help noticing the hypocrisy of organized Jewry, which pushed one set of principles in America — racial equality, secularism, and so forth — and their polar opposites in Israel, whose reason for being is to confer privileged status on Jews and Judaism. Jews won't let American Christians pray in their own public schools, but they are willing to tax them to subsidize and protect Israel. That, too, is both obvious and unmentionable. It cries out for discussion.

And I became aware that most Christians in the media, including friends of mine, were afraid to say what, deep down, they knew. They were afraid of being smeared by the same neoconservatives they professed to regard as friends. They didn't dare to draw the obvious inference from the Pollard case, even when it transpired that the documents Pollard stole had probably been passed to the Soviets by the Israelis. They were in the same position as liberals in the 1940s and 1950s who had been afraid to admit that their ranks had been infiltrated by Soviet sympathizers and agents. (The cry of "antiSemitism" was a bullying diversion from the real issue, as the cry of "McCarthyism" had been.)

Even knowing all this, I was shocked at the violence of the personal attacks against me when I began writing against the US-Israeli alliance. The neoconservatives, whom I'd naively expected to respect my right to disagree, were the most vicious. I was even more shocked when some of my Christian friends betrayed me — though one of my great consolations was that I found stalwart and honorable friends among non-Zionist Jews. (When the chips were down, some of my best friends were Jews).

Pat Buchanan got the same treatment a few years later, when he observed that Israel's "Amen Corner" was leading the cry for war with Iraq just as I'd expected it would. He, too, was attacked with special venom by neoconservatives some of whom he'd befriended, as well as by some Christian conservatives who saw their chance to win favor with the people they feared and toadied to. (Among those who were brave and decent enough to defend him was Michael Kinsley, his liberal Jewish antagonist on Crossfire.)

You can agree with the neocons on nine out of ten issues — but if the tenth is Israel, the other nine count for nothing. You may want to keep their friendship, but it's not up to you; they treat you as their mortal Joseph Sobran enemy (which is why I define an anti-Semite as a man who is hated by Jews). There is no clearer proof of the absolute priority of Israel for them. But the gentiles in the conservative movement, who still talk in their sleep about Alger Hiss, have put up little resistance to Zionist infiltration.

And it's one of the constants of journalism that the Amen Corner eggs this country to fight with any country it sees as a threat to Israel: Iraq, Iran, Syria, Libya, even North Korea. Moreover, it favors military intervention abroad in general, though it's less unanimous when Israel isn't menaced; some oppose intervention in Bosnia or Haiti, because the loss of American lives would lead to "isolationism" — their word for making American interests paramount.

Why does Zionism relay so heavily on deceit, camouflage, insinuation, betrayal, propaganda, and calumny? At bottom it may be less a matter of mendacity than of a cultural gulf. Most Zionists, even those who are otherwise honest people, resist open debate because they correctly sense that their cause — Jewish chauvinism — is indefensible in terms of both American interests and Christian culture. They need gentile support but can't afford to say what they really think of gentiles; though what they think can be gathered from the way Israeli law treats gentiles. Where gentiles are the majority, the Jewish power calls for equality, secularism, and "pluralism"; but Israel, where the phrase "Judaeo-Christian" is used sparingly, is exempt from those otherwise universal standards. (Hence the tortured Israeli debate over whether to annex the occupied territories: what if the Arabs became the national majority!) The occasional gentile who catches on must be silenced and ostracized. Find, if you can, an American Zionist who demands equality for Israeli Christians. Such a Zionist is nearly as rare as an American Christian who sticks up for his fellow Christians in Israel.

Israel is no worse than many other countries. But it is worse than any other ally, except Britain — another country that likes its American friends to do the fighting. The analogies are interesting. At home, Churchill spoke of "the British Empire"; but for American consumption, he sang of "the great democracies" and "the English-speaking peoples." Nor has Mrs. Thatcher been shy about telling us where to send our boys. The Zionists have a long way to go before they will match British mischief; but Britain is an exhausted power, and Zionism poses the chief dangers to America at the mo-

There are other aspects of organized Jewry that deserve our critical attention too, its virtues as well as its proclivities. Up to a point, its tribalism is healthy and deserves emulation by a society whose weakening bonds of kinship are plunging us into crime and general decadence. But its liberalism, self-absorption, and deep hostility to Christianity are both excessive and self-destructive. The intellectual brilliance of the Jews is one of the wonders of the world; but it also has its dark side, a facile skepticism, an insensitivity to the dumb virtues of tradition (even, at times, Jewish tradition), a reckless radicalism.

The reason the current Jewish taboos should be broken is so that the whole truth can be told, and not just those things that are discreditable to the Jews. Actually, the Jews are nowhere near as bad as some of their defenders make them sound. They sometimes take advantage of our gullibility; which is not to say we gentiles were all innocent before they arrived. They do us harm; but not because they really want to harm us. As I say, cultures are more than just different flavors of ice cream. They are more like different cosmologies. The most important fact about any man, as G.K. Chesterton pointed out, is what kind of universe he thinks he's living in.

The Jewish Establishment

In the early 1930s, Walter Duranty of the New York Times was in Moscow, covering Joe Stalin the way Joe Stalin wanted to be covered. To maintain favor and access, he expressly denied that there was famine in Ukraine even while millions of Ukrainian Christians were being starved into submission. For his work Duranty won the Pulitzer Prize for journalism. To this day, the Times remains the most magisterial and respectable ofAmerican newspapers.

Now imagine that a major newspaper had had a correspondent in Berlin during roughly the same period who hobnobbed with Hitler, portrayed him in a flattering light, and denied that Jews were being mistreated — thereby not only concealing, but materially assisting the regime's persecution. Would that paper's respectability have been unimpaired several decades later?

There you have an epitome of what is lamely called "media bias." The Western supporters of Stalin haven't just been excused; they have received the halo of victimhood for the campaign, in what liberals call the "the McCarthy era," to get them out of the government, the education system, and respectable society itself.

Not only persecution of Jews but any critical mention of Jewish power in the media and politics is roundly condemned as "anti-Semitism." But there isn't even a term of opprobrium for participation in the mass murders of Christians. Liberals still don't censure the Communist attempt to extirpate Christianity from Soviet Russia and its empire, and for good reason — liberals themselves, particularly Jewish liberals, are still trying to uproot Christianity from America.

It's permissible to discuss the power of every other group, from the Black Muslims to the Christian Right, but the much greater power of the Jewish establishment is off-limits. That, in fact, is the chief measure of its power: its ability to impose its own taboos while tearing down the taboos of others — you might almost say its prerogative of offending. You can read articles in Jewish-controlled publications from the Times to Commentary blaming Christianity for the Holocaust or accusing Pope Pius XII of indifference to it, but don't look for articles in any major publication that wants to stay in business examining the Jewish role in Communism and liberalism, however temperately.

Power openly acquired, openly exercised, and openly discussed is one thing. You may think organized labor or the Social Security lobby abuses its power, but you don't jeopardize your career by saying so. But a kind of power that forbids its own public mention, like the Holy Name in the Old Testament, is another matter entirely.

There is an important anomaly here. The word "Jewish," in this context, doesn't include Orthodox or otherwise religious Jews. The Jews who still maintain the Hebraic tradition of millennia are marginal, if they are included at all, in the Jewish establishment that wields journalistic, political and cultural power. Morally and culturally, the Orthodox might be classed as virtual Christians much like the descendants of Christians who still uphold the basic morality, if not the faith, of the ancestors. Many of these Jews are friendly to Christians and eager to make common cause against the moral decadence they see promoted by their apostate cousins. Above all, the Orthodox understand better than almost anyone else in America today the virtues — the necessity — of tribalism. patriarchal authority, the moral bonds of kinship.

The Jewish establishment, it hardly needs saying, is predominantly secularist and systematically anti-Christian. In fact, it is unified far more by its hostility to Christianity than by its support of Israel, on which it is somewhat divided. The more left-wing Jews are faintly critical of Israel, though never questioning its "right to exist" — that is, its right to exist on terms forbidden to any Christian country; that is, its right to deny rights to non-Jews. A state that treated Jews as Israel treats gentiles would be condemned outright as Nazi-like. But Israel is called "democratic," even "pluralistic"!

Explicitly "Jewish" organizations like the American Jewish Committee and the Anti-Defamation League enforce a dual standard. What is permitted to Israel is forbidden to America. This is not just thoughtless inconsistency. These organizations consciously support one set of principles here — equal rights for all, ethnic neutrality, separation of church and state — and their precise opposites in Israel, where Jewish ancestry and religion enjoy privilege. They "pass" as Jeffersonians when it serves their purpose, espousing rules that win the assent of most Americans. At the same time, they are bent on sacrificing the national interest of the United States to the interests ofIsrael, under the pretense that both countries' interests are identical. (There is, of course, no countervailing American lobby in Israel.)

The single most powerful Jewish lobbying group is the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), which, as its former director Thomas Dine openly boasted, controls Congress. At a time when even Medicare may face budget cuts, aid to Israel remains untouchable. If the Israelis were to begin "ethnic cleansing" against Arabs in Israel and the occupied lands, it is inconceivable that any American political figure would demand the kind of military strike now being urged against the Serbs in ex-Yugoslavia.

Jewish-owned publications like The Wall Street Journal, The New Republic, The Atlantic Monthly, U.S. News & World Report, the New York Post, and New York's Daily News emit relentless pro-Israel propaganda; so do such pundits as William Safire, A.M. Rosenthal, Charles Krauthammer, Jeane Kirkpatrick, and George Will, to name a few. That Israel's journalistic partisans include so many gentiles — lapsed goyim, you might say — is one more sign of the Jewish establishment's power. So is the fact that this fact isn't mentioned in public (though it is hardly unnoticed in private).

So is the fear of being called "anti-Semitic." Nobody worries about being called "anti-Italian" or "anti-French" or "anti-Christian": these aren't words that launch avalanches of vituperation and make people afraid to do business with you.

It's pointless to ask what "anti-Semitic" means. It means trouble. It's an attack signal. The practical function of the word is not to define or distinguish things, but to conflate them indiscriminately — to equate the soberest criticism of Israel or Jewish power with murderous hatred of Jews. And it works. Oh, how it works.

When Joe McCarthy accused people of being Communists, the charge was relatively precise. You knew what he meant. The accusation could be falsified. In fact the burden of proof was on the accuser: when McCarthy couldn't make his loose charges stick, he was ruined. (Of course McCarthy was hated less for his "loose" charges than for his accurate

The opposite applies to charges of "anti-Semitism." The word has no precise definition. An "anti-Semite" may or may not hate Jews. But he is certainly hated by Jews. There is no penalty for making the charge loosely; the accused has no way of falsifying the charge, since it isn't defined.

A famous example. When Abe Rosenthal accused Pat Buchanan of "anti-Semitism," everyone on both sides understood the ground rules. There was a chance that Buchanan would be ruined, even if the charge was baseless. And there was no chance that Rosenthal would be ruined — even if the charge was baseless. Such are the rules. I violate them, in a way, even by spelling them out.

"Anti-Semitism" is therefore less a charge than a curse, an imprecation that must be uttered formulaically. Being a "bogus predicate," to use Gilbert Ryle's phrase, it has no real content, no functional equivalent in plain nouns and verbs. Its power comes from the knowledge of its potential targets, the gentiles, that powerful people are willing to back it up with material penalties.

In other words, journalists are as afraid of Jewish power as politicians are. This means that public discussion is cramped and warped by unspoken fear — a fear journalists won't acknowledge, because it embarrasses their pretense of being fearless critics of power. When there are incentives to accuse but no penalties for slander, the result is predictable.

What is true of "anti-Semitism" is also true to a lesser degree of other bogus predicates like "racism," "sexism," and "homophobia." Other minorities have seen and adopted the successful model of the Jewish establishment. And so our public tongue has become not only Jewish-oriented but more generally minority-oriented in its inhibitions.

The illusion that we enjoy free speech has been fostered by the breaking of Christian taboos, which has become not only safe but profitable. To violate minority taboos is "offensive" and "insensitive"; to violate Christian taboos — many of them shared byreligious Jews — is to be "daring" and "irreverent." ("Irreverence" of course, has become good.)

Jewry, like Gaul, may be divided into three parts, each defined by its borders vis-a-vis the gentile world. There are the Orthodox, who not only insist on borders but wear them. They often dress in attire that sets them apart; they are even willing to look outlandish to gentiles in order to affirm their identity and their distinctive way of life. At the other extreme are Jews who have no borders, who may (or may not) assimilate and intermarry, whose politics may range from left to right, but who in any case accept the same set of rules for everyone. I respect both types.

But the third type presents problems. These are the Jews who maintain their borders furtively and deal disingenuously with gentiles. Raymond Chandler once observed of them that they want to be Jews among themselves but resent being seen as Jews by gentiles. They want to pursue their own distinct interests while pretending that they have no such interests, using the charge af"anti-Semitism" as sword and shield. As Chandler put it, they are like a man who refuses to give his real name and address but insists on being invited to all the best parties. Unfartunately, it's this third type that wields most of the power and skews the rules for gentiles. The columnist Richard Cohen cites an old maxim: "Dress British, think Yiddish."

Americans ought to be free to discuss Jewish power and Jewish interests frankly, without being accused of denying the rights of Jews. That should go without saying. The truth is both otherwise and unmentionable.

The Non-White Face of Crime

by

Arthur J. Jones

Once again, the politicians and the news media are calling for a "get tough" approach to combating the ever rising wave of crime sweeping across America. But until the politicians and the quivering pink rabbits of the liberal press face up to the real causes of crime in our country, there will be no end to the carnage wrought by the criminals in our society.

And precisely what the liberals and conservatives of both major political parties simply refuse to acknowledge is who the criminals are! Until that is done, none of their solutions stands a chance of reducing crime even a little. For the fact is, the crime problem in America is, first and foremost, a racial issue.

We don't have a crime problem, nor a guncontrol problem. What we have is simply the failure of our "elected representatives" to face the fact that violent crime has a nonWhite, very ugly, vicious, savage face.

Lest I be accused of simply making gross generalizations about crime, let's let the facts of crime make my case about the nonWhite nature of crime in America.

According to the latest available statistics, crime directly and indirectly costs $674 billion dollars a year! On what is all this money spent? This is where it goes:

Police protection — $39 Billion
Prisons — $29 Billion
Legal court costs — $10 Billion
Medical and mental health costs — $11 Billion
Lost time from work — $191 Billion
Stolen property — $20 Billion
Fraud — $40 Billion
Theft and shoplifting — $120 Billion
Drunk driving — $110 Billion
Drug abuse — $40 Billion in lost productivity

Private Security — $64 Billion

SOURCE: U. S. News and World Report, January 17, 1994.

This same issue of the magazine reveals that of the over six million crimes committed last year in this country, while 80% of the murders, rapes, and robberies were in Black neighborhoods, 20% of crimes committed outside of the Black ghetto, or the Beaner's barrios, was crime directed by Blacks and Hispanics at White people.

This means that only 2% of all the crimes committed in this country last year were crimes where the victim was Black and the criminal was White — just 2%!

Yet, in state after state across this country, the Jews and their very liberal White allies have succeeded in passing so-called "ethnic intimidation" laws which literally make it a crime to call a Nigger a Nigger. Even such a "crime" as blowing spitballs at Blacks was prosecuted as a "racial hate crime" here in Chicago!

Under these "ethnic intimidation" laws, a White person who is victimized by a nonWhite, and who uses a politically incorrect term to describe the criminal, can be charged with a crime more serious in punishment than the nonWhite mugger, purse snatcher, or car thief.

In fact, the criminal now has more rights than the victim. For example, a Black ghetto gutter rat named Bernard McCummings, 32, was awarded $4.3 million by a jury in New York City after being paralyzed by a police officer who shot him as he ran, after having mugged and beaten 81 year old Jerome Sandusky in a New York City subway station.

The jury, and an Appellate Court, and the Court of Appeals, all felt that McCummings, a career criminal, was the victim of excessive police force! On that flimsy basis, this Black savage beast was awarded for his criminality with almost five million dollars.

True, such a gross miscarriage of justice does not happen that often, but what does take place in our cities, towns, and suburbs is even more outrageous because of the sheer numbers of crimes committed each year.

The liberal journalist Andrew Hacker, in his 1992 book, Two Nations, Black & White, cites statistics taken from the Uniform Crime Report of the FBI for 1990 that reveal the nonWhite nature of crime today. There were over 10 million crimes committed in 1990 with the percentage of Black crimes as follows:

Murders — 54.7%
Rapes — 43.2%
Robberies — 61.2%
Drug violations — 40.8%
Prostitution — 38.9%
Auto Theft — 38.4%
Gambling — 47.5%
Weapons Violations — 39.8%
Receiving stolen property — 41.2%
Aggravated assault — 38.4%
Burglary — 30.1%
Forgery and counterfeiting — 34%
Embezzlement 32.1% (as in welfare checks and food stamps)
Drunk driving — 8.7%
Vandalism — 22.6%
(HACKER, Page 181)

On that last crime, the city of Chicago spends 14 million a year to remove graffiti from the windows of the buses and elevated trains. An additional $50 million a year is spent repairing vandalism committed in the Chicago Public Schools.

Thus we see that crime is basically nonWhite in its origins. But what do these numbers actually mean to the average White American or foreign White tourist?

Noted criminal writer and researcher, Jared Taylor, in his 1992 book, Paved with Good Intentions, cites still other unpleasant facts about crime in America that are worth repeating here.

According to Taylor, "When Whites commit violence, they do it to Blacks 2.4% of the time. Blacks on the other hand, choose White victims more than half the time."

Taylor continues: "In those cases in which the race of the killer is known, Blacks kill twice as many Whites as Whites kill Blacks. Black on White robberies and gang assaults are 21 times more common than White on Black. In the case of gang robbery, Blacks victimize Whites 52 times more often than Whites do Blacks."

Adds Taylor: "The average Black person is 12.3 times more likely to kill a White, than the average White is to kill a Black. When it comes to gang robbery, the average Black is an astonishing 325 times more likely to take part in a gang attack on a White than a White to take part in a gang attack on a Black." (Taylor, pages 9294)

And there is no end in sight to all this crime coming out of a race of people who are just 12% of our entire national population. Most of this crime was committed by nonWhite teenagers between the ages of 1319. Their numbers are expected to increase by 23% by the year 2005. In other words, a virtual army of new criminals is being bred right now in our largest cities. And it is this atavistic "underman", to use the late Lothrop Stoddard's term, that is growing strong and healthy on the billions of dollars of AFDC checks and food stamps so generously provided by the White taxpayers of this country.

And it is when the "underman" awakens to the fact that his race is largely responsible for the filth, squalor, violence, and ignorance that he sees in Black communities, a rage of animallike fury comes over these creatures and they want to strike out at the first White person they see.

In particular Blacks, and increasingly Hispanics, are ever on the prowl for White people, especially White women. In a study of 629,000 interracial crimes that occurred in 1987, compiled from the United States Department of Justice, by Professor William Wilbanks of Florida International University, the ratio of White victims of crime at the hands of Black criminals was 9 to 1! In other words, 90% of these 629,000 interracial crimes had White people as the victim!

Yet despite this nonWhite tidal wave of pure hatred directed at White people, the news media (local and national), politicians, and increasingly police departments across the country, refuse to acknowledge the nonWhite nature of crime in America.

Due to the influence of the AntiDefamation League of B'nai B'rith (ADL), the Jews have been able to subject police departments across the country to special courses they have prepared on how to deal with the hordes of nonWhite criminals they encounter each day.

The emphasis is on using the absolute minimum amount of force and then only as a last resort, lest their "Civil Rights" be violated, which would then subject the police officers and their entire department to costly Civil Rights lawsuits.

However, this same ADL training instills in police officers an absolute fear and hatred of any person or organization defending White people's Civil Rights! According to Jack McLamb, a former Arizona police officer, the ADL has spread this antiWhitepatriot poison into virtually every large and medium sized police department in this country.

While the day to day reality of crime police see is nonWhite, their instincts have been trained to resort to force each time they encounter a White activist! Thus, militant Blacks and Hispanics and homosexuals are allowed to vent their rage; to destroy, loot, burn, steal, and utterly defy the laws of the land.

But when a group of White antiabortion protesters stage a sitin or merely picket the largely Jewishowned abortion centers, the police show absolutely no mercy on these protesters — they are subjected to choke holds; dragged by their hair; struck with riot batons; arms and legs broken; noses broken; ribs fractured; teeth knocked out; punched and kicked; sprayed with MACE, or subjected to electronic stun guns.

Yet in 1991, when on 50 separate occasions White people were viciously assaulted by roving packs of young, Black beasts in the Hill Crest and North Park neighborhoods of San Diego, California, the line coming from the local police department spokesman, Detective Steve Baker, was "There is no evidence they are hate crimes." (Taylor, page 95)

Or more recently, when I was attacked on May 6, 1993, by a Black militant from the Black Panther Militia, one Michael McGee, on the Jerry Springer Show, the Civil Rights division of the Chicago Police Department, after viewing the brazen assault on me said: "We're still investigating the charge, but we're not sure we have all the elements needed to prosecute this as a hate crime." As I write this, the "investigation" is apparently still going on, or they dropped it altogether. In fact, I have heard nothing from the police since May of 1993!

Yet, while the police and their political bosses are afraid to tell the truth about nonWhite crime, a few Black leaders are not. Black syndicated columnist, Walter Williams, writing in the January 14, 1994, issue of Human Events, a weekly newspaper published in Washington, D.C., is outraged at the cowardice displayed by Black Civil Rights leaders on the crime issue.

Wrote Williams: "Colin A. Ferguson's rampage, killing five New York commuter passengers and wounding 20 others, proves Whites don't have a monopoly on racism. If civil rights organizations, Black politicians and ministers are to keep whatever diminishing credibility they still have, they must roundly condemn both Ferguson's racist behavior and his apologists. So far I have not heard civil rights organizations calling a press conference to do that."

Adds Williams: "You can bet the rent money had a White person committed similar mayhem in Harlem, it would be show time for the likes of Al Sharpton, Jesse Jackson and Ben Chavis."

Williams then cites a number of fiendish Black crimes that never made the national news: White truck driver Danny Gilmore, in July of 1988, is murdered by a mob of 40 Blacks in Cleveland, Ohio. He is pulled from his truck, beaten severely, then had his skull crushed by a Black who ran over him with Gilmore's truck. All because of a minor accident with a Black on a motorbike!

In January 1991, Mark Belmore, a White student at Northwestern University, was stabbed to death by four Blacks who vowed to kill the first White person they saw.

In February, 1991, in Indiana, seven White people were murdered by Christopher Peterson, a Black savage with a shotgun. Peterson told the police he had "a deeprooted hatred for White people."

Again, quoting Williams: "According to Department of Justice statistics, when Whites commit violent crimes, Blacks are their victim 2.4% of the time; however, Blacks choose White victims over 50% of the time. Blacks murder Whites twice as often as Whites murder Blacks. Black on White gang robberies are 52 times greater than White on Black. Black men rape White women 30 times more than White men rape Black women."

On this last crime, that of raping White women, the Black male does so out of a sick need to strike back at what he perceives is a White male dominated society. And White women are to Black men the ultimate prize possession of the White man. In his childlike mind, he will risk death rather than deny his lustful urges for White women.

This sickness to possess White women is what drives the entire Civil Rights movement. Black men care nothing about political freedom. But tell the hordes of lowlife Niggers "freedom" means having White women, and they will march from one end of this country to the other to get at our women. Is this another broad generalization or the plain and ugly truth? Here from the mind of a notorious Black rapist, Eldridge Cleaver, in his sick book Soul on Ice: "I love White women and hate Black women. It's just in me, so deep that I don't even try to get it out of me anymore. I'd jump over ten Nigger bitches just to get me one White woman. Ain't no such thing as an ugly White woman. A White woman is beautiful even if she's baldheaded and has one tooth."

Cleaver then goes on to describe what he likes to do to White women. I will spare the readers of this newspaper the details. Cleaver then states his feelings for White women this way: "The White woman is more than a woman to me...she's like a goddess, a symbol. I worship her. I know that the White man made the Black woman the symbol of slavery and the White woman the symbol of freedom. Every time I embrace a Black woman I'm embracing slavery and when I put my arms around a White woman, well, I'm hugging freedom...Men die for freedom, but Black men die for White women who are the symbol of freedom." (Cleaver, pages 148149)

Concludes Cleaver: "Any Black man who says he don't dig Jezebel (White women) is a GD liar. I believe that if a leader wanted to unite the Negroes in a solid unity, he could do so very easily. All he'd have to do is promise every Black man a White woman and every Black woman a White man. He would have so many followers he wouldn't know what to do with them all. Believe me." (Cleaver, page 150)

So, it should now be clear that the crime problem in this country is again, first and foremost, a racial problem. The question is what do we do about all these hordes of Black and Hispanic criminals? What is the solution to nonWhite crime?

The liberals and conservatives and the Jewsmedia keep proposing the same old unworkable solutions: More laws to control the sale of guns; and mandatory prison sentences for certain types of crimes and life without parole for other types of crimes.

Now two new proposals have been advocated by the gutless political pimps and whores in Washington, D.C. In 1992, Major Owens (DNY 11th District), a six term Black Congressman, introduced legislation that would repeal the Second Amendment, the right of the people to purchase and possess private firearms. And New York Senator Daniel P. Moynihan (DNY), proposes a 1,000% tax on the sale of ammunition; thus placing the cost of ammunition for private firearms out of the financial reach of the average American gun owner. Only the very rich and the very violent would be able to obtain ammunition for their weapons.

The vast majority of our population, which is to say White people, without guns or the ability to purchase ammunition for the guns they now possess, would be left defenseless before the vicious, savage, nonWhite criminal jackals now on the loose in our country.

And still another United States Senator, John Chafee (RRI) has introduced a bill to outlaw the possession of handguns anywhere by anyone, outside of the police and the military or other law enforcement agencies.

According to the United States Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF), there are about 200 million guns in private hands in the United States. About a third of those are pistols. While each year, about 20,000 murders are committed in this country, the majority by handguns. In just one period, 19791982, hand guns were used by private citizens to defend themselves against criminals 644,976 times! (Francis, page 26)

Thus without guns in the hands of lawabiding citizens, the murders, rapes, robberies, and other crimes committed by nonWhite criminals would be at least ten times greater than they are right now!

So, gun control and taxing the ammunition would play right into the hands of these criminal scum. Crime would soar out of control, beyond even the power of the armed forces to control it. That's what the foolish, if not treasonous, liberals and conservatives would accomplish if we let them pass these radical bills.

The next solution proposed is to lock up the criminals; build more prisons; eliminate parole. What this means is the $29 billion a year currently spent on prisons and inmates will have to be greatly increased with no end in sight. That translates into more taxes from the White people of America. For no matter how many prisons and jails we build, it will never be possible to keep the criminals in prison to serve out their sentences.

In a twopart study of violent crime that appeared in the November 3rd and 4th 1993 editions of Investor's Business Daily, we learn that, "Compared to 1950, the U.S. is arresting a lower percentage of criminals, prosecuting a smaller portion of those arrested, winning a smaller percentage of the prosecutions, sentencing fewer convicted criminals to jail time and giving more lenient sentences to those who are sentenced to prison."

Here is where the traditional, simplistic, "lock 'em up" solutions are shown to be so deceptive. While most lawabiding taxpayers and citizens assume you do serious time for committing serious crimes, the truth is shockingly the opposite as is shown here:

Murder — 2.3 years average prison time before released on parole

Rape — 80.5 days jail

Robbery — 27.5 days in jail

Aggravated assault — 13.2 days in jail

Arson — 12.5 days in jail

Burglary — 5.4 days in jail

Auto theft — 3.8 days in jail

Larceny — 2.2 days in jail

So building more prisons or jails is certainly not the solution to our nonWhite crime problem. Nor is there any need for more useless gun control laws. For according to the United States Justice Department's National Crime Survey, only 12% of all violent crimes involved firearms and only 2% of all crimes involved the use of firearms.

Yet, those are the only ideas politicians in both parties have found to be politically correct. Therefore, they are guaranteed not to offend the politically pampered nonWhites who are largely responsible for most of the crime in this country.

So what do we do to solve the nonwhite crime problem? I advocate a three point program:

1.) Whenever a nonWhite kills a White person, or rapes a White person, or seriously injures a White person while committing a crime, the sentence is automatic: Death.

2.) The Second Amendment should be altered, but not abolished. It should read: "The right of White people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed, abridged, or denied.

All nonWhites have no right to buy, trade, or possess any type of firearms or ammunition for same."

The penalty for any nonWhite person in possession of a gun of any kind, should be: 1 year in prison and a $1,000 fine for first offense; 5 years and $5,000 fine for second; and there would be no third offense.

3.) If a nonWhite criminal uses a gun or other weapon in committing a crime against a White person, it would only happen once: The penalty for a nonfatal crime upon any White person would be to strip the criminal of his citizenship and deport him or her out of the country to a permanent exile from this country!

We know we can't control or eliminate all the nonWhite crime, but our concern is in making our country safe for White people to live in. But these Black and Brown trigger happy, dopedup punks should know that whenever they get the all too frequent urge to mug, rape, rob, or murder a White person, that death or deportation awaits them when they are caught. To hell with building more prisons, build more gallows and boats!

And lest we be accused by the liberals and gutless conservatives of being too harsh, we need only point out that their masters favorite country, Israel, does not hesitate to use the very same penalties on Arabs breaking Israeli laws that we propose for nonWhites breaking Aryan laws.

Thus, if such stern measures to maintain Jewish control of Palestine can be supported by the liberals and conservatives with billions of dollars in American foreign aid to Israel, then why can't these same workable solutions be applied to the hordes of nonWhite criminals in America?

Obviously, such really gettough measures can work, but only if we have political leaders in office determined to carry out these policies. Thus the ultimate solution to nonWhite crime, lies not in passing new laws, but in placing into power new leaders of courage and will who will roll back the ugly pall of African/Hispanic cruelty and savagery that is settling over this land.

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. WHAT HAPPENED TO HITLER'S BODY?

By
Allan Callahan

We have long known, at least in a general way, how Hitler died in his bunker beneath Berlin in 1945, but the few details we had after that were sparse, and soon after that, there was nothing but silence. The Soviets recovered Hitler's corpse, so they knew what happened to it, but kept the information secret all through the cold war.

This state of affairs continued until the U.S.S.R. collapsed. In 1992, Moscow TV journalist Ada Petrova wanted to do a program on the death of Stalin. She went to see Sergei Mironenko, one of the directors of the State Archives of the Russian Federation in Moscow. During their talk, Hitler's name came up, and Mironenko astounded her when he revealed that he had Hitler's skull right there in the archive. She then lost interest in Stalin, and instead wanted to find out all she could about Hitler's skull, and the story behind it.

It was in a thin cardboard box with a wax seal, and was in four pieces, two large and two small. One of the larger pieces had an exit hole made by a bullet. The skull was part of an extensive archive, with an official number of 1-G-23, and subtitled: "Hitler and His Entourage." Ten other archives contained many other things, including his uniforms, a photograph album, and a notebook containing some of his small paintings and drawings.

After Hitler and Eva Braun committed suicide, their bodies were laid in a shell crater in the garden of the Reich Chancellery, doused with gasoline, and set afire. Although badly burned, they were far from being completely consumed. The Russians found them almost as soon as they arrived on the scene, but ignored and reburied them because they thought they had already found Hitler's body.

This corpse, however, belonged to Hitler's double, a man named Gustav Weller. After the Russians discovered their mistake, they quickly dug up the bodies again. To try and make sure they had the right people, they conducted an autopsy and identified the remains by their dental records.

The bodies of Hitler and Eva Braun were buried, dug up and reburied several times, along with the bodies of Joseph Goebbels, his wife and their six children, the body of Gen. Hans Krebs and two dogs. Everything was finally destroyed except for Hitler's skull.

Ada Petrova was joined by British writer Peter Watson. With the permission of the directors of the State Archives, they commissioned one of Russia's leading forensic experts, Prof. Viktor Zyagin, to examine the skull. He photographed it, measured it, probed the edges and the bullet hole.

Hitler's valet, Heinz Linge, stated that he inspected the bodies of Hitler and Eva while they were burning in the garden. Hitler's head, according to Linge, had a bullet wound. The skull was of a yellowish color, typical of a vegetarian, according to Prof. Zyagin. Hitler became one in the early 1930s, and had his own vegetarian cook in the bunker.

There are three main views of how Hitler took his life. One is that he shot himself, another is that he took poison (like Eva Braun), while a third view is that he did both. He first took the poison, then fired the fatal bullet.

The latter seems the most likely, and would be easy with a cyanide capsule. All you would have to do would be to place the glass capsule between your teeth, aim your pistol, bite down on the capsule and then pull the trigger. This is also what Prof. Zyagin thinks Hitler did. By the location of the exit bullet hole in Hitler's skull, Zyagin believes Hitler held the pistol under his chin.

Hitler, Eva and all the others were buried in Buch, exhumed and reburied in Finow, then exhumed and reburied again outside Rathenow, but they did not remain in any of those places long. Their main resting place was finally in Magdeburg.

Here the bodies lay for a quarter of a century. But in 1970, the Soviets decided to turn over the army base there to the East Germans. The only Russian in Magdeburg who knew where the bodies were buried was the regimental commander. Not wanting to take a chance of the secret leaking out, and the grave becoming a shrine for neo-fascists, he wrote to Yuri Andropov for advice. (Andropov was then head of the KGB, and later became the Soviet leader in 1982). Andropov ordered the regimental commander to exhume the bodies, cremate them and dispose of the ashes.

This was done on April 5, 1970, but by that time the bones of each body had more or less mixed with each other, and with soil. The report stated that: "The destruction was carried out by burning in the fire on the waste ground near Schonebeck, 11 kilometers from Magdeburg. The remains burned away, were ground with the embers into ashes and thrown into one of the Elbe tributaries."

Footnote: Ada Petrova and Peter Watson collaborated on a book entitled: The Death Of Hitler. The first U.S. edition was supposed to have been published by W.W. Norton & Co. in 1995.

The Reëlection of Bill Clinton

By

Dr. Charles E. Weber

The reëlection of Clinton is a certain defeat for Aryan Americans, who insouciantly voted for this cunning, unscrupulous man. Clinton has a hostility to successful members of his race and that seems to dominate all of his thinking, if his mental processes can be dignified bg that word. This hostility perhaps has its origins in Clinton's dreary family background.

Some of the judicial appointments which Clinton has made are likely to cause considerable damage to Aryan Americans for many years to come, indeed well beyond 2000 A.D., in a way which most of its victims do not understand. For the first time in the history or the United States the Supreme Court has two Jewish members who seem to be haters of their host population. They were both appointed by Clinton. All too many of Clinton's other appointments to high positions have been of members of races which have a traditional hostility to Aryans.

Clinton has demonstrated repeatedly his stubborn favoring of high taxes and Big Government, which are poison to Aryans, who are sacrificing their reproductive capacities to pay for Big Government. American Aryans are consequently sinking into the status of a minority and the grim conditions from which they are bound to suffer greatly in the future and from which they are already suffering in specific localities. One need only look what has happened to some American cities such as Detroit, East Saint Louis and Washington, whose populations have become overwhelmingly non-Aryan.

Perhaps Clinton's most destructive influences come from his setting a bad example by his past swinish, crooked personal behavior, about which most voters wers poorly informed or which was deliberatelg neglected by the media. All too few Americans realize, that Clinton is a laughing stock in foreign countries and a national disgrace.

Why did Aryan voters shoot themselves in the foot? The preponderant control of the American media, especially of the electronic media, by non-Aryans seems to have been the chief cause.

On what can we pin our hopes for an awakening of American Aryans? The small oppositional, truly patriotic print medium seems to be our best hope, even if the periodicals which comprise this medium have relatively small circulations. If American Aryans have not lost all of their will to survive they should seek out such periodicals and subscribe to them for information, ideas and a reassuring sense of solidarity. ❑

Alfred Rosenberg and Paganism

by

Guillermo Coletti

"Should the subduing talisman, the Cross, break, then will come the roaring forth of wild madness of the old champions ... The talisman is brittle, and the day will come when it will pitifully break. The old stone gods will rise ... and rub the dust of a thousand years from their eyes. And Thor, leaping forth with his giant hammer, will crush the Gothic Cathedrals!"

Heinrich Heine, Germany, 1834.

Paganism in Europe

French philosopher Alain de Benoist has rightly noticed ("The Way to be Pagans", 1980) that Europe could not and will not return to Paganism, but rather that Paganism was inevitably returning to Europe. Paganism indeed has been returning to Europe, long before the twentieth century, long before Nietzsche and Wagner. Its return, noticed de Benoist, can be traced as far back as the days of the Renaissance and can be found in those magnificent paintings rich in infatuation and love with the Aryan mythos of Hellas, and thereby with the Ancient Pagan soul of Europe. Perhaps most modern historians have not taken notice of that evolution of Heathen creativity, but Christian priests have long ago manifested their concern, or, maybe, fear. Abbot J. Gamme wrote in his letter to Monsignor Dupanloup in 1852: "The Renaissance was the resurrection, the cult, the fanatical adoration of Paganism with all its literary, artistic, philosophical, moral and religious idols; the Renaissance engenders the Reform, the Reform engenders the Volterian impiety; this engenders the French Revolution, the French Revolution is the most devastating moral cataclysm ever seen!". Unrepentant before the evidence of the destruction they have caused, the real cataclysm of Western man soul, the warriors of the Semitic Yahweh seem to have done "mea culpas" over actions which may have just engaged in following natural instincts, while oblivious and even joyous over their own faults against Euromankind. Today, as JudaeoChristianity finds itself immersed in a sea of confusion, division and desperation, the Ancient Gods of Europe enjoy a heroic, long awaited return, that not even the most ferocious renegade Caucasians can avert. From the ruins of shattered shrines to bedouinic deities, new realms will be built. Precisely because the priests of the cult of the cross fanatically incinerated our spiritual past in murderous raids, and as if defiant to history, they attempted to conceal it by building churches on top of the still smoky ruins of the treasures of our ancestors. The European Gods, those who belong only to Euromen, and those to whom only Euromen belong, have been witnesses of our rise to conquest, then our decay, and now they are watching us struggling back to recover the values of that which is eternal, the undying tribute to our blood.

Rosenberg and the Undying Heathen Soul

Those who seek out answers, not into the teachings of Moses, Abraham, or their apostolic inheritors, but into the evolution of our own biological reality through the mythos of the Ancient Gods, must refer to those great men who left us, in the form of books and artistic expressions, the fruit of entire lives dedicated to research our forbidden past. As the 20th century reaches its end, we find in the Euro-Heathen ranks an increasing number of freethinkers, philosophers, politicians, historians and others, working hard to reconstruct the original identity of our people. Names like Julius Evola (Italian philosopher, deceased in 1974) and Alain de Benoist are no longer souls navigating in a sea of intellectual solitude. Just before them, the World War II generation had taken great steps to bring us nearer to completion of this task. In 3rd Reich Germany, Heinrich Himmler (SS Reichsführer), and Walther Darré (Reichsminister of Agriculture) joined Alfred Rosenberg, quite conceivably the leading Pagan National Socialist theoretician, in defining with historical accuracy the soul of the Euroman. The National Socialist rise to power is a great example of that European will that defies oppression and censorship and finally, triumphs. Adolf Hitler, for example, was banned from access to the airwaves and could not use the German radio broadcasting system until after his becoming Chancellor of Germany, in January of 1933. In an article entitled "Germany and the Federation of Nations", published on August 30, 1923, in the periodical Völkischer Beobachter, Rosenberg provides a brief description of the oppressive spirit of the times: "On June 15, the Israelitische Wochenblatt für die Schweiz demanded the prohibition of the sale of the wellknown book of Henry Ford, Der internationale Jude. On June 23, already the Swiss federal railways issued a decree according to which the mentioned work may not be displayed any longer in the railway bookshops". Today, over seventy years later, the shaping of the European culture encounters opposition from almost identical alien forces. Again, those working against the free trade of ideas are in our midsts.

Alfred Rosenberg dedicated his life to bringing Europe in accordance with her history. In doing so, Rosenberg made friends and enemies, and with every day of work, he constructed his own life into a monument to the revival of the mythos, the man who will come.

An Eventful Life

Alfred Rosenberg was born on January 12, 1893, in the town of Reval (currently known as Talinin) in Estonia, his father a man of German descent (most people in that area are of German extraction) and his mother Baltic. At a young age Rosenberg moved to Russia to complete his studies; he received his diploma in architecture from the University of Moscow in 1918. During those youthful years, Rosenberg was witness to one of the most dramatic events in modern history: the Bolshevik Revolution. Those days, according to most historians and personal accounts of men who knew Rosenberg in person, were fundamental in the shaping of his views on Communism and Judaism. The connection of Jews to Bolshevism was not only to be noticed by Nazis; Winston Churchill has written extensively on the Jewish ship of these times; in America, government intelligence reports was numerous reports on the matter, and the mainstream printed media from London and other major world capitals expressed concern over the JewishBolshevik connection. Soon after graduation Rosenberg moved back to the Baltic, to Reval, where he volunteered in a failed grassroots effort to avert the expansion of Bolshevism. As the Red Army advanced with all its might over the fields of Estonia, Rosenberg left the country, arriving in Munich, along with many others, in 1919. Shortly after his arrival in Germany, a 22 yearold Rosenberg joined the ThuleGesellschaft, a small society of nationalistic welltodo individuals that financed anti Communist activism during the days of great political agitation. As if inevitable in the progression of his career, Rosenberg joined the NSDAP later that year as member number 625, shortly after meeting with Anton Drexler and Hitler. The new young member's abilities were quickly noticed by the party leadership, and a little time later the responsibilities deposited on that man were significant. Hitler personally assigned Rosenberg to command the NSDAP, after receiving prison sentence from his involvement with the incidents of November 9, 1923. During the Führer's imprisonment Rosenberg's duties were performed efficiently.

The Idealistic Soul of Euromen

Rosenberg was well aware that idealism was a manifestation of the great racial barriers that separate Aryans from other forms of life. The pursuance of ideals and dreams, the selfless devotion to perfection and the intensity of will applied to goals that offer no economic reward, is vibrant and omnipresent in European culture, in contrast to nonAryan peoples whose actions are motivated by the immediacy of food and shelter, those creatures who never looked up to the sky and never thought of flying. The myths that Ancient Pagans have forged, entirely out of their souls and nothing else, were the purest manifestations of the search for the ideal. In the Myth of the 20th Century, Rosenberg explains: "Once men dreamed of an allseeing and allhearing Being. They called it Zeus. It gazed from the clouds of Olympus over the land, or, perhaps, as Argus. Only a few were bold enough to demand the same for men. But these few dreamers investigated the essence of the lightning throwing god and examined the mysteriously unleashed natural forces. One day with the aid of these forces they spoke far apart with one another, linked only by a wire. Then even this wire was no longer necessary. Tall slender towers today send mysterious waves out into the entire world and these discharge themselves thousands of miles away as song or music. A bold dream became life and reality."

Rosenberg's Vision on Duty and Nation

It is frequently charged that National Socialism was another form of colonialism, and that the Germans aspired to rule the world in a sort of reviewed and renovated AngloFrench imperialistic style. That just was not the case. Just as Germanism could have never been implanted within the borders of China, so it was obvious that the Universalism brought upon us by Christians was unworkable, and that only by creating national and racial states, the peoples of this world were going to find themselves in their true identities. On June 2, 1924, the periodical Der Weltkampf published the article entitled "Jewish World Politics", in which Rosenberg explains some of the National Socialist stand on foreign policy as follows:

"Not only individual men but also peoples find their personal lifeform only after many false paths. Wars and revolutions signify the signposts on which the changes in the inner spiritual attitude are to be read. We live today in one of the greatest ages of intellectual, political and economic transformations, that is, all peoples of the white race, although some seem still to slumber fully. The catastrophes which have been effected since 1914 and the throes still to come in worldpolitical events are therefore so powerful because never before have the two old polar oppositions between the racial ideas and international worldview lain in such a strong, instinctive, but at the same time conscious, battle as today..."

"(Marxist agitator) Instead of setting up for him (contemporary man) as a goal a real homeland and the striving for a national culture, he increasingly freed him inwardly from his fathers, taught him to hate the history of his people and to believe in a nebulous 'international'. This poisonous seed of hatred against one's own people has perhaps been the greatest crime of Marxism against all nations..."

"As if by a natural law! For, every history is finally racial history. Race cannot be explained from the environment, for there will always remain an irresoluble remainder which is not to be resolved either by the climate nor by soilconstitution, nor by adaptation..."

"We are not dreamers and preach no 'world peace', and no eternal fraternalisation. But no matter what the future may bring — we strive with all the strength of our racial internal political and external political liberation from the immoral profiteeringstate; liberation of our European racial consciousness with regard to the other races of the globe; the victory of an aristocratic idea over the sordid commercial mentality of the age that passes away at present. That is the world battle of today, the worldrevolution of tomorrow, the war of which we do not know when it will be ended, which, however must be fought through, if Germany and the entire old Europe should not decay in the morass as so many peoples of ancient history did. That however a new conception of the world and the state could be born shows that the spiritual powers are still alive in us. It is important to listen to them, it is important to strengthen them, until the day of victory..."

"Germany for the Germans, China for the Chinese, that becomes the worldpolitical view from the racial conception of the state."

Rosenberg and the Cult of the Cross

Nietzsche's condemnation of Christianity had reached new heights by 1895, as shown in Der Antichrist, the powerful book he released that year: "The Christian Church has left nothing untouched by its depravity, it has made of every value a disvalue, of every truth a lie, of every kind of integrity a vileness of soul". The recognition of the semitic Cult of the Cross as the most alien worldview ever to be embraced by Western societies is admitted today by traditionalists, in a returned, refreshing contemporary current among intellectuals in the Old World. The uprooting of our ancestral faiths by the "persuasive" powers of the stakes have left unerasable marks all over Europe. So fanatical was the subversion of our bloodvalues, that despite the thousands of individual executions and the numerous massacres perpetrated by the armies of the Church, the might of the myths remains today defiant to oblivion. Rosenberg's awareness of the matter is as omnipresent as his Nietzschean influence. These few following words are just a brief example of the statements made "on the record" by the German philosopher: "Accordingly, the socalled Old Testament must be abolished once and for all as a book of religion. By this, the unsuccessful attempt of the last one and a half thousand years to make us spiritually into Jews will be eliminated ... the movement is to be strengthened further by the removal of openly distorted and superstitious reports from the New Testament."

An Honorable Life, An End With Honor

Rosenberg spent the last year of his life in the Spandau prison, in Germany, while the procedure known as the Nuremberg trial developed. About this, it is important to mention that the German defendants were charged with crimes which were non existing at the time of the Second World War, that the enactment of the laws applied to the German defendants have been signed only by the allied forces against the Third Reich and that in the Nuremberg Court the enemies of the Axis were simultaneously Judge and Prosecutors. Until the very last time he was allowed to speak on the record, Rosenberg displayed honor and loyalty to his cause. As expected, a guilty verdict and a death sentence was produced for Alfred Rosenberg and many others accussed: Reich Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, Field Marshall Wilhelm Keitel, GovernorGeneral Hans Frank, Interior Minister Wilhelm Frick, SS General Ernst Kaltenbrunner, newspaper publisher Julius Streicher, SS General Fritz Sauckel, General Alfred Jodl and Seiss-Inquart. The executions were performed by a Jewish-American hangman. The date of the executions coincided with the Jewish holiday of Purim, a biblical celebration of the extermination of the enemies of the Children of Zion, as depicted in the Book of Esther, Old Testament.

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 — except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. SOMETHING is FUNNY!

By
Clark M. Cornell

It is, or should be, strange that anyone should want to take office when the Federal Government is shackled to thedebt creating money system of the Federal Reserve. It would seem that, with all the problems attached to government service because of it, no one would have the nerve to run for office.

With the public debt of more than 5 trillion dollars and the private debt of more than 21 trillion we are looking at a combined debt of at least 27 trillion dollars. I am also going to repeat a fact that all too many people are not aware of, the Federal Reserve is not a government institution, it is a privately owned bank. To make matters clear, this banking system is only an exercise in book keeping, only figures change hands. "Money" is created out of thin air and the borrower pays interest for the use of his own credit.

It is not hard to understand that there are some who stop to think, see the fallacy of this and want it changed from a system of debt "money" to a system of wealth "money".

This is where there comes a collision of two schools of thought. One believes that there must be a money of value, 100 per cent gold and silver used for a short time around the 14th century. The other school of thought is that money should represent value as it is doing today. If the Federal Reserve has taught us anything it has shown us we can opperate a money system without gold. The problem is, do we borrow it into circulation as under the Federal Reserve or do we, the government, create it into circulation as did Europe in the period between the 11th century and the 14th century, probably Europe's most prosperous time.

The one thing both groups agree on is that most of our problems started under our present debt creating money system. I will let the gold money backers explain how they will get enough gold into circulation, I am of the other persuasion. Remember, the same group of people invented the gold standard who are opperating the Federal Reserve.

It is my opinion that not too much has to be changed except take the system from the Federal Reserve. If there is one service the Federal Government should do, it is the creation of money at no cost to the government. If the Federal Reserve can create "money" out of thin air and charge interest to the government, why cannot the Federal Government create the same "money" at no cost to itself?

To get this "money" (credit) into circulation the government can build roads, dams, and fight forest fires. It can loan money to cities, counties and states, at a small administrative cost. If the money is not paid back, no more loans to said borrower. You say that this will open the gates to all kinds of crooks; what do you call the owners of the present system of "money"? That is a racket from which a very few profit, immensely; it is a dictatorship of "money". Because of their control of "money" this dictatorship exerts its control over entertainment, of education and others, but, most of all, over the news media. An individual who effectively exposes this, does not have a very long life expectancy.

Remember, the tax payers are paying interest on more than 5 trillion dollars, the private debt is more than 21 trillion, and all of this was created out of nothing, no wonder the Federal Reserve does not want an audit. Every dollar in circulation has been borrowed, but only the principal of the debt, no "money" to pay the interest, so when the debt is paid the interest is taken from another source. The result is, some one in this chain of debt is going bankrupt. So to keep even, some one else has to borrow "money", the result, more debt. Therefore all "money" in circulation has been borrowed.

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) was created in conjunction with the Federal Reserve Act to collect the huge amount needed to pay the interest on the debt that was bound to snowball as wars and foreign give-aways increased the public debt. It is always easy to borrow but the pay back smarts a little or a lot. Is it possible that there is a connection here with the periodic wars that are fought? It takes a lot of borrowed "money" to fight a war.

Amschel Rothschild, father of the Central, privately controlled "money" system, said this, "I care not who holds office as long as I have the control of the issuance of money".

Wagner on Wagner:

An Exercise in Germanic Self-Hatred

By

Guillermo Coletti

Dr. Gottfried Wagner, great-grandson of Richard Wagner, the famous German composer, was available on Tuesday October 8, 1996 for a lecture entitled: "Richard Wagner's Anti-Semitism: Consequences for German Culture and Politics Until Today". The lecture was offered free of admission fees at Johnson Hall, Occidental College, in Eagle Rock, California.

As I patiently waited for the lecture to get started, xeroxed copies of an arti~le on Gottfried Wagner, written by Allan Ulrich and published in the October 6, 1996, edition of the San Francisco Examiner, were distributed among attendees. This was done by a Germans-speaking young Asiatic male, perhaps part of the entourage of Mr. Wagner; his presence, though, ensured us all a multicultural evening. The article pictures a rather large photograph of Wagner, with his eyes pointing intensely into the space, and his hands up in the air, as if holding an invisible sphere. Mr. Wagner is a sad success story of the de-Nazification (read de-Germanization) process perpetrated upon a militarily defeated Germany, at the hands of Jews and other alien occupational forces. "I am an alternative German", Wagner describes himself. According to the interview granted to the San Francisc Examiner, and in Wagner's own words, his indoctrination started at the age of 9, when he was made to watch films of his own family socializing with Adolf Hitler (the Wagners affectionately called him "Uncle Wolfie"), followed by clips of the alleged piles of dead Jews at Buchenwald, a scene all too common in the methodology of anti-Axis propaganda warfare. In this article, Wagner mentions to have severed ties with his father when he gladly accepted an invitation, in 1989, to speak about the Holocaust at Tel Aviv University, in the Jewish state. After having patiently listened to over ninety minutes of Gottfried Wagner's sophomoric whining, I can only imagine the nature of the lectures he has given at Tel Aviv University. Now, at the age of 49, Wagner is occupied full time lecturing internationally on what he calls "Germany's conspiracy of silence" (it sounds like a headline right out of Paranoia magazine, USA). The article also quotes Wagner saying that "Richard Wagner was a negative genius, an erratic moment in the history of music, important, but ultimately evil". So much for objectivity.

The reading of the above mentioned article was enough warning for anyone half-way savvy on matters of anti-German propaganda, of the nature of the lecture to come. Mr. Wagner is a well-groomed man, his manners are unmistakably European and, except for those moments in which he was contradicted, he displayed courtesy to everyone. The audience of about fifty was composed of a variety of individuals, from typical generation-x college students to a wide range of Semites, some old enough to qualify as "survivors". There were also some faces that seemed suspiciously and unapologetically Aryan and, rather consequently, out of place. Wagner brought a script to the podium and adjusted the entire lecture strictly to that script. The lecture was videotaped by a small crew of, again, a German-speaking Asiatic young male, this time accompanied by a few German-speaking Asiatic females.

If the American audience can benefit in anything from the visit of Gottfried Wagner, it is in the magnificent opportunity that it presents to meet in person one of those individuals who resulted from years of harsh anti-German propaganda performed where it hurts the most, in the minds of Germany's youngest. In his magnificent 1947 essay, "Nuremberg or the Promised Land", Maurice Bardeche observed that the enemies of Germany have began one of the cruelest tasks in recorded history: "they [the enemies of Germany] not only plan to make the Germans accept defeat, but they also expect them to be happy about it!". Today's Germany is, intellectually and spiritually, more an occupied country than it was at the very end of the war. The humiliation inflicted upon the German nationals goes from street corners in red light districts infected with Turkish pimps, and finds governmental sanctions in the classrooms of the Bundeswehr-Universität, where an Israeli Jew, Professor Michael Wolfsohn, teaches German history the Jewish way, and abuses this opportunity to spew his racial hatred when stating that Germans of younger generations "carry the mark of Cain for the murder of millions of Jews" (the biblical fable of Abel and Cain refers to fratricide, murder among brothers; whatever casualties resulted from altercations between Jews and Germans have nothing to do with fratricide). While listening to Gottfried Wagner I could not help recalling the report published by several mainstream magazines, showing a tearful son of Adolf Eichmann, emotionally embracing the Mossad agent who kidnapped his father in Buenos Aires, and thanking him for the abduction that, ultimately, led him to a Kangaroo court in Tel Aviv. Gottfried Wagner is another one of those "alternative" Germans who are vocally joyous about the defeat of Germany; I can't say whether he is actually happy about that or anything else.

Evidently, Gottfried Wagner's militant Zionism has a clear set of identifiable goals. Coinciding with the submissive attitudes of all de-nazified individuals, Wagner is also de-Germanized and misses no opportunity to show it. In my opinion, he attempted to convince us on the following:

a) that "Anti-Semitism is inherent in German Nationalism and not limited to National Socialists";

b) that Cerman Nationalism is a contradiction in terms, since "there is no real German national identity";

c) that his great-grandfather, Richard Wagner, was an anti-Semite only because of his negative emotions, lack of self-esteem and envy for the "superior musical talent of Felix Mendelsohn";

d) that Wagner's music was the artistic inspiration much needed by genocidal Germans to perform the Holocaust;

e) that anti-Semitism is unique and finds no parallel;

f) that America has no need to repeat the "mistakes" that Germans have committed in the past and that the discussion of the Immigration issue in America should not be influenced by isolationists.

Gottfried Wagner failed as an ambassador of Zionism to the West, when trying to make the case for the inclusion of Jews in European societies. His diatribal rants against his great-grandfather were for the most part based on obscure and unsubstantiated remarks, such as: "Richard Wagner's real (biological) father might have indeed been Jewish". Wagner failed to produce any evidence to support his statement which, by his own admission, was an unfounded conclusion. Before the blatant lack of substantial evidence, Wagner did not even bother explaining where he obtained his idea from. Gottfried Wagner emphasized several times that his great-grandfather had an inferiority complex because, among other things, he was short, skinny, weak, ugly and had Jewish facial features; this physical representation matches no other I've ever encountered before. I believe this statement also suggests, most likely involuntarily, that any man who matches that description (that of a stereotypical Jew) has to suffer from poor self-esteem. He went on to state that even Cosima Wagner (Wagner's wife) was also of mixed ancestry: "Cosima was the illegitimate granddaughter of a Jewish merchant". Again, Gottfried Wagner gave no reason to his theory, thus making it, at least empirically speaking, nothing more than suggestive wishful thinking. It is not at all improbable that young Wagner, like many other guilt-ridden German nationals, may be inclined to believe that the spirituality of an Aryan can not be complete unless he opens himself to Judaism.

Gottfried Wagner also argues that "the concept of a German Volk is absurd, since Germany was not founded until 1871". Wrong again. He, as a good Marxist, is not capable of observation unless it is limited to his dogmatic political focus (Egalitarianism, Proletarianism, Dictatorship based in larger numbers of the unfit over the few superior men). Egalitarians thought they were going to rid themselves of the German national spirit by dividing Germany in two at the end of World War Two because, they hoped, it has also been a political situation that has created Germany in the first place. They can not conceive of a natural order, a superior order that is non-responsive to the maneuvers of opportunists. The identity of the Germans, as well as that of the Italians and others, existed before the latest geo-political partition. Saying that a German Volk is non existent is just as absurd as saying that there is no real Italian national identity because the actual Italian Republic was founded last century by Garibaldi. These national formations were inevitable historical consequences in the lives of societies that are rooted together, in contrast to the "social-designing" attempts manipulated in, for example, the formation of Yugoslavia.

Gottfried Wagner mentioned his desire to stay involved with the Arts and listed a few of his philantropic commitments. He said one of his projects involves the producing of the majestic works of "a great contemporary American composer, Michael Shapiro". How noble of Mr. Wagner, to cross the Atlantic and show his generosity with the New Worlders by financing the creative dreams of one of America's finest, Mr. Michael Shapiro. Obviously, it couldn't get more apple pie than Michael Shapiro, and if Mr. Wagner wants to help America project her true image to the rest of the world, I'm confident that after exhausting hours of intense research, nothing could be found to fit better than Shapiro. I wondered if he would have ever given any consideration to producing the music of a Goyim, but that would be just plain guessing. Mr. Wagner, after all, is "not" a predictable man.

After some ninety minutes of his incessant harangue had elapsed, Wagner suggested that the homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz were inspired right out of the tunes of Parsifal. I politely raised my hand at a moment he separated his sight from the script. I just had to find an opportunity to bring some light into this inquisitorial practice. He then invited my question with a very clear "Ja?". I said: "Excuse me, but I believe that there is no forensic evidence of those alleged gas chambers". At that moment the air grew tense, I became the focus of attention of lots of pairs of hateful eyes, the silence was absolute, except for one or two deep inhales. Wagner's expression showed disbelief and he asked, raising his voice: "What!?". I repeated my statement but I've never obtained a reply. A member of the audience, in a quandary, said: "this room is full of nazis!". Instead of replying to my statement, young Wagner lamented that he is not used to be questioned in that manner and that that was the very first time "that" happened to him. I said to myself: "good!". Gottfried's assistant, a German speaking man in his forties, said loud and clear, very loud and very clear, that interruptions were "not to be tolerated!". Mr. Wagner continued reading his script, with some signs of nervousness, such as mispronunciations of English words, clearing his throat with pronounced frequency, etc. As the lecture continued, Wagner became more irritated to additional interruptions presented by German nationals in the audience, who manifested their discontent over his unending display of German self-hatred. As the irritation continued, so did the abandonment of his initially displayed good manners and courtesy. I left the hall before the conference had reached an end, but I was informed afterwards, that Wagner had to confront some very unhappy members of the audience, while repeatedly stating that this was the first time he had to confront "racists" and "holocaust deniers". It has been reported that Mr. Wagner said to one of the attendees that he was in company of his attorney, meaning God only knows what. Poor Gottfried, he finally came to the realization that not only Jews have a voice to be heard, and that just had to happen so far from home...

One final word. My comments on the lecture given by Dr. Gottfried Wagner are not intended to discourage anyone from attending his future conferences. On the contrary. I think that the young Wagner, and his hateful message, should be made very well known. I deeply wish that every American could attend his sermons, if even for only one hour. ❑

AMERICA AWAKE

Eternal Vigilance Is the Price of Freedom

By

Kevin Alfred Strom

Below is an advertisement printed in Australia's Sunday Telegraph a couple of years ago. This advertisement was not paid for by a business promoting a product or service. It was paid for by the government, and it constituted an official notice to Australian citizens. It is also a frightening portent of America's future. I quote from the ad:

> Personal protection is NO reason to have a gun. If you own a gun which you keep to protect yourself, your family or your property, you must dispose of it legally. Under the latest gun laws, personal and property protection are no longer considered acceptable reasons to possess any type of firearm, or to get a license. If you wish to possess any gun, you must have a license and meet the new requirements for safe storage of the weapon and its ammunition. When your current license expires you must reapply if you want to continue to possess or use a gun. Be warned, making a false or misleading statement on your license application could earn you ten years in prison. Act quickly. If you haven't got a license, now is the time to either apply for one, or legally dispose of your gun. One way you can do this is at your local police station. Possession and use of any firearm for personal or property protection is illegal and will attract severe penalties. No exceptions, no excuses. New South Wales Police Service.... The New South Wales Government, putting people first by managing better.

Allow me to repeat: "Possession and use of any firearm for personal or property protection is illegal and will attract severe penalties." Those who would disarm us have attained their goal in the New World Order's province of Australia. And that is also their goal here in America. Americans, you had better wake up, before the noose is around your neck.

Thomas Jefferson said: "No free man shall ever be debarred the use of arms."

He well knew that the very definition of freedom requires that every free man have the right and indeed the responsibility of self-defense, and of defense of his family, community, and nation. In a world where firearms exist, that means the right to own firearms. And in a world where tyranny exists, that means the ability to own weapons effective enough to discourage tyrants from trampling on your rights, from attacking your family in Ruby Ridge or Richmond, from burning down your church in Waco or in Wichita. Americans, you had better wake up, before the noose is around your neck.

Thomas Jefferson also said:

> The strongest reason for the people to retain their right to keep and bear arms is as a last resort to protect themselves against tyranny in government.

When he uttered those words, Thomas Jefferson had just seen the successful conclusion of a bloody revolution against a tyranny that in retrospect seems benign compared to the cryptocracy which now rules us from New York, Hollywood, and Washington, DC. Many of his comrades had lost their lives in that revolution. Jefferson's goal was to ensure forever the right of Americans to own effective weapons. When they used the word militia, the founding fathers of our nation meant the armed citizenry, which they saw as a bulwark against foreign invaders and against the armed agents of tyranny at home, of which they had had quite enough from King George III. Americans, you had better wake up, before the noose is around your neck.

Samuel Adams said:

> The said constitution shall never be construed to authorize congress to prevent the people of the United States who are peaceable citizens from keeping their own arms.

Patrick Henry said:

> The great object is that every man be armed. Everyone who is able may have a gun.

The father of our constitution, James Madison, said:

> Americans need never fear their government because of the advantage of being armed, which the Americans possess over the people of almost every other nation.

What a contrast these words of Jefferson, Adams, Henry, and Madison are to the words we hear today — the words of Schumer, the words of Feinstein, the words of Foxman. The names themselves tell the story of the loss of our country to a new ruling class which, like George III, fears an armed citizenry, and works with great patience, step by step by step, to gradually disarm us. Unlike the founding fathers, our new rulers do not openly state their intentions, but cloak them in deception, in pleasant-sounding mendacity, and with Talmudic trickery and infinite patience take each of the steps leading to a disarmed population facing an all-powerful government which is armed to the teeth.

The technique probably would not fool so many Americans were it not for the fact that the mass media are firmly in the hands of the new ruling class which has arisen since the Second World War. Their tried-and-true con game works like this. A psychotic or a member of a minority gang commits a heinous crime. The liars of the mass media shed crocodile tears for the victim as their cameras focus in on the real perpetrator of the crime: a gun. The kept editorial writers and journalists leap into action, calling for restrictions on — you name it — handguns, guns with magazines larger than 5 rounds, certain types of ammunition, etc. — whatever our masters have decreed is the next on the list. The list, ladies and gentlemen, will not end until we have no weapons and they have them all. Then the bought politicians leap into action, gathering their forces and clamoring for the passage of the latest gun restriction or confiscation bill, the essentials of which have been written long in advance by the Anti-Defamation League or the other well-funded organizations of America's enemies.

How many more times are the sheep-like Americans going to fall for this con game? Remember, it was Vladimir Ilyich Lenin — real name Ulyanoff — (there's one of those names again) who said: "... one of the basic conditions for the victory of socialism is ... the disarming of the [middle class.]" Americans, you had better wake up, before the noose is around your neck.

And it isn't only liberals who are fooled by this con: You conservatives who voted for no-knock warrant laws, under which government agents can enter your home or place of business on almost any pretext; you who voted for forfeiture laws under which your property and your life savings can be taken by the government without a trial; you who voted for the institution of dozens of different government police agencies, each one of which is armed with the latest in spying and killing machinery; you should listen to the words of the director of the Federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, who stated before the United States Congress:

> I am one who believes that as a first step the US [sic] should move expeditiously to disarm the civilian population, other than police or security officers, of all handguns, pistols and revolvers ... no one should have the right to anonymous ownership or use of a gun.

This agency also stated:

> There can be no right of privacy in regard to armament . . . we seek a disarmed populace.

Conservative gun owners, unless you begin to understand what is happening in this country you may wake up one day as an inmate in one of those thousands of new prisons which you voted to have constructed as an answer to the crime problem. To liberals I would say, America does not have a gun problem — America has a race problem. To conservatives I would say, America does not have a crime problem as much as we have a treason problem. Americans, you had better wake up, before the noose is around your neck.

It isn't only our private arms that the subversives and traitors want to take away from us. They are even planning to take away the protection of our armed forces, which they want to convert into mercenaries for the United Nations and a "security force" to keep dissidents like us in line. Don't believe it? Let me refer you to State Department Document number 7277, which states in part:

> The United States program for general and complete disarmament . . . [will lead to] a world in which adjustment to change takes place in accordance with the principles of the United Nations. In order to make possible the achievement of that goal, the program sets forth the following specific objectives toward which nations should direct their efforts: [1] The disbanding of all national armed forces and the prohibition of their reestablishment in any form whatsoever other than those required to preserve internal order and for contributions to a United Nations Peace Force; [2] The elimination from national arsenals of all armaments, including all weapons of mass destruction and the means for their delivery, other than those required for a United Nations Peace Force and for maintaining internal order; and [3] The manufacture of armaments would be prohibited except for those of agreed types and quantities to be used by the UN Peace Force and those required to maintain internal order. All other armaments would be destroyed or converted to peaceful purposes.

Americans, you had better wake up, before the noose is around your neck.

From the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency Publication 14, we have the following chart: "U.S. Three-Stage Disarmament Plan:" In Stage I - The U.S. Military is Large, and the N Peacekeeping Force is Small; In Stage II - The U.S. Military is Smaller, with the UN Peacekeeping Force Increased; and in Stage III - the U.S. and U.S.S.R. Military are gone as independent entities, all national military forces are under the control of the UN as so-called "Peacekeeping Forces" with the United States allowed only an internal security force to quiet any who object. Ladies and gentlemen, is this not the pattern you have seen developing before your eyes, in Korea, in Vietnam, in Iraq, in Somalia? And this document was published in 1962. Americans, you had better wake up, before the noose is around your neck.

Were the American people ever asked if they wanted their sons to die to enforce the dictates of a world government? Have our leaders and our news media honestly informed us that they were leading us into a world government? Have we been given an opportunity to pass judgment on this idea and throw these world government proponents out of office if we decided to keep the independence our forefathers fought and died to procure? No, my friends, we have never been given that opportunity. The proof that these traitors and subversives are out to enslave us is fourfold: First is the voluminous documentation of their plan, a tiny part of which I have brought to your attention on this program. Second is the fact that they have not been honest with us about their intentions. If their intentions were benevolent, why would they have to trick us into surrendering our freedom and our nation itself? Third is their unrelenting attack on our right to keep and bear arms. Governments which are of, by, and for the people do not fear their own citizens. But tyrants feel secure only when the people are disarmed. Fourth is the fact that both major political parties in this country are controlled from behind the scenes by entities long dedicated to the creation of a so-called "New World Order" on the corpse of America. I maintain that those who have deceived us on such a colossal scale cannot possibly have our best interests at heart.

President Bill Clinton's favorite college professor, Georgetown University's Carroll Quigley, approved of the New World Order, though he disagreed with its policy of secrecy over the years. He wrote in his magnum opus Tragedy and Hope:

> The relationship between the financial circles of London and those of the Eastern United States . . . reflects one of the most powerful influences in twentieth-century American and world history. The two ends of this English-speaking axis have sometimes been called, perhaps facetiously, the English and American establishments. There is, however, a considerable degree of truth behind the joke, a truth which reflects a very real power structure. It is this power structure which the Radical Right in the United States has been attacking for years in the belief that they are attacking the Communists. This is particularly true when these attacks are directed, as they so frequently are, at 'Harvard Socialism,' or at 'Left-wing newspapers' like The New York Times and the Washington Post, or at foundations....

The most visible of the organizations of the world government proponents is the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR), the members of which have formed a high percentage of the appointees and elected members of every administration, both Democrat and Republican, since the Franklin Roosevelt regime. According to researcher Dan Smoot:

> . . . the Council on Foreign Relations, together with a great number of other associated tax-exempt organizations, constitutes the invisible government which sets the major policies of the Federal government; exercises controlling influence on government officials who implement the policies; and through massive and skillful propaganda, influences Congress and the public to support the policies. I am convinced that the objective of this invisible government is to convert America into a socialist state and then make it a unit in a one-world socialist system.

CFR members literally run every administration in Washington, be it Democrat or Republican. That is one reason why, my friends, that on all the really important issues, the policies pursued remain the same no matter which party is in power. That is why the nearly-complete conversion of America into a province of the New World Order continues apace, regardless of the rhetoric of the province's current overseers. Americans, you had better wake up, before the noose is around your neck.

Again I quote from Bill Clinton's mentor, Dr. Carroll Quigley:

> I know of the operations of this network because I have studied it for twenty years and was permitted for two years, in the early 1960s, to examine its papers and secret records. I have no aversion to it or to most of its aims and have, for much of my life, been close to it and many of its instruments. I have objected, both in the past and recently, to a few of its policies . . . but in general my chief difference of opinion is that it wishes to remain unknown, and I believe its role in history is significant enough to be known.

Why would Quigley disclose to the public the operations of the secret government, of which he evidently approved? Cleon Skousen's review of Tragedy and Hope gives us the reason:

> His answer appears in a number of places but is especially forceful and clear on pages 979 and 980. He says, in effect, that it is now too late for the little people to turn back the tide. In a spirit of kindness, he is therefore urging them not to fight the noose which is already around their necks.

With all due respect to Dr. Quigley, I utterly reject his call to surrender.

The forces behind the CFR also exert controlling influence over more radical movements which are useful in corralling us into their world plantation. In his book The Naked Capitalist, Dr. Cleon Skousen, a former FBI official and later professor at Brigham Young University, reveals that a former member of the National Committee of the Communist Party, USA, Dr. Bella V. Dodd, who later became an ardent anti-Communist, told him, "I think the Communist conspiracy is merely a branch of a much bigger conspiracy." Skousen relates:

> Dr. Dodd said she first became aware of some mysterious super-leadership right after World War II when the US Communist Party had difficulty getting instructions from Moscow on several vital matters requiring immediate attention. The American Communist hierarchy was told that any time they had an emergency of this kind they should contact any one of three designated persons at [New York City's] Waldorf Towers. Dr. Dodd noted that whenever the party obtained instructions from any of these three men, Moscow always ratified them. What puzzled Dr. Dodd was the fact that not one of these three contacts was a Russian. Nor were any of them Communists. In fact, all three of them were extremely wealthy American capitalists!

Americans, you had better wake up, before the noose is around your neck

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Your great Sept. issue arrived today. Instantly I must join the debate over the definition of "mestizo." I have taught world history and world religion in elementary school, but I will lean on Dr. William Pierce's definition, which I believe is the correct one.

I have always understood that a "mestizo" can be a mixture of black African, Amerind, and white. We must remember that there are black Africans in South America and that during the days of slavery, it was considered less stringent than the U.S. slavery because after so many years a slave in South America could purchase his freedom.

Arab slavery was considered the worst (perhaps next to black African slavery itself) because after a slave got too old to work, he was thrown out on the street.

And across Tampa Bay in Hillsboro County, Florida, the tax payers just voted in a referendum to give the profitmaking new owners of the Tampa Bay Bucs a new stadium. This was accomplished in part by combining it with tax money for schools, and fire and police. BUT, exit polls showed that it was the younger voters who voted "yes" — the younger, less well-informed voters.

The more mature voters were the "no's". These slick Jews, the Glazers, father and sons, must be rubbing their hands in glee at the stupid Goyim in Florida. I thought for awhile they wouldn't get it, and the mature adults nearly threw up at the results of the vote. Incredible! It's no wonder that democracy is our ruination as it was Ancient Greece's.

Re: Liberty Bell 10/96 "A Battle Plan" (Battle??)

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I think N.B. Forrest has blown his stack—gone completely bonkers! Deal with blacks? With us running the show? We are willing to work with blacks! What is the man ON? Whatever it is, it might get me through the day's television news despite all the jiving blacks, corkscrew curls, and niggers kissing white women—or almost.

"We must make that clear from the start!" The man is really raving mad. With the enemy, meaning our alien-controlled government in WDC, controlling all the media, all the armed forces, all the medical facilities, all the groceries, and all the money honey, NB Forest, where are we going to get a foothold? Take over the dwarf-like Robert Reich and hold him for ransom?

And then he says, "We are not haters or race-baiters." Speak for yourself, John, I am both a hater and a race-baiter. We are working with blacks now in case you haven't noticed, and getting everywhere we don't want to go.(In our face).

Of all the people I thought were crazy in the Movement, you Mr. Forrest, would be one of the last I would point to!!!!!!!!

"Outright liberals are becoming hard to find outside Massachusetts"! Wherever you live I want to go there. I am violently ill daily reading, hearing and conversing with liberals. Even our own White Nationalist comrades sometimes tell me that, well, we have to have responsibility (toward those pitiful scalping Indians in the PBS series on The West). "Responsibility" is just another term for guilt trip. We owe the Indians nothing, zilch, zero, not one blade of grass. Throughout human history great peoples have conquered land and taken slaves, so why are you joining the Semitic overlords who are wiping us out with guilt and "Working with blacks"?

There is one Solution, and the Führer had it, and that is the only path we need to keep. All these other crackpot schemes of the dung beetles is only so much dung.

Re: Liberty Bell, Sept. 1996

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I congratulate you on re-printing Mr. Hans Schmidt's very inclusive article from GANPAC Brief, July/August 1996, titled "Anti-Semitism, Found". As I read this very accurate portrayal of the Jew and his history of interaction with other peoples of the globe, I found myself thinking of these truths as they have passed through my mind over the years.

One main theme seen in the movies of the thirties and forties from alien ethnic Hollywood was of the rich girl marrying the family chauffeur and living happily ever afterward. Of course this inspired many silly girls to follow suit, usually much to their sorrow after they awakened from their Hollywood-induced euphoria. When they socialized with her friends he would not know which fork to use, that would put the relationship in more realistic perspective. There would be few commonalities for conversation.

And then there was the theme that the family butler was by far the superior man to the rich and powerful head of the house, Daddy. William Powell acted in at least a few of these fairy tales.

If this isn't left/liberal/Marxist brainwashing, I don't know what is. This even went back to English literature classes in high school, with the reading of "The Honorable Creighton", the story of the butler of a rich family in England being shipwrecked at sea and guess who emerged as the leader to take care of all on the deserted island? The butler, the admirable Creighton, of course. The daughter of the house became smitten with him and his prowess. Another left theme in literature brainwashing the nation's youth.

Then about twenty years ago there was the TV series, "Hazel," in which the family maid always straightened things out and got "Mr. B." on the right track in his business world. If this were plausible she would have been the business mogul and he the maid.

This, of course, plays to the lower echelon and lets them think that if they had a chance, they would be rich and competent, too.

I agree also with Mr. Schmidt's delineation of the Jewish myth that they have been a persecuted people throughout history. I recently did some browsing through, The Columbia History of the World, and have come to the conclusion that their current apparent success in world affairs came not from persecution but the opposite, tolerance throughout history, especially in the ancient and medieval world (1972 edition, chapters 25 and 35). If various cultures and civilizations in history had had the sagacity to have kept the jews out of their lands, the world would not be in the declining position it is in today, especially Western Civilization. They had some downs, but by and large they got the foothold, and stranglehold they have on the world today because there was more freedom, autonomy and tolerance than persecution.

Mr. Schmidt's article should be required reading in every classroom in the nation, school, college and home. It should be made available, free and under the table, if necessary. Where is the philanthropist to facilitate this?

Dear Landsmann:

5 September 1996

That article on the labor results of Affirmative Action really hit me where I live. I work for a government authority and have to deal with this situation every day. Many of our workers are negroes hired as a form of welfare. Once hired it is nearly impossible to fire them. About a third of the negroes are good workers—mostly the foreign ones who have not been taught from childhood that whites owe them a living. A third a poor workers who are good only for low grade work and have to be constantly supervised to even do that. The final third is useless and would be a drag on any company even if they worked for nothing. These creatures can't stay off drugd or drink and even coming to work on time is a big strain. They steal, destroy and dirty everything they touch. It is impossible for a white supervisor to discipline them as they immediately cry racism and and are supported by the co-racialists. A man can't be fired for incompetence but he can be for "racism" or other politically incorrect behavior. Thus the white supervisors basically let the vermin do as they please. Female coloreds are especially overprivileged being of a double minority. A single complaint of "sexual harassment" can ruin anybody they accuse. Thus they are allowed to do whatever they please whichever seldom inldues working. Thus the actual workers have to carry these drones.

Promoting negro supervisors to control the blacks doesn't work either, it just spreads the problem into management. The way my company copes is by creating useless vice presidential and other dummy management positions and putting blacks and females into them. All these useless jobs have to be paid for and whites and the better blacks have to do the work the others shirks. It is just like under Communism where the offices and industries were staffed with 35 people while there was barely work for five.

All the trash about "female equality" ignores that these women make most of their living with their sex. Their wages at work are only an addition to that. Yet they are to be given equal wages with men even though they don't do equal work. Further, women use their sex on the job to manipulate men. Tet if men respond to their sexual signals (as we are meant to) we are open to " sexual harassment" charges. I have noticed a definite stratification at work. The good looking women get the jobs in the airconditioned offices, the plain ones have to go work on the assembly lines. Amazing how women, who are a majority of humanity, can be declared a "minority." Any one group can be a minority except white men. We can never be privileged snce we have to support everyone else.

Well, we know how all this ends. Like all Communist systems it ends in bankruptcy. An Democracy ends with military rule. Certainly America is now a textbook case of the failure of Democracy. The Jews took over and lotted America without even working up a sweat. The failure of the system is manifest.

I hear reports that not only Henry Kissinger but every top Jew in North America was on that Pan Am flight 800 that was shot down off Long Island. Sherman Skolnick of Chicago reports that Clinton was told not to run for re-election like Johnson in 1968 but, instead of quitting, his response was to have all the top Jews killed. If so, military rule is getting closer and closer.

Sincerely, S.R., New York State

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I am enclosing an article ["The People of Thule", see LB November 1996] which has been much admired by friends but was never published. It's a bit hard on the Jews. But now that we are in the final phase of the agenda as outlined in The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, it seems an appropriate time to present it to the victimized Whites of this country.

I remember this country as it was in the beginning of this century. It was 1918 and I was nine years old, standing beside my Uncle Dick, in a small town in northern New York. Every Saturday night we had a band concert. The farmers would come in with their rigs and the towns people would gather to gossip and shop, and listen to the music. The crowd had gathered along Main Street in quiet respect to hear the final number, The Stars and Stripes Forever. Suddenly their was a stir and everyone stepped to the edge of the sidewalk to look at something coming up the street. I pulled my uncle's hand and asked, "What is it, Uncle Dick?"

"You'll see in a minute," he told me, and held me up so that I could see.

An open Ford car was coming very slowly up the street—cars were becoming a common sight at that time, especially Fords. Standing stiffly erect beside the driver and holding up his arm in a dedicated salute, was young Dave Calvert who had come home on furlough after being wounded in combat. There was utter silence as the car slowly passed the bandstand as they played the final phrases of the National Anthem. And I saw tears in the eyes of many. Needless to say, we were all white gentiles and fiercely patriotic and proud. I still remember that scene as vividly as if it had happened yesterday. I doubt that it would happen today. Young Calvert would be lucky not to be greeted with laughter. We've come a long, long way since those days of innocent self-confidence.

It is true that our present degradation is the result of an ancient conspiracy motivated and controlled by the Zionist Jews who have a passionate hatred for everything we represent, but it seems to me to go beyond that. There is a helpless sense of inevitability surrounding us. I wonder if the ancient Romans didn't feel the same way in the last days of their empire as they sought refuge in their villas in Sicily. Our remoted corners, chiefly the uncontaminated northwest, grow fewer as the juggernaught power of the Jew-controlled federal government grows more menacing as they usher in the New World Order via either Clinton or Dole.

Will we stand up to it any better than White South African? I'd like to think so, but.....

Best regards
Lee Norris, California

Enclosed is my check for a one-year subscription. You and the other writers definitely stand up for white, Aryan rights, something that more people should be willing to do. Aryans should be proud of their race and ready to fight for our lost rights! Keep up the good work!

7 November 1996

Dear George,

Well, the Great Liar has been re-elected, thanks largely to mush-headed "soccer moms." If over-polite Republicans didn't have such a phobia of being called "extremist" and "racist," we'd have a chance of stopping, or slowing, the march toward the One World Government. Our nation must pull out of the United nations. Clinton is a Communist who will put our national sovereignty under UN command if these gutless Republicans don't stand up in Congress (the way the great Louis McFadden did in the Thirties) and call slimy ADL stooges like Chas. Schumer and Benjamin Gilman to account! But will they? The Culture Wars go on, but our side is not hurling enough volleys. Let's stop being nice guys and start hitting back, hard! Make the media pay attention to us.

Conservative talk show host Art Bell said last night he can't understand why racism still goes on after all these enlightening years! Whhat a sheltered life away from congoid savages he must live. Of course overwhelming black racism in society never occurred to him. I cussed him in my room when I heard his blather. Why can't we (i.e., White folks) just rise above it? etc, etc.

Art Bell is a puke and a softie like all conservative talk show hosts. Probably the most palatable of them is Michael Reagan who comes on with piles of facts about politicians, bills in Congress, etc, but he, too, can fail miserably when he doubts, with vehemence, the Jewish New World Order etc, that he shreds literature he gets from "far right extremists," etc. Since I have no shortwave radio to pick up programs like American Dissident Voices I must content myself with on-air conservatives, and thus do a lot of wincing.

Michael Reagan said last night that the $97 billion debt that Third World nations (most of them African) owe the World Bank, IMF, the UN and other international lending agencies, will just be declared canceled and new "loans" (actually grants) be made available to these corrupt, evil black dictators (some of whom are cannibals!). Where will this largesse come from? Right, the U.S. taxpayers, of course. That little twerp Jew Robert Reich is a major figure behind this scam. What really sickened me was the fact that no subsequent call-ins ever mentioned what MR had just said. No one cared!

We need to find a way to combat feminism's unnatural emasculating of American and European men. We must stand up to false Afrocentrism taught in schools everywhere before our own kids start to believe it. Many of them do. Conservatives are good at writing books denouncing Afrocentrism but are impotent at stopping it. Who reads their books? Other conservatives, no one else, except the occasional White racist like myself. As a race we are in a pickle! In a very salty, uncompronisingly briny pickle jar.

George, I wish you the best of health and Liberty Bell the best of luck. I hope some rich White man would give you the financial boost you need to carry on and to publish Volume Two of Dr. Revilo Oliver's astute writings.

If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publishor of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

Our People, The Aryans

by J. B. Campbell

Great changes are coming regarding the historical record of our people, the Aryans. As we learn about our ancestors we learn about ourselves. This sort of learning is greatly feared by those who control education, information and entertainment—the modern mechanisms of control.

It is in the short-term interest of non-Aryan peoples to hide our historical record. We have effectively been cut off from our roots. We Aryans are forbidden by law to associate exclusively with our own kind. We are forbidden by law to complain about it, as well. No other people in North America or Europe is treated thusly. We may be the majority in this democracy but we are treated by our government as if we were in a "people's republic," a persecuted minority without rights. This is all because we don't know anything about ourselves.

There has been an almost unbelievable find in the deserts of western China, in Sinkiang Province, now known in PC as Xinjiang. The Tarim Basin of the Täklimaken Desert is the burial ground of our Aryan ancestors, more than a hundred of whose corpses have been recovered from the naturally preserving effects of the dry sands and freezing temperatures. More than a thousand skeletons without muscle tissue and hair have also been discovered. The Chinese have known about them for many decades but have been resolute in their refusal to tell us much about them. Why? Because it is now confirmed that some of our Aryan ancestors moved into that part of China at least 4,000 years ago and brought their culture with them. Apparently, their culture became an integral part of the Chinese culture.

As National Geographic puts it in the March, 1996 issue, "The finding that the mummies significantly predate Han Chinese presence in the area is affecting modern politics and has caused cultural and political consternation in some quarters." For example, the article's author, Thomas B. Allen, relates the following: "At Niya I found a sherd of pottery bearing the fingerprint of the potter. Excited, I showed it to Wang Binghua, Xinjiang's leading archaeologist and an authority on Niya, who was traveling with us. I asked for permission to bring it back to the United States, where, I told him, a forensic anthropologist might be able to extract information about the potter by studying the fingerprint. Wang Binghua, a Han Chinese, held the pottery for a moment, then asked, 'Would he be able to tell if the potter was a White man?' I said I didn't know. He nodded and put the sherd in his pocket. I never saw it again."

Not much has appeared in our press, naturally, about this find. The few articles published contain, however, much wonderful information. An excellent report is found in the April, 1994 issue of Discover magazine. Author Evan Hadingham writes: "Where exactly did these apparent Caucasians come from? And what were they doing at remote desert oases in Central Asia? Any answers to these questions will most likely fuel a wide-ranging debate about the role outsiders played in the rise of Chinese civilization. As far back as the second century B.C., Chinese texts refer to alien people called Yuezhi and the Wusun, who lived on China's far-western borders; the texts make it clear that these people were regarded as troublesome 'barbarians.' Until recently, scholars have tended to downplay evidence of any early trade or contact between China and the West, regarding the development of Chinese civilization as an essentially homegrown affair sealed off from outside influences; indeed, this view is still extremely congenial to the present Chinese regime. Yet some archaeologists have begun to argue that these supposed barbarians might have been responsible for introducing into China such basic items as the wheel and the first metal objects. Exactly who these Central Asian outsiders might have been, however—what language they spoke and where they came from—is a puzzle. No wonder, then, that scholars see the discovery of the blond mummies as a sensational new find."

The scholars do. The overlords of our culture do not. This is dangerous science. Professor Victor H. Mair writes, "...the Wusun people who, described in Chinese sources as having blue-green eyes and red beards, were undoubtedly Indo-European or had interbred extensively with Indo-Europeans." (Journal of Indo-European Studies (JIES) Fall/Winter '95) These Tarim Basin people brought not only the wheel and bronze objects to China but also woven fabrics. In the Sept/Oct, 1996 issue of Archaeology magazine, we read the following by Powledge & Rose: "Study of garments worn by 3,000-year-old mummies excavated in western China's Tarim Basin (see Archaeology, March/April 1995) has yielded the world's oldest cashmere threads. Other mummies wore wool twills woven in a plaid design dating to 720 B.C. that required looms most likely brought by settlers from the Eurasian steppes."

"Irene Good of the University of Pennsylvania and Elizabeth J. W. Barber of Occidental College examined textile samples from two sites, Chärchän and Hami, where mummies have been excavated since the late 1970s by Chinese and Uighur scholars. Good identified the cashmere threads from Chärchän by their shape, fineness, and consistency of diameter. 'The Chärchän textiles indicate a high degree of skill in sorting and spinning fibers,' she says. 'The presence of cashmere shows a very sophisticated breeding of goats for the fleece.' The plaid twill was dyed blue and derived from a hairy, rather than woolly, fleece. Barber says there is no evidence that the Chinese ever made wool twills on their looms, which were designed for silk, and that wool-weaving technology arrived with the western settlers of the Tarim Basin ca. 1800 B.C." (S.P.M. Harrington, Archaeology, Sept/Oct '96)

There is only one film of the mummies, produced by Scientific American Frontiers (SAF) for the Public Broadcasting System in 1995. Twelve minutes of a fifty minute program are devoted to the mummies. "'Dragon Science'—This special takes viewers to China, where host Alan Alda visits the site of the world's most spectacular mummy find—a trove of extraordinarily well preserved and richly robed individuals who died some 4,000 years ago..." Alda introduces Prof. Mair: "If it weren't for this man, the mummies would have probably remained an obscure curiosity. Victor Mair, a China scholar from the University of Pennsylvania, visited the museum soon after we'd filmed..." When the Chinese officials realize that Mair and the film crew are associated, they ask the latter to leave. Soon after his visit a harsh article condemning Mair's work appeared in the state newspaper. "In China," says Alda, "even technical archaeological arguments can't be conducted freely... If the mummies were the trailblazers along this great world trade route [the Silk Road], four thousand years ago, it could mean that China acquired important new ideas from the west, and that's what irritates the government."

For those of us who will not be visiting the Ürümchi museum the video (Program # 602) is available from SAF at 800-315-5010.

One of the most fascinating details of these people is their fondness for the swastika, referred to delicately by National Geographic, March '96 as a "moving sun, perhaps a sign of Mithraic worship." It is the hakenkreuz, shown carved in a bowl found in Niya. "What is more, the Tarim Basin people were fond of spiral solar symbols for good luck which they painted on their faces and engraved on the bridles of their horses. The swastika is one such migratory symbol that is found all the way from ancient Mesopotamia to the New World." (Victor Mair, JIES, ibid.)

The mummies, or Caucasoid corpses, are at present deteriorating, now that they've been unearthed, in and around Ürümchi due to lack of official interest in preserving them as well as to the lack of modern facilities. A few are in the museum there but the rest have been put back in the ground for lack of space. If they were truly concerned about this incalculable loss to history they would send them to European or American museums, if only temporarily, for proper care. A few European scholars are trying to analyze the corpses before they decay further. Professor Mair has promised the Chinese to help build a "mummy museum" in Ürümchi. "With the help of interested citizens and organizations around the world, I am confident that I will be able to fill this obligation to preserve properly and display adequately this common heritage of humanity." (op. cit.)

Our good friend and Liberty Bell subscriber, Ernest H. Hume, is a geophysicist and was hired by the Chinese government a few years ago to interpret seismographic data gained in explorations in the Tarim Basin. At one point his government assistant asked if he would like to visit the museum in Ürümchi. Glad for the break, Mr. Hume did so and was amazed when he encountered the Caucasoid corpses in their colorful woolen fabrics and leather boots. Even his Chinese assistant was vague about the corpses' backgrounds, such is the state of Chinese government reluctance to share knowledge of the Aryans with its own people. Mr. Hume was appalled at the lack of care for these invaluable witnesses to our prehistory. They lay in the basement on marble benches, each covered with a blanket! Since then the Chinese have grudgingly moved several of the corpses upstairs and put them under glass but the rest of them are quietly rotting away. This is the clearest example of non-Aryan peoples having an interest in hiding our historical record. When our people are allowed to examine them, they take the greatest care in the interests of accuracy.

"Study of mtDNA [mitochondrial DNA] from ancient desiccated corpses found in the Tarim Basin in northwestern China by Paolo Francalacci of the University of Sássari, Sardinia, exemplifies the rigorous procedures required to prevent contamination. When he collected samples, Francalacci wore disposable rubber gloves to avoid skin contact and a surgical mask to prevent possible contamination from saliva when speaking or breathing. Disposable sterile scalpels were used, and the gloves and scalpels were changed when sampling a new corpse to prevent cross contamination. The specimens, about one to two grams of muscle, skin, or bone, were placed in sterile plastic tubes that were sealed to avoid the growth of microörganisms. The least exposed parts of the body, such as the inner thighs or underarms, were selected for the sampling, with the aim of analyzing tissue that had been subjected to little or no handling during excavations and curation. In some cases it was possible to take bone and soft tissue samples from beneath the mummies' woolen clothing. Two to four samples were taken from each individual so that the accuracy of the analysis could be checked. In the laboratory, disposable tools and glassware were employed whenever possible to minimize the possibility of contamination from previous use. Before being used, all chemicals, glassware and instrumentation that could be contaminated were exposed to ultraviolet light to destroy extraneous DNA."

"Paolo Francalacci took samples from several of the bodies, dated to 3,200 years ago, from a graveyard near Hami and from other sites in the region. Preliminary results of the DNA analysis for these mummies suggest a possible European origin, although further research is needed to identify them more precisely. Analysis of DNA, however, could shed light only on genetic lineage. The long process of physical and cultural evolution of the ancient Xinjiang people is more complicated, and will be understood only by combining genetic, linguistic, historical, archaeological and anthropological evidence..." (Archaeology, Sept-Oct, '96)

The same article goes on to say, "Documentation of the early presence of Caucasian people in northwestern China, and information about their affinities with either modern European or Indo-Iranian populations, could contribute to the debate about the spread of Indo-European languages. Chinese and Uighur archaeologists have been excavating naturally mummified bodies there since the 1970s...The mummies' Caucasian features suggest a relationship with the Tokharians, an Indo-European people that lived in the area in historical times. Tokharians were the eastern-most Indo-European speakers, but their language was more akin to Celtic and Germanic languages of western Europe than to geographically closer Balto-Slavic and Indo-Iranian languages. Tokharian also had some archaic features similar to Hittite."

About the Tokharians, Mair writes, "Although they do not speak, we know exactly what the Caucasoid corpses of the Tarim Basin look like because their bodies and the clothes they wear have been preserved for us. Fortunately, we also know what the Tokharians look like, because they were vividly portrayed in wall paintings at Kizil (also spelled Qizil) and Kumtura (also spelled Qumtura), Buddhist cave sites near Kucha. There we find aristocratic donors [of money and goods] with red or blond hair, parted neatly in the middle, long noses, blue or green eyes, set in narrow faces, and tall, slim bodies. Like European knights, they wear long broadswords inserted in scabbards hung from their waists. The swords are of the early Gothic type, with disk-like pommels and cross-shaped grip-guards. Yet they are not fully European knights, for they are wearing Sassanian dress and have on their foreheads the Indian religious mark known as a tilaka!" (Victor Mair, JIES op. cit.)

In April, 1996 there was held at the University of Pennsylvania an international conference, "The Bronze Age and Iron Age People of Eastern Central Asia". Organized by Professor Mair of the Department of Asian and Middle Eastern Studies, the conference enabled scholars working in various regions and time periods in the Eurasian steppes to bring about a cohesive exchange of research for the first time. It took Prof. Mair, whose father herded his cattle on the slopes of the Austrian Alps, two years to organize the conference.

"...Mair—who saw the original collection of mummified corpses in 1987, at the region's provincial museum—will never forget his own haunting first impression of them... 'I was thunderstruck...I just stood there for a couple of hours. I almost thought it was some kind of hoax,' he said. 'All of their bodies were completely intact. They just looked so alive.' And with features so stunningly non-Asian. They were clearly the remains of a Caucasoid people, with dark blond or yellowish-brown hair, deep-set eyes and long limbs..." (Ellen O'Brien, Philadelphia Inquirer, April, 1996)

"Where did they come from, and why? Those questions also possess Dolkun Kamberi, a Uygur archaeologist who grew up in the region and has recovered several of the preserved corpses. Kamberi grew up hearing folk stories about non-Chinese people who had settled the region in some unrecorded time, and about foreign archaeologists who had found grave sites in the province during the last century. As a native Uygur, he has medium brown hair and non-Asian features; he believes the Tarim Basin people's history is his history. Learning who the Tarim Basin's inhabitants might have been, he said, is 'very important for writing Asian history, and world history. In my opinion, without that region, there would be no Asian history.'

"Some scholars believe the Tarim Basin people probably migrated through central Eurasia to the land that, centuries later, became known as the southern leg of the famous Silk Route linking East and West." (Ellen O'Brien, ibid.)

The abstracts of the conference and a lengthy bibliography are for sale from: Mummies Abstracts, University of Pennsylvania, Dep't of Asian and ME Studies, Philadelphia, PA 19104.

A valuable collection of essays on the Caucasoid corpses can be found in the Fall/Winter 1995 issue of the Journal of Indo-European Studies (1133 13th St. NW, Suite C-2, Washington, DC 20005 Tel: 202-371-2700).

This scholarly investigation cannot help but lead to our liberation from the lords of the memory hole if we will just read the literature and spread the word.

It is my contention that we Aryans have just one real problem and that is Christianity. Much has been written in this journal about this pernicious doctrine which has weakened us unto death with its basic premise that the Jews are the Chosen People of God. Identity Christians go this one further by claiming that they, not the Jews, are God's favorites. Now, a number of my friends are of this persuasion and it has come to be one of my missions to disabuse them of this notion, which is that Aryans are the Hebrews, the Israelites, of the Old Testament. I tell them that simply to read the Old Testament will knock this idea from their heads, but that hasn't been a good approach in most cases—it is not a fun read. Even the recent computerized decoding (by Jews) of a stela (small stone monument) found in Jordan, which revealed the truth about the evil Hebrew god, Molech, hasn't been effective. (Jews, using a computer, decoded the Phoenician inscription and found to their great embarrassment that Molech was not an ancient Hebrew god who demanded the sacrifice of children by burning them. Molech was in fact the Hebrew practice of sacrificing their children by burning them.) I ask my friends, "Can you identify with this?"

Next, I wrote a linguistics professor at an Ivy League university for her opinion. "There are several religions which adhere to the idea that Europeans are the true Israelites of the Old Testament...I think linguistics may be the key to the truth, whatever it may be. Do Hebrew and Aramaic appear in the Indo-European language tree?" Her reply: "Hebrew and Aramaic are not Indo-European languages; they belong to the Semitic group (together with Akkadian—i.e., ancient Babylonian and Assyrian—, Arabic, and quite a few languages of Ethiopia). Semitic is, in turn, a subgroup of Afroasiatic, which also includes ancient Egyptian, the Berber languages, and various language groups of the Sahel region and (again) Ethiopia. Some crackpots have tried to insist on a connection between Afroasiatic and Indo-European, but it just isn't provable (in spite of many decades of work on that hypothesis)."

That, too, fell on rather deaf ears. So, instead of trying to talk my friends out of their Semitic religion I will now use a new approach: If it is religion they must have, then here is the authentic religion of our Aryan ancestors...

This article was originally going to be about the Freemasons. As students of Freemasonry know, the basic handbook of the craft is Morals & Dogma, written by Albert Pike and published in 1871.

Pike was Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, 33°, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, from 1859 to his death in 1891. Today he would be the Sovereign Grand Commander, which is the top of the tree and is based on seniority. The SGC literally gives orders to U.S. presidents (as I shall demonstrate another time), many of whom, from Washington on, have been adepts of the 33°. Today, the Sovereign Grand Commander, among his other functions, edits the house organ, New Age magazine. The subversive New Age movement is a Freemasonic operation. The American Revolution, the French Reign of Terror, our Civil War, the Bolshevik Reign of Terror, our World Wars were all run by Freemasons. Freemasonry controls every single aspect of our lives, based on Freemasonic infiltration of the federal, state and local governments. The homosexual transvestite FBI director, J. Edgar Hoover, is enshrined in the Washington Masonic Temple, headquarters of the 33° (Official and Confidential, Anthony Summers). Most judges, lawyers, policemen and other officials are members of the craft, as are many ministers and priests, doctors and educators. Freemasonry has corrupted virtually every single city, town and village across our great land. Instrumental in this corruption has been Albert Pike's doctrine, which is based largely on the Jewish Kabbalah, a system of esoteric theosophy developed by rabbis from the 7th to the 18th centuries.

For example, Pike writes, on page 843, "Moses carried Orthodoxy out of Egypt, and in the Secret Traditions of the Kabbalah we find a Theology entire, perfect, unique, like that which in Christianity is most grand and best explained by the Fathers and the Doctors, the whole with a consistency and a harmoniousness which it is not as yet given to the world to comprehend."

So it is extremely ironic that one year after the publication of Morals & Dogma Albert Pike should have completed a manuscript entitled Indo-Aryan Deities and Worship as Contained in the Rig-Veda. It is more than ironic—it is astounding. In his preface he writes: "It is quite uncertain, now that I have this book finished, whether I shall ever care to publish it. It was not commenced for that purpose; and it may always remain a monotype, in manuscript." It did so remain from 1872 until the Freemasons printed 800 copies of it in 1930. My wife, amazingly, located Copy No. 261. It is understandable that Pike would not want his research made available to the public or even to his fellow Masons:

"The inquiry has opened to me an entirely new chapter of the history of human thought, and given me an infinitely higher conception of the Aryan intellect. I now see how, out of the primitive simplicity of a natural and reasonable religion, and of ideas simple and yet profoundly philosophical, there grew the most monstrous and debasing faiths, the most absurd and delirious fables, the most irrational mysticism, and the Phallic and Lingam worship with its disgusting obscenities and Priapean abominations, as well as the incoherent no- tions of the Kabbalah and the vagaries of Gnosticism." [emphasis added]

Apprentice Masons are told that the "G" in the compass and square logo stands for "God." Later they are told that it stands for "Geometry." In the higher mysteries they are informed that it stands for "Gnosticism," or mystical knowledge.

On page 28 he writes, "When we read the Brahmanic books, as when we read the Kabbalistic books, we are amazed at the vagaries, not of the fancy or of the imagination, but of lunacy and idiotic babble, in which the human mind can indulge." [emphasis added] On page 416 he writes "The writers of the Kabbalah did not know what they meant, for they, for the most part, meant nothing. The composers of the Veda always meant something, and knew what they meant."

For some reason, this brilliant man, who lured millions of Aryans into the alien darkness of the Kabbalah, writes of the Aryan god as "...a Deity beneficent, indulgent, protecting and not merciless, cruel and vindictive like the Semitic Gods that have so long been the Christian God..."

The great question which haunts you after having examined this work is, how could Pike stick with Jewish Freemasonry after writing such words? Jekyll and Hyde? The corruption of absolute power? Hypocrisy? Or did this power-mad gangster merely collect and admire Aryan history the way some people collect and admire butterflies, not sharing them with anyone else? Why did he not share this important knowledge with anyone while he was alive? The answer is that it would have undermined and ultimately destroyed Freemasonry; self-respecting Aryans would have shunned it like the plague.

Pike leans heavily on several scholars, most notably Professor H. H. Wilson, the primary translator of the Veda from Sanskrit to English, and Max (Friedrich Maximilian) Müller (1823-1900), the German-born, Oxford professor of English Sanskrit who is today considered a Nazi by Hindus who pretend that the Rig-Veda has something to do with Hinduism, which it has not. Müller makes it clear that the Hindus (Indians) expropriated and then misinterpreted the Aryan Rig-Veda and turned it into something unintelligible.

> "What is commonly called Hindu mythology is of little or no avail for comparative purposes. The stories of Siva, Vishnu, Mahâdeva, Parvati, Kali, Krishna, etc., are of late growth, and indigenous to India." (Müller, Chips from a German Workshop)

Pike adds, "It is enough for me to say here, that I think the conclusion justifiable, that the earliest Aryans had no other Deities than the sun, moon and other celestial luminaries, and that, after that they had advanced beyond this, to the worship of universals or principles (as fire and light, for example)... The Hindus, it may at once be said, were almost totally ignorant as to the signification of the Vedic Gods; and what they were must be determined from the Veda itself."

"Of that which is the most important and interesting portion of the history of every race and nation, the history of the progress of the intellect and of its religious and philosophical ideas, the Vedas contain the only authentic record..."

"Veda meant 'knowing,' or 'knowledge.' It appears in the Gothic vait, the Anglo-Saxon wât, the German weiss, and the English "wise, wisdom," and "to wit." Rig-Veda means the Veda of Hymns of Praise, Rich..."

Following are more excerpts from Indo-Aryan Deities and Worship (narrative by Pike unless otherwise noted, my comments in brackets):

[RELIGION AND RACE]

The Veda is certainly the second oldest book in the world, and it contains the religious hymns of our ancestors; for we, of whatever mixture of European blood, are wholly of the Aryan race. Germans, Gauls, Franks, Latins, Saxons, Kelts, Sclaves, all are of one blood and family; and the English and all other European languages, and the Sanskrit, Zend and Persian are but varieties of one and the same original language, produced by intermixtures of various others. We are by nature Aryan, Indo-European, not Semitic. There is no mixture of Semitic in the European languages. The indigenous peoples whom the Aryans conquered, and with whom they mixed, were of a race or races totally different from the Semites. Our spiritual kith and kin are to be found in India, Persia, Sclavonia, Greece, Italy and Germany; not in Mesopotamia, Egypt or Palestine.

The exodus from Egypt, according to the approved chronology, occurred 1,648 years before Christ. The Vedas were compiled 1,400 years before Christ, when the language in which the hymns were written had become a dead language and kingdoms had been founded and grown grey with age, since they were sung in the country of the Five Rivers [the Punjab].

Müller ascribes the composition of the Vaidic Hymns to a later period than [Baron C. C. J. von] Bunsen does; and in his fear of shocking English prejudices, is exceedingly vague and unsatisfactory upon that point. Even Bunsen is careful not to say that the Veda is older than the Hebrew books. The Biblical chronology, the necessity of considering mere myths and legends as historical, and the supposed inexorable necessity of admitting that all mankind has descended from one man and woman, are sadly in the way of exhaustive inquiry as to the origines [sic] of human races and human languages.

Bunsen thinks that the oldest Vedas are the monuments of Aryan life in the country of the Five Rivers. I think they are monuments of an older life, on the steppes. He thinks that the Aryans immigrated into the Indus country about 4,000 years before Christ, then having the old Bactrian living language, in which the old Zend books were written; and in that country the Sanskrit grew up... The emigration from Sogd [Sogdiana] into Bactria, he places about 5000 B.C. He concludes that the original emigration from the northeast of the primitive land took place from 10000 to 8000 B.C.; that the separation of the Germans, Sclaves and Pelasgians occurred, successively, from 8000 to 5000 B.C.; Zarathustra's reform, about 3500, and the crossing of the Sutlej into the country beyond, where Brahmanism was established about 3,000 years before Christ.

Logical evidence infallibly establishes it as a proven and demonstrated fact, that great intervals of time elapsed between the successive out-flowings of the several streams of Aryan emigration; and that, when the Vedic hymns were composed, the race had an immense antiquity, and Aryan thought and imagination had been busy during the great cycles of centuries. The ancestors of the Kelts, Goths, Germans and Sclaves, as well as those of the Greeks and Latins, were men of full intellectual stature, and in no sense barbarians; and these had gone with their herds to conquer Europe, ages before the separation of the Irano- and Indo-Aryan branches of their race: and centuries more had passed, after that separation, before the ancient tongue spoken in the valleys of the Bolor Tagh and in the valleys of Samarcand and Bokhara, had become the Sanskrit of the Veda and the Iranic of the Zend-Avesta.

> The Veda, by its language and its thoughts, supplies that distant background in the history of all the religions of the Aryan race, which was missed, indeed, by every careful observer, but could formerly be supplied by guesswork only.
>
> We have in the Veda, ancient thought expressed in ancient language. We see reflected in it a phase of the intellectual life of man, to which there is no parallel in any other part of the world. In its hymns we see man left to himself, to solve the enigma of this world and life.

> There are hymns in the Vedas so full of thought and speculation, that, at that early period, no Poet in any other nation could have conceived them. (Müller)

We see him [the Aryan] with the simple desires of a simple life in the forests and plains; for almost all the hymns express the wants and wishes of the herdsman, and the dweller in the woods only traversable by paths, or in the plains, where only the luminaries of the day and night could be his guides. Some show the occupation of the worshiper to be that of husbandman [farmer]. They are villagers, but not denizens of towns and cities. Continually the prayer is for wealth and treasure, but these seem always to mean only horses and cattle, and for food. Everywhere in the hymns we find horses and cattle prayed for, as the chief wealth. For them, the life they lived here seems to have been sufficient, the things of this world all that were to be cared for; and they neither lament the brevity of life, nor concern themselves about or anticipate another.

This herdsman or husbandman sees that fire and light are indispensable to human existence, and that they alone reveal to man the existence of the material universe. What they reveal, they seem to create. He is awakened by the dawn or the sun, or, watching before the dawn sees the light-bearer, the beautiful and brilliant Morning Star rise calmly into the sky and smile kindly upon him; and he adored the dawn, the sun, the Morning Star as manifestations of the one great universal light; but I do not find that he invokes the favour of a God, who is not fire nor light, nor any force or power or essence or principle of Nature, but a being invisible and incomprehensible, above Nature and its forces. I think I can most positively assert that there is no such conception in the Veda.

He makes the Fire a person, and invests it, as a universal, with the characteristics of spirituality. He adores the Fire-Spirit, the universal Light-Principle, the Heat-Principle, as Gods; and they become not merely Powers, but Persons, to him, protectors and benefactors, who hear his prayers and are intelligent and wise. Under various names he adores the same light and fire as variously manifested in shape, place and limitation of forms, as the sun, moon, planets and stars. Even prayer, adoration silent or uttered, and food itself, become Deities, by a strictly logical process of thought, and not by mere vagary of fancy or imagination. He adores the fire and light, also, in the dawn, the Aurora and the lightning. The winds are Gods for him, and even the rivers become Goddesses. The sacrificial Fire fed by the fuel which also he deifies, is the messenger of the Gods and his mediator with them.

Professor Müller says,

> We study in the Veda a theogony [origin of the gods], of which that of Hesiod is but the last chapter. We can study therein man's natural growth, and the results to which it may lead, under the most favourable conditions.

And we can study the intellect and the intellectual development of the last created and noblest race of men, whose history is that of the civilized world.

The original religion was adoration of the supposed superior beings of which fire and light were manifestations. The mind had made a great advance when it had come to worship, not the fire itself but the unseen and intelligent Spirit of the fire, of which the light was deemed a manifestation. There is at least nothing slavish or brutal, sensual or groveling in these hymns, nothing of the barbarian or savage. A spirit of grave thoughtfulness pervades them; they are highly devotional and reverential; of philosophy there is little; and yet the idea that there was a spirit, of whom no cognition could be had, in fire, a spirit intelligent, wise and powerful, was of the same profound nature as that of the immortal soul, united with the body, or of the divine soul in nature. It was not the idea of a savage or a child, but of a philosopher and metaphysician; and I think that as these hymns are better understood, and we penetrate more deeply into the thought of the Poets who composed them, we shall find ideas there, which have reappeared in all the great philosophies of the world, and been essential in all the great religions. [emphasis added]

Mr. [Sir George William] Cox (Aryan Mythology I, 40 et. seq.) says:

> The mental condition of the men of those early ages determined the character of their language; and that condition exhibited in them, as in children, how, the waking of a feeling which endowed all outward things with a life not unlike their own. Of the several objects which met their eyes, they had no positive knowledge, whether of their origin, their nature or their properties. But they themselves had life, and therefore all other things must have lifealso. They were under no necessity of personifying them, for they had for themselves no distinctions between consciousness and personality. They knew nothing of the conditions of their own life, or of any other; and therefore all things on the earth or in the heavens were invested with the same vague idea of existence. The sun, the moon, the stars, the earth, the clouds, winds, fire, storms and lightnings, were all living beings. Could they help thinking that these also were conscious beings like themselves? Their very words would, by an inevitable necessity, express this conviction. Their language would admit no single expression from which the attribute of life was excluded, while it would vary the forms of that life, with unerring instinct. Every object would be a living reality, and every word a speaking picture. For the herdsman of the valleys or the steppes, there would be no bare recurrence of days and seasons, but every morning, the Dawn would drive her bright flocks to the blue pastures of Heaven, before the birth of the Lord of Day from the toiling womb of Night. Round the living progress of the new-born Sun there would be grouped a lavish imagery, expressive of the most intense sympathy with what we term the operation of material forces, and not less expressive of the utter absence of even the faintest knowledge. For every aspect of the material world he would find some life-giving expression...
> However imperfect and absurd the notions of Deity of the ancient Aryans > may seem to us to be, it must be admitted that no people was ever so anxious to perform the service of the Gods, as these ancestors of our European races. It is the Gods who conquer their enemies, who give them wealth, health, children, friends, and plentiful harvests. They humbly acknowledge their dependence on their Deities, and touchingly express their trust in their beneficence and kindness. (Müller)

No one supreme God is invoked, like Jehovah or Brahm[a]: and no doubt the religion of the Veda is polytheism.

[Regarding the theory of evolution, Müller writes]

> ...as far as we can trace back the footsteps of man, even on the lowest strata of history, we see that the divine gift of a sound and sober intellect belonged to him from the very first; and the idea of a humanity emerging from the depths of an animal brutality can never be maintained again.

I do not apply these words to races of men like the lowest Africans, Australians and American Indians; but to the great races whose history is the history of civilization. The Aryan race was never a race of barbarians.

Probably none of the hymns can be imputed to a date so early as that of the separation of either the Sclavic, German or Keltic branch, from the great Aryan stock, though the Vedas contain a great number of the roots from which the words in most common use in the languages of those branches were derived or developed.

Dr. Muir says (Original Sanskrit Texts)

> We find this name (Aryas) applied to the forefathers of the higher classes among the Indians, in contradistinction to the Dasyus, who appear to have been a people of a different race, and to have been settled in India before the Aryas (and who were also of dark complexions, and barbarians or savages).

Dâsa has in [Theodor] Benfey [Sanskrit-English Dictionary] the single meaning "slave," as, probably, dam+sa, dam meaning "to be tamed, to tame, to subdue." But those not subdued, and who were open and dangerous enemies, numerous and powerful, were called by this name, and also dasyu.

Each stream of emigration encountered the opposition of an aboriginal race, in every country into which it flowed, and everywhere they were conquerors, or the original language would have died out for each. Each intermingled with one or more aboriginal races, one in greater, another in less proportion; and the language of each mingled with that of the conquered people. Hence the vast differences and also the striking identities between the Welsh tongue and the Sanskrit, the Sclavonic and Persian, the German and the Latin and Greek; and hence also the great differences of physical and intellectual characteristics, and the peculiar and apparently permanent types of the Irish, Grecian, Roman and Hindu face. In fact, the language and the type and cast of features, and the intellectual character of some of the races come chiefly from the conquered aborigines, while others have preserved infinitely more of the Aryan type, probably because the conquerors were, relatively to the conquered, more numerous: and these physical and intellectual differences are also, no doubt, greatly owing to immense original differences of face, form and intellect, among the aboriginal races of Asia and Europe, that the Aryans overcame and mingled with.

Thus I satisfied myself that every one of their Deities had for them a perfectly distinct and clear personality and individuality; that their ideas were not in the least vague, incoherent or confused; that their imagination was perfectly well-regulated, and that every epithet and phrase was logically appropriate and correct. So also, upon a partial examination, I found it to be in the ancient Zarathustrian Gâthâs, which are, I do not doubt, even older than the Vedic hymns.

I found in both, the most profound philosophic or metaphysical ideas, which those of every philosophy and religion have merely developed; and that, so far from being Barbarians or Savages, the old Aryan herdsmen and husbandmen, in the Indus country under the Himalayan Mountains, on the rivers of Bactria, and, long before, on the Scythic Steppes where they originated, were men of singularly clear and acute intellects, profound thought and an infinite reverence of the beings whom they worshiped [fire and sunlight].

This writer [Samuel Johnson, Oriental Religions] has the key of interpretation of the Veda, and has, I think, in a few sentences expressed more of the real meaning of its hymns, than any other commentator. For example:

> The word Div, designating at once the clear light of the sky...and whatsoever spiritual meanings these simple instincts intimately associated therewith, has endured as the root word of worship for the whole Aryan race: in all its branches the appellatives of Deity are waves of this primal sound, flowing through all its manifold and changing religions with the serene transcendence of an eternal law...
>
> To appreciate the results of these contemplative tendencies, we must recall the old Aryan worship of the clear Light of Day.
>
> Their religion, like their language, was already mature, when they were born. Do not seek in them the beginning of the religious sentiment, the dawning of the idea of the Divine. Their Deities are all familiar and ancestral. It is already an intimate household faith, which ages have endeared... As far back as we can trace the life of man, we find the river of prayer and praise flowing as naturally as it is flowing now. We cannot find its beginning, because we cannot find the beginning of the soul.

That is true of the Aryan race. But we know nothing of the lacustrine dwellers or the Troglodytes of the Quarternary period, or the indigenes of various countries, of the age or period of stone. And we find prayer and praise flowing among the Egyptians, Hebrews and Chinese, also, as far back as we can trace them. What is much more important, of incalculable importance to us, is this, that if the ontological [metaphysical] conceptions which I think are really contained in the Veda and Zend-Avesta, are really there, it has needed neither special inspiration nor special incarnation of God to teach men any truth of which the human intellect is now possessed. The Aryan human intellect was able to discover them all.

[THE VEDA VERSUS HINDUISM AND THE BRAHMANIC WRITINGS]

[For those who think there is some connection between our Aryan ancestors' religion and the cow-worshiping, multi-armed freakish idols of Hinduism, Müller says:]

The oldest, most primitive and simplest form of Aryan faith finds its expression in the Veda. No idols or animals are mentioned in it, as objects of worship.

In fact, idols and images are not mentioned at all. They belong only to an anthropological faith. They do not represent the light and the heat. The Veda does not invest its Deities with the human form. It does not represent any of them as coming down in visible shape and having commerce with men.

I do not speak of the Hindu commentators. Making the Vedas the sacred books of their own faith, they utterly denaturalized them, and systematically misunderstood and misinterpreted them. I speak of Professor Wilson, [John] Muir...Müller and others, to whose intelligent labours the student of the Vedas is so infinitely indebted.

Dr. Muir says: (Original Sanskrit Texts, ii. 288),

> From the Vedic hymns, accordingly, it does, in fact, appear, more distinctly than from any other of the Indian writings, that the progenitors of the Hind_s were originally called Aryas.

That is true: but the Vedas should not be called Indian writings, for the hymns, or at least the older ones, were the composition of those who were the ancestors of the Hind_s or Indians, of the Persians, and of the Greeks and Latins. This is absolutely certain, because we unmistakably find in them the Origines of the Deities of all these branches of the one race, and of their principle religious and philosophical ideas; as we hope very clearly to prove.

Dr. Muir says of the Vedas,

> We find in them ideas, a language, a spirit and a colouring, totally different from those which characterize the religious writings of the Hindus of a later era... they show us the Aryan tribes living in a state of warfare with surrounding enemies, many of them, no doubt, alien in race and language... (They picture themselves to us as a people having villages, perhaps, but no cities—the cities being spoken of being all of the Dasyus their enemies, the dark-skinned natives of the land.)

The Brahmanic intellect tortured itself with a thousand questions in regard to the creation, and at last invented a whole pantheon of Gods, and the most grotesque and absurd theories as to the origination or generation of things; until a hideous idolatry was the consequence.

As to the value of Hindu interpretation of the Veda, some idea may be formed from this which Müller says in regard to Brahmanas, the oldest of the Hindu books:

> There is throughout the Brahmanas such a complete misunderstanding of the original of the Vedic hymns, that we can hardly understand how such an estrangement could have taken place, unless there had been, at some time or other, a sudden and violent break in the chain of tradition....Every page of the Brahmanas contains the clearest proof that the spirit of the ancient Vedic poetry, and the purport of the original Vedic sacrifices, were both beyond the comprehension of the authors of the Brahmanas. (Ancient Sanskrit Literature 432. 434):

And the Brahmanic notions in regard to the Deities, their origins and their functions, were so totally different from those of the Poets of the Vedas as to render them utterly incapable of understanding the old texts in any other sense then the false ones, which suited their own mythology and metaphysics.

Our Christian friends will have been scandalized by Pike's suggestion that the Aryan intellect was able to discover all truths of which the intellect is now possessed. I suggest that it is the Aryan intellect which is able to reject the distortions and perversions found in the Judeo-Christian Bible which have been foisted on us in our innocent childhoods.

Many Christians will be discomfited by our Aryan ancestors' worship of light due to the association they might make with "Lucifer," the light-bringer, the proud, rebellious archangel (associated with Satan) who was expelled from heaven. Or with Pike's mention of the Morning Star (Venus), also known as Lucifer, especially considering Pike's other life as Grand Commander of the 33. Some of our Christian friends consider anyone who criticizes the Judeo-Christian God to be an adversary, i.e., Satan. It seems to me that a god which would drown virtually all life on Earth, which would test the reliability of a follower by ordering him to cut his son's throat, which would send his own son to be slaughtered "for our sins," a god which welcomed and sanctified the Jewish executioner of the earliest Christian Jews, and which sadistically punished all women with painful childbirth for the alleged "sin" of Eve, is nothing more than the product of the feverish rabbinical mind. With a god such as this, who needs a Satan? Our Christian friends are worshiping a Semitic god. This is unnatural. Christianity is a complex mythology, drafted by rabbis, in which the main character surrenders to his killers, and is not a healthy belief system. Jewish Christianity has impeded our advancement as it has enabled our natural enemies to dominate us, for we have not dared say "no" to God's Chosen People. Aryans who worship the god of the Jews are Judaized. It is not our way and perhaps this short article can be the first step for some toward escaping the subversive, death-worshiping cult of Yahweh. Our people must not be enslaved to a despotic deity.

Our Aryan ancestors were horsemen in our northern homeland. They were neither slaves in Egypt nor looters in Canaan. Their ancient blood flows in our veins today. They were tough, independent, self-made men and women who rode the plains, herded their cattle on horses in the best tradition of the American West. These were no half-naked savages riding barebackthey wore tightly woven, brilliantly colored woolen trousers, shirts and fur-trimmed leather coats and leather boots. They decorated their padded leather saddles, their leather bridles and reins and used snaffle bits made of bronzeidentical in design with those of today!

Our people shunned the cities, prayed for the destruction of their enemies, the Dasyus, the people of darkness. Our people conquered virtually everyone they encountered and brought their life-giving culture to the rest of the world.

Christians, reconsider! Would you rather be riding the range, fighting darkies and loving your deities which brightened the day and kept you warm and let you see in the night, orwhat? In which period of early Christian life would you choose to have lived? Drowning witches, burning heretics on bonfires made of books, medical heretics who could have made life better sooner, scientific heretics who could have expanded our knowledge sooner, religious (political) heretics who would have freed our ancestors from their proto-Soviet theocracy, the Holy Roman Catholic Church? At what point in time was Christian life healthy? In Jesus' time, when all Christians were Jewish rebels? During the Middle (Dark) Ages, made dark and deadly by the Church? The pointless and blood-soaked Crusades? Only in the Renaissance, when the awesome and ruthless power of the Church began to decay, did life begin to improve. Christianity, since the time of Emperor Constantine, has been nothing more than a cruel psychological weapon to keep the Aryan people under control by instilling in them fear and unearned guilt, when it wasn't sending the best of them to die at the hands of one or another far-off nation of infidels.

Christian-Israelites, reconsider! With whom would you rather identify? With the wicked, God-forsaken Semitic Israelites or with our true people, who were, according to Pike, "evidently a more intellectual race than those that surrounded them, and claiming that superiority by their name Arya, these Aryan, noble or warlike, Scyths advanced beyond the worship of the visible luminaries and material forces of Nature, to more spiritual conceptions and philosophical ideas, making it easy for Zarathustra to conceive of a Creative Deity, cognizable only by the intellect, and of the immortality and pre-existence of the human soul. Thus the world owes to them all its profound religious and philosophical ideas, and Plato and Philo did but develop the great thoughts of the Vedic Poets and of Zarathustra."

The main question which must be asked of the (Identity) Christian-Israelites is this: How, since we share the same loathing of Judaism, can you worship their god and share their heroes? You pretend to be Hebrews and ape their strange ways, to the extent of observing their Sabbath and keeping Kosher. Your only doctrinal disagreement is with regard to Jesus as the messiah. Your theorists insist that the Old Testament is not a Jewish, but is rather a Hebrew, book. That the Jews came out of Babylon with their evil Talmud after seventy years in captivity. That is, that they went into the Babylonian captivity as good Hebrews and came out as Talmudic Jews. This suggests that the Hebrews in the pre-Babylonian period were good. Those Hebrews were nasty, twisted, woman-hating, superstitious scum. Read the books of Moses! Their godyour godwas a product of their Hebrew minds, always playing tricks on his most faithful (beginning with the innocent ones in the Garden of Eden), demanding sacrifices, drowning virtually all life on earth, promising rewards to his undeserving Chosen Onesunearned rewards which would be ripped from his enemies. The Semitic god is a wicked god, a pure reflection of a wicked people. The tragedy is that any of our Aryan people could be persuaded to accept this wicked god as their own, be they conventional or unconventional Christians. This is the root cause of our undoing as a race.

Near the end of this remarkable book, on page 604, Pike concludes: "And there is an immense wealth of content and satisfaction, to me, in surely knowing that nothing which is known to us in regard to God, ourselves or Nature, nothing of true religion, nothing of sound ontology, has come to us from the race that had its origin in the low flat alluvion of the Euphrates and the Tigris; and we no more think the Semitic thought than we have in our veins Semitic blood, or speak a Semitic tongue."

Re: The article by Robert Shnayerson, Judgment at Nuremberg that appeared in the October 1996 issue of the Smithsonian magazine.

Dear Mr. Walker:

Ever since the fiftieth anniversary of the German defeat in World War II was celebrated by the victors last year, a crescendo of hate and falsehood has been unleashed against Germans and German-Americans that had not been surpassed in ferocity since shortly after the cessation of hostilities in 1945. It seems as if all the good will that had been created between former enemies in five decades of cooperation, and all the diligent work done by historians in sorting facts from fiction during all these years, have come to naught: Right now we are back to where we started out, namely, in May of 1945.

After having suffered through the nonsense espoused in "Schindler's List", a "true" docu-drama based upon a book that can still only be found in the fiction shelves of the libraries, and the insults heaped upon all Germans everywhere by Daniel Jonah Goldhagen in his badly researched, and even worse reasoned book Hitler's willing executioners; ordinary Germans and the Holocaust, along comes the October 1996 issue of the Smithsonian magazine with Shnayerson's article on the Nuremberg trials, mentioned above.

This writer, a native-born German, cannot help but wonder what sort of mental deficiency it is that prevents ordinary Americans from seeing through the lies, the insults, and the outrageous untruths that are heaped upon them by Jewish writers in all matters pertaining to the so-called "Holocaust". Does the use of this word work like some magical (mental) toxicant that prevents intelligent Americans from using their God-given talent for reasoning and independent judgment?

Snayerson's entire article is best exemplified by his use of the photograph on page 131, where the (later) Senator Thomas Dodd is holding a shrunken human head, allegedly manufactured in a German concentration camp. That story was put on the trash heap of history (where it belongs) as long ago as fifty-one years ago, shortly after it was first mentioned at the Nuremberg trials. Anybody who (still) believes it is an idiot! (What does that make the editors of the Smithsonian magazine who permitted this nefarious war propaganda to be rehashed a half century after that war had ended?) In using the shrunken head story, Shnayerson proves, to us anyway, that currently a determined effort is afoot to denigrate and defame all Germans, "no matter what!". It follows the recent rebirth of the "soap made from Jewish cadavers" claim, the allegation (in the New York Post) by a Jewish woman who was born in Germany that "the Nazis" had killed one million Blacks during the Third Reich, an empire that never had any number of Blacks to speak of under its jurisdiction, and the pressure brought upon the Bonn Government to prosecute Germans who too diligently delve into alleged historical facts whose never ending propagation is nothing but a continuation of the insidious allied re-education.

We do not know what is the reason for the current anti-

German attacks by the American media. It could be because Germany, in spite of tremendous losses in population, cultural heritage and area, as a result of the war, again seems "the" European power to be reckoned with, a power that may someday challenge the aspirations of American internationalists for world domination. It also could be because of pure envy that the Germans have managed to create the best social system than can be found among the important nations of the world. Where else do employees get 18 paid holidays a year?

But having the choice of guessing, and basing our assumptions mainly upon the fact that the anti-German articles such as the one in your magazine, and books like Goldhagen's, are almost exclusively written by Jews, we do believe that Zionist activists, i.e., those who are responsible for setting aims and determining strategies for the "Forever Persecuted Minority" are now living with the justified fear that the "Holocaust" (i.e., "the (alleged) planned extermination through the use of gas chambers and crematoria at the hands of the Nazis (Germans) of six million Jews (and five million others) during World War II"), has lost its luster and believability among ordinary Americans, and what we are experiencing at this time is a desperate and determined effort to reverse the tide. Perhaps, so hope the Zionist activists, articles such as Shnayerson's, in which absolutely no effort was made to stick to the facts now available, a new crop of Americans can be induced to believe all the Holocaust tales, and thereby may be willing to continue (indefinitely) the American monetary generosity toward Israel and the Jewish people.

There is no question that the entire "Holocaust" allegation has been of tremendous financial benefit not only for the State of Israel but for World Jewry in general. For those who question this statement I will only ask: would Israel still be in existence without the regular inflow of many billions of dollars and deutschmarks every year, and would Zionism have such a stranglehold on American politics as it does without the huge finances needed to push the Jewish agenda? Could politicians here and in Europe who are responsible for this state of affairs be continually strong-armed into providing ever more monies for Jewry were it not for the alleged murder of six million Jews in "Nazi" gas chambers?

Tragically, far too many individual Jews in important positions always put the interests of their own ethnic group, their own religion, and their own Weltanschauung ahead of that of nations, institutions or companies that pay their salaries, or to which they really owe their loyalty. A good example are the current Jewish members of President Clinton's cabinet whose every single action seems driven by an adherence to Jewish or Zionist aims. Would Mickey Kantor represent the interests of the American movie industry vs. foreign nations as diligently, were "Hollywood" not totally under Jewish control? Would Madeleine Albright risk the ridicule of the U.S. by the entire UN world body at the sessions of the United Nations Security Council, were it not for her loyalty to Israel? Would Messrs. Greenspan and Rubin ever make any decisions relating to the currency and fiscal policies of the United States without first considering their impact on the well-being of Eretz Israel (i.e., "World Jewry")? Would Shnayerson's hate article against the Germans have been published in the formerly prestigious Smithsonian magazine were it not for the fact that both persons responsible for the publication, namely, I. Michael Heyman and Don Moser, are Jews?

Right at the beginning of the Smithsonian magazine article, on page 126, we can see the rather famous photograph of concentration camp inmates at Buchenwald, one of whom who is claimed to be Elie Wiesel, "the chronicler of the holocaust". Unfortunately, Shnayerson did not mention that Wiesel wrote the following in one of his "chronicles" more than twenty years after the war:

> Every Jew, somewhere in his being, should set apart a zone of hate - healthy, virile hate - for what the German personifies and for what persists in the German. To do otherwise would be a betrayal of the dead.

Legends of our Time, Avon, pb. Page 177/178

While the Buchenwald picture certainly seems horrible from the vantage point of today, it can in fact only be compared to something else that was happening at the very time when the ever so moral allied judges opened the Nuremberg trials: Hundreds of thousands or millions of German soldiers who were by then POWs of the Allies were lying in open fields, without any shelter against snow, rain or sun, and died a slow death from starvation and neglect. These Germans would have been happy to have such accommodations available as shown on the Buchenwald picture. Instead, they had been herded like cattle on open ranges, and there left to rot. I, myself, experienced such a stockade (for that was all it was) for a relatively short time, and but for the kindness of an American soldier I might either have succumbed like a million other German POWs (read James Bacque's book Other Losses), or ended up equally dead in a camp of America's Soviet ally in Siberia.

This fact and the equally criminal expulsion (generally after the war, i.e., at the very same time that the Allies sat in judgment over the German leaders) of approximately 15 million Germans from their ancestral homes beyond the Oder-Neisse line and the Sudetenland, with an associated loss of 3 million of the expellees killed, should forever prevent any judge from either the United States, Russia, Great Britain and France from participating in an international trial such as happened at Nuremberg. For Shnayerson to write of the "moral clarity that marked American idealism at the time" proves either a lack of knowledge as to what really happened, or it is a flagrant attempt to justify allied misbehavior five decades after the fact. Robert Snayerson also asserts that "Nuremberg" was "...the century's heroic attempt to achieve justice without vengeance...."

Justice without vengeance? If Germans of the post-World War II generation were to wish bad for the United States and its population, they would only have to wish that Americans were to experience exactly what the Germans had gone through from 1944 on for about twenty years at the hands of the ever so benign and humane allied powers. To claim that "the rule of law" was of paramount importance in the Nuremberg procedures, is absurd. It also shows the audacity with which Shnayerson went about as he wrote his essay. In conjunction with the Bitburg affair President Reagan spoke of the "guilt complex which has been imposed upon the Germans". What else was that (and the associated "re-education") but cruel vengeance, a vengeance that is still in force today.

"Nearly all (the accused, HS) were ready to acknowledge the horrific facts while cravenly assigning blame to others." Can one deny, after a horrible world war that for Germany had lasted six years, that many people, many innocents, had lost their lives? That at the end there was chaos and anarchy? That, as a result of terrorist (partisan) activities that had cost the lives of hundreds of thousands of German soldiers, stringent measures against civilian populations had to be taken, measures that only sometimes were as ferocious as was the allied bombing of German cities at the same time (and which cost the lives of many innocents)? I could go on. But it is doubtful that any of the German leaders acknowledged such horrific "facts" as gas chambers, a planned extermination of all Jews within the German realm, or soap made from Jewish cadavers because they were lies. However, it seems that is just what Shnayerson wants to imply.

"The defendants had been hanged messily..." Why "messily"? Who in the "free" world knows to what lengths the Americans went purposely in order to inflict pain and terror on the executed German leaders? After the hangings, the smashed and contorted faces of the eleven men provided proof of the "humanity" at work. Was Julius Streicher wrong when he spoke of the Second Purim festival being celebrated by Germany's enemies?

"The exercise of justice at Nuremberg reverberates across this century." Reading this sentence, one of the most recent instances of a definite crime against peace and innocents comes to mind: The deliberate murder of over 100 women and children at the UN refugee camp at Qana in Lebanon at the hands of the Israelis. If Nuremberg had meant a new beginning for international law and justice, certainly the Israeli commanders responsible for this massacre ought to have been called to account by now. That they weren't proves that Nuremberg was nothing else but one-sided victor revenge. Shnayerson's sentence is nothing but typically Jewish sophistry. One look at what happened since 1945, and how many crimes against humanity have since then been committed by the very nations that sat in judgment over the Germans shows that this second half of the century was probably the most murderous "peace time" in the history of mankind. Therefore, to praise "Nuremberg" and its follow-up now, is specious.

"In April 1944, two Jews escaped (from Auschwitz). They detailed Germany's technology of genocide, such as the camp's four new gas-and-burn machines, each designed to kill 2,000 prisoners at a time." In this conjunction Shnayerson forgot to mention Jan Karski's lime-filled railroad cars wherewith live Jews were slowly dissolved into some sort of human goo, or the huge electric plates that killed thousands of unfortunates at one stroke. Unfortunate for Shnayerson (but not for the Smithsonian magazine, we are sure) no sample of the "new gas-and-burn" machine exists anywhere but in fertile Jewish minds, and those bad revisionists naturally use this fact to question certain tenets of the holy Holocaust.

"Allied prisoners and kidnapped foreign workers were fed so little that as many as one third of them died...every week." The "Nazis" certainly must have been stupid to squander hard-to-come-by workers this way. However, we all know that they were consumed by hate, and not guided by high morality, as were the nations that eventually proved victorious. Oddly though, only about one percent of American and British POWs died while in German hands, far fewer than can be said of any other captives imprisoned by the large warring nations of World War II.

"The man asked (by FDR) to find (the answer as to how to punish the Germans) was Murray Bernays, a lawyer turned wartime Army colonel in the Pentagon." Shnayerson ought to have mentioned that Bernays was a Jew, as were the "refugees" in London who came up with the entire war crimes-to-be-punished concept. He ought to have been proud to mention these facts since they prove the so frequently invoked Jewish quest for justice and tolerance. "Bernays suggested putting Nazism and the entire Hitler era on trial as a giant criminal conspiracy." With this new concept the entire tradition of Western Civilization pertaining to laws of war was set aside, and replaced by Talmudic teachings. But who was better to sit in judgment of an alleged giant conspiracy than people who themselves never tire of conspiring against all others?

"On August 8, 1945,...the International Military Tribunal... declared aggressive war an international crime." According to the Smithsonian, Shnayerson is an expert on legal matters. One may assume that he had had legal training. A layman such as myself cannot help but notice with which ease this Jewish writer oversees the fact that this declaration by the IMT meant the imposition of ex post facto law. But, obviously, in the interests of Jewish revenge everything is kosher, so to say. As a German I have to ask the question what happened to the allied leaders that have waged aggressive war in World War II and ever since? Was Ronald Reagan put on trial for the American attack on Grenada, or Ariel Sharon for the 1982 Israeli "incursion" into Lebanon?

"The IMT charter was grounded in the idea that Nazism was a 26-year-long criminal conspiracy. Its aim: to build a war machine; to satisfy Hitler's psychopathic hatred of Jews and turn Europe into a German empire." This statement can perhaps best be answered by pointing out some facts of today: Temporarily at least (and seemingly to its own surprise) one nation that always professes peace, non-interference, democracy, justice and tolerance, seems to have gained world domination. It reached this pinnacle of power allegedly merely by happen-stance, not through an incredibly large war machine and a certain determination, and, again allegedly, without hatred of anybody (not even of nationalists who do not care for the New World Order.) If you guessed that I am writing of the United States, you are on the right track.

"One especially incriminating find...was the notes of Hitler aide Col. Friedrich Hossbach from a meeting between Hitler (and others, HS) on November 5, 1937." This sentence reads so factual, so "know-it-all", and so genuine. Yet, the so-called Hossbach protocol was an allied deception, and in Europe at least there is not one serious historian who uses it as proof of Nazi villainy. This and the others of Shnayerson's statements permit the question whether the Smithsonian article writer (and those responsible for printing all this nonsense in their magazine) have read anything but supermarket tabloids since about 1960?

"One German soldier's home movie depicted his comrades in Warsaw, clubbing and kicking naked Jews. In one scene, an officer helped a battered young woman to her feet so that she could be knocked down again." No doubt, such scenes bring emotions to a boil. Not only in America. But today we know that this "German soldier's home movie" had been manufactured in Hollywood (may I mention: by Jews!), as was the film "Todesmühlen" which showed similar nonsense but had to be seen by every adult German in the American zone before ration coupons could be received. Reading of this, the recent movie, "Schindler's List" comes to mind. Undoubtedly, its black-and-white scenes would in fifty years be depicted as the genuine article if, yes if, this sort of propaganda could go on.— Which I doubt!"

"Huge chunks of Jewish wealth wound up in Nazi pockets." Isn't it a fact that the allied theft of German wealth after 1918 came before the Third Reich? (In other words, the German WW I generation wasn't entirely unjustified in using the enemies' methods 20 years later.) Only recently, the Bayer Corp. of Germany paid one billion dollars to Americans just for the return of the trademark "Bayer Aspirin" that was stolen after the First World War. And, isn't the United States Government currently using a sophisticated type of international skulduggery in order to buy goods from all over the world with (really) worthless paper money printed by the billions?

"(Hitler) ordered new currency, largely backed by stolen Jewish property." Reading Jewish "Holocaust" articles such as this one (it fits into the genre), never ceases to amaze me. Having lived in the Third Reich I cannot recall a new currency being issued. The Reichsmark of the post-inflation era (1924) remained the curreny until its replacement by the Deutsche mark in 1948. While the German Jews were undoubtedly wealthy, it is doubtful that they were so wealthy that a new currency could be based upon that fact. However, if we take Shnayerson's statement at face value, then the question may be asked how was it possible that the fewer than 600,000 Jews constituting less than one percent of the German population, could amass such wealth?

"Hitler's suicidal decision...to invade the Soviet Union." Again we have to ask the question, "where has Shnayerson been in the last decade or so?" Few reputable historians in Germany and Russia still believe the tale that the German attack in June of 1941 was wholly unjustified. Had the Germans not invaded the Soviet Union then, and destroyed the huge Red Army geared for offense and ready to attack toward the West, then the Communists would have reached the French Atlantic coast by the fall of the same year. It was the sacrifice of the German soldier that prevented Europe from being overrun by Bolshevism.

"Hitler's campaign to "Aryanize" Germany began with the...poisoning...of "garbage children"." One must really wonder where people like Shnayerson get their information. Translated, the term "garbage children" would be "Müllkinder". I can unequivocally state that I have never come across this term in the German language, and knowing what words we used in World War II, I would say flatly that the accusation is nonsense. Yes, there was a Hitler-ordered euthanasia program whereby absolutely hopeless and extremely seriously ill and imbecilic people were mercy-killed after the war had started (in each instance, three doctors had to give their O.K.) but it stopped when a Catholic bishop brought the matter to the attention of the German people.

"The regime's contempt for non-Aryan life conditioned millions of Germans to turn a blind eye to more and more epidemic evils the death camps, the ghastly medical experiments, the relentless massacres of those Hitler called "Jews, Poles and similar trash." Reading this, Goldhagen's book about the German people (as a whole) being "Hitler's willing executioners" comes to mind. I cannot lose the feeling that both Goldhagen's book and Shnayerson's article are part of a greater Zionist scheme. Could it be that the Auschwitz gas chamber claim is now really untenable (just as the "four million Jews killed at Auschwitz"-figure had to be replaced by a number about one fourth smaller), and that a new scam had to be invented in order to keep the German (and American) tribute for Israel and World Jewry rolling?

Speaking of "millions of Germans being conditioned to turn a blind eye...": Which one of the world's larger nations has killed more than one million civilians in air raids on often undefended cities without one single human loss on its own mainland, and where, undoubtedly, the people turned a blind eye to the carnage caused by their own? And, which was worse, Dachau, Buchenwald and Auschwitz, or Eisenhower's Rheinwiesen stockades? Furthermore, were the American Blacks who without their permission were used for the (criminal) Syphilis experiments under the auspices of the American democracy better off than the concentration camp prisoners who suffered through (criminal) German medical experiments under the "Nazis"?. (By the way, what happened as recently as in the Gulf War to American soldiers who are now so sick?)

"A Czech doctor who spent four years at Dachau, where he performed 12,000 autopsies, told that he was ordered to strip the skin off bodies. 'It was cut into various sizes for the use as saddles, riding breeches, gloves, house slippers, and ladies handbags. Tattooed skin was especially valued by SS men'." Ah yes, and the skin of dead Jews was stronger and therefore more valuable than that of Aryans. Sometimes I really have the desire to keep on embellishing on such stories. Then perhaps I could sell the story to Steven Spielberg...who would embellish it some more, and a new docu-drama that may not be questioned could be preserved for posterity.

"(In 1939) Hitler's madness was almost beyond imagination, (when) he ordered the expulsion of nearly nine million Poles and Jews from areas annexed for his promised Nordic empire." Apart from the fact that the nine million expelled figure is totally unsupported by facts (the actual number of Polish expellees doesn't even come close..), no mention is made of the fact that twenty years earlier the Poles had driven one million Germans from their homes when Poland was re-established after 125 years. But if Hitler was mad in ordering this during the war, what can one say about FDR, Truman, Stalin and Churchill who ordered or supported the expulsion of 15 million Germans from their ancestral homes after the shooting had stopped?

"Ohlendorf (allegedly) gave the number of persons killed by the Einsatzgruppen,(whose main purpose was to keep terrorist (partisan) activities at a minimum,HS) at 90,000." That certainly seems horrible from the vantage point of today but not if one considers the German civilians murdered in the allied air raids: Hamburg more than 40,000, Dresden more than 250,000, little Pforzheim more than 20,000 in 20 minutes. How many civilians lost their lives in U.S. operations against the Viet Cong? Yes, I know, the latter were probably less legitimate fighters than were the (Jewish?) partisans of Eastern Europe: the V.C. battled "democracy", which is a crime.

"The prosecution rested after three months, capped off by another movie distilling more Nazi horror, and displays of macabre human-skin lampshades and shrunken heads submitted as evidence." I am glad Shnayerson mentioned this. It certainly underscores the type of trial the German leaders had to undergo. But --- could it be that one of the shrunken heads came alive again and is now being used on the body of an article writer or by one of his associates at the Smithsonian? Is there any Gentile alive who still believes the shrunken head and tattooed skin-for-lampshades stories? And, since these allied claims have long ago been quietly put to rest, what else is not true on the Holocaust story? Is one allowed to ask? Or, is the questioning of such nonsense a heresy against the new state religion, namely, the immutable Holocaust belief?

Pertaining to German war actions, Shnayerson quotes a French prosecutor, Francois de Menthon: "...all the instincts of barbarism, repressed by centuries of civilization, but always present in men's innermost nature." Was de Menthon thinking of the hundreds of thousands of German POWs starving at that very moment (1945) in French stockades? Or did he contemplate the mass rape of German women by French soldiers in Stuttgart, something that could never have happened in the German army. Under German occupation the treatment of ordinary citizens in France, Czechoslovakia, Poland and elsewhere was far more benign than the treatment the Arabs, the Algerians, the Vietnamese, the Africans, the Latvians and others experienced at the hands of the "Nuremberg" victors. And, who would like to trade places with the hapless Palestinians now?

"(German defense lawyers) managed to outflank the court's ban on tu quoque evidence—if I am guilty, you are, too—, a stricture aimed at keeping allied excesses out of the trial." Note that Shnayerson called allied war crimes only "excesses". Amazing for someone who specialized in legal matters. But that is par for the course for all Allies. If the Germans had shot the 20,000 Polish officers that fell into their hands, we wouldn't hear the end of it. But since an allied nation had done it with theirs, it is now rarely mentioned. In a letter to the editor of the Toronto Sun (9/28/96), the director of a prestigious institution writes of Canadian POWs (allegedly, HS) being executed by the Waffen-SS. Then he adds: "The hardbitten Canadian vets can hardly be blamed for rarely giving (young soldiers of the "Hitlerjugend Division") a chance to surrender in combat afterwards." So easily one describes and justifies allied war crimes.

The court's ban on tu quoque defense was not the only ban under which German defense lawyers had to suffer. To this day "German" judges do not permit forensic evidence in so-called Holocaust or Auschwitz Lie trials! (Nuremberg is still with us!)

"In the spring of 1944, (Speer) ordered 100,000 Jewish slave workers from Hungary as casually as if they were bags of cement." Absolutely horrible, nicht wahr? Except for the fact that at the very same time hundreds of thousands of German POWs who had been brought to the United States, were "sold" to the French, where tens of thousands died from malnutrition or mistreatment. And, since the Germans were supposed to know everything that happened during the war within the German realm in spite of wartime restrictions, it is clear that the Nuremberg judges knew exactly what happened in these French death camps. Did they do something about it?

"The SS, the Gestapo, and the top Nazi leadership had been proved criminal, meaning that their members had voluntarily joined in committing war crimes after 1939. That left several million potential defendants for lower courts to handle." Regents of the Smithsonian, among whom are numerous persons connected with the present ruling hierarchy of the United States, ought to read this sentence carefully. Assume for a moment, Israel will soon use nuclear weapons against several of its perceived enemies, thereby opening up the Pandora's box that had been closed since Nagasaki. And assume further, this act were to unleash a horrible catastrophe costing tens of millions of lives. Undoubtedly, many people across the world would hold the Jews, the Zionists, and their supporters accountable. According to the Nuremberg principles would this not also include all Americans who,in word and deed, have supported the Jewish state since about 1965, when it became public knowledge that Israel possessed nuclear weapons, and since it became known that the Jewish state would not shirk from terrorism in the name of defense?

"By rejecting group guilt and mass purges, the 1945 judges defied hatred and struck a blow for peace that may yet, half a century later, help temper the madness of war." Reading this sentence I wonder whether Shnayerson and this writer are thinking of the same Germany, of the same war, and of the same Nuremberg trial and its consequences. What Shnayerson states as fact is most plainly a lie that can easily be exposed. May the United States never suffer from such a harsh peace as that imposed on Germany by the 1945 victors, and may this nation never suffer from the collective guilt complex, and the mass purges of its intelligentsia that has devastated Germany and the soul of the German people since the "liberation" on the 8th of May 1945.

On the day this letter is being written, the New York Times printed a short notice that the former Waffen-SS Captain Erich Priebke has to face a second trial in Rome for a war-related incident that took place in 1944. It suffices to state that at the time Priebke did not only act under highest orders but also within the confines of the laws of war then in existence. The fact that a honorable soldier can be brought to trial more than a half century after a war, proves how low Western Civilization has sunk. All the traditions of chivalry and justice established over the centuries by the great culture-creating nations like England, France, Italy, Spain and the German Reich have been set aside for the benefit of what we call Talmud justice: "Never forget, never forgive", and "An Eye for an Eye" are now paramount. Regretfully, the Smithsonian institution has permitted itself to be used in the furtherance of this tradition of lies, hate and vengeance.

Sincerely,
Hans Schmidt

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. A COURAGEOUS SHOUT

by
Charles E. Weber

The Tulsa World of 21 November published an item about an Aryan man, Mr. Dennis Mahon, who had the courage to protest against the genocidal measures being undertaken against his race. At a lecture by Morris Dees at the University of Tulsa Mr. Mahon shouted out challenges to Dees, head of the Southern Poverty Law Center in Mobile, Alabama, when he could no longer contain his anger at a point in Dees' lecture.

Dees told his collegian audience that whites would be a minority in the United States by 2015. Mr. Mahon was quoted as shouting at that point, "That is genocide." He continued to reproach Dees, shouting, "He is a phony, a liar. He has made $54 million... He is a millionaire," as quoted by the Tulsa World.

Mr. Mahon, of course, was justified in shouting out "genocide" at Dees (whose name, by the way, might be an Anglicized spelling of Dietz). The future of Aryans in the United States looks bleak indeed, for within a few decades Aryan Americans are now likely to become a badly abused minority in a country they painstakingly built out of a wilderness. A sobering fact is that only a small minority of Aryan Americans have thus far had the courage and cerebral energy to protest against what is being done to them or even to become aware of it in the first place. Aryan Americans should take a long look at South Africa and note what is now going on there, partly as a result of measures against the Aryan minority of South Africa undertaken by "their" government. Let us hope that the pain now being suffered by Aryans in South Africa will not be in vain and will serve as a rescuing admonishment to Aryan Americans.

The majority of members of the dispossessed majority in the United States have thus far not had the courage and energy even just to give much thought to their plight, let alone to do something about it. They allowed elements of the media, especially of the electronic media, that are hostile to them to corrupt and debilitate their thinking on racial questions and to weaken their pride in their race, without which no race or nation can prosper and survive. Some Aryan Americans have even played an active role in darkening their own future by making donations to shrewd men such as Dees or having their fetuses killed in such great numbers that their population is declining in relation to the non-Aryan population that is now engulfing them. During this century they have permitted cunning, ruthless politicians to involve them in costly wars by which priceless, good Aryan blood-lines were lost forever. They have permitted their tax-supported schools—from kindergarten to graduate colleges—to become instruments of indoctrination against their own welfare. They have listened to and voted for adept racial traitors like the Clintons, who have a pathological hostility to the more successful members of their own race. A slightly consoling thought is that Clinton got only 49% of the popular vote.

Recently I watched on television a shrewd little Jew repeatedly jab the chief officer of one of the largest corporations in the United States because it was alleged that some of his fellow corporation officers made humorous mention of a race generally hostile to Aryan Americans. This spineless Aryan humbled his firm in a manner that was almost beyond belief. He moaned that a great wrong had been committed for which the involved high-ranking officers of his corporation should be severely punished. He thus betrayed not only his fellow officers, but also members of his race who work for the corporation that are thus likely to become just more victims of the euphemistically termed "Affirmative Action." He also betrayed his stockholders when his corporation subsequently made huge donations to its Negro employees. His corporation gave in to threats of boycott of its products by Negroes. Such a boycott might well have taken place to some extent no matter how much of the earnings of the corporation were thrown away and thus denied to those who had invested in the corporation and trusted its officers with their savings.

In spite of such disturbing developments Aryan American who are courageous, mentally alert and loyal to their race must never entertain the thought that their defeat is inevitable. Such thinking would only guarantee their paralysis and hence defeat. Perhaps even after this late date there will be a sufficient number of Aryan Americans who will come to realize how grim their future will be if they do not act courageously and with a willingness to sacrifice, to sacrifice even their careers if necessary. ❑

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Sir:

Just for the record: Somewhere down the long line of transmission, a mistake has been made, and it appears on p. 12,1. 8,9 of Liberty Bell, November 1996.

James Fenimore Cooper did not write Drums Along the Mohawk, though I believe that he would have been delighted had he accomplished that feat. That very great American classic was authored by Walter D. Edmonds, an exceptionally fine talent apparently much overlooked.

Drums Along the Mohawk should be read by every American Aryan who values his national heritage. The kind of courage it portrays we will need increasingly in the days to come.

Sincerely, P.R., Montana

Dear Liberty Bell,

I just finished reading "The Awakening" by Eric Thomson in L.B. November '96. That is a very fine short story. I am trying to remember what a short story with a surprise ending is called in English lit, but anyway it is a fantasy and a darn good one! A great idea in fact!

It is a bit messy for today's world; we might accomplish the same ideal with sharpshooters, elite guerilla forces, or Navy (Viking) Frogmen type personnel.

That is a thrilling story that will do more for the morale of white nationalists than anything I have come across yet! Carry on!

"The Gift of the Magi" was such a story with a surprise ending.

In this offering by Thomson, I felt the power of Thor when he appeared naked with his Hammer. Saki or H.H. Munro wrote bizarre and witty stories, but I'm not sure he is the one.

Anyhow, let us begin these wonderful ideas at once. Who will be Thor? There are too many of these worms to carry out this ritual in this way. More like a poisoned needle in the subway or at the opera. Jolnir at the opera. Jolnir at the bank—that is where the incubus (or incubi?) Hide out. One could do away with a considerable number at the N.Y. Stock Exchange. Could they all be taken to Valhalla? Perhaps to Antarctica?

Give us more of this man Thomson!

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Thank you very much for sending the Liberty Bell issue containing my People of Thule. It fitted right in with the two articles by Eric Thomson and William Pierce. I suppose Bruce's article on the origin and religion of the Aryan race [see "Our People, the Aryans" in this issue] will come in the next issue. My original choice for the title was "The People of Shem" but some of my friends took exception to it because of the religious connotation. I had just read R.L. Hoskin's booklet, The Sheep and the Wolves and it seemed appropriate, particularly since the Whites of South Africa were preparing to enter the Wolf Dens voluntarily. Stupid idiots. I enjoyed Mr. Pierce's article very much, but I was especially pleased with the leading article on American Education during the past forty years. I think that might have been stretched to fifty years because when I started my teaching career in 1930 it had already made significant progress in New York State. I taught English in a small rural school in northern New York and the Progressive Educators from Albany were already invading our schools and redesigning the system in line with the Protocols of the Elders of Zion. Our local Supervisor was not a Jew but he fell for the indoctrination of educational twaddle like a hooked salmon. Fortunately we had a wonderful principal, an old-fashioned, dedicated educator, who blocked the door and stood four-square in defense of his teachers. But the pressure to change the old methods of learning, and turn education into frivolous entertainment became overwhelming, and when the opportunity to become the editor of a small weekly newspaper came along, I grabbed it and abandoned the teaching profession for good. And never regretted it...

By the way, is the resignation of the majority of Clinton's cabinet a case of the rats leaving the sinking ship? A gigantic economic collapse must be arranged before they can drag us into the New World Order. Perhaps the REAL Holocaust is closer than we think. Perhaps I'll live long enough, after all, to see the outcome of this age-old struggle for power.

Very sincerely yours,
Mrs. Lee Norris, California

Gentlemen :

If you can possibly see your way to do it, would you please run the announcement below in your organ as soon as possible. The lawyers are working on it and the bills are running up. Over the last few years I have given thousands of dollars to various causes like this but I am running out of money and my medical bills are overwhelming me. I can't do much more.

HELP YORIE KAHL

In 1983 Yorie Kahl and his father Gordon were leaving a meeting. Gordon was wanted on a misdemeanor regarding a tax case. Federal marshals ambushed them and severely wounded Yorie, almost killing him. Gordon returned fire and killed two marshalls and wounded two others. Yorie was given a Kangaroo trial and has been in prison for 13 years. Attorney John DeCamp and others are trying to get Yorie a new trial and this costs money. Please send contributions to his mother, Joan Kahl Britton, Apt 251, 3564 Windrift Way, Oceanside, CA 92056.

Thanks and God bless you.

Dear Editor,

Well folks, we have had another long drawn-out, manipulated election. About fifty percent of the voters stayed home. Ten percent went to the Third Parties, while the rest went to the Dole-Clinton tickets. No way to prove the number of stolen votes. We need to go back to the paper ballots soon as we get our freedom back.

After the International bankers took over our money system in 1913, they began a slow process of teaching us about the "American Dream" by way of movies, T.V. and other media propaganda. We learned to accept bribes from the people we elected to take care of our business, while using our own money to do it. They were manipulated into playing the part of "Sheep-Herders" driving us "Sheeple" into the NEW WORLD ORDER of Communism.

Many officials in Congress and Senate are resigning, seeing what's ahead. Some are blowing the whistle on scandals that have been kept out of the news. One of these gentlemen has remarked, "If the general public understood who controls our Government and the plans they have for us, there would be a revolution before morning." If I had known all this back in the thirties, I would have picked my own dam cotton, if I had had any.

Bring our boys back home and put the women back in the house home-schooling their youngens, before it's too late.

Sincerely,
Gene Trapnell, Georgia

Dear Editor:

Newly released tapes show that President Nixon ordered a break-in to recover the Pentagon Papers stolen by Daniel Ellsberg, papers that Mr. Nixon believed were at the Brookings Institute in Washington.

During the Vietnam War when the news media's bible, the Washington Post, said there were six-hundred and twelve thousand Americans in combat, Ellsberg stole 47 volumes of TOP SECRET military documents—over sixty pounds of documents!

The break-in never happened, had President Nixon been able to seize the stolen documents, or stop Ellsberg, I know for certain—at the very least—he would have saved the lives of all our POWs in Laos.

When I flew the so-called "Ho Chi Minh Trail" in Laos as a Forward Air Controller with the Air Commando in 1967 and 1968, we knew that there were at least 300 POWs being held by the Pathet Lao. And the PL admitted as much. At the time of the POW release in 1973, there should have been at least 400 POWs from Laos. The North Vietnamese released nine POWs, claiming they were all the POWs held by their counterparts in Laos, the Pathet Lao,

It wasn't true, these men had been held by the NVA (North Vietnamese Army) and not the PL. It was an effort by the North Vietnamese to try and produce some POWs from Laos because all the POWs in Laos had been butchered in 1972—thanks to Ellsberg and the Pentagon Papers.

Prior to the release of the "papers," the PL claimed that all Americans they held were "war criminals" and they could therefore deny the International Red Cross access to them. With the release of the Pentagon Papers documenting TOP SECRET covert "insertions" of Army Special Forces road watch teams into Laos, the PL changed their minds and now claimed that these TOP SECRET documents proved that all Americans were now "spies" and could be executed.

In the blood bath that followed, even French nuns who had been born in Laos had to run for their lives or they would have been butchered by the Pathet Lao as "American spies."

President Nixon was condemned by the news media for trying to stop them from passing TOP SECRET military information to the enemy during a war. President Nixon was condemned by the Democrats for trying to save the lives of Americans the Democrats had sent into the war under two Democrat presidents. President Nixon was to be "impeached and imprisoned" under a charge by Peter Rodino and the House Judiciary Committee, for infringing on the "civil rights" of Daniel Ellsberg, by trying to stop him from passing information to the enemy during a war.

The United States, the world's first and oldest Constitutional Republic is DEAD!

Sincerely,
Joseph G. Stano, New Jersey

Dear Mr. Dietz:

...I thoroughly enjoyed the December issue of LB, and as usual, agreed with all of it. I liked Dr. Pierce's article on the John Birch Society. I have been reading The New American recently and noted that they have become more aggressively patriotic during the past few months, but they still tiptoe very tenderly around Jewish feelings. The resemble New England Old Maids at a tea party when it comes to dealing with the Conspiracy. They have become more aggressive in their reporting but they still shrink from the thought of violence or an early American-style revolution. They continue to rely on education and the ballot box. And yet they admit that the whites are being outvoted by the hordes of blacks and alience that have been swarming into the country under our lax immigration policy—again due to pressure from the Jews.

I sympathize with Mr. Kelly's experience with Jewish media control. The Jews are like the Blacks. They go all out for vulnerable targets. In South Africa the Blacks hit isolated farms (unless there was a man there with a gun). Three terrorists invaded us one night. They knew that we were three old women without a male guard. My friend got her hands on a gun and simply pointed it at them, and they scampered, all three of them. After that we put our guns under our pillows.

South Africa is literally falling to pieces. Too bad. They could have led the world back to sanity if there had been a leader like Verwoerd or Malan in charge. My husband and I were counting on it. That final collapse was a deadly mixture of cowardivr and stupidity—and treachery within their own ranks. I trust Americans don't fall into the same snake pit.

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. Lee Norris, California

Dear Mr. Dietz:

This may be considered a Letter to the Editor.

Just a couple notes on some recent numbers of Liberty Bell.

Thank you for carrying, in your August 1996 issue, Jeremy Miller's series The New Slavery which originally appeared on American Dissident Yoices (a radio program I produce); but you repeated the innocent error of the editor of Free Speech in giving me the primary credit. In fact, my function was merely to edit the Miller articles for clarity and to fit the time constraints of my radio program. The main credit should go -- and the byline should have been given -- to Mr. Jeremy Miller.

In your December 1996 issue, you published an article by Jack Killey entitled "Jewish Media Control Close Up," which indicated at its termination, "Thanks to Kevin Alfred Strom for providing the above article...." and that it was "Reprinted from Resistance #88, published by NSWPP, PO Box 9444, 27515.

Although I am delighted that Mr. Killey's article was seen by readers of Liberty Bell, I feel obligated to inform your readers of the false impression that the publisher of the "Resistance" sheet, Harold Covington, may have given them. (Do not confuse Harold Covington's "Resistance" operation in North Carolina with the excellent pro-White music magazine of the same name published in Detroit, Michigan. It is Covington's North Carolina-based "Resistance" sheet to which I refer at all times in this letter.)

First, "Resistance" plagiarized the article from National Vanguard Books, pure and simple. Mr. Killey, the author of the piece, contacted me some months ago, looking for a publisher. Believing his was a story that needed to be told, I first published his article on my radio program, and later in print and on the Internet. The publisher of "Resistance" did not contact Mr. Killey, did not contact me, and did not contact National Vanguard Books before lifting the article whole and republishing it under his imprimatur. This is dishonorable enough, but there is more.

Secondly, the publisher of "Resistance" has the audacity to state that I submitted the article to him and gave him permission to republish it. I did no such thing. He further implies that I gave him permission to use my name, which I did not. By using my name as quoted above, Mr. Covington leaves the reader to infer that I am in at least some small way associated with or cooperating with his so-called "NSWPP." I most emphatically state that I have no association whatever with Mr. Covington or his various operations, nor have I ever had any such association, nor do I ever intend to have such an association.

Finally, as if to thumb his nose at those whose work he has appropriated for his own benefit, Mr. Covington altered the text of the article in at least one very significant way:

On page 52 ofthe December 1996 issue of Liberty Bell, the text from Covington's version of the article reads, "It was in one sense a privilege to be in courageous company living and dead; to be allocated the ire bestowed on men like Belloc, Chesterton, Douglas Reed, Wilmot Robertson was a badge of honor of sorts."

The same passage in Jack Killey's actual words reads, "...the ire bestowed on people like Belloc, Chesterton, Dr. Pierce, Douglas Reed, Wilmot Robertson was a badge of honor of sorts. "

Thank you, George, for all your unselfish work and your multiple kindnesses to me and my family, and thank you for the opportunity to set the record straight on this matter. Let me make it clear that you and the Liberty Bell are absolutely blameless in all this. If readers want further information, they may contact me through the address below.

With best wishes to you and yours, I remain

Yours faithfully,
Kevin Alfred Strom.

Dear Mr. Dietz and Fellow Readers,

The lament over Clinton's re-election to the Presidency was predictable. No, P.R. of Oregon, it was not the mush-headed "soccer moms" who re-elected the Great Liar. Even soccer moms are not that stupid, no matter how Rush Limbaugh spins it. Let's look elsewhere.

I have recommended the book VOTESCAM to many people, even Limbaugh. As usual, no one listens; no one reads the book; the ignorance remains. Since you probably will not go out and spend $9.95 for this book, let me tell you in few words what you would learn by reading it. James M. Collier and his brother Kenneth F. Collier began an investigation of vote fraud going back to 1963. During these three decades, the American vote has been subject to government-sponsored electronic theft.

The authors assert, and back it up with twenty years of daring reporting, "...that your vote may now be a meaningless bit of energy directed by pre-programmed computers -- which can be fixed to select certain pre-ordained candidates and leave no footprints or paper trail. In short, computers are covertly stealing your vote." Thus, the subtitle of this book; The Stealing of America. Your chances at a Las Vegas casino are far greater than having your vote counted correctly.

The research of these two brothers covers twenty years. Such persistence!! They may still be researching had they not met Mae Brussell. Brussell was cited in Jonathan Vankin's book, Conspiracies, Coverups, & Crimes: Political manipulation and mind control in America. In his book, Vankin gives dignity to citizens who look for answers in places where the mass media refuses (or are forbidden-JC) to go. Vankin said that Mae Brussell was the "best engaged mind" of all the theorists. She was a brilliant researcher and probably the only person to cross-reference the 26 volumes of jumbled, non-indexed Warren Commission files. Mae had "gone on the air" and said the CIA, the FBI and the Mafia conspired to kill President John F. Kennedy.

Ken Collier appeared on a San Jose, California radio talk show while investigating that area for evidence of vote fraud. After listening to Ken's accounting of the votescam investigation, Mae Brussell couldn't resist the urge to call him (Ken) on the air. "Mae told Ken that the roots of vote fraud were to be found in Dallas that only there would we discover the truth behind the 'front gunman theory.'

"Mae said that the media had done a trade-off immediately after the shooting in Dallas. The television networks and the major press agreed to go along with the Warren Commission, stifling any impulses to investigate the truth about a front gunman -- IN RETURN FOR CONTROL OF THE VOTE COUNT."

The deal was made! The Jew-controlled United States Government (including the CIA, the FBI and the Mafia) made a deal with the Jew-controlled media. The Government said, "If you don't tell what we did (in Dallas), we'll give you control of the vote count in elections nation-wide." Apparently it was a good deal for both. The Warren Commission was a white-wash of the Kennedy assassination, and 33 years later, the media -- through votescam -- have only their choices of people in political office, most especially the one in the White House.

If the book VOTESCAM by the Collier brothers is not convincing enough, I direct your attention to the Jew-owned Wall Street Journal. The Journal printed the article by Jack Anderson (columnist for Newspaper Enterprize Association), "modern Vote Fraud's Undetectable." In the article, Anderson recounts a voting machine fraud in Jefferson Parish, La. He tells of Eva Waskell of Reston, Va. who has studied vote fraud for more than a decade. She says, "The election industry is virtually unregulated." Does this not smack of the government/media deal at Dallas? What's the WSJ's angle in printing this article? They know they are masters of White mind control and can say, and get away with, anything they choose.

As for Mae Brussell's "front gunman theory" at Dallas, a video is now available from The Spotlight: THE MURDER OF JFK - Confession of an Assassin - The actual chilling confession of James E. Files taped at Joliet State Penitentiary - "I hit him from the front... I was one of two men."

Is Files telling the truth? It's up for you to decide. Files said that he was involved in joint CIA-mob operations that led to the assassination of President Kennedy. If Mae Brussell were still alive, I'm sure she would believe Files. After all, someone shot Kennedy from the front; why not Files?

The need in America is not to vote. The need is to rid America of the Disease. Your vote is gone; your freedom is gone; your money is gone; your government is gone; your culture is gone because the Disease denied you a choice when they stole your vote 33 years ago. America, and you, are destitute. The only thing you have left is your anger.

Happy New Year,
Jarah B. Crawford, Tennessee

Dear Sir,

I wish you understood that the loss of your Christian tradition to the Jewish racial Darwin trick is what has ruined our civilization.

Dear George,

Enclosed is my subscription renewal money...

I'll be going back to Australia perhaps one last time. What a wonderful country with such polite, intelligent people! They all are much better informed about America than we are. They take being well informed in stride--as simply part of life while Americans tend to hide from knowledge and the exchange of ideas as too burdensome to deal with.

We can blame the Jews but they have simply taken advantage of a greedy, intellectually lazy populacve. I believe many Americans would shoot their own mother if so instructed by the government.

Keep plugging away anyway, George--you just might make a difference.

Sincerely, M.B., Oregon

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. Sale priced, single copy $2.00 + $1.50 postage, 10 for $15.00 + $5.00 postage.

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 — except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight Is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations.

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

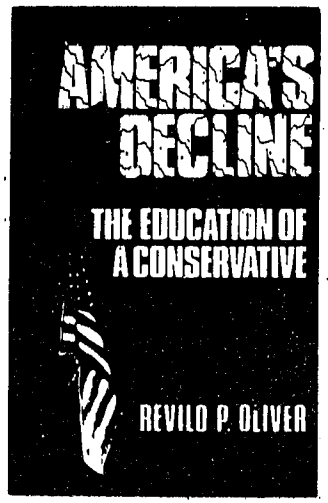
Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

DO YOUR PART TODAY—HELP FREE OUR WHITE RACE FROM ALIEN DOMINATION!



ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congolds unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

THE WAY AHEAD

A Primer for the N.S.-Vanguard

by

Colin Jordan

Part V

"A State which, in an epoch of racial adulteration, devotes itself to the duty of preserving the best elements of its racial stock must one day become ruler of the Earth."

Adolf Hitler,
(Mein Kampf, James Murphy edition, P. 378)

Our last issue (Nos. 33/34) surveyed various races, arguing for the identification and preservation of our own Nordic or predominantly Nordic Race within the Aryan racial assortment. That is one half of the subject matter of the great R of Race, partnering the other great R of Religion in the Vanguard's alphabet of vital reform. The other half is the concern to improve our racial stock by increasing the higher strains and decreasing the lower strains and eliminating the defective strains. This is the field of eugenics to be dealt with in this part of "The Way Ahead "series.

Paper propositions of amelioration are plentiful under Democracy. The best of proposals, however, depend on and are determined by the quality of the people involved, both those applying the proposals and those to whom they are applied. They come to frustration, not fruition, if the human material is inadequate, as is characteristically the case under Democracy. It is precisely the transcendent proposal of breeding better people as the direct access to a better world which Democracy in deference to its manipulators and clientele inevitably and eternally excludes from all consideration.

EARLIER PARTS OF "THE WAY AHEAD" SERIES ARE STILL AVAILABLE. Part One (GR 27) $2.50. Part Two (GR 28/29) $2. 50. Part Three (GR 30/31) $2. 50. Part Four (GR 33/34 $2. 50. All post free. This is so because Democracy is the virtual parent of Communism in all essence in its ultimate implications and full consequences. We have now reached the stage of metamorphosis in the West where formal Communism can seemingly withdraw because of the extent of its absorption by advanced Democracy in the sythesis of Commu-Capitalism. With the covert Communism of Democracy, no less than with the overt form, the materialist environment of the masses is held to be the determinant of Man, not heredity.

The oracles of Democracy, the system which creates a debased human herd, argue that eugenics lowers humans to the level of animals. Humans, they declare for the purpose of the argument, are too high and mighty to breed "like animals". To this contorted contention the overpowering answer is that it is precisely because humans are on a higher level than animals that good breeding which is accepted and pursued in good animal management is that much more justified in good human management.

DEMOCRACY BASED ON RACIAL DEBASEMENT

How illustrative it is of this perverse and ruinous outlook of Democracy that its citizens are obliged to take a driving test and to be licensed to drive a car in order to reduce the risk to others, including the precious class of overlords, whereas anyone, however deficient and degenerate and diseased, can freely, without let or hindrance, produce more of hiskind, regardless of the cumulative harm to society over subsequent time. The contradiction is immediately resolved once it is taken into account that Democracy essentially depends on a low-grade human herd as the means and surety for the undisturbed domination of the overlords. Hence sex, the fountain-head of life, is reduced under it to a sensual pastime, massively commercialised and deprived of all racial purpose.

Thus this incubating agent for Communism is in its pose to the public inevitably and eternally committed to the criterion of equality, to the arbiter of the head count, in conflict with quality as an objective. Finding its sustenance in the hallucinogenic vapours of contemporary Christianity, it not only holds that all races are equal and mixture commendable, but that all bipeds pronounced human, whether a genius like Richard Wagner or Isaac Newton or Rembrandt or Michelangelo, are likewise to be equated in civic evaluation. Accordingly for its propaganda purposes in flattering and charming and retaining the support of the masses, Democracy makes out it upholds and champions any and every depraved dolt engaged not in contributing to a flowering of human achievement, or even the steady functioning of ordinary society, but to the brutish procreation of even more dolts.

Great minds have not failed to reject the racially debasing process of Democracy, and to voice the eugenic imperative contrary to it. Alexis Carrel, 1912 Nobel Prize winner, on the staff of the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research in New York for nearly 30 years, did so in the following concise words in his perceptive treatise, Man, the Unknown (Pelican Books, 1943):- "Modern society must promote, by all possible means, the formation of better human stock."- P. 277. "Modern nations will save themselves by developing the strong, not by protecting the weak."- P. 273. "It is imperative that social classes should be synonymous with biological classes."- P. 273.

The botanist Luther Burbank did so expansively in the following frank words:- "Will the growing intelligence of man forever tolerate the wholesale production of the ever-lasting proportion of idiots, morons, mongoloids, insane, criminal, weak, destitute, nervous, diseased half men and women who infest the earth to their own sorrow and disgrace and perhaps the ultimate destruction of our present state of civilization?"

Oliver Wendell Holmes, distinguished judge of the Supreme Court of the U.S.A., did so in affirming in 1927 the constitutionality of state laws for the sterilisation of the mentally defective, when he declared:- "It is better for all the world if, instead of waiting to execute degenerate offspring for crime, or to let them starve for their imbecility, society can prevent those who are manifestly unfit from continuing their kind."

EUGENICS IN SPARTA AND ROME

Eugenical action is no new concept of modern times. The tiny Sparta of ancient times withstood and predominated over far more numerous neighbours through the promotion of quality which prompted its people to leave defective children out on the hillside to die. There we have a prospect certain to send the slobbering Christian democrat of today into a paroxysm of remorse.

Marriage outside the Spartan folk community was forbidden. There were penalties for celibacy and late marriage, and men who fathered several children were exempt from various obligations. All such racial right practice gave rise to a society ruled by devotion to duty and honour and commuunity service, the features so flagrantly rejected by Democracy and so vital for a resurgent Aryan society. Said the Greek philosopher Aristotle of the Spartan: "Such a man chooses to live nobly for a year rather than to pass many years in ordinary life, and he will rather do one great and noble deed than many small ones."What a world apart from the ethos of Democracy, centred on the feeding-trough and the constant thought of "What's in it for me?"

Ancient Rome, in the heyday of its pristine vigour, culled Nature's failures as did Sparta. The earliest, written, Roman, legal code, the Law of the Twelve Tables, which was first set down in writing about the middle of the fifth century B. C. but was based on a much older, legal tradition, specifically called for the immediate destruction of any conspicuously defective infant. Five centuries later, the Roman statesman, Lucius Annaeus Seneca (4 B.C. - 65 A.D.) confirmed the continuation of this far-reaching, beneficial practice, writing "We drown the weakling and the monstrosity. It is not passion, but reason, to separate the useless from the fit."

The pursuit of racial betterment has only in recent decades become something condemned and prohibited, and this in the wake of the victory of Democracy in alliance with formal Communism in 1945. Given the name of"eugenics"by its founding theorist, the distinguished scholar, Francis Galton, in the second half of the last century, it flourished in influence for many decades prior to then. By the outbreak of the First World War, promotional societies were thriving in both the U.S.A. and the U.K. The first public meeting of a Cambridge (England) society was told by Prof. Inge that, unless controls limited the reproduction of the urban proletariat, it"may cripple our civilisation as it destroyed ancient Rome." Leftists were not then immune or antagonistic to the new thought: Labour Party pioneers, Sidney and Beatrice Webb, who wrote the syllabus for British socialism, expounded their conviction that the social theory of collectivism required the state to ensure that only the fittest survived.

U.S.A. PIONEERS STERILISATION

In modern times it was the U.S.A. which preceded National-Socialist Germany with eugenic legislation. As far back as 1907 the Indiana legislature passed the first state sterilisation law, making sterilisation mandatory for confirmed criminals, idiots, imbeciles and other institutionalised people when deemed appropriate by an expert board. Thirty states had sterilisation laws by 1931, and by 1939 more than 30,000 people had been sterilised on eugenic grounds.

With the National-Socialist attainment of power in Germany, there came into being the first state in the modern world based on the bedrock of systematic, racial betterment, pursuant to Adolf Hitler's dictum in Mein Kampf: "The Weltanschauung which bases the State on the racial idea must finally succeed in bringing about a nobler era, in which men will no longer pay exclusive attention to breeding and rearing pedigree dogs and horses and cats, but will endeavour to improve the breed of the human race itself." (P. 228, James Murphy edition).

In July of the very first year of power, a law for the Prevention of Genetically Diseased Offspring required social workers and nurses to report all apparently "genetically defective" individuals to the health authorities, so that a genetic health court could decide whether they ought to be sterilised because in the judgement of the court they suffered from genetic illness such as feeble-mindedness, genetic epilepsy, schizophrenia, manic depressive insanity, genetic blindnesss or deafness, Huntington's chorea or serious physical malformation.

In November of the same first year a law against Dangerous Career Criminals allowed castration of sex offenders.

HITLER'S RAPID RACIAL REFORM

By early next year, 205 special eugenic courts were established, each consisting of a judge and 2 doctors, and with a series of Higher Hereditary Health Courts to deal with appeals. One year later nearly 100,000 applications for sterilisation — mostly by social workers on behalf of their clients — had been forwarded to the courts, and almost 56,200 operations had been carried out. (These facts from Mothers in the Fatherland by Claudia Koonz.)

The law for "Preservation from Hereditarily Diseased Posterity", enacted in July of 1935, provided for sterilising individuals with specific hereditary diseases, and in October of the same year the law relating to Matrimonial Hygiene prohibited marriage between persons with hereditary disease, requiring henceforth for marriage a medical certificate of biological fitness. Couples were required to take a medical examination before marriage, and marriage was forbidden between those suffering from any genetical infirmity specified in the July 1933 law.

According to Cesare Santoro's sympathetic survey, Hitler Germany (Internationaler Verlag, Berlin, 1938), German statistics at the time showed that about 400,000 needed to be sterilised, arising from the following categories of hereditarily transmitted diseases:- Congenital feeble-mindedness 200,000, schizophrenia or dementia praecox 80,000, maniacal depressive dementia 20,000, epilepsy 60,000, chorea 600, congenital deafness 16,000, congenital cecity 4,000, serious physical deformities 20,000, hereditary alcoholism 10,000. It has been estimated that about 400,000 were sterilised between 1934 and 1945.

Racial investigation and dissemination of racial knowledge abounded in the revolutionary New Germany of National-Socialism as never anywhere else before or afterwards. By 1936 10 German universities had Racial Hygiene departments, and all the others taught Racial Hygiene in their medical faculties; and many racial hygiene institutes also existed. Grandfather of the awakening was Fritz Lenz, author of Die Rasse also Weltprinzip (Munich, 1933). The Kaiser Wilhelm Institute for Anthropology, Human Genetics and Eugenics had by the end of 1934 trained 1,100 physicians in "genetic and racial care" and by 1940 had published a total of 569 scholarly works on racial hygiene and allied fields. (Racial Hygiene, Medicine Under the Nazis, Robert N. Proctor, Harvard University Press, 1988; Pages 41 & 42).

The Office of Racial Policy, between its foundation in 1934 and 1938, organised 64,000 public meetings and seminars. It acquired a staff of 3,600. Its journal, Neues Volk, attained editions of up to 300,000.

It may be noted in passing that under German National-Socialism the health of the race, the betterment of the race, was an all-embracing concept encompassing thought in advance of that prevalent then elsewhere, such as the holistic view of "the whole man", natural methods of medical treatment, concern with the toxic effects of substances such as tobacco, heavy metals, asbestos and alcohol, and with the importance of a diet rich in fruit and fibre and inclusive of whole-grain bread. In 1935 Reich Physician's Leader, Gerhard Wagner, denounced the modern world's white bread, and in a speech at the 1938 Nuremberg Congress spoke out for a diet of less meat and fats, more fruit and vegetables, and more whole-grain bread. German medical journals in the 1930s warned against the ill effects of artificial colourings and preservatives in foods and drinks. Adolf Hitler gave 100,000 Reichsmark from his own personal funds to the first Institute for the Struggle against Tobacco, established at the University of Jena in 1942.

In underlying conflict with the Christian conception of legitimacy, created by conformity to that creed's ritual of marriage, was the eugenical one of National-Socialism, recognising illegitimacy only in procreation which was racially detrimental. In similar underlying conflict with Christianity was the National-Socialist attitude to abortion, seen not as a universal evil in interference with the workings of the deity, but as something abhorrent specifically when harmful to the race, while acceptable and desirable when racially beneficial. This brings to mention one of the most maligned features of the race-based Germany of Adolf Hitler: the Lebensborn project.

LEBENSBORN: A RACIAL WELFARE SERVICE

Luridly portrayed by the lying democratic propaganda as some blend of brothel and stud farm, the Lebensborn maternity homes were absolutely nothing of the kind. Inaugurated in 1935 to counter the appalling loss of racially valuable babies, there having been nearly a million abortions in Germany the year before the National-Socialists came to power, their stated aim was "To care for racially and genetically valuable mothers of whom it may be assumed, after careful investigation of their own family and that of the father, that they will give birth to equally valuable children."

From the start they cared for mothers both married and unmarried, and children both those rated "legitimate" and those rated "illegitimate" in conventional parlance. They were not limited to SS families. Only women already pregnant were admitted. Men were only allowed to visit the homes on special occasions, and no sexual contact was allowed in them. A mother could opt to have a child adopted or to bring it up herself. If she chose the former, the greatest care was taken with adoption. If she chose the latter, she received an allowance on leaving the home until able to manage for herself.

At the other end from promoting the entry into the world of racially desirable, new life was the issue of promoting the exit from it of human monstrosities who otherwise cause an immense drain on the resources of the community. Here we are talking of children born with gaps where facial organs should have been, missing limbs, eyes which never open and tongues which protrude grotesquely, heads larger than bodies or as small as fists, open skulls in which part of the brain is missing, and heads with eyes in dislocated positions; adults who as long as they live have to be kept lying on sand or sawdust, because they perpetually soil themselves, even putting their own excrement in their mouths as if it were food. According to Christianity, all such creatures are the precious creations of the deity who gives them life and appoints their death, and hence are to be preserved at all cost, which must distinguish that deity as an abomination also. For National-Socialism the kind necessity is to put such errors of Nature out of their misery painlessly and promptly. Hence National-Socialist Germany introduced a euthanasia programme which is reckoned to have rid the country of some 70,000 such creatures.

ARE THEY HUMAN?

Before precipitately succumbing to the frantic pangs of Christian revulsion at the first sound of a suggestion of such a programme, face up to and tally the cost and the cruelty of prolonging the life of such creatures who cannot properly be called "human"! True kindness conjoined to racial responsibility justifies and demands their elimination as part of the stern measures which have to be pursued to save the race. As Friedrich Nietzsche put it: "What causes more suffering in the world than the stupidity of the compassionate?"

The German public was enlightened as to the dire menace of hereditary defect and disease through a series of films in the cinema, produced by the Racial and Political Office, beginning with "Sünden der Väter (Sins of the Fathers) and "Abseits vom Wege" (Off the Path) in 1935, and continuing with "Erbkrank" (Hereditarily Ill) in 1936, and "Alles Leben ist Kampf" (All Life is Struggle) and "Opfer der Vergangenheit" (Victims of the Past) in 1937.

All this unique work for racial betterment was brought to a halt and reversed in the outcome of the great war for Democracy, 1939-1945. Its victory brought in the present dark age of racial downfall. Under it in Britain today welfare benefits are accorded for offspring regardless of their inferiority and defectiveness, and that of their parents; and the Health Service and Social Services call out constantly for more and more money to cope with the consequences of hereditary defects. Britain's vaunted "Welfare State" is in fact its Woeful State in its dysgenic features and effects, dedicated to the care and promotion of the lower and lowest levels of life in preference to and at the expense of the higher order of humanity. According to a survey in the London Independent (6 January 1994), "A million people in Britain are members of families affected by genetic disorders and 15,000 babies are born each year with significant inherited disabilities." "Scientists have described more than 5,000 inherited disorders caused by single gene defects."

Over 30 years ago, Her Majesty's Stationery Office report, "A Census of Patients in Psychiatric Beds", revealed that on census night, 31 December, 1963, there were 195,811 people on the books of psychiatric hospitals and units of whom 135,831 were in mental illness accomodation and 59,980 in that for subnormality.(London Daily Telegraph, 5 May, 1967). Evidently not satisfied with the numbers, a BBC Radio 4 programme in December, 1982, deplored the lack of sexual opportunities for the mentally handicapped, seeing it as an awful restriction that they lacked the fullest opportunity to produce more and more of their kind to the peril of the public purse and the health of the nation.

HEREDITARY DISEASES AND DEFECTS

One hereditary disease of the brain is Huntington's chorea, distinguished by speech disturbances, mental deterioration and uncontrollable movements, ending in total incapacitation and death, and for which there is no successful treatment. There were 6,000 in the U.K. with this disease previous to 1979 who had by that date by democratic right of procreation brought into the world 30,000 children and grandchildren similarly afflicted, and the proliferation has proceeded apace since then.

Down's syndrome is far and away the commonest form of congenital mental deficiency. Another hereditary disease is Friedreich's ataxia, characterised by a hardening of the spinal column, swaying and paralysis. As far back as 1979, 1,000 babies were being born each year with this disease. Another is Homocystinuria, an inherited biochemical disorder whose clinical signs include mental retardation, thrombosis, and a weakening of the wall of the big arteries to the extent that they sometimes burst.

Along with spinabifidat muscular dystrophy and cystic fibrosis, there is a severe combined immune deficiency whereby a child is programmed by genes inherited from its parents to have no immunity to disease, so that it dies from the first infection. There is also Lesch-Nyhan syndrome which affects only boys, causing spasticity of the limbs, involuntary movements, gross mental retardation and a bizarre compulsion to self-mutilation.

One could continue with the catalogue of congenital defects and diseases which deny a person a proper life, yet which are preserved and patronised under the system of racial decline and death known as Democracy. The British Medical Association voiced the mentality of this sinister system in a pronouncement relating to a court case concerning whether a 17-year-old girl with a mental age of 5 should "as a last resort" be sterilised specifcally because she could not cope with pregnancy and childbirth, and for no other reason. It laid down that "There should never be the slightest suggestion that sterilisation is being carried out for 'eugenic' reasons, that is to prevent the birth of another mentally handicapped child." (London Daily Telegraph, 17 March, 1987).

Jews may consider themselves divinely selected, but their Jehovah has not chosen to render them immune to hereditary diseases, including some peculiar to them. Ashkenazi Jews, who are those from Eastern Europe and who make up the majority of world Jewry, are ethnically unique in being subject to the incurable Tay Sachs disease, a genetic disorder causing progressive destruction of the central nervous system. Children afflicted with the disease usually die before they reach four years of age.

Another hereditary disease of ethnic peculiarity is sickle cell anaemia, an inherited disorder affecting the red blood cells which assume a sickle shape instead of the normal spherical shape, and which is peculiar to people of African, Afro-Caribbean, Asian and Mediterranean origin, the last-named where a negroid racial infusion can be suspected. Its symptoms range from weakness, swelling of hands and feet, lowered resistance to infections, growth disturbance, enlarged heart, enlarged liver and lymph glands, and impaired renal function. There is no known cure.

JUKES AND THE SPREAD OF DEGENERACY

The appalling, ultimate cost to society of tolerating the proliferation of degenerate stock was exemplified in the record of the Jukes family presented in Lothrop Stoddard's classic study, The Revolt against Civilisation (Chapman & Hall, 1922). One lazy vagabond named Jukes, living in the U.S.A. in the early 18th Century, had two sons who married five degenerate sisters, resulting in six further generations by 1877 numbering about 1,200 persons distinguished by idleness, viciousness, lewdness, pauperism, disease, idiocy, insanity and criminality.

The terrible fact is that the lower the human type, the greater its reproductive achievement. Whn Stoddard's book was written the Eugenics Record Office in the U.S.A. considered that over 30% of the entire U. S. population carried some form of mental defect. That was three-quarters of a century ago, so what of the percentage now?

The plague of civilisation Stoddard defined as the extirpation of the superior strains and the multiplication of the inferior. "Late marriage, fewer children, and celibacy combined to thin the ranks of the successful, diminish the number of superior strains, and thus gradually impoverish the race." "Meanwhile, as the numbers of the superior diminished, the numbers of the inferior increase. No longer ruthlessly weeded by natural selection, the inferior survived and multiplied." These inferior elements Stoddard assessed as instinctively or consciously the enemies of civilisation.

On the hereditary factor in the delinquency plaguing contemporary society, J. Philippe Rushton in Race, Evolution and Behaviour (Transaction Publishers, U.S.A., 1995) reported:- "In a study of delinquency among 530 adolescent twins by Rowe and Osgood (1984), path analysis revealed not only that antisocial behaviour was about 50 percent heritable, but that the correlation of 0.56 between the delinquency of an individual and the delinquency of his friend was mediated genetically, that is, that adolescents genetically disposed to delinquency were also genetically inclined to seek each other out for friendship." - P. 82.

At the other end of the eugenic spectrum, Francis Galton, the founder of the science, in his Hereditary Genius (Julian Friedman, London, 1978) examined 300 families containing between them nearly 1,000 eminent men, 415 of whom he distinguished as illustrious. - P. 316. Concerning in this connection the notion that inbreeding is always damaging, Sir Arthur Keith (A New Theory of Human Evolution, Watts & Co., London, 1948) clarified the matter on Page 143:- "All depends on the quality of the genes assembled in a group pool: if all are health-giving, then all will be well; but if there be a proportion, even a small proportion, of defective or recessive genes, then repeated mating within a small isolated group will speedily bring defective genes together, so damaging the life of a group."

SHOCKLEY SPEAKS OUT

Concerning the genetic peril confronting us, Dr. William Shockley, 1956 Nobel Prize winner, was outspoken despite a contemporary environment fiercely hostile to eugenics. In an article in the April 1981 issue of Leaders magazine, entitled "Intelligence in Trouble", he warned:- "The effectiveness of human leadership will deteriorate on a worldwide basis by the year 2000 because of the action of dysgenics on their followers. Dysgenics is backward evolution caused by the excessive reproduction of the genetically disadvantaged."

He proposed that low IQ people be paid for agreeing to be sterilised, the rate being $1,000 for each IQ point below 100; the expenditure being justified by the fact that each of these payments might save taxpayers as much as $250,000 through not having to care for the mentally retarded offsprings of the man's liaisons. (Master Race, Catrine Clay & Michael Leapman, Hodder & Stoughton, 1995).

He was not afraid to declare in relation to Blacks always scoring some 15 points lower than Whites in IQ tests:- "The major deficit in Negro intellectual performance must be primarily of hereditary origin and thus relatively irremediable by any practical improvements in the environment." Prof. Arthur Jensen, Shockley's contemporary, reached the kindred conclusion that heredity accounts for about 80% of the difference in IQ between Blacks and Whites, likewise his colleague, Hans Eysenck.

REPRESSING RESEARCH

All those academics who have dared to highlight heredity have been victims of persecution by the forces intent on repressing their research and its eugenic implications. Eysenck was assaulted by invading Marxists while lecturing at the University of London, and he and Jensen had to have police bodyguards for years. Philippe Rushton, a professor at the University of Western Ontario, became scheduled to be prosecuted by the Canadian Government for "hate crime", although the prosecution failed because of lack of pursuit by the Minister of Justice: the "hate crime" being that his disclosure of the results of his IQ and brain size studies had brought him to express the conclusion that racial equality is a non-existent figment of multiracial propaganda.

Another victim has been Edinburgh (Scotland) University lecturer, Christopher Brand, who in his book The g Factor — General Intelligence and its Implications (John Wiley & Sons Ltd, 1996) has courageously affirmed the dominant role of heredity in intelligence, and proclaimed Blacks to be less intelligent than Whites. "I am perfectly proud to be a racist in the scientific sense," he has told Student magazine in April, 1996. His publishers have withdrawn the book from distribution in response to intense pressure from the tyrants of Political Correctness.

DENIGRATING GENETIC MANAGEMENT

As part of the continuing campaign against eugenics, a great effort is being made to turn people against anything which can be termed "genetic engineering", seeking to frighten them off with Frankenstein imagery. Of course anything under the sun can be misused, but this ever-present and universal possibility should not deter us from considering and accepting the great good that can be obtained through genetic management. The development of techniques whereby scientists can influence or control the characteristics passed from one generation to another may some day lead to the possibility of eliminating hereditary diseases and defects and deformities. It can also lead to the cultivation of genes resulting in improved human faculties, and increase health all round. Research on human embryos could lead to the cure of cancer.

Standing in the way of such desirable progress are the cohorts of Christianicy such as those leaders of the faith who petitioned the U.S. Congress for a ban on research into genetic management: an advocacy of obscurantism plunging us back to pre-Galileo times, substituting superstitious ignorance for knowledge. This was the attitude responsible for the April 1989 decision by the European Community's Research Commissioner to ban research into the genetic origins of disease on "ethical" grounds, and which incurred the following caustic comment:- "A ban on human embryo research will condemn future generations to suffer 4,000 inherited diseases which could be eliminated if scientific work is allowed to continue, says a report published today. About 14,000 babies a year are born with diseases which could be detected by embryo screening, claims the Interim Licensing Authority." (Daily Telegraph, London, 28 November, 1989.

In the first few weeks of pregnancy, foetal cells can be extracted and examined and defects discovered, and a defective child aborted. Beyond this, embryonic biopsy is the name for a screening whereby eggs are taken from the mother and fertilised in vitro, grown to 8 or 16 cells, a cell taken off each embryo and developed as rapidly as possible, and then only disease-free embryos are put back into the mother. Said Instauration magazine (U.S.A., June, 1986):- "Destroying embryos that contain genes that cause hereditary diseases and defects would be the greatest boon to human development and progress since Homo Sapiens evolved from Homo Erectus. What a deflationary boon for health care, the spiraling costs of which are now threatening to bankrupt many Western nations!"

COMMITMENT TO BETTER THE BREED

As indicated in opening the subject, and here stressed in coming to a close on it, what we Aryans desperately need is better people, not better plans for existing people. Eugenics, put into public practice as the selective control of procreation to uplift the breed by eliminating the inferior and defective, and promoting the superior and faultless, is the greatest conceivable means for human improvement, infinitely more efficacious than any grandiose policies dependent on and spoilt by the poor quality of persons involved. Yet this super-highway to super-humanity is today under Democracy wholly a maligned and disregarded route.

As also said before but also here deserving repetition in conclusion, this is so because of Democracy's underlay of Christianity, that great obfuscation embracing the belief that the giving and taking of life is the exclusive prerogative of a deity who fathers and cherishes all human beings as his handiwork, regardless of their condition. Persons committed to this dismal dogma will never prove reliable for the full requirements of the racial struggle in all its rigour. Up to a point they may contrive to reconcile the irreconcilable, but sooner or later they will reach a point where they back off in dismay, stopping short of what is necessary, and retreating into the comforting cocoon of their delusions.

Electioneering is also to be seen, like Christianity, as always a bypass to racial betterment, and never a route to it; being a forlorn commitment to the corrupting pastures of compromise. This is so because the process of electioneering is to make the body concerned palatable to the great mass of the public, while that great mass incorporates all the inferior and defective elements who need to be acted against, and accordingly can be depended on fiercely to oppose eugenical measures affecting them which will only be introduced and enforced against their will, and never by their mandate.

Hence the inevitable price of fighting elections is stultifying and emasculating inhibition which becomes habitual. Electioneering has to begin with self-imposed censorship, preventing the presentation of so much that is essential. It has to continue in the cast of compromise, constituting conversion to the desires of the lauded, common herd. It has to end, if this prostitution does bring enough votes, in the abandonment of principles, in the attainment of a powerless power in thatconditioned by compromise, brought to power by compromise, that custom of compromise causes power to be spent in the avoidance of doing what is essential.

Thus the right route to racial betterment is not through the nullifying wilderness of electioneering, seeking popularity in the cause of illusory, ballot box success, but through methodical progression to the seizure of power by feasible methods to be examined later in this series. Meanwhile, members of the Vanguard can here and now positively pursue real, racial betterment by carefully investigating and wisely selecting a person of high-quality stock to mate with, just as they can in a variety of other ways attain now in microcosm the future New Order.

(The next part in "The Way Ahead" series will fully examine electioneering)

RESEARCH CONFIRMS RACES DIFFER.

"Recently-released results of research done by a team of geneticists from Emory University reveal that the races of Man have distinctive types of DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid). DNA is a molecular material found in the chromosomes that carry the hereditary in formation which determines the make-up of all the cells of the body." The Nationalist (U.S. A., July, 1988).

AUTOLOGOUS BLOOD TRANSFUSION. Mention was made in our last issue of objec tions to blood mixture in conventional blood transfusion. Beyond them is the danger of contracting Hepatitis C, the blood-borne virus that can progressively destroy the liver; or AIDS, even though screening is now supposed to be so efficient. However, apart from this, it is now becoming evident that patients do much better with their own blood, as they avoid what is called "immune modulation" whereby a patient's immune system is down-rated through a transfusion of someone else's blood. This is a situation where the body's blood cells react to the new cells transfused as strangers, and bacteria are able to enter in consequence.

Self-supply of blood in advance of an operation requiring a transfusion has been subject to snags such as patients sometimes being too weak or ill to provide the blood, or not providing enough. Now a new scheme called "Intraoperative Salvage" has been devised whereby patients are connected during surgery to a machine which collects blood lost through the operation, cleans it, stores it, and can return it to the patient within minutes if required. "Intraoperative Salvage" has now become available at over 20 hospitals, conserving blood and eliminating risk, and should be agitated for. There is an Autologous Blood Transfusion Education Centre, Sorin Biomedica UK, Holmbush Estate, Midhurst, West Sussex, GU29 9HX.

OPERATIONAL CHECKING. A reader in Germany, faced with a hip operation, and intent on ensuring that her own, pre-donated blood was in fact used for a conventional transfusion, insisted on a local anaesthetic so that she could watch during the operation that the blood did in fact come from her marked blood bag.

CONQUERING BRITAIN BY BIRTH RATE. "Britain's ethnic minority population grew at a rate 40 times faster than the white majority in the 10 years to 1991, according to figures published by the Government yesterday." (Daily Telegraph (London, 6 September, 1996).

PUBLICATION FURTHER DELAYED BY ILLNESS. This issue, late as it was for other reasons, was under preparation for publication just before yuletide (and accordingly marked; as it is, "December 1996") when illness, including a bout of heart failure, hit your editor — who is now recovering causing further delay while he was obliged to rest.

Many readers have very kindly sent yuletide cards which are much appreciated, and it was the editor's intention either to reciprocate or at least acknowledge when sending out this issue in time for yuletide. Now, however, it is too late to send out any cards, so he can only here acknowledge those sent, and most sincerely thank the senders.

Your 73-year-old editor has the firm intention of continuing the good fight, which alone gives meaning to life, by way of Gothic Ripples and his other writings for as long as he is physically able, and hopes this will prove a long way ahead, as he has so much he wants to do, but in view of the heart trouble it is probably wise to anticipate the possibility that at any time life may be cut short, and therefore to take this opportunity of expressing thanks to all of you for your support, and most of all to those particular people who over the years have sustained and encouraged him with their repeated, generous donations. These special people, whose loyalty and assistance have been such a wonderful and memorable stimulus to him in his work, include M. H.E, K.M., R.M., W. W., J.M. and A.W. His heart-felt gratitude goes out to them with this issue.

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb.) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. THE DESCENSION OF MAN

An Essay by
Richard C. Bentinck, M.D.

"Human beings are absurdly easy to indoctrinate. They seek it."
-Edward O. Wilson,
Sociobiology: The New Synthesis,
Harvard University Press, 1982.

The diminishing numbers of mankind among the enormous redundancy of hairless bipedal hybrids infesting earth are in serious trouble. While a few perceive the manifestation and are concerned, almost none any longer perceive the root cause. We are deliberately deceived about our origins, misled about our place in Nature and blinded to our future. This is a part of a conspiracy which began long ago. We are slated for extinction.

In 1859, Charles Darwin published his Origin of Species in which he proposed his ideas on the differentiation of species gleaned from his position as a Naturalist aboard H.M.S. Beagle during its circumnavigation of the globe. A.R. Wallace, who stayed at home, had submitted almost identical ideas in 1858 and it was he who first suggested the additional idea of natural selection. Though there was never any enmity between the two, it seems a little unfair that these ideas came to be known only as "Darwin's Theory of Evolution".

In opposition to "creationism", the theory of evolution is based on the recognition that living things change from one generation to the next. Sexual reproduction prohibits cloning; a child cannot be identical to either parent. Changes that are beneficial to the survival and reproduction of an organism result in increased numbers of the strain carrying the beneficial genetic mutation through "natural selection" and "survival of the fittest". This favored strain, then, is better adapted to its environment and better fitted to survive to reproductive age than its weaker siblings who fall by the wayside. In this manner, the theory claims, over geologic time sufficient favorable mutations may accumulate in multiple generations such that the parent organism is no longer recognizable in descendant generations. And, so the Darwinian theory goes, a new species has been formed—and the process continues ad infinitum.

The genetic component of the creatures at the apex of any lineage will, according to theory, show the greatest divergence from their progenitor. This is logical. Since life on earth is based on essentially identical chemical and physical reactions of energy and form, all living things are more alike than disparate. It is but a short step, then, to a doctrine that all living things must trace their origin to one or more accidents in the primordial soup three-plus billion years ago. If this is accepted as being true, each of the artfully designated categories of Nature called "species" by man, must trace its ancestry in an unbroken stream of evolution flowing back through an almost infinite series of bunched characteristics barely discernible, one from the other, to a group of organisms that seem, perhaps only because of fatigue of the classifier, to constitute the "founder" of the species. The founder is the founder of this particular species because his characteristics, physical or chemical, differ less in series from his offspring than they do from the next most similar animal that seems to have been in existence longer. Thus the "tree of evolution" is built. This sort of classification is useful and necessary to the way we think, but it is still artificial and not necessarily the way Nature 'thinks'.

The sciences of anthropology, archaeology and microbiological genetics declare that the origins of modern man are traceable back to the chimpanzee, our nearest "relative". All this supposedly came about through a series of steps up a ladder of progenitors to our present exalted position as the assumed possessor of the best brain of the bunch. This assumption, for that is exactly what it is, that all 'hairless bipeds' are consanguineous and originated in Africa appears to be imposed because the evidence does not support such a conclusion. It is the time frame in which Darwin's theory has been mis-applied to the origin of Homo sapiens, apparently in the interest of being consistent with the present politically correct dogma, that contradicts the evidence. Perhaps such an imposition of an invalid conclusion might be understood in the interest of 'political correctness' since, at one stroke, it makes all hairless bipeds 'brothers under the skin' as Homo sapiens. This perversion of Darwinism is not upheld by the evidence. However, in academia, to disbelieve a 'politically correct' accepted explanation of a phenomenon is heresy. Heresy jeopardizes funding by government and private foundations. The penalty is professional death.

Back about four million years ago, the happy chattering of chimpanzees was interrupted by the sudden appearance, geologically speaking, of a new addition to the African landscape. This brainier creature had a cranial capacity of around 500 cubic centimeters compared to the chimps with a brain of only approximately 250 cubic centimeters. He was the first of the Australopithecines (southern apes) whose fossilized bones have been found in the Rift Valley highlands of eastern Africa. Over a little more than a million years, perhaps, there were a number of Australopithecines such as A. afarensis (slender Australopithecine), A. Africanus (small and slight) and A. Robustus. The Australopithecines differed primarily in physical habitus but were similar in the architecture and capacity of the skull.

Just as suddenly about two-and-a-half million years ago, while the Australopithecines were still on stage, a new creature appeared. His cranial capacity of about 750 cubic centimeters and a somewhat facile use of tools tended to differentiate him from the less brainy, apelike forebears. First designated a "pithecanthropine" (ape man), recently he was honored with the title of "Homo" so that he could be considered one of us. He was borderline, but given the benefit of doubt, he proudly bore the posthumous title of "Homo Habilis".

After wandering the Rift Valley for about a million years, "Homo" Habilis disappeared also but not before he was disturbed, perhaps even frightened, by the sudden appearance of a quite formidable creature 1.6 million years ago. This creature was first known as Pithecanthropus Erectus because of the similarity of the bones he left behind to those of the apes. He is considered to have fully descended from the trees and to have spent all his time upright except when sleeping. Recently he also was voted into the fraternity of man as "Homo" erectus, more clearly a political than an anthropological decision, because his cranial capacity of 1000 to 1200 cubic centimeters was a little larger than that of the pure Congoids whose promotion had preceded his.

The gradual changes in form as postulated by Darwinian evolution were not found in Homo Erectus any more than they had in "Homo" Habilis or the Australopithecines. For over a million years until about 500,000 years ago, "Homo" Erectus existed with no significant change in his fossil remains. He remained identifiable as the same species throughout this period during which the earth had undergone cataclysmic changes.

And then, as the accepted paradigm would have it, at some disputed point in the past as long ago as 750,000 years or as recently as 35,000 to 40,000 years ago, Homo sapiens sprang into being. Literally, he had to have leapt an immense evolutionary gap all at once. From our postulated forebear with a brain of only about 1200 cubic centimeters maximum and virtually no development of the allimportant frontal lobes, protruding mouth parts (prognathism), no vocal apparatus functionally capable of modulated speech, and no chin after a million years of changeless monotony, he suddenly, like the fairy prince, changed into a fully modern human being.

In order to fit this scenario, profound changes particularly in and about his head had to have occurred. His skull had to become larger and thinner and modified in its shape with a high forehead allowing for a larger brain averaging 1450 cubic centimeters, disappearance of the heavy brow ridges, prognathism had to disappear and he had to develop a chin. But above all, the character of his brain had to change. The frontal lobes, allimportant to the abstract and creative thinking necessary to the development of a civilization, had to appear as a functional attribute. This enlarged brain had to become more convoluted with consequent quadrupling of the area, volume and neuronal density of the allimportant cerebral cortex. This all required an increased blood supply as evidenced by vascular indentations in the interior of the skull. In short, to our brain and particularly to the frontal lobes, we owe our civilization, our inventiveness and our future. Without the frontal lobes of an advanced brain, no matter how enormous the rest of the brain might become, such creatures would be nothing more than ingenious chimps with a vocal apparatus and a mean streak. It could make all kinds of noise, but it would make no sense. It would be, as we see and hear so often now, mere primitive vicious and vile nonsense.

All these presumed forebears, clearly delineated by immutable fossilized characteristics—and by the artefacts of living that often accompany them—presented a profound embarrassment to those who want to link us all together in one great everevolving family proceeding gradually to some socialistic Utopia of secure enslavement. Classical Darwinism could not explain the great gaps! They even renamed Pithecanthropus erectus (apeman) as Homo erectus in the forlorn hope that semantics might somehow erase this barrier between theory and reality. The gaps just would not go away no matter how industriously the archaeological digs were dug. The gulf between the chimpanzee, the Australopithecines, "Homo" habilis, "Homo" erectus and the real Homo sapiens is still there. There are no intermediary forms as required by the gradualism required by true Darwinian evolution. "Gradualism" simply does not exist!

At first, the obvious excuses for the failure of classical Darwinism were made, "The transitional fossils are there. We just haven't found them yet." So, they dug and dug and dug some more. No transitional forms have been found. Darwin's theory seemed done for and with its demise would go that longtreasured plan to link all hairless bipeds into a single "brotherhood" called man.

This was a critical point for the continued existence of Darwin's idea as a scientifically valid 'theory of evolution' as applied to man. Any theory in order to have scientific validity, among other considerations, must be capable of disproof. As applied to man, the 'theory' stood in limbo. It could be proved by demonstrating gradualyevolved links between the chimps, the various presumed progenitors of man and man himself. It could be disproved only by proving that such intermediary forms did not exist. But this is impossible! It is manifestly impossible to prove a negative. As such, then, and at this juncture, Darwin's theory of evolution had no validity as a scientific statement insofar as the origins of mankind was concerned. It was simply somebody's idea that could not warrant further scientific consideration or expenditure of funds in the pursuit of something neither provable nor unprovable.

In 1954, Ernst Mayr (1) found an ingenious solution to the dilemma. It was called "punctuational evolution". Received at first with skepticism, he reasserted his idea in his book, Animal Species and Evolution, in 1963 when it aided his move to Harvard as one of the leading evolutionists of the century. Somewhere, his idea must have struck a chord. Not until the 1970's when two noted paleontologists, Niles Eldredge of the American Museum of Natural History and Stephen Jay Gould, also of Harvard and probably despairing of evidence to support what had been accepted as the proper interpretation of Darwin's theory, urged official recognition of Mayr's idea. (2) It is now an essential component of the academically fundable paradigm. The International Bankers approved.

"Punctuated Equilibrium" postulates that the course of evolution is not one of gradual change ("gradualism"). Rather, it postulates that a species can exist for long periods without significant change until mutations produce occasional jumps in the characteristics of the parent genus large enough to originate a new species. It is held to be more likely to occur in smaller, isolated groups rather than in the enormous interacting populations of today. The idea is not universally supported by paleontologists. It is sometimes referred to as "evolution by jerks".

There are some formidable problems with the notion of "punctuated equilibrium" as applied. The physiochemical and behavioral characteristics that shape every individual as well as his species are determined by his genes—his genetic makeup. Each gene is made up of thousands of basepairs of organic acids (nucleotides) each of which determine the form of a specific protein necessary for the form and fact of the living being. Long strings of genes form the chromosomes which are present in every cell of our body.

Genes are subject to mutation. This means that one or more of the hundreds of thousands of basepairs that make up a gene are changed. In Nature, this is a random process. The agents that cause such changes are called "mutagens" and are largely unknown but include such agents as radiation, various chemicals and viruses. When a gene mutates, the protein it was coded to model is changed. Since form and figure are believed to derive from the configuration of the extremely complex large molecules called proteins, the influence of a new and different protein among the untold multitude that comprise our bodies may be profound. Almost all mutations are harmful. The carrier is either spontaneously aborted, dies sooner after birth than would be normal or fails life's contest in some other manner.

Once in a while, a mutation is favorable and the carrier has been given some sort of slight, often invisible advantage in life. It might be so unnoticeable as just a few days longer reproductive life than his or her contemporaries. This might be just enough time for one additional pregnancy. If that progeny carried the same trait as a dominant, the trait would be manifested in his or her offspring regardless of whether or not his or her mate carried the genetic equivalent. And there are further complications such as 'penetrance', associated unfavorable combinations, convergence, genetic drift and others to the gradual establishment of even an almost insignificant trait in a population. If it is possible to create a new mammalian species by this method, an enormous number of favorable mutations would have to be accumulated in a population over a period of time.

In real life, the prospects for "punctuated equilibrium" do not look nearly that good. For example, to change from "Homo" erectus to Homo sapiens, the brain would have to increase in volume by almost 50% along with monumental skull, jaw, tooth and body changes. Even though the percentage difference in the nuclear genome between man and any of his presumed progenitors may be less than two percent, the total number of basepairs, the mutable element, represented in this small percentage is in the hundreds of thousands.

To make matters more unlikely to the point of virtual impossibility, the physical manifestation of whatever number of mutations would be necessary to create a new species in order to demonstrate the observed gap, would have to have been held in abeyance until they all could be exercised virtually simultaneously! But it gets worse.

It has been estimated that favorable genetic changes in order to become established and persist in a species over time must involve populations of at least 500 breeding individuals. This means that the requisite number of mutations of basepairs within the genes would have to occur consistently in at least 500 individuals. The expression of each these mutated genes would then have to be held in abeyance in each of these 500plus individuals over whatever time was required to accumulate sufficient genetic change for the birth to each of the mothers of a baby so profoundly different from his parents that he would constitute a new species. How many mothers would suckle a creature so different from themselves?

For these reasons, the doctrine of "punctuated equilibrium" as applied to the origin of Homo sapiens is an impossibility. It cannot explain the lack of fossil evidence to support a link between man and his presumed progenitors.

Nevertheless, the accepted doctrine remains locked in its logic-tight compartment. The forces dedicated to the destruction of non-hybrid man are enormous. Basking in the warmth of political sanction and secure with an approved mechanism for the acceptable interpretation of data that was also viewed with favor by the funding sources, academia proceeded to attempt to extend and reinforce the official dogma with advanced microbiological techniques.

There are two sets of chromosomes in every cell: the nuclear and the mitochondrial. The nuclear chromosomes are retained within the cell's nucleus and are derived half from each parent of sexuallyreproducing organisms like us. Both the female ovum and the male spermatozoon contain half the chromosomal makeup of their contributor—that is, the mother and the father will each be represented in the nuclear chromosomes of their offspring. A great mixup of the maternalpaternal DNA takes place in the fertilized ovum. This makes the tracing of longterm lineages using nuclear DNA extremely difficult and inexact.

That is where the mitochondrium enters the picture. The mito-chondrium is a discrete little organelle in every cell. It is the cell's energy factory. It contains only 37 genes (thousands of basepairs) but uniquely, these are usually transmitted only from the mother without paternal contribution. The spermatozoon also has a mitochondrium, but usually this is broken off and discarded along with the tail during penetration of the ovum.

By manipulation of the genetic material of various types of hairless bipeds, "molecular anthropology"—as this process has been named—came up with the pseudoscientific conclusion that modern "humans" arose as a completely original species between 100,000 and 200,000 years ago in Africa and only in Africa (3).

Dubbed "African Eve", this "original mother of us all" was pounced upon with delight by the hybriddirected media. "Eve" with her "Adam" were portrayed as highly hybridized cafeaulait mulattos holding hands in an African Eden on the cover of Time Magazine. A somewhat less attractive black, prognathous couple covered with hair adorned the cover of Discover Magazine.

The joyous affair between the resurrected Eve and the elitedirected prostitutes of the media is understandable. This at once, if not just another myth, defeated all those evil "racist" separatists by establishing that we are all "brothers under the skin". All of a sudden, there could be no such thing as miscegenation. The multitude of differences between whites and blacks were gone in a flash. The interbreeding of whites and blacks was now de rigeur. Hollywood could continue showing blacks and whites pawing and screwing each other ad nauseum. The Illuminati smiled covertly.

There are many problems with the "Eve Hypotheses". It is loaded with assumptions and requirements that are either on shaky ground or totally in conflict with fact and with each other. To begin with, another African presumed hominid, "Homo" erectus had made his home throughout Europe, Australasia and East Africa long before the advent of Eve and her progeny. Supposedly "Eve's" children, spurning his sexual advances or too fastidious to rape his females, killed them all instead.

Since "Homo" erectus was a fairly rugged and competent beast who may have coexisted with this proposed "Eve" in Africa and, if so, perhaps some of his kind could have been part of her lineage, this replacement theory seems farfetched. Besides nowhere in history has there been a lack of at least a few human animals who would rape whatever they could catch or would submit sexually to whatever. Even similar species are not a requirement of such couplings.

The idea that this completely new species from Africa totally replaced indigenous "hominid" populations all over the world cannot be supported. Fossil evidence shows that modern Chinese, Australasians and Europeans each resemble their local predecessors with no sign of hybridization with archaic immigrants from Africa at any time (4, 5). The fossil evidence, Wolpoff and others claim, indicates that modern man originated in several places rather than one. So, among the experts, there is a large question of the proposed relationship of modern man to this hypothetical "African Eve".

The studies that created "Eve" and placed her birthplace in Africa were reported by Cann, et al in Nature in 1987(3). A followup extension and refinement was reported by Vigilant, et al in Science in 1991 (6) and by Wilson and Cann in Scientific American in 1992 (7).

These and similar studies are based upon comparisons of maternal mitochondrial DNA (mtDNA) from five different geographic/"racial" populations: European (United States), African, Australian (aboriginal), Asian and New Guinean. Sequence differences of the mtDNA samples were reported as percentages of divergence, one from the other and from the chimpanzee. It was assumed that the less the divergence, the closer the ancestral relationship. The method used in the first study to compare mtDNA's and to root a phylogenetic tree was criticized in that the authors gave no statistical justification for inferring an African origin. The genealogical tree was deemed to have been corrected in the second study by relating the sequence differences found to those of the chimpanzee, presumably our nearest treedwelling African relative. This is the socalled "outgroup method" which suggests that some may not be too happy with the assumed relationship. He is not really one of "us".

Aside from those already mentioned, the researchers base their procedure, results and conclusions upon even more assumptions, some of which are highly questionable:

1.) Maternal mtDNA types in common indicate a genetic relationship of descension of the somatotype.

This need not be true and certainly is not always true. Each codon in the DNA molecule codes for a specific amino acid or protein. All living things have in common some proteins as well as many of the amino acids of which proteins are composed. Thus it is equally possible that identity merely represents an mtDNA sequence that is common to other living things or, alternatively, simply due to chance.

2.) The transmission of mitochondrial DNA is strictly maternal, unaltered by diffusion of other mtDNA.

Just as the maternal oocyte contains its mitochondrium, so does the male spermatozoon. The male gamete's mitochondrium contains DNA derived from a different female lineage unless the mating is incestuous (son with daughter or his mother). The sperm's mitochondrium lies at the junction of the tail with the head. Ordinarily only the head of the sperm penetrates the oocyte and the tail, along with the mitochondrium is discarded.

But Nature does not always work as we intend. It seems reasonable that once in a while the sperm's mtDNA might sneak into the ovum along with the head and that some recombination of DNA's might occur. This would add a random variable to complicate the claim that the mtDNA of the daughter cells is identical to that of her mother.

3.) The lineage of African mtDNA is unbroken.

The original article reporting this line of research, implied a single "mother of us all", and called her "Eve". This was almost certainly done for publicity purposes as part of the agenda of the establishment. Such a unitary origin is manifestly impossible.

They forgot that maternal lineages die out when there is no daughter to carry on. The estimated time required for all but one lineage to disappear from a stable population is the length of a generation in years multiplied by twice the size of the beginning population. A single "Eve" would soon become the ancestress of none.

Since a minimal population of 500 breeding individuals is considered necessary to establish a trait, this would have required at least that many "Eve's". Moreover, the mtDNA of these "Eve's" had to have differed from each other less than that of modern Africans because differences are assumed to increase over time. A population of only 500 would have gone extinct after about 20,000 years, assuming each generation time to be 20 years. If all this started somewhere between 90,000 and 249,000 years ago, as the authors variously suggest, a beginning population of between 2000 to 6000 would have been necessary in order that there would today be survivors. Numbers, however, may not be a problem since population geneticists (8) have indicated that the African population at that time may have been as large as 10,000. If this formula is correct, we also must apply it to all those motherly chimpanzees five to nine million years ago who had to exist in order that we have chimps for medical research and entertainment today. Assuming a conservative generation length for chimps of ten years, there would have had to be between 250,000 and 450,000 of them.

That a large number of breeding females existing under conditions even more primitive than their progeny in Africa today would have more homogeneity in their mtDNA stretches credulity.

4.) The lineage of mtDNA is unbroken by diffusion and represents strictly the founding population.

The authors, being highly "politically correct", indicate that, while blacks may bear many nonAfrican nuclear genes, by implication their mtDNA is pure African because "—any nonAfrican genes have been contributed by Caucasian males". However, blacks rape white females 1000 times more often than a Caucasian male rapes a black female. Similarly, voluntary miscegenation between a white male and a black female is much more rare than is a sexual relationship between a white female and a black male. In such situations of miscegenation, the progeny of a white female and a black male will display easily identifiable negroid characteristics such as skin, eye and black, kinky hair because of genetic dominance of these characteristics. Such progeny, even as a first generation hybrid, will be less likely to be acceptable to the white community and more likely to breed with a black. Within two or three generations, such hybrids will be physically, socially, and most importantly, behaviorally indistinguishable from black Africans. This process has been going on for a long time. Such "miscegenated female" maternal mtDNA will thus appear among modern groups designated as African and skew the average sequence divergences closer to the nonAfrican. Accordingly, few if any modernday "Africans", regardless of where they may be—and particularly socalled "AfricanAmericans"—can be considered sufficiently "pure African" to base upon it an hypothesis on the origin of all mankind.

5.) All evolution of mtDNA proceeded to diverge linearly toward modern man.

Obviously, this did not occur because there are profound differences between the various types of hairless bipeds that presently exist.

6.) By implication, intergenerational incest does not occur.

Such a ridiculous implication is not acceptable for either the modern chimpanzee or Homo sapiens. We are reminded almost daily of its violation.

7.) All mitochondrial lineages "evolve" at the same rate. In other words, the rate of mtDNA mutation is a constant in all groups.

The authors base this assumption on their finding that "—all 14 human sequences are nearly equidistant from the chimpanzee sequences". In further support of this contention they point out that since "chimpanzees commonly show as much as ten times the genetic variation of human", this alone suggests that "all of modern humanity sprang from a relatively small stock of common ancestors". However, elsewhere in another context they point out that the sequence differences are greater among Africans than any other group and that the African sequences are closer to the chimpanzee sequences than are the others. Following the same line of reasoning but placing their findings in the same context, may this not suggest instead that they are two separate groups? Could we be dealing with two separate species?

Furthermore, since non-Africans from North Africa, the Middle East, Asia and Europe to a lesser extent, have been present as slavers and otherwise in subSaharan Africa for thousands of years, it would seem likely that there are few, if any, black Africans without some nonAfrican DNA in their genome. This miscegenation at once would help account for the greater variability in the African population as well as a closer apparent genetic relationship than otherwise might exist.

Mutations occur because of ontological error and external environmental influences such as radiation, toxins, diseases and the cultural milieu including eugenics. The length of the reproductive life, the frequency of conception and the number of viable offspring are also important in the assessment of any population and its relationship to others.

Considering the primitive, violent and diseaseridden lifestyle of even modernday Africans wherever they may be, one could reasonably expect a greater rate of mutation and divergence over time of mitochondrial and nuclear DNA than in populations with advanced cultures.

All these factors would tend to magnify the divergence of the African group from the chimpanzee and diminish the apparent difference from the other four groups.

From another approach, equal rates of mtDNA evolution simply do not hold. The shark, for example, apparently has changed hardly at all in millions of years. And, closer to home, the fossils of "Homo" erectus indicate virtually no change in the millionandahalf years of his existence. But all the variants of dogs have been "evolved" by "unnatural" human selection from the wolf in about twelve thousand years.

That mtDNA "evolved" at a uniform and constant rate seems no more than a hazardous guess used in hopeful support of a questionable hypothesis. Could there be something wrong with the concept?

8.) The divergence of maternal mtDNA accumulates at between 2% to 4% per million years.

This assumption is based upon the presumption that the lineage through the Australopithecines, "Homo" habilis and "Homo" erectus to modern Homo sapiens broke off from the chimpanzee lineage somewhere between five and nine million years ago plus the assumption that all the other assumptions, conjectures, inferences and implications are valid.

Then, calculating how much humans had diverged from each other relative to how much they had diverged, apparently on the average, from chimpanzees, the authors, in their 1991 paper, arrived at a ratio of 1:25 (4). Thus human maternal mtDNA diverged among the modern groups one twentyfifth of the amount the group average had diverged from the chimps five to nine million years ago. This would mean that the modern hairless biped lineage began from multiple "Eve's" somewhere between 200,000 and 360,000 years ago, considerable longer than estimated in the original paper naming "Eve". Wilson & Cann in the article in the April, 1992, edition of Scientific American (7), prefer the 200,000 figure.

There was less difference between the maternal mtDNA of the African group and that of the chimpanzee or, in the author's terminology, the assumption was made that the African group was "more deeply rooted". Since percentage divergence already had been related to time, this made the African group the oldest and, since Africans and chimpanzees hail from Africa, the presumed "Eve's", the mothers of us all, lived in Africa.

If the numbers marking the hours on the face of a clock were in constant random motion and only the hands moved steadily, it would be extremely difficult to tell the time. One could never navigate an unknown sea by such a timepiece!

9.) Each of the four non-African groups has multiple origins due to multiple colonizations by diverse genetic stock.

New Guinea is considered the exemplar whose population the authors consider to have been founded by many mothers whose maternal lineages were most closely related to Asia. The multiple linguistic variants among the Papuans is considered confirmatory.

On the other hand, based on their assumption that they consider Africa the source of all human maternal mtDNA, they consider the African group as a single cluster. This in spite of the fact that the mtDNA diversity is greater among the Africans than any other group and that Africa is noted for numerous quasilanguages. This seems a bit like tilting the data to fit the hypothesis.

But there is a single crucial assumption which alone, if not true, collapses the entire structure. That is the hypothesis that all hairless bipeds are related and are derived from a single presumably mutant stock in Africa. It is upon the slippery ground of this assumption that their phylogenetic "tree" was grown.

The data from each of these studies is used to produce a "tree". By either "midpoint" rooting as in the first study or by the "outgroup" method in the second study, their "tree" has two primary branches. One primary branch is composed entirely of six African maternal mtDNA types while the other branch consists of all the remaining mtDNA types found in the other four groups.

Cann, et al, tied the branches to the single postulated trunk of the tree by manipulating the data to produce a tree of minimum length based on its requirement of fewer point mutations. This "tree" was considered statistically more "parsimonious". The parsimony principle requires that data be connected in the simplest possible way.

In accord with the Africanorigin hypothesis, Vigilant, et al, pursued two different methods to graft the two disparate branches to a common trunk. The first called the "winning sites method" found that the African origin required fewer mutations than did an Asian root.

Their second method looked for the "deepest root". Again presuming a single trunk for both branches and looking only to determine which of the five geographic groups, considered to be related, was rooted most closely to the chimpanzee tree, found that the African cluster was the "deepest" by a significant factor.

There is one enormous problem with these and similar studies using the methods of "molecular anthropology". While it is true that "gene sequences are not shaped by theoretical prejudices" as noted by Wilson and Cann, hypotheses are. There need be no error in the technical methodology. Like so many human endeavors, a structure that appears magnificently and logically true will collapse into a wreckage of lies if close scrutiny shows it to be founded on a false premise.

Such is the case in these applications of the new "molecular anthropology". Everything is based upon the hypothesis of a unity of African origin. That is, all hairless bipeds are assumed to have evolved through the processes of natural selection from a strain of apes in the manner approved by the theory of Wallace as finetuned by Charles Darwin almost 150 years ago.

The magnificent work in the laboratory of these modern "molecular anthropologists" created a "phylogenetic tree". Most significantly, they found that this "tree" has "two primary branches". If one ignores the "African origin hypothesis" and looks at all the data and at the data only with unprejudiced eyes, he discovers that these are not two branches of a single tree. They are not branches at all. They are two separate trees!

Cann, et al, in their study reported in 1987 analyzed the maternal mtDNA of 145 persons and two cell lines for a total of 147 samples. These 147 samples from five different population groups are described as follows: Group 1, 21 Australian aborigines; Group 2, 46 Caucasians; Group 3, 26 New Guinean aborigines; Group 4, 34 Asians; and Group 5, 20 Africans including one "AfricanAmerican".

They found 135 different types of maternal mtDNA. Of these types, 7 occurred in more than one individual, none appeared in more than one of the five groups and no individual had more than one type. The 7 shared types occurred only among 3 of the 5 groups: they did not occur among either the Asians or Africans (Table I).

FIG. I DISTRIBUTION OF mtDNA BY SHARED TYPE

Australia	Caucasian	New Guinea	Asia	Africa
n=21	n=46	n=26	n=34	n=20
Type 1 (2)*	Type 2 (3)	Type 3 (2)	Type 4 (2)
Type 5 (3)	Type 6 (3)	Type 7 (6)

* Number in parenthesis is the number of individuals sharing the type

If these 5 groups were all derived from the same source, the probability that this distribution of groups of random data would have a value of zero, that none of these 7 types would be found among either the Asians or Africans, is 7 chances in ten million! To make an analogy, this means that in a single barrel of apples, there have to be some green and some red apples. Blindfolded, at random I took out of the barrel some apples and stopped to count. I found that I had taken out of the barrel, 93 apples of which 21 were red. Blindfold back on, I continued taking apples out of a barrel, counting as I went along this time until I had another 54 apples. If this second pick of 54 apples had come out of the same barrel, by chance I would have picked out 12 red apples. But there were none! The chances of this happening as the result of random choices out of the barrel are about 7 times out of ten million! That means, impossible. Something had to be wrong. What happened? Having been blindfolded, I had to have reached into another barrel in which there were no red apples. The result can be explained only in this way.

Excluding the Asian group, the chances that none of the African group would share none of the 7 shared types becomes two out of 100. This suggests that the Asian individuals selected for this group may have originated in southern Asia or the Philippines where there is a likelihood of African admixture. In neither of these studies did the author give any genealogical history of their selectees.

Vigilant, et al, (1991), (6) studied mtDNA of 189 individuals and identified 135 different mtDNA types which "—fall into 31 clusters that are exclusively African and 24 clusters that are exclusively nonAfrican". It was upon these figures, considered to be based upon the African origin hypothesis which allowed them to be related in kind, that they were able to base their "tree" in Africa.

But, if it is not assumed that all hairless bipeds originated in Africa and the figures are examined without this prejudice, they tell a different story. The data of Vigilant, et al, shows that there were 135 different mtDNA types found among the 189 hairless bipeds of the same 5 groups. Of these 135 different mtDNA types, 31 are exclusively African and appear among 140 native Africans and 24 types are exclusively nonAfrican and appear among 49 individuals. Employing the same statistical method upon these figures and letting the figures tell their own story, the probability that the two clusters are related is 5 chances in a million! That is not a good bet.

The data from the Vigilant study also showed that of the 135 different mtDNA types found in the 189 individuals, 16 types appeared more than once but only in the Africa and New Guinea groups except in one AfricanAmerican. Of the 189 individuals, there were 121 native Africans, 8 AfricanAmericans, 20 Papuans, 1 Australian Aborigine, 15 Europeans and 24 Asians.

The 16 shared types appeared only among 68 individuals of the 129 individuals of known African ancestry and the 20 Papuans, but not among any of the 39 European or Asian individuals. Applying the "apple barrel analogy" as before, but to these different types of shared mtDNA, the probability that none of these 16 shared types would appear among the groups of 15 Europeans and 24 Asians is 3.713! That is, 0.00000000000037 if these groups are part of the same population with the same African origin! In other words, the population of hairless bipeds which originated in Africa cannot be related to Europeans and Asians grouped together! Further statistical support for this conclusion is found in the "hypothesis test"(9).

Even if the Papuans, Australian Aborigines and Africans are presumed to share the same origin, the probability that Europeans and Asians are related is still only one chance in a hundred! And this is without knowing anything of the genealogy of the individuals selected. In today's world, in some populations some individuals who pass casual inspection as either Caucasian or Asians assuredly have some black ancestral admixture. If the selection process is not carefully done in order to avoid this error, the results will be skewed and the reality of different origins more strongly confirmed.

This all means that based on these studies by the methods of "molecular anthropology", the hypothesis of an African origin of all hairless bipeds is false. It confirms that, while "gene sequences are not shaped by theoretical prejudices", hypotheses and even theories may be. The "tree with two primary branches" turns out to be two separate trees! Africans and nonAfricans are two separate species based upon their origins.

Many paleontologists, archaeologists, and anthropologists disagree with the conclusions reached through "molecular anthropology". Their quarrel is primarily with the time lines it proposes and the assumption that some upstart emigrant from Africa exterminated and replaced all other "hominid" populations everywhere as short a while ago as 200,000 years. However, despite the hurdles supposedly surmounted by the doctrine of "punctuated equilibrium", professional academia remains properly tied to the umbilical cord of the chimpanzee as mother of us all justified, in their opinion, by fossil evidence carefully selected to support the officiallyordered concept of Darwinianstyle evolution of species.

The professionals wish only to bury, ignore or change a few dates, do away with any aesthetic perceptions in longago intellectual capabilities—and, perhaps, sexual derelictions—in order to be able to bestow upon our alleged ancestors a less discriminating, dumbeddown way of life. To the myth of the "brotherhood of man" and other socialistic ideas, the possibility of two separate trees seeded and growing into saplings in different lands would be heresy. The New World Order, conceived long before Darwin unknowingly showed a means of its attainment, could not tolerate such anathema. It could destroy the entire backup process for the destruction of a Homo sapiens. That is truly the meaning of genocide.

The existence of two entirely separate origins for the hairless biped is not contrary to the fossil or artifactual evidence either. In fact, both the artifactual and fossil evidence viewed objectively and in their entirety demand different origins just as does the data derived from the genetic studies.

The advanced doctrine of political correctness, as already noted, dates the advent of man as a twig from the chimpanzee lineage over 4 million years ago. Accordingly, the first of our ancestors to begin the climb up this broken ladder of evolution were the various australopithecines marked most notably by their increased brain capacity of 500 cubic centimeters to 600 cubic centimeters instead of the measly 200 cubic centimeters to 300 cubic centimeters of the apes. From fossil evidence, the australopithecines existed until about 1 million years ago. Along about 2.5 million years ago, some australopithecines supposedly 'jumped' into something more advanced. With a brain of around 750 cubic centimeters, this somewhat advanced creature was no longer considered "pithecine" or ape, but "homo"—one of us. He was called "Homo" habilis, the clever man, the first toolmaker.

Tiring of his lowly status, some contemporaries of "Homo" habilis purportedly 'jumped' again about 1.6 million years ago and became suddenly "Homo" erectus. He was no longer very good at swinging through the tree tops. He had a brain of about 1000 cubic centimeters to 1200 cubic centimeters. Being better at travel on land, he could traverse areas where there were no trees. Either on his own or possibly involuntarily, he left Africa. He left his fossil and artifactual remains over Europe and Asia at least and lasted virtually without change until about 500,000 years ago. Some think he may have lasted longer and made it to the isolation of outback Australia about 60,000 years ago. If so, the fact that even his larger brain was still not all that good is suggested by the fact that, in all that time, the Australian Aborigine never made the connection between sexual activity and childbearing.

Some claim that Homo sapiens evolved about 500,000 years ago from "Homo" erectus in situ from his residences in Europe, Asia and Africa. First he was Homo sapiens and then as he naturally got brighter, Homo sapiens sapiens. This is the theory of multicentric origins whose advocates strongly oppose the "Eve" hypothesis.

With a brain of over 1400 cubic centimeters, larger than our 1400 cubic centimeters average, the Neanderthals, are thrown in to complicate matters. They appeared in Europe about 100,000 years ago. Despite an apparently rather advanced culture, they disappeared as uniquely identifiable fossils about 35,000 years ago. Some paleoanthropologists feel they were too ugly to invite rape and assimilation. Others believe the more likely event that they were simply absorbed into the larger more vigorous population of Homo sapiens.

However, to preserve the idea that modern man descended from apes through a process of slow, though "punctuated", evolution directed by natural selection, it has been necessary to limit his age as a species. The time of his origin had to be placed within the span that his presumed immediate ancestor could have existed. For obvious reasons, he could not be allowed to preexist his own parents. Any artifactual evidence of the use of tools or of fire or actual fossils of Homo sapiens that antedated the appearance of "Homo" erectus, "Homo" habilis or especially the Australopithecines would instantly convert the Darwinian hypothesis into an untenable myth and any application to the origin of man would cease to exist.

Such evidence does exist—reliably and in profusion. The entire diaspora of man as taught today is false. Though only a single such instance is required to destroy the approved concept, several will be mentioned.

Fragments of skeletal remains of modern man and of stone tool artefacts have been uncovered in the gravels of Tertiary river beds as a result of mining operations for gold and silver at several sites in California. Some have been found at depths of 180 feet beneath a lava cap at the ends of over a hundred feet of horizontal drifts beneath Table Mountain in Tuolomne County, California. These goldbearing Tertiary placer gravels were deposited over 8.7 million years ago according to potassiumargon dating of regional andesite deposits (10).

A human vertebral segment (atlas) was unearthed from strata dating back to the early Pliocene (3 to 5 million years ago) at Mount Hermosa in Argentina (11). Also in Argentina in a late Pliocene formation at Miramar, stone tools, a mammalian bone with an arrowhead embedded in it and a fragment of a human lower jaw were found (11, 12, 13).

A modern woman's skull was found near Castenodolo, Italy in a stratum dated Middle Pliocene (3-4 million years old) (14, 15). Mammoth bone with cut marks from a sharp instrument and stone tools dated 300,000 to 750,000 years old were found in the AnzaBorrego Desert of California (16). A vigorous review of flint and bone tools from PlioceneEocene detritus below Red Crag, England, are "—genuine tools—whose legitimacy as products of human industry cannot in the least be challenged" (17). Also found in the detritus beds beneath Red Crag is a carved shell, a bola stone and pierced teeth (18, 19, 20).

Paleolithic tools, incision marks on bones by sharp instruments indicating butchering, bones deliberately broken for extraction of marrow and signs of fire pits with pieces of burned bones were found by F. Ameghino in the Santa Crucian formation in Argentina dated as Early and Middle Miocene (15-25 million years ago) by Marshall, et al in 1977 (21).

In a deposit in Kenya dated at 12.5 to 14 million years old (22), Louis Leakey discovered fossilized animal bones "where the bones have been broken up, and where the damage includes excellent examples of depressed fractures of the types usually associated with a 'blunt instrument'—(and)—also a lump of lava with every appearance of having been used to smash bones" (23).

Advanced paleolithic tools were found at Shequinandah, Manitoulin Island in Lake Huron, Canada in excavations carried out between 1951 and 1955 by Thomas E. Lee, an anthropologist at the National Museum of Canada. The tools were bifacially chipped and included projectile points. Four geologists dated the beds at a minimum of 30,000 years, perhaps as old as 150,000 years (24). Since these dates do not agree with official doctrine and Lee persisted, he was at first ridiculed and finally hounded from his civil service position.

The earliest fossil of a modern human found in Kenya, Africa is a humerus identified as Homo sapiens and dated at 4.0 to 4.5 million years old (25, 26). The next earliest human fossil is dated at 2.2 to 3 million years old and was found in a limestone quarry; in Sterkfontein, South Africa in 1946. It is part of a femur "—characteristic of modern man" (27, 28).

The next earliest human fossil was dated about 1.7 to 2.0 million years old. In Olduvai Gorge formations in Kenya, Louis Leakey found a jaw and human skull fragments described as Homo sapiens sapiens (29). Other fossils of Homo sapiens found in Africa and dated to about the time "Homo" erectus appeared are a talus (heel bone) (30) and a humerus (upper arm bone) (31). From that time forward, numerous fossil and artifactual finds in Africa and elsewhere testify to the coexistence of Homo sapiens and "Homo" erectus until the apparent worldwide disappearance of "Homo" erectus about 500,000 years ago.

Even the proclaimed idea that man first trod the western hemisphere only 12,000 years ago by way of a land bridge across the Bering Straits is refuted by a mass of evidence that had to be ignored or ridiculed in order to support official doctrine. Recall that Thomas E. Lee lost his job at the national Museum of Canada because he found paleoliths that contradicted the theory designated as acceptable. But the rigid control of scientific thought may be breaking down a little. In 1977, a UCLA archaeologist and geophysicist, Rainer Berger, found evidence on Santa Rosa Island off Santa Barbara, California, that confirms human presence 40,000 years ago and perhaps as long as 70,000 years ago (32).

The fossil, artifactual and "molecular anthropological" evidence are in agreement. The Darwinian hypothesis as applied to the origin of man is wrong! However, a process of continuous "evolution", meaning change of the genotype over time by natural selection from a lower, simpler, or worse to a higher, more complex or better state, may occur within species to a limited extent. During his span of existence, "Homo" erectus showed negligible change as, over their millions of years of existence, do the shark and the land crab.

The reverse, devolution, also occurs. The reduction of the average mental age of the 'human' population that has occurred over the last century at least as a result of 'unnatural' or human selection is a good example. But Darwinian processes as proclaimed do not account for Homo sapiens as a species. Just as no living thing can preexist its parents, Homo sapiens cannot have come into being by descent from the chimpanzee through the Australopithecines, "Homo" habilis and "Homo" erectus. Homo sapiens pre-existed the australopithecines and the pithecanthropines! The molecular evidence confirms what the complete fossil, artifactual and biological record foreshadows and logic demands. There are two kinds of hairless bipeds on earth with totally different origins. There are two distinct species! One race of the two races of Homo sapiens now constitutes only about 12% of the world's population. Long targeted, he is well on the way to extinction.

The genesis of Homo sapiens disappears into the mists of an extremely remote past. Artifactual evidences indicative of the presence of human beings with an advanced culture exist far into the age of the dinosaurs. A grooved metallic sphere found in a Precambrian pyrophyllite deposit in South Africa (24) or metallic tubes found in 1968 embedded in chalk 65 million years old from a quarry in France (25) and others (26) only deepen the mystery. More importantly, they demand as more and more chinks appear in the hidebound armor of socialized mechanistic science, an open mind. The tales that persist in folklore of advanced civilizations deep in the past, like Atlantis, Lemuria and Mu, may indeed have some basis in fact. After all, our present 'civilization' can date its origins to only thousands of years ago. How many advanced civilizations, not necessarily structured in reinforced concrete, might have come and gone without a trace over the millions of years fossils prove a human presence on earth?

But the evidence shows that something else happened in Africa. The series of pithecines ancestral to the species of hairless biped originating in Africa, is not explained. Gene sequences of the mtDNA of those living hairless bipeds whose ancestry unequivocably leads back to Africa clearly do exist as a distinct entity. Logic and biology defeat any idea of Darwinian descent of this creature from the chimpanzee by a series of leaps from one proposed progenitor to the next. The ridiculous idea of "punctuated equilibrium" must be laid to final rest.

Nevertheless, this series of creatures did exist and they existed in a hierarchical order of diminishing arboreal and increasing bipedal adaptation along with jumps in brain size. Somewhere along the line, probably not until the last jump, there developed the vocal apparatus that permits the rudimentary speech of primitively modulated grunts and screeches that still characterize the hybridized representatives of this species.

This lineage of comparatively puny pithecine creatures survived at first because it was arboreal and then, as it grew larger and bipedal, the premium was placed on bigger brains rather than prehensile toes and a tail. The increasing brain size allowed it to contrive tools while its hands permitted the use of crude tools as equalizers against stronger, faster creatures. The brain remained fairly simple with relatively few and shallow convolutions, virtually no frontal development, a thin cortex and a meager blood supply.

The modern inheritor of this lineage is the African Negro. Until recently, geologically speaking, he existed in isolation in the jungles of West Equatorial Africa. His brain at about 900 cubic centimeters in its pristine African state is a little smaller than that of his presumed immediate forebear, "Homo" erectus or, originally more correctly named, Pithecanthropus erectus.

About 8 million years ago, the Great Rift Valley formed in Eastern Africa as the result of tectonic forces. The Rift Valley runs for about 1800 miles in a northerly direction from near the mouth of the Zambezi River in southeastern Africa to near the mouth of the Omo River at the Red Sea. The forces of plate tectonics which formed the valley also raised a chain of high mountains separating the eastern third of Africa climatically and geographically from the western twothirds. All bipedal fossils have been found without exception on the eastern side of the Rift Valley. Western Equatorial Africa remained as hot and humid jungle while east of the mountains became dry, grassy savannah.

The genus Pan, the chimpanzee family of primates was separated. The Panidae to the west of the Rift and the chain of mountains were able to continue their existence in the protection and bounty of a jungle. Those to the east of the mountains in the Rift Valley were forced to adapt to changed conditions or die. Spotty tree cover interrupted by broad areas of meadowland severely compromised an arboreal existence. It placed them in direct competition with other surface animals and particularly greater exposure to large carnivores.

That changes did occur in the Panidae is proved by a rather confused and confusing collection of fossils appearing as far back as the Miocene. While still clearly Panidae, these bits and pieces of fossilized bone suggest changes over millions of years from a purely brachiating existence in the trees to some bipedalism along with some increase in brain size. Up to about 4 million years ago, the anthropoid (manlike or 'hominoid') ape, Pan troglodytes or chimpanzee had not changed into a new species. This intraspecies process of evolution or adaptation to changed environmental conditions had not turned Pan into a new species any more than it had other animals of the savannah with which he coexisted.

About 4 million years ago, something new appeared in Africa. This was Australopithecus, the "Southern Ape". This creature, of which there are several variants (australopithecines) is classed as the first of the Hominidae, the family of modern man, the genus Homo. This was a new genus. With a cranial capacity greater than the standard chimpanzee, the head displayed a cross between apelike and humanlike features while below the neck, his physical development was much like that of a small, modern human. Other animals of the savannah remained clearly identifiable with their forebears over time, but this animal had jumped into something very different. How?

"Punctuated equilibrium" or "evolution by jerks" has been shown to be inconsistent with logic. A reasonable explanation consistent with fact, including the nature of man and monkey, is intervention by a superior being. Homo sapiens already existed. According to fossil and artifactual evidence, he was already on every continent except West Equatorial Africa. The earliest fossil of Homo sapiens found in Africa was the fragment of humerus from Kanapoi, Kenya. It was found in 1965 and dated at 4.0 to 4.5 million years old. Time, place and opportunity seem to have coincided.

Modern man has 46 chromosomes; the modern chimpanzee has 48. Although rumors exist of at least trials of crossfertilization of these two species, I am aware of neither success nor failure. This in itself may be significant. Failure would be common knowledge, but success would be disturbing. Obviously, somewhere in the past, equalization of the numbers of chromosomes between either the ancient Pongid lineage or the Pithecine lineage and Homo sapiens must have existed. Regardless of the scenario, interspecies fertility has to have occurred in order to give rise to the pithecines. It seems most likely to have occurred some time during the roughly 4 million years that the antique chimpanzee was doing some intraspecies evolving in his early attempts to adapt to life on the savannahs of East Africa.

Common knowledge holds that breeding across species lines does not occur. But it does. It is fairly frequent among living things. Sometimes the result is sterile like the mule, the offspring of a male ass and a mare. Sometimes the hybrid offspring is not sterile like that of a wolf and a coyote or a tiger and a lion.

Few researchers agree upon a definition of 'species'. A species is commonly taught to describe a population of organisms that can at least potentially interbreed and that does not breed with other populations. A definition more in accord with what actually happens, is not so limiting. A species is, after all, merely the result of man's passion to classify in order to better understand what he sees. It is an invention of man, not of Nature. A phylogenetic concept defines a species as the smallest recognizable cluster of individuals that share a common trait and have a common pattern of ancestry. This alone clearly differentiates Homo sapiens. As in so many things human, universal agreement on the definition of species may never occur—or there may be many different definitions according to the goal or branch of scientific endeavor. Yet life, with its many variations, ignores our quibbling and simply goes on.

Following the finding of the fossil 4 to 4.5 millions years old in Kanapoi, the fossil record of Homo sapiens in Africa remains blank until something over 2 million years ago. A femur "characteristic of modern man" was identified as 2.2 to 3.0 million years old (27). This is more or less coincident with the first appearance of "Homo" habilis (Pithecanthropus habilis), the first toolmaker, 2.5 million years ago. He was similar to the australopithecines but had a larger brain of 600 to 750 cubic centimeters

It was some 900,000 years until the next jump when "Homo" erectus (Pithecanthropus erectus) appeared about 1.6 million years ago. He stood 5 to 6 feet tall and had a cranial capacity of 1000 to 1200 cubic centimeters, nearing the 1450 cubic centimeters average of Homo sapiens. Like his forebears, his fossil bones show that he closely resembled modern humans except for his head with its sloping forehead, massive brow ridges, large jaws and teeth, prognathism and a steeply receding chin.

And again after a blank period, fossil remains of Homo sapiens roughly coincident in time with the appearance of "Homo" erectus were found in Africa. This is the socalled "Kanam Jaw" discovered by Louis Leakey and dated to the Early Pleistocene about 1.7 to 2.0 million years ago (29). From that time onward, the finding in Africa of fossils identifiable as Homo sapiens has been less unusual.

This little scenario suggests, though by no means proves, that Homo sapiens first entered the Rift Valley about 4 to 4.5 million years ago and then left—or died out in Africa—only to return on two separate occasions 2.02.3 million years ago and again 1.7 million years ago, thence to remain. Of course, he may have remained steadily in the Rift Valley from even before 4.5 million years ago to date. But it seems more than mere coincidence that Homo sapiens was in the Rift Valley in the three eras in which significant "jumps" in the characteristics of the indigenous populations of pithecines occurred. The explanation that the Australopithecines, "Homo" habilis and "Homo" erectus are the result, over perhaps thousands of years of interventions by Homo sapiens fits. Most likely, the intervention was as simple as miscegenation or it could have been complex as some sophisticated means that we cannot yet conceive. "Punctuated equilibrium", however cannot be the explanation.

As far back as about one million years ago, "Homo" erectus was not just in Africa, but his fossil remains and artifacts have been found in Europe, Asia and Java. He and Homo sapiens coexisted outside of Africa for at least 500,000 years and perhaps longer. The origin and character of this temporal relationship between Homo sapiens and a similar bipedal creature with a primitive brain lacking development of the frontal lobes is speculative. Not just brain size, but increased area, cellularity and thickness of the cerebral cortex due in part to more and deeper sulci and also to development of the frontal lobes, all dependent upon an abundant blood supply, are related to creativity and required in the development of the social cooperation that engenders civilization. "Homo" erectus lacked these attributes.

It seems probable, therefore, that Homo sapiens was the controlling element in any relationship of continuing contact between the two species as is modern man with his pets. It is possible that Homo sapiens was responsible for the diaspora of "Homo" erectus from Africa. It is also more than likely that Homo sapiens was responsible for the disappearance of "Homo" erectus from Africa, Europe and Australasia.

If "Homo" erectus, as a primitive species, multiplied indiscriminately and became a serious problem, it surely would have been within the capability of Homo sapiens to hunt him down and remove him. Lacking significant development of the frontal lobes of the brain, this creature would have been incapable of moral sensibility. Probably, he was an extremely violent creature, even to his own kind. Today, he would be called a violent criminal. He certainly would have had no capacity to recognize that he was an artificial creature, the end result of a series of interventions by a superior intellect or even miscegenations between his pithecine progenitors and Homo sapiens. Nor would he have had the capacity to realize that his distant relatives were the chimpanzees of the savannahs of eastern Africa. Nor would he have been able to understand that his chimpanzee ancestors certainly would have been exterminated by predators had the lineage not been saved by intervention.

His removal could have been undertaken by primordial Homo sapiens for abstract as well as practical reasons. The dangers of the perpetuation of a very different species capable of senseless violence may have been recognized and lent necessity to the gradual extermination of this unnatural creature.

A few Pithecanthropines may have survived. As already noted, some anthropologists consider that the Australian aborigine is a remnant that was isolated in the outback of this isolated continent 60,000 years ago. Other remnants could still survive as the occasionally glimpsed, almost mythical creatures like Sasquatch and the Yeti.

Others may have found refuge in the isolation of the lush jungles of Western Equatorial Africa where Homo sapiens, more adapted to drier, more cool climates did not go. Here, because of ease of living and abundant food for the taking, Pithecanthropine erectus may be represented today by the West African Negro. Some devolution due to the lesser demands of his jungle habitat may account for the smaller brain (about 900 cubic centimeters) of the pure West African Negro. Another alternative for the genesis of this modern species of African could have been hybridization between "Homo" erectus and "Homo" habilis. This also could account for the smaller brain.

Whatever may be the origin of the West African jungle negro, whether he is a devolved Pithecanthropus erectus or a compound hybrid resulting from miscegenation between Pithecanthropus habilis and Pithecanthropus erectus, he is not Homo sapiens. He is not mankind. To be scientifically correct, he should be termed Pithecanthropus niger and his forebears, Pithecanthropus erectus and Pithecanthropus habilis.

After the disappearance of Pithecanthropus erectus some 500,000 years ago, Homo sapiens pursued his gradual cultural and genetic evolution in Europe, Asia and the Americas. Interpopulational gene flow, influenced by climate and prolonged periods of glaciation, was certainly minimal for thousands of years. This genetic separation of segments of the Homo sapiens population explains the differentiation over geologic time into the large racial divisions of Caucasoids and the Mongoloids that exist today. Even though made untenable by numerous fossil and artifactual finds, modern anthropology continues to teach with a vengeance that Homo sapiens first invaded the Americas only 12,000 to 15,000 years ago by way of the Bering Straits land bridge and a corridor in Alaska and Canada through retreating glacial ice. Certainly this immigration to the Americas occurred but just as certainly Homo sapiens was already here. And certainly the two races of Homo sapiens interbred.
